—The Legislature has adjourned in order to give the tools of the Water Monopoly an opportunity to return to their never at constituencies and to manipulate the political conventions so as to favor the election of more tools of Monopolists. A friend residing in Kern county, writes that the Republicans carried everything before them in that county, and unless the agricultural and horticultural elements of the State unite and vote against any man who is in favor of Water Monopoly, they will bind themselves with the shackles of a slavery which it will take years of time and millions of money to shake off.

—Michael Davitt's speech on the proper agitation by which Ireland's independence may be secured, will strike every reader of the MONITOR as eminently Catholic and conservative. His response to the inflammatory remarks of Mr. Finerty will have the effect of showing the world that the Irish National League will not countenance any system of agitation not consonant with Christian morality. Neither destructive dynamite nor the wild spirit of revenge have any place in the programme of Davitt, and Mr. Davitt's utterances on this point are worthy of the serious heed of every Celt who desires to see Ireland's cause progress upon the line of Christian principles.

—Commenting upon the numerous condemnation of the Knights of Labor by Cardinal Taschereau of Quebec, and the friendly attitude assumed by Cardinal Gibbons towards the same organization, the Chicago Inter Ocean says that it is "due to the information of our local contemporary we can answer in one word—both. It is the right of any Bishop to condemn any society in his diocese that he may deem antagonistic to faith and morals—such condemnation being called forth by local causes. Another Bishop of an adjacent diocese may have branches of the same society within his See, yet he may not find any cause for censure. This, we presume, is the case in the present instance, although we have not seen any reference to Cardinal Taschereau's condemnation of the Knights of Labor in any recent issues of our Catholic Canadian exchanges.

What Irish Ecclesiastics are Doing for Education.

Obviously no one printed in Dublin has papers so crowded to overflow with the priests and Bishops of Ireland pin merely kiss their people in ignorance, so as to point them the more kindly to the chariot chosen of what these captious critics ignorantly call "the Roman Church." So far from keeping the Catholic people of Ireland in ignorance, the Irish Bishops and priests are daily re-establishing in that country the schools which were destroyed and forbidden by penal enactment some years ago.

The Dublin correspondent of the Irish newspaper Connaught Ranger in England, and even the French papers are beginning to realize the fact that since they had Brothers, Sisters, and other Catholic Teaching Orders at the head of their schools, the priests are not near as fussy as of the former since French officials and masters have passed into the hands of politicians. The same is true regarding the clergy of Dublin. Mr. Redmond Dillon, a Catholic and a member of the Irish Bar, in a letter to the Dublin Freeman, says that the Catholic Bishops of Ireland are right, and that the Catholic Bishops of Ireland are right, and that the Catholic Bishops of Ireland are right, and

Farm and Home.

Advice to Country Girls.

City life is not all that it is painted. It has its pleasures and conveniences, but it also has its serious drawbacks. Before making the plunge into life in the city, country girls should ask themselves what is really to be gained by it.

Perhaps in their quiet, rural homes some stray advertisement has reached them, promising to young women high salaries for light work. Hundreds of these advertisements are framed for the vary purpose of deceiving the unwary. They accomplish their purpose, however, and large numbers of young girls rush up to the city, dazzled by the generous profusion of promises.

A girl from the farm answers one of these advertisements. Lifs may have been slow at home but there was always good food and in plenty, and there was some to care for her in the old farm house. When she goes to the big city she finds that the "light work" consists in working all day in a badly lighted and ill-smelling work shop, where scores of other girls and women are employed at wages hardly high enough to keep body and soul together.

We know what often comes next. The girl has left home, she is ashamed or unwilling to return, and she must take the consequences, oftentimes one of two things—shame or suffering. If she is too strong in principle, too pure and elevated in tone thus to sink down, she may find herself in some cold garret, lonely, overworked, despondent and miserable.

Better remain at home than risk the failure which stands so many girls who go to the city in pursuit of high pay for light work. It is the saddest of all ventures, forsaking a country home for the illusions and deceptions of a large town.

Blind to the Faults of their Own.

On a visit to Mrs. Janes, Mrs. Blake takes her little boy Stephen with her. The boy consists all kinds of depredations, and after he is taken away, Mrs. Janes says:

"Gracious! don't I wish that boy was mine for just a few minutes! he! would blister him! It is strange to me how a mother can be so blind.

A few days later Mrs. Janes calls on Mrs. Blake, accompanied by her little son, who puts his feet on the plush-bottomed chairs, and who gives his mother a world of annoyance. When Mrs Janes is goes Mrs. Blake says:

"My stars alive! how I do wish that boy was mine for a few minutes! If I wouldn't blister him. It was all I could do to keep my hands off him. It is a mystery to me how a mother can be so short sighted Stephen," addressing her own son, "put on your shoes and don't throw it around in that way; you'll break something. Stephen, didn't I speak to you! There! you naughty boy, you have broken a vase. Go out of here this minute, Stephen! Stephen! didn't I speak to you! There! you good-for-nothing thing, you have cracked the mirror. Never mind, sir; I am not going to bring you a thing from down town—not a blessed thing. If you don't go out of here this minute I'll whip you. Stephen! Stephen! Never mind; when the man comes I'll tell him to take you away."

Home Comforts on the Farm

The general supposition is that those who live in the country enjoy luxuries beyond the province of those who live in the cities. Yes, the farmer has an advantage in many respects, such as the ability to secure that which is fresh and palatable as compared with his city brothers. His milk is unadulterated, the butter used on his table is sweet and pure, the eggs are new, and the vegetables are daily gathered as required.

But we ask, is the comfort and enjoyment that the farmer should produce. What are the facts? Do farmers really enjoy the luxuries to be obtained on the farm? Do farmers' wives enjoy life equally as well as those ladies who live in the cities? We fear not. How many farmers know the importance of a garden? But a very small proportion we may claim. They deny themselves many luxuries that they could easily have if they would. Hundreds of them live on a monotony of food that would be rejected by persons living in cities, and yet, it is the farmer to whom all are indebted for many of the comforts that are enjoyed. With the farmer it is work from early dawn to sunset, and every member of his family must share some portion of the tedious labor. The farmers' wives grow premature old, and the younger generations have a dislike to the occupation which is above all the best that could be followed.

Can we suggest a remedy for the amelioration of the condition of farmers' families? We do not lay claim to that honor, but we can suggest a better method of conducting farm operations so as to render farm life more enjoyable. In the first place, give the wife a choice location for a garden, and work it under her direction. Let it be well stocked with all the choicest varieties of fruits and vegetables. Give her something to anticipate, to hope for, to realize and to enjoy. Let her be interested in a newspaper that has sense and attention she is to become well be a source of pleasure. Give the young members an interest in some department from which they may expect to derive a pecuniary benefit, and which the labor required will be performed with pleasure. Let the farmer resolve to feel pleasure all of these things that will add to his own comfort when he sells a dollar's worth of produce. The choicest beef, the best butter, the freshest eggs, should be used at home. Variety is the spice of life, even on the farm.

The Sparrow's Character at His English Home.

It is hard for a lover of birds to approach the "sparrow question." Sparrows are found to do more harm than snakes or big sea. Nature's thieves and vagabonds they are. This is the verdict of every one who investigates the matter. They drive away birds who do more good and little or no harm. For every noxious insect they destroy, they consume more than one thousand valuable. A Cheshire farmer, indeed, estimates the loss of England due to depredations of sparrows at £770,000; and this loss is on the increase. The careful and long continued experiments of Col. Rosel, in Essex, show that sparrows do unmitigated mischief, and the experience of our colonies and of the Americans confirm the facts beyond well. There is really nothing to be said for the sparrow. He carries destruction wherever he goes, and leaves devastation to mark his increase. From every point of view he must be looked upon as the enemy of man. Either he must give way to us or we to him; and just now his power is such that he seems in a fair way to become here, as he already has become in America, a factor in politics. The Colorado beetle can never commit such ravages as the sparrow is certain to do wherever he is allowed to go and be naturalized. Have like we may for his personality, he ought everywhere to be exterminated with the utmost vigor; for there is no limit in the course of Nature, either to his reproductiveness nor to the mischief which he causes. It is more too soon to have the question put before us clearly, for every day its importance must become greater.

A Large Wine Sale.

Walter Philippe, of Sonnet valley, has sold his wine, 30,000 gallons for 22½ cents per gallon, or $6,750. The purchaser to pay freight. He contracted to sell his wine last May, and now he thinks he would have done better to have waited.—Santa Rosa Democrat.

Family Fun.

Why They Married.

An editor lately sent out postal cards to the married men at a small town in Ohio, with the inquiry, "Why did you marry? Here are a few of the responses:

"That's what I've been trying for 11 years to find out. N.

"Married to get even with her mother, but never have. W.

"Because I was too lazy to work. I. W.

"Because Sarah told me that five other young men had proposed to her. P.

"The old man thought that eight years courtin' was long enough. P.

"I was lonesome and melancholy, and wanted some one to make me lively. N. B.—She makes me very lively. D.

"I was tired of buying ice cream and candies, and going to theatres, and wanted a rest. Have saved money. J. C.

"Because I thought she was one among a thousand; now I sometimes think she is a thousand among one. S.

"I think it was because I was cross-eyed, now I am afflicted with two pair of cross eyes daily. Peter.

"Because I did not have the experience I have now. F.

"The governor was going to give me his feed as I took his daughter's hand. H.

"That's the same foolish reason as that my friends and neighbors ask me. C. H.

"Because I had more than I knew what to do with. Now I have more to do than I have money with. B. D.

"I wanted a companion of the opposite sex. P. S.—She is still opposite. F.

"Don't mention it. F.

"Had difficulty unlocking the door at night, and wanted somebody to let me in. Ben.

"I was embarrassed and gave my wife the benefit of my name so she! I could take the benefit of her name signed to a check. Sensock.

"Because it is just my luck. S. J.

"I didn't intend to go to Salt Lake. N.

"I yearned for company. We now have it all the time. Kate.

"Have exhausted all the figures in the arithmetic to figure out an answer to your question; between multiplication and division in the family, and distraction, in addition, the answer is hard to derive at. Old Man.

"I married to get the best wife in the world. Simon.

"Because I asked her if she'd have me. She said she would. I think she's got me. Benson.

A Fruity Flavor.

Druggist—Well, my little man, what can I do for you?

Boy—I want 10 cents worth of cochineal and 5 cents worth of hayseed.

Druggist—What do you want cochineal and hayseed for?

Boy—Ma modder is makin' some strawberry ice-cream for the Methodist church festival.

Didn't Know the Difference.

A hurried grocer gave a countryman a jug of coal oil instead of vinegar, for which he had asked. Several days after when the countryman came back, the grocer said: "My friend, I have an apology to make to you!"

"How so?"

"Why, the other day when you were in here, I gave you real oil instead of vinegar."

"What, I'll be blamed if I didn't know it. When we pounded some o' the stuff on the turnip greens we found it tasted kind o' queer, but I 'lowed that it was because she had been looking at the stars for a long time in silence. At least she gave a fluttering little sigh, and spoke: "Ah, George, how perfect in its fickleness is their fate! Sometimes they are undistinguished for such a sight fill you with an all-pervading, restless peace!" "I suppose it would," replied George, "if it don't make the back of my neck ache so."

Pat's Remedy the Best.

A one-legged Walshman, named Jones, was tantalizing a Irishman, whose late father was a hero. "How did you come to lose your leg?" "Well," said Jones, "I was winning my pedigree and looking up my document; I found that there was some Irish blood in me, and becoming convinced that it hurt settled in that left leg, I had it cut off at once." "Be the powers," said Pat, "I would have been a better thing had the Irish blood settled in your head."

Hostesses English.

"I wonder why I can't make my wife fly," mused the little brother of the flighty girl. "It looks to me," replied Mildred, "as though its social upstrings were disproportionate to its aspirations." "I don't think that's," said Jim. "I think its tail is too light."

He Knew how to Pronounce It.

In the smoking car of a Chicago, Burlington and Quincy suburban train the other morning two passengers were discussing the pronunciation of the word "Stough," which appears over the door of a small station building not far from Hinsdale. The discussion became so heated that it finally was referred to Mr. Harvie Taber, the state insurance actuary and a former schoolmaster.

"Why," said Mr. Taber, "it is a dog spelt 'stuff.' I should think a dog with such a spell 'stuff.'"

"What do you think about it?" said one of the gentlemen to Mr. Watson, a board of trade man.

"I should think it would be pronounced 'shoe,'" said Mr. Watson, "you know the dough spells 'shoe.'"

At this junction Mr. Caldwell, the paper manufacturer, came in, and the question was put to him.

"Why," said he, "anybody ought to know that. The Slough, 'Sho' slough, 'sho,' of course."

When Mr. L. W. Hood of Aurora came in he was asked for his opinion.

"I should call it 'stuff,' said he; "enough spells 'stuff,' and I don't see how a dog can spell anything but 'stuff.'"

At this a gray haired man, with a lighting hat and the air of a capitalist, turned around in his seat, and with the intensity of one who speaks from absolute knowledge said:

"It is pronounced with the sound of woo-woo.

"Well," said one of the parties to the controversy, "what confounded fool gave such an infernal name to a town, anyway?"

"It was named after me," said the gray haired man. "I laid out the town; my name is Stough."

For several minutes the clickity-clack of the car wheels was the only sound that broke the embarrassing silence.

—Subscribers having changed their residence from the office will oblige by giving their former address.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,
Importers and Dealers in
BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS.
Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.
MANUFACTURERS OF
Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags
512 to 516 Sacramento and 510 Commercial Sts., S. F.

RAZORS!
FOR $1,000
I WILL MAKE A RITTER RAZOR AND MORE OF THEM IN THE SAME TIME AS IT WAS IN THE OLD
My own make guaranteed. $2 50
My Grand Razors warranted not to cut the finest white shaving. 1 00
Good English Razors 1 50
Best English Razors $2 00 & up wd
M. PRICE
415 Kearny Street
Grinding and Repairing

G. ORSI,
HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger.
PAINTS IN PAINT OIL, GLASS, VARNISHES, Turpentine, Brushes, Color, Paper Hangings etc. 35 Montgomery Avenue, bet. Jackson and Washington Sts., San Francisco, Cal. Orders promptly attended to. Shop open all night. Residence Jackson, near Montgomery. Residence Telephone attached.

An INSECT BITE is a TROUBLESOME Thing
Use Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER for all Insect Bites, Bruises, Burns, Scalds or Sprains.
All Druggists keep Pain-Killer.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.
The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.
Incorporated under the laws of California.
This association is conducted on the mutual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at mutual cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $3,000, $5,000 and $10,000, which are payable in full to a myed party during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 25 years of age receive one-fifth of the certificate taken at the expiration of each ten years; members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 30 to 35 every eight years, 35 to 40 every seven years, 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 60 every four years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of certificate is paid to the members legates.
No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privilege of being the custodians of their own funds until actually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members who have certificates; we will fail due five as part payment thereof at 8 per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $104,000 to members, and paid in death losses, $70,000, which is a saving to the members and in full. The membership at present records three thousand, and the average assessment loaned to members monthly is over $6,000.
Reliable agents desired.
Address,
W. H. WARD, Secretary,
Room 28, Flood Building, San Francisco.

WARD & CO.'S
Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.
608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.
Telephone No. 797.
ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Second Hands, Gardeners, Coachmen, and Married Couples to Manage Country Places, Nurses, Housemaids, Waiters, Cooks, Laundresses, Seamstresses, Butlers and Housework Girls on hand at all times. Butlers and Housework Girls on hand at all times.

CYCLORAMA
Battle of Gettysburg.
The Decisive Struggle of the Great Civil War.
Open Day and Evening. Cor. Market and Stockton Sts.
ADMISSION, 25 CENTS.

HOOPER'S
SOUTH END
Grain Warehouse.
First-Class Fire-Proof Brick Building.
CAPACITY 18,000 TONS.
TOWNSEND ST.,
Between First and Second. San Francisco.
GEORGE H. LEHMAN, Prop.
Advances and Insurance offered at lowest rates.
Telephone No. 397.

BUTTERICK'S
Patterns—Fall Styles.
Stamped Goods, Embroidery Materials.
Send Stamp for Catalogue. Agents, 125 Post Street, San Francisco.

DR. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.
THE GREAT NERVE TONIC—Recommended as a remedy for General Debility, Sleeplessness, Dyspepsia, Hysteria, Rheumatism and Broken-down Constitutions.
Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers.
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

MISCELLANEOUS.
JULIUS H. MEDAU,
968 and 970 Folsom St.
WHOLESALE
LIQUOR DEALER.
Established 1859.
We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods.
Angelica Wines $1, $1.50 and $1.50
Mount Vineyard—try it, it's fine $1.
Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.50, $1.50 and $2.
Kentucky Whiskey, $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4.
Bourbon Whiskey, $1.50, $1.75 and $2.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. and upward.
Orders Filled and Shipped to Interior points.

SOMETHING NEW FOR THE LADIES!
Ladies and Misses can purchase Corsets, Hosiery and Worsted Goods Suitable for Ladies.—New Goods just received.
NEW HAMPSHIRE KNITTING WORKS,
219 Post St., bet. Dupont and Stockton, S. F.

JUST PUBLISHED.
A SUPERB
Oleograph Portrait OF HIS EMINENCE
CARDINAL GIBBONS,
Archbishop of Baltimore.
Before and After Taking.
A PERFECT LIKENESS
AND
AN ARTISTIC PICTURE
Size, 18 inches wide, by 22 inches high.
Sent free by mail, on receipt of 60 cents
Address, THE OLEOGRAPH COMPANY,
Box 2824, San Francisco, Cal.
We LEBENBAUM BROS.
Fine Groceries,
216 SUTTER ST.
AND
Polk Street, Cor. California.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.
Splendid Set of Teeth, only $6.
AT THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 966 Market street.

I CURE FITS!
When I say I cure the worst cases I mean what I say. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a lifelong study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no evidence that I cannot now receive a cure. Send at once for a bottle and a free bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will prove it.
Address, H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.
KNABE PIANOS.
Unqualifiedly and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World.
ESTEY PIANOS
Formerly the Pat. Arion Piano.
THE OLD FAVORITE!
BENJ. CURTAZ & SON,
20. O'Farrell Street, San Francisco

DANIEL SHEERIN,
STONE AND MARBLE YARD,
Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts.
Entrance to Catholic Cemetery. San Francisco.

JUST RECEIVED
A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops.
All kinds of Monuments and Grave Stones, Marble and Granite. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

WESTERN HOTEL,
212-11 Broadway Street,
JOHN HIGGINS, Proprietor
(Late Rendle's, R. R.)

ROBERT F. HAY,
TINTYPE GALLERY
821 Market St., Bet. 4th & 5th.

T. HOVENDEN,
Real Estate Agent,
HALF PRINTING OFFICE FOR SALE.
MONEY TO LOAN.

EDUCATIONAL.
SANTA CLARA COLLEGE
SANTA CLARA, SANTA CLARA COUNTY.
This institution was founded in 1851, and in 1862 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It possesses large buildings with elegant shady play grounds, ornated apartments, philosophical apparatus, and valuable cabinets, including a fine collection of Mineralogy, Conchology, Ethnology, and Conchology. Its course includes a new Building fitted for the use of Chemistry, and nothing to be desired in Apparatus.
Classes are conducted in Spanish and French as well as in English.
TERMS:
Payable semi-annually in advance:
Board, Tuition, Washing and Mending of Linen, School Stationery, use of Bedding, Lace and Medicines, Doctor's Fees, etc., $250.00
For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to St. Ignatius College, 214 Hayes street, San Francisco.
REV. E. P. KENNY, S.J.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME
SAN JOSE CALIFORNIA
THIS INSTITUTION, OFFERING EVERY COMFORT AND ADVANTAGE before which to receive a solid and refined education, was conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame, under the State Legislature, and enjoyed the rights and privileges of a University. Its Course of Studies is under all the rights and privileges of a University.
Pupils will receive every thing at home that they need, and will receive every thing to make instruction in the highest branches of the Department, including Music, Painting, Drawing, etc., which may find it desirable to join to their whole attention to the pursuit of the study in question.
The whole latter year has been in the first Monday in April, 1862. The next session will open on the first Monday in April, 1862. Popular expense received at any period of the year.
TERMS:
Per quarter, (payable in advance)
Boarding, Tuition in English, French, and Latin, Washing and Mending of Linen, and Lady Washing and Good Bedding. $75.00
Drawing and Painting 7.50
Piano and Harp 10.00
Use of Piano, Harp, Guitar, Violin, Harmonium, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Lessons, extra charges.
For further particulars address,
COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.

ST. CERTRUDE'S ACADEMY,
RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL.
THIS ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES, UNDER the charge of the Sisters of Notre Dame, is situated on an eminence in the pleasant and healthy town of Rio Vista, Solano County, and is now in its second year. It possesses a large and commodious building, with all the modern improvements, and a large and well-shaded play ground, with a grove of trees for the pupils. The climate is delightful and healthy, and the place is easily accessible. Pupils of all persuasions will be received, and every care will be taken of their health, morals, and proper deportment.
Pupils received at any time during the term, and will be charged from the date of entrance.
The academic year is divided into two sessions of five and a half months each, the first commencing on the first Monday in August.
Terms per Session, Payable in Advance, Gold and Silver.
Board and Tuition, half-boarders $125.00
Washing 15.00
Bed and Bedding 15.00
Music (piano) lessons 50.00
Drawing, Painting, French, Flute and Violin music, each 10.00
Use of Piano 10.00
Terms per month, in advance:
Board and Tuition, half-boarders $12.50
Intermediate Class 10.00
Primary Class 8.00
Music, Piano lessons, with use of instrument 10.00
Drawing and Painting, each 5.00
Instrument for practice, required for lessons, extra, per month 1.00
Washing, extra, per month 1.50
Bed and Bedding, per month 1.50
Bed and Bedding, per month 1.50
Special charge for lessons in music, French, Drawing and Painting, extra.
Pupils will be received at any time during the term, and be charged from the date of entrance.
Pupils who remain during the vacation will be charged extra.
Pupils who remain during the vacation will be charged extra.
Pupils who remain during the vacation will be charged extra

DAVITT IN CHICAGO.

(CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

an certain that in a short time we will see this fight.

I will be glad to see Lord Salisbury resort to coercion for two reasons. Wherever that policy has been fallen back upon by the English Government it has invariably been followed by some concession to Irish national sentiment; and then a little danger in the Irish movement may have a very salutary effect upon some individuals in that movement. If coercion comes along we will very soon see rise in Ireland, and the real manhood of Ireland, the determined national spirit of the country will come to the front and with that Lord Salisbury will have to deal.

I read in the papers the other day that Randolph Churchill (hisses) was preparing some scheme which was to settle once and forever the Irish difficulty. I don't expect much from Lord Randolph Churchill. (Laughter.) He is descended on the one hand from Lord Castlereagh (hisses), a gentleman who, you know, once sentimentized justice by committing suicide, and, on the other hand, the present practical leader of the Tories comes from Jack Churchill. The idea that a man so descended can propose anything which would be acceptable to Irish national sentiment as a satisfactory solution of the Anglo Irish question is simply absurd. Three County Boards, and this kind of Parliamentary Committee, if offered fifteen or twenty years ago, might have been accepted as an installment of justice; but when we know now that this something or other, policy or scheme, is to come forth in order to weaken the popular demand of Ireland for an Irish Parliament we simply tell Lord Churchill to keep his scheme in his pocket.

I am pledge you my word, from the knowledge of things at home and from my belief in the honesty of Mr. Parnell and his followers, that in a very few years' time it will be the privilege of some of us to come out here, not to a National League Convention, but to tell you what measures as intend to propose in the Irish Parliament in College Green. (Cheers.)

Mr. Sullivan then introduced Mr. Patrick Egan, who briefly congratulated the meeting on the good sense, unity, and patriotism it displayed by showing that neither the sophistry nor rascality of any one man or set of men could create dissension in the Irish ranks.

Thomas Brennan, first Secretary of the Land League in Ireland, said he hoped to see a peaceful solution of the Irish question, but it remained with the English rulers to make this point. But with or without English assistance, Ireland will go on in its work of fighting for home rule.

Alexander Sullivan spoke again, and said that Michael Davitt agreed with him that dynamite wasted, and that Ireland could remove them only by removing English politics from Ireland, but God had not given to the Irish race the benignity and the heart of Dorrit. Waits he hoped for a peaceful ending to the present troubles, he had little faith in any remedy which might be concocted in an English Parliament, but the Irish people were ready to give it a trial. Davitt was a stranger in this country, but he was not, perhaps, following that the support of the Irish in this country was withdrawn from Ireland, the movement in that country would be like an oil—without varieties.

The Rev. George C. Betts, a Protestant minister, made a short address, in which he said that when the last board of Davitts he expected to find that he was anxious to catch blood out of an English rival, but since meeting him he had discovered that Davitt was a peaceable man, anxious to see the Ireland's wrongs without resorting to bloodshed if possible.

John F. Finerty, amid loud cheers, said that to show that the assemblage had nothing but the highest respect for Davitt, he moved that a vote of thanks be tendered to him for the able and earnest devotion to Ireland's cause. The motion was put by Mr. Sullivan, who said that what had hitherto appeared to be a passage-at-arms between Davitt and Finerty was none, now we have been nothing but "love taps" and it was easy to see where they stood after tonight. He who struck Davitt struck Finerty, and he who struck them both struck Irishmen everywhere. Three cheers were then given for Davitt and three more for Egan.

"God Save Ireland" was then sung by Joseph P. Duffy, the audience joining, and the ceremony to a close. The exhibition of fireworks followed, many handsome and appropriate designs being seen. Mr. Davitt and the other gentlemen viewed them for a few minutes, and about 10 o'clock took carriages back to their respective residences and hotels.

OUR STOCKTON LETTER.

Scraps of News from the San Joaquin Valley.

STOCKTON, Cal., August 24, 1886.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir:—As nothing much has transpired in this city, I thought I would not write at length, but I will endeavor, however, to find a few items that may be of interest to many of your readers. The weather for some time past has been pretty warm and some damage was done to some of the grain fields by fire. In the vicinity of Linden, a few fields out in two different fields, destroying considerable grain and also burning much feed, but nothing of consequence. In all the threshing crews the fire was checked before it spread very extensively.

The latter connected with St. Mary's Parish are doing considerable towards making their county fair a financial success and it will not be on account of a lack of energy on the part that it will not become such. The ladies have taken the work of making the fair a success, this year so it has always been before, and they never had a better opportunity of doing so for the reason that we are in expectation of a big fair in Stockton this year, and a large concourse of people will be here during the week.

It is the intention of the Board of Trade to erect a temporary Pavilion on the old city park to contain exhibits which are to be sent to the county, which is situated in the center of the city, for an exhibition of instruction during the week. The date of the exhibition will be about 20 by 100 feet and will be built so as to include the whole block where the monument stood. A great number of visitors will be attracted to Stockton not only on this account, but also to witness the races at the race-track which are expected to need three or all of the fair days.

The announcement was made last Sunday that the Catholic schools of this city would reopen on the last Monday of this month. It is to be hoped that a full attendance will be present when the doors are thrown open. The Sisters have trouble in furnishing classes, owing to the refusal of some parents to allow their children to attend school out of an English school, but about this we need not complain, as we know that this city has such schools and that they are already well attended, and that the Sisters of Stockton alone, but also by those from different other places where there are Catholic schools.

The members of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society attended Holy Communion in a body last Sunday. The members of this society pride themselves in belonging to it and the society is constantly gaining in numbers and in strength.

YOUNG MAN'S AMBITION.

The Young Men's Institute of California is about to erect a handsome building on Jones line, on the property of J. W. McCarthy, recently a member of the firm of J. J. O'Brien and Co. Having secured an appointment in a New York business house, Mr. McCarthy, Grand Duke, Grand President of the Young Men's Institute, resigned his position in the institution in the metropolis of the Empire State.

FLASH.

The advance in the wind refers for Flour has not affected the price of that article at Stanley & Co's, 501 Washington street, as they were not supplied and still sell at the old rates.

Mrs. Urbalde's Music School, 507 Mason street. Pupils received for pianoforte and singing. Classes in French and German.

IRELAND'S NEW VICEROY.

Lord Londonderry, Retail Coal Dealer and Post-Prandial Politician His Wife.

Do Castlereagh has cut his throat? The word of this is that his ears were cut the last.

Lord Dufferin, who wrote the above, with several others which are scarcely fit for publication, merely gave expression likewise to the feelings of satisfaction experienced on all sides when the mysterious suicide of the second Lord Castlereagh, otherwise known as "bloody Castlereagh," became known. The circumstances attending his death are well enough remembered to need no comment, since they should hardly bear the light of day.

His ancestor and grandmother, the present Marquis, who has just been appointed Viceroy of Ireland, is a comparatively humble man, with a good deal of comfortable wealth, and, although an excellent ship and first-rate horseman, possesses but a small amount of brains. It is somewhat difficult to form anything about the career of an exceeding uninteresting a young nobleman. His education at Oxford appears to have been somewhat neglected, since he was in the habit of boasting few days in the week of the time he spent there. Needless to say that he left the University without attaining any distinction.

A sudden fit of patriotism caused him to consider the necessity of dowering the talent and latent statesmanship with which he has full himself possessed by a military service. Accordingly he placed the matter before an unfortunate Irish constituency, by dint of the most extravagant and reckless promises induced the electors to elect him to represent them in Westminster. His maiden speech in the House was made when he was selected, by reason of his birth, to move the address to the throne on the occasion of the last Queen's Speech. He could not depend on his somewhat weak memory to remember his peroration on paper, and so the intense astonishment of the whole House only read it from manuscript. By this method of breach of parliamentary etiquette he incurred a vast amount of ridicule. The only other occasion on which he addressed the House was when he was called to order for breaking the prisoners which he had so lavishly made to his constituency previous to his election. The excuse for his shameless repudiation of all the pledges which he had there made was characteristic. "I care only account for my error having undertaken to support Home Rule by the fact that I had been speaking after dinner.

Needless to add that he made a point of always voting against every measure which was calculated to ameliorate the liberties of Irishmen.

Stone he has achieved considerable success in London as a retail coal dealer, some anxiety is expressed in Ireland as to the possibility of his becoming a viceroy decorating that in future Londonderry coal be used as fuel throughout Ireland instead of the national bog peat.

Lady Londonderry, who is considered a great beauty, is credited with somewhat more intelligence than her lord and master. She is a great favorite at Marlborough House, but has incurred much unpopularity in London society by reason of her intolerable arrogance. No greater contrast can be imagined than that between the new Viceroyess and the Countess of Aberdeen, whose pretty face, kindly smile and winning ways endeared her to all. Lady Londonderry is the sister of Lord Stewartstown.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—On Friday one man post-job in Belfast was opened. His inspection was carried out in the presence of a large concourse of people who appeared to be very much amused.

Cavan.—The Lord Lieutenant has appointed Mr. Charles Dorlan, Killon House, county Cavan, to be Commissioner of the Peace, in place of the late Colonel Crofton.

Clare.—The Lord Lieutenant has appointed Mr. Charles Dorlan, Killon House, county Cavan, to be Commissioner of the Peace, in place of the late Colonel Crofton.

Carlow.—On July 24, Timothy Minny, a pocket of Carlow station, on the Great Southern and Western line, was attacked down and killed while engaged in shunting. Deceased, who had been twenty years in the employ of the company, leaves a widow and six young children.

Clonmel.—Intelligence has reached us of a notice into the Order of the Presentation Convent, on July 29, to the parish Church, Moonsoda, county Kilkenny, which immediately adjoins the convent of the Sacred Heart. The young lady who "has taken the better part" is Miss Winifred Molloy, second eldest daughter of Mr. Patrick Molloy, Carlow, and will henceforth be known in religion as Sister Mary Joseph Dominic. The Most Rev. Dr. Browning, Lord Bishop of Dromore, received the solemn vows of the young novice, according to the rite of the Presentation Order.

Cork.—Mr. Thomas Lane, of Cork, has received from Mr. Walsh, of Ballymacoda, the entire day from the Cork and Queenstown Railway, that he has in his house. The mullet for the cod-fishing commenced on the 1st inst. Cod have travelled from the local branch of the National League on a scheme of land-purchase.

Mr. Maurice Dowling, Doneraile Lodge, Castle Island, was appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county Kerry.

Kildare.—On July 20th, in the Circuit of Mitrey, Dungannon, county Waterford, the Rev. Michael Ryan, Parish Priest, conducted the sons of Mr. Nicholas, of Nane, in marriage, Sister Mary Joseph Evangelist.

We regret to announce that the Rev. A. Kelly, C.C., has been sent to Ballymacoda, Patrick Kennedy has been six years in Clane, and Mr. Kennedy, who is a native of Clane, has been ordained and ordained to the priesthood. He has been a curate in Newbridge, Kildare, Kennedy came to North Kildare, Father Kennedy came to Ballymacoda in the King's County.

Kilkenny.—The death is announced, in the 20th year, of Mary Mary Louisa Ellen Blackrock, the Presentation Convent, Waterford, July 19th, after a lingering illness. Deceased was a member of a prominent family, which has contributed many to the Church. Amongst them were the late Bishop of Dunedin, Bishop Moran, who died a Bishop Moran, Father Edward Canon Walsh, late P.P. of Mooncoin, and Mr. Thomas Walsh, Ballyhale, who for the last 40 years has been a member of the Kilkenny Corporation, and represented the Ballyhale Ward in Tenantry, and was the Nationalist candidate for the borough at the last Parliamentary election by and well liked. No such thing as Home Rule was thought of in the district.

ANOTHER GREAT FIRE.

Several Blocks of Buildings Burned Last Saturday Night.

One of the most extensive and disastrous conflagrations that have visited this city occurred last night. About 6 o'clock an alarm was turned in from Box 1, and the flames had spread in all directions, and from minutes later a second one was sounded, for the additional assistance of the engines, which originated in the foundry of H. Mecklenburg, on Sutter street, between Kearny and Dupont streets, and in a short time the entire block was ablaze. The building was a two-story structure, which originated in the foundry of H. Mecklenburg, on Sutter street, between Kearny and Dupont streets, and in a short time the entire block was ablaze. The building was a two-story structure, which was occupied by Mecklenburg as a foundry, and adjoining it was a two-story building, which was occupied as a hotel, and adjoining it was a two-story building, which was occupied as a hotel, and adjoining it was a two-story building, which was occupied as a hotel

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

TO KATE

I hasti lonlie thy cavis
Dear friend of the deepest grief,
Oh, didn't thy spirit hover near,
And on you whisper, dear,
Hint see the bitter tears
And hear the sorrow prayer?
And want thou phased that I should come
To fold sometimes there?

The clouds were dark and dreary,
All wintry was the sky,
And sombre was the mourning whole
The day I came to thee,
Kindred of death not wong
From little to little days,
The frosty breath of relentless Death
The world brought back to me.

And this silence drear
Thy tender home must be,
Unhonored the friend of love more awake
To song and minstrelsy.
I wander forth alone
And lake to thy grave stone
There, there, in that little from in mital sight
The friend I dearly love.

It cannot be, but yet
'Tis sweet to know and feel
That there may be love to get
Death's cold and silent seal,
We'll meet again from time fried
When shadows, dark and gray,
Shall roll away before the sun
Of God's eternal day.

M. L.

LYNE

WRITTEN ON HEARING OF THE DEATH OF MAJ. ANDRE IN THE TOWN OF ALEXANDRIA, NEW YORK, AN INCIDENT WHICH CAUSED MUCH SORROW AMONG THE CHILDREN

[THIS VERSE WAS AFTERWARDS SENT TO HER BY THE CHILDREN

Fair city by the Hudson!
Lone Alexandria's mine
And years that hid thy homes from me,
Came white-wheel mid-way, gray with mellow
Sweet memories—that ever bore
Glad tidings to the "Pioneer of the West"
The maiden mother—"holly planted
To warn, to comfort, and command!"

Each snowy pinioned herald brought
Of days—of years—of days long ago!
And bright with joyous gladness thought,
When I within that Eden sat,
Amidst a fond and frequent peace.

And from those violoned scenes I'st whom
An overtaxing star, our worshipped fare
Thus blown, the flower of that household Home
Twas a mystic angel, who bore from grace;
Twas a mystic angel, who bore from grace;
Entranced I sat, to converse sweet.

A happy dream, forever past!
Fair city of the Genesee,
A mournful minstrel comes at last
On sable pinions forth from thee—
A messenger of woe—that bows
Sad tidings to the "Sunset shore."

Ah! dismal news! Ah! mournfu news!
That tolls thy loss, sweet Eden seat!
Thy brightest jewel—thy average dead,
And on the stilll and pulseless breast
The gradeen hand, that fully sweyed
Love's sceptre bright, forever laid!

Dear friends! from whom so lengthening years,
Thy sweet silks could unsever!
Your smiles I shared—and, now, my tears
I share, in unavailing sorrow,
O! stricken sons! with those ye shed
Above that sinless mother's bed.

Ah! we, in spirit-union, there,
Pluck all the sweet, purity flowers shall meet,
And Heav'ward waft the mingled prayer,
The blended plaudits, potent, sweet—
That her's may be Love's Kingdom bright!
Her Jubilee Home of Life's Light.

And she will guard her treasures fond,
Gold shrine them through the rolling years,
Within her folded wings,
The earthly life of hill and tears,
Thus changed day, that sun in gloom,
Thus changed night, of the tomb.

HARRIET M. BEDWORT, (Marie)
San Francisco, California.

Literary Miscellany.

Monsieur Albano.

A Story of Trials and Ambition

BY GORDAN STABLES, M. D.

He was a little old man, verging perhaps on eighty, with a cheerful countenance, and a hat which Wilhelm could not keep from thinking was one size or more too big for him. He had a clean shave with and eyes, but with a pleasant voice, and a smile that often quite banished all trace of melancholy from his face.

But Wilhelm—the head waiter at the dingy old Paris restaurant, where for months he had pressed himself at the same hour daily—had taken to him from the first, and as the gentleman seated himself in exactly the same place he was wont to assume him in the suggest corner of the room, not far from the chimney stove—the time was winter—and with no other companions save a pair of lately ogle.

"What is it to do?" M. Albano would ask himself at length, and he would sit with his foot on a morsel of gut-skin placed there for them. "What is it to day, Wilhelm?"

And Wilhelm would invariably replace a large dripped free finger against the side of some particular dish on the card, and said it was the "Sunset Soup" or "Sunset Fish."

It was not long before Wilhelm found out that M. Albano was, like himself, a Horticulturist, and, like himself, after this. Wilhelm kept the little old man his story, and to some extent the little old man told Wilhelm his. There was some difference, nevertheless, in their stations in life, for in his own dear land M. Albano had been but a junior engineer.

"And so you are really gone?" said Wilhelm, as he stood one day near his friend, the empty soup bowl in his right hand.

"Really gone, Wilhelm."

"Oh, dear! Monsieur, I shall sadly miss you. Is it Brussels, Monsieur, Berlin, or Moscow? You say you have had engagements at all these places."

"No, no," replied M. Albano sadly. "it is the nature of these places. I am done with them all—done with the world, I might say. I am going home."

"What?" cried Wilhelm, with brightening eyes, "home to our dear Paris?"

"Nay, nay, nay; never there again. What matters Imperial Engineers? Can a king mend a broken heart, even if he could? Wilhelm, I am dying."

Poor old Wilhelm! Could I paint with our grief on those green-wooded hills and valleys that once were mine! Could I depict the happy people whom dwell there—and who once called me lord—without sadness! No, Wilhelm, no. My home is near London, the home of the refugees, the only place in the whole world amid the bustle and stir of which an exile may not forget himself.

Wilhelm lingered by the table for a few moments. He was in deep thought.

"M. Albano," he said at last, "to have employment in London has long been with me a cherished dream—a castle in the air—and it what you will. I hate the garb of servility in which you now see me. Oh! there are times, Monsieur, that I walk my room all night, and I am thought, because I feel I was born for better things. Yet I try to do my duty—my humble duty."

"Yes, yes, I see," said Albano, speaking more briskly than was his wont. "That is right—do your duty, I trust in mine, humble though that is. Do not let pride interfere with that duty. Be not self conscious. Concentrate your thoughts and energies in your work, humble though acting may call it. Believe me, Wilhelm, a baby surrounds the head of that man or woman who does whatever his or her hand findeth to do, in no hall-hearted way, but with a will, a purpose, and an honest pride of action, feeling inwardly that duty is a sacred thing. Study to be content with the station in life Providence has placed you, Wilhelm. Study that—study that."

"But Monsieur, you would than leave ambition out of scene."

"Nay, nay, only let your ambition be subservient to your duty. The march of mankind—the march of all human beings—is ever onward. Better yourself, by all means, if you can; by so doing you may benefit the world; but ambitious thoughts or actions must never interfere with your hours of labor. Those belong to your present employer, Wilhelm.

"Ah, yes, Monsieur.

"Well, see and think of it. Meanwhile, here is a pass for the Hundred Days' Concert. You will see me and my little circle in the second row of the orchestra. I will wait for me, and we will sup together at the Rhenish-ville.

High over a score of fiddles at the grand concert that evening, M. Albano's little violin seemed to ring—seemed, at all events—in Wilhelm's ears, just across beats and cos listen only to the obligato voice—amidst the babel of bird voices in the woods in early spring.

After the performance, Wilhelm waited for what appeared quite a long time for his friend. All the other musicians had dressed and filed away, but still the little old Wilhelm ventured at last to ask one in authority.

"Oh, no!" was the reply. "M. Albano has not gone. He is talking to the manager. The manager wants him to stay on, but he insists on throwing up his engagement.

"Strange," said Wilhelm.

"Yes, it is strange. You are his friend! Well, and even you do not seem able to fathom the mystery. But this Albano is a splendid violinist, and the manager would be willing to retain his services, and remuneration he will. Yet, although he is not rich, he is poor as ever of the more. Italy, Belgium, Norway; all societies have him by rotes, but some for long. Think you is your friend somewhat deferred?"

"I am sure he is not. I only know he has a reason or reasons for his unusual conduct—but he has not thought fit to enlighten me as to what they are, and it would ill become me to inquire. But here he comes."

It was late even for Paris that night ere Wilhelm bade his kind-hearted friend adieu, at the corner of the Rue de la [illegible], and hurried away to his dingy room.

Yet that evening had been big with Wilhelm's fate. He had supped with M. Albano at a charming little hotel; and with true politeness, Monsieur had said little or nothing about himself, but had led the young man to speak of all his hopes and ambitions.

Wilhelm's great scheme was connected with electricity, not only for the purpose of lighting cities and country towns, but as the moving power of the future; and M. Albano knew enough about chemistry speedily to discern that, if properly worked out, these plans of Wilhelm's might lead him to fame and fortune.

"You will come to England with me, Wilhelm? I have saved a little—I will pay your expenses."

"No, friend, no; to England I will come, but everything I will pay myself. Two more months will, I work, and then—

"You will come!

"Yes.

"And be my guest for a few weeks at little cottage home?

"Well—yes."

So the two parted.

Winter was still holding sway, and snowy deep all round Paris; but in nine weeks time what a change there was! With Paris, however, this short and simply story has no concern anything to do. That there was still a tinge of a beautiful cottage in Surrey. It stands on the slope of a gently rising hill, and is almost buried in pine-woods.

"Yes, Wilhelm," M. Albano was saying as the two sat together in a little table on the lawn, "this cottage, these gardens, the beautiful country around, do not seem to me same since Marie—alone my daughter left me. They are not the same, for I am older now. I cannot see with the same eyes, I cannot feel with the same heart; it seems as if the gloom of the grave were already closing around me."

"But Marie—your daughter—may return."

"No, that cannot be; the pride that banished her to go will prevent her returning. She will never come back."

Wilhelm was silent.

"A few hasty words—and the words were none—a few peevish sentiments the fate that banished me from my nature land, that had torn from my breast the implicit trust and honor, and compelled me—nay, a count—to drop out a watched existance in a foreign country, by and of my vision. I did not mean to imply that I begrudged the lady that has kept her a lady, but I feel I led her to believe so; and I would have done my life the best and noblest that I can been able to retract, to unsay my cruel words; but next minute Marie was gone. Gone—yes, gone with tears in her eyes, and sighing, a breaking heart, though a proud one. And since then I have sought and obtained employmentin almost every capital in foreign country. Age and of my vision I did not mean to imply that I begrudged the lady that has kept her a lady, but I feel I led her to believe so; and I would have done my life the best and noblest that I can been able to retract, to unsay my cruel words; but next minute Marie was gone. Gone—yes, gone with tears in her eyes, and sighing, a breaking heart, though a proud one. And since then I have sought and obtained employmentin almost every capital in foreign country. Age and of my vision. I do

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1886.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Christian parents, let us beg your special consideration of this important truth. Make the Press, and individually, most particularly defend the Catholic Press, your first care. Remember that it is to newspapers the great work which Providence will in Human approach of Jesus Christ. Let Monarchy, aristocracy, democracy, and the Church, each have its own newspaper,

Farm and Home.

Neatness about the House.

Every farmer, and, in fact, every person owning a yard, ought to take pride in keeping it neat and clean. Neat, well kept yards attract the passer by, and often add money value to the place. We have an instance of this kind in mind now. A man came into a certain neighborhood, recently, to buy a farm. He found two that were for sale. One was as good as the other, as regards location, soil, buildings, etc., but one had a neat yard about the house, and the other had a shiver's one, and though he could have bought the shiverly place for less money than he had to give for the other, he chose the one that cost the most, simply because it looked the best.

Have a wall made here about the yard, and keep it in repair. Have a strong gate, and never let it get off its hinges. Keep the shrubs and trees trimmed up well, and never let litter of any sort accumulate. Have a big box, or hogshead, in the back yard, into which cans, old boots, shoes, and the thousand and one things which constitute about the house can be thrown from time to time. When the box or hogshead is full, burn or bury the rubbish. This rules not to the front yard only; let neatness prevail all about the place. It gives an air of thrift and prosperity, and always impresses a beholder favorably. It pays in more ways than one to have neat surroundings.

Disimportance of Beauty.

A young man marries a girl who has a pretty face, and thinks he has a wife and home, when in reality he has neither. Her pretty face gets to be an old story, or becomes faded or freckled or fretted, and as the face was all he wanted, all he paid attention to, all he set up with, all he bargained for, all he swore to love, honor and protect, he gets sick of his bride, knows a dozen faces which he likes better, gives up staying home in the evening, becomes hoisted with oysters, oysters and politics, and looks upon his home as a very inadvisable lodging-house. A family of children grows up about him, but neither he nor his "face" know anything about training them, so they come up helter-skelter; made toys of when babies, dolls when boys and girls, dredges when young men and women, and so pass year after year, and not one quiet, happy, homelike hour is known throughout the entire household.

The Farmer's Paradise.

A man on his own farm, well cultivated and kept well stocked, with good modern dwellings and barns and outbuildings, master of both time and acres, tied to no hours by the call of bells and whistles, free from the fear of losing his place on account of nose but himself, mostly in his own thinks, performing his healthful labors with the light of the smoke of his own chimneys, is surely as rich in the genuine sense of that word as any man can be. He has nothing to fear and nobody to envy. Of one thing he is sure of all his days, and that is sufficient living; and that is what other men are never sure of without a single pang of doubt or apprehension. There is no land; there is his home; there is all the animals and the inanimate machinery of his establishment. He made many strong points the real in fools in profound trust to the bounty of heaven.

Instead of this serenity and democratic ing anxiety to get rich, if the average farmer, once being solidly established, would resolve to enlarge and exalt his life as it is, to make more out of that, to enjoy as much as possible of what there is about him, to adorn and beautify his home—that only home on earth—within and without, he would find all his daily tasks easier, even to the extent of being delightful; he would find rich where now, with more money, he feels all the time poor, and he would rid himself of a false pride in the form of increasing pecuniary that holds his nose to his grindstone till he is flung into his grave. If farmers only knew it, they would be the richest men on earth.

Fallacies in Regard to Diet.

That there is any nutriment in beef tea made from extracts. There is none whatever.

That gelatine is nutritious. It will not sup a cat alive. Beef tea and gelatine, however, possesses a certain repurative power, we know not what.

That an egg is equal to a pound of meat, and that every sick person can eat them. Many, especially those of nervous or bilious temperament, cannot eat them, and to such eggs are injurious.

That beef is not an important article of food it must be forced upon a patient. Food that a person cannot endure will not do.

That arrowroot is nutritious. It is simply starch and water, useful as a restorative quickly prepared.

That cheese is injurious in all cases. It is, as a rule, acute indicated, being usually indigestible; but it is concentrated nutriment, and a warm repeater, and often cured.

That the cravings of a patient are whims and should be denied. The stomach often needs, craves for and digests articles not laid down in any dietary. Such are, for example, fruit, pickles, jams, cake, ham or bacon, with fat, cheese, butter and milk.

That an injudicious diet may be marked out which shall apply in a very case. Choice of a given list of articles allowable in a given case must be decided by the opinion of the stomach. The stomach is right, and theory wrong, and the judgment admits no appeal. A diet which would keep a healthy man might kill a sick man, and a diet sufficient to sustain a sick man would not keep a well man alive. Increased quantity of food, especially of liquids, does not mean increased nutriment, rather decrease, since the digestion is overtaxed and weakened. Strive to give the food as concentrated a form as possible. Consult the patient's stomach in preference to his cravings, and if the stomach rejects a certain article do not force it.

Fast Horses Raising Vermont.

A correspondent writes the New York Tribune: Go in a railroad train far up in Vermont I fall in with J. F. Atkinson, a wealthy farmer of that State. Inquiring the price of improved land, I was surprised to hear him quote such low figures as $10 to $30 per acre. He told me that the same land that could not be bought for this price formerly brought as high as $70. His explanation of this reduction in value was given in this language: "The young fellows won't work like the old men and women. They will work have gone off to the West. Those who remain care more about fast horses and other fast things than about farming. Look about at any of the railroad stations and you will see scores of idlers standing around. When a farmer or a farmer's boy gets a fast horse and a fast rig he can do pretty quick. You can't hire farm help even at big prices. Men have got where it, want to live by their wits or on what their fathers accumulated. When David Hill took the famous old Blue Hawk stallion into Addison county he caused a loss in the value of farm property there equal to a million dollars. He found Black Hawk in a dray at Lowell, Mass. It would have been better for the State of Vermont if he had never found him. Why it literally demoralized its farmers all over the State."

—A man must stand erect and not be kept erect by others.

Family Fun.

Three Hints on Courting.

If you thats a rival keep an eye on him, if he is a widower keep two on him.

Don't put much sweet stuff on paper. If you do you will hear it read in after years, when your wife has some especial purpose in inflicting upon you the greatest punishment known to a married man.

Set home at a reasonable hour in the evening. Don't act until the girl has to choose her whole soul into a pane that can't cover with both hands. A little thing like that may cause indifference at the beginning of your married life.

English as She is Spoke.

"What a pity it is that such a pretty girl as Florence Fawlsen should have such beastly bad taste, isn't it, old fellow?" "What is the matter with her taste, dear boy?" "Why, she received me when I called yesterday in a well gown, with a blue tirrum in her hair. Passively, old fellow, the cow was shocked to see that I could hardly tank." "My gaucious! no wonder!"

Accurate Information.

Wife—Mrs. Smith is an awfully slovenly woman. She leaves everything to the servants, and her three children just run wild. It's a shame.

Husband—How do you know all this, dear?

Wife—How do I know it all! Am I not over there half the time!

A New Tip to Him.

"Harry," said a young wife to her husband, "can you get me some ostrich tips to-day, as you go down town, and have them sent up?"

"Ostrich tips," he answered with a puzzled look.

"Yes, dear, ostrich tips."

"Oh," he replied, as if he knew all about it, "of course I can," and he went away without betraying his ignorance.

That evening when he came back his wife met him at the door.

"Oh, Harry," she cried, "the tips didn't come. You forget them, you naughty fellow."

"Not much I didn't," he said, with spirit; "but they didn't have any."

"Didn't have any! Why, I saw them in a dozen places yesterday. Where did you go?"

"Every place. Frank's and Joe's and Sam's and a whole lot more places. They could give me base ball tips, and horse race tips, and regatta tips, but nobody had ostrich tips. I guess it was a bad job."

She looked at him closely for an instant, took in the situation, and mutual explanations resulted in an amicable settlement.

How to Keep off Cannibals.

Sometimes a good case is ruined by pressing too much. This was illustrated the other day in Chicago.

At a meeting of ministers the Rev. Mr. Ayres read a long paper, in which he argued that the sonning Christian would not cannibals if they can finds until actually needed to pay dash losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members whose certificates will fall due first on part payment at three at 8 per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $104,000 to members, and paid in death losses $13,000.00. All claims are paid promptly and in full. The membership at present exceeds 3,000 persons. His and this he had loaned to members monthly at rates $6,000.

or Reliable agents desired.

Address,

W. H. WARD, Secretary,

Room 28, Phelan Building, San Francisco.

SCALDS and BURNS Should have prompt and proper care or they may be dangerous and perhaps FATAL.

ACCIDENTS are constantly happening. A kick of a horse or cow may cause a bad bruise; the slip of an axe or knife may result in a Serious Cut.

Any of these things may happen to one of your family at any moment. Have you Cause of PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER ready to use in such cases? It has no equal for the cure of Scalds, burns, cuts, bruises, sprains, sores, insect bites &c.—All Druggists Sell it.

PERRY DAVIS & SON, PROVIDENCE.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.

The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.

(Incorporated under the laws of California.)

This association is conducted on the mutual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actual cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $2,000, $3,000 and $5,000, which are payable in five equal parts during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 25 years of age receive one-fifth of the certificate taken at the expiration of each ten years; members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every seven years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of certificate is paid to the members legatee.

No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privileges of being the contributors of their own funds until actually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members whose certificates will fall due first on part payment at three at 8 per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $104,000 to members, and paid in death losses $13,000.00. All claims are paid promptly and in full. The membership at present exceeds 3,000 persons. His and this he had loaned to members monthly at rates $6,000.

or Reliable agents desired.

Address,

W. H. WARD, Secretary,

Room 28, Phelan Building, San Francisco.

WARD & CO.'S Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE. 608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F. Telephone No. 747.

ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Help, Paris Hands, Tasmeters, Dairymen, Sawyers, Hands, Gardeners, Coachmen, and Married Couples for private families and ranches. Also, good reliable Female Help, without any charge to employers. Reliable Office rooms for ladies at 608 Clay street.

CYCLORAMA Battle of Gettysburg. The Decisive Struggle of the Great Civil War. Open Day and Evening. Cor. Market and Seventh Sts. Hall ADMISSION, 25 CENTS.

HOOPER'S SOUTH END Grain Warehouse. First-Class Fire-Proof Brick-Building. CAPACITY 12,000 TONS. TOWNSEND ST., Between First and Second, San Francisco. GEORGE E. LEMAN, Prop. Grain taken from the cars at the rate of 1 C. P. R. R. and S. P. R. R. freight charge. Storage as current rates. TAKEN AND FIFRSHED IN 10 MINUTES. Advances and Insurance effected at lowest rates. Telephone No. 997.

BUTTERICK'S Patterns—Fall Styles. Stamped Goods, Embroidery Materials. Send Stamp for Catalogue. Agency, 134 Post Street, San Francisco.

An Extraordinary Razor IT HAS NEVER INTERFERED WITH THE QUEEN'S OWN ... Price of Razor, Complete, $1.00. Sent by mail, postage free, on receipt of price. ... Address, THE ... CO., Cor. Market and Stockton Sts., San Francisco.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE, Importers and Dealers in BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS. Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc. MANUFACTURERS OF Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags. 511 to 516 Sacramento and 419 Commercial Sts., S. F.

English as She is Spoke.

RAZORS! FOR $1,000 WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND SUPR OF ... M. PRICE 415 Kearny Street. Grinding and Repairing.

G. ORSI, HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger. PALACE HOTEL, WILLIS, LEAVENWORTH, Thompson, Sproule, Clay, Paper Hangings, etc., 20 Montgomery Avenue, bet. Jackson and Washington Sts., San Francisco, Cal. Orders promptly collected to. Gilding and carving. Sidney and Kalsomine. American, French and English paper hangings.

MISCELLANEOUS. JULIUS H. MEDAU, 968 and 970 Folsom St. San Francisco. WHOLESALE LIQUOR DEALER. Established 1858. We are selling 2Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods. Table Wines ... 50c, 60c, 75c, and $1. Angelica Wines ... $1, $1.25 and $1.50. Port, Sherry, Hy H. Port, Sherry and Angelica ... $1.50. Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2. Bourbon Whiskey ... $1.50, $1.75 and $2. Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $1 per qt. and upwards. Other Wines and Liquors at lowest rates.

NEW MUSIC. J. FISCHER & BRO., New York. A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St. San Francisco. PACIFIC COAST AGENCY. Music, Music Books, Musical Instruments, Typewriters, Sewing Machines, Piano Handicap, etc., 25 Montgomery Avenue, bet. Jackson and Washington Sts., San Francisco, Cal. Orders promptly collected to. Gilding and carving. Sidney and Kalsomine. American, French and English paper hangings.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST! THE CATHOLIC NATIONAL SERIES. Readers and Reading Books. By H. Bell, Rev. Gibson, D.D., Manyard Christian. Cheapest and Most Popular School Books. The Primer, ... The First Reader, ... The Second Reader, ... The Third Reader, ... The Fourth Reader, ... The Fifth Reader, ... The Pearl Reader, ... The Speller and Word-Book. ... The Bible History, ... The Catechism of the Third Plenary Council. Illustrated Edition. ... Catechism of Christian Doctrine, ... Abridged Catechism, ... Catechism, ... Catechism, ...

Pestilential Influence of Protestantism.

SECTARIAN DAMAGE TO CHRISTIANITY.

SCANDALS SCATTERED BY PROTESTANT PREACHERS.

immorality and Infidelity the Outgrowth of Religious Error.

"How they Help Ingersoll," is the title of the following able article in the New York Freeman's Journal, and every editorial utterance therein is true to the letter.

It has been said that "Col. Bob Ingersoll would not be able to raise so many laughs during his scurrilous lectures if Christ had not constructed a religion so full of inconsistencies. The only unanswerable answer made to Ingersoll's necromancy speeches was that of Father Lambert, who found it easy to defend Christianity, for he found "Notes" do not stampede to defend Calvinism. That is a job which no logician can undertake.

THE VAGARIES OF PROTESTANTISM

hasten it. "Logic is the sinews," it is not a bulwark of Christianity. Year by year it disintegrates before the waves of doubt. And of late years it has been putting weapons into the hands of its enemies by means of what is called in the slang of the street—"the camp meeting racket." Its sciences has been the reproach of the Methodist and Baptist camp-meetings because, and yet young libertines scan them in swords, and, if Mr. Ingersoll should assert that emotional religion was an insanity, he unchastity he would receive a round of applause. He might go further, and insist that Christianity led to unchastity, and the basis who listen to him would applaud, for they have been taught to believe that Methodism and other eccentric sects represent Christianity.

THE MOONLIGHT PICNIC PARTIES

which go out into New York Bay, or the Hudson filled with beer, "tonghs," and their "lady friends," are moral aspects, when compared with the sanctity "religious" camp-meetings. There is no hypocrisy about them. The "tonghs" and their friends do not hide their immorality behind have stacks of Bibles. They do not sing "Beulahland" and "Hold the Fort," and call "Lord! Lord!" while their thoughts are mainly occupied with the devil. They go forth for a saturnalia in the devil's name they are in opposition to the teachings of Our Lord, and they do not dare—having, let us hope, some fear of God—to pray blasphemously while they sin.

But the hypocrisy of camp-meetings adopt Luther's advice, and "sin, and sin boldly," but always within reach of a pulpit organ and the sound of Mooey and Sankey's hymns. The beer-drinking of the moonlight picnickers fill their holy souls with horror. They are never weary of praying for the damnation and predicting hell-fire for the moderate drinker. These are either sinners, very distinctly forbidden by God, which are never mentioned in camp-meeting exhortations.

THESE FOOTS AMBROSIAL

are now in full swing. The one at Ocean Grove, N. J., is particularly strict as to what its denizens shall not drink on all days, and as to what they shall not do on the "Sabbath": but its reputation for morality in other respects has received some shock. The latest aspersions cast on this pious summer colony was by a writer in the New York Times. These revelations have excited the indignation of the people who go to the seaside to damn the sins of other people. Self-respecting Methodists and Baptists should put an end to the hypocrisy methods of camp-meetings by suppressing the institutions themselves. The time for lenses of religious excitement is no longer sufficient to screen the real purpose of the institutions from the eyes of those who are open-air sensation-pleasers.

How can any body of men who know human nature invite crowds of young people from all parts of the country to come and live idly for weeks, unmeasured, free to do as they please, provided they avoid beer and amuse themselves with parlor organs and Moody and Sankey hymns or the "tonghs"? The consequences of camp-meetings have become common talk, and it is but there are Methodist and Baptist elders who close their eyes to the disgrace of camp-meetings because of the growth "gate-money," and the increased cash which such gatherings give to otherwise worthless patches of sea sand!

CAMP-MEETINGS AS PLAIN MASQUERADES

were set up along the beach at Ocean Grove—mandates which the law enforced—the disorder of the male and female bathers, pious pilgrims getting a change of heart:—was shocking to the serious. Now "Indians are implored, by painted squaws naked against the bath-houses, not to forget their salvey, and to keep in mind the fact that they ought to be as self-respectful in bathing costumes as they are in their ordinary clothes! The state of affairs causing these warnings and requests ought to have rendered "camp-meetings" impossible long ago. In the interest of Christianity they should be suppressed; for Christianity, which the Methodist insanity of religion is supposed to represent, suffers in the eyes of young and old by the shameless sensation—so notorious that every street orchin has his gibe at camp-meetings—of people who break the Sixth Commandment, while pretending to adore the third Commandment. The issue is of Protestantism, not religion, is frail enough. It has been made very thin indeed by contrights which it is powerless to meet. Still, its eight suppers keeps many men from rank infidelity; but year after year the camp meeting hypocrisy and "pious" vice confirm the young in a belief, too easily acquired, that religion is a sham, and Christianity, like Brot Harte's Cocoanuts, is "played out."

THE LICENSE PERMITTED AT PAWNBROKERS

AUTHOR PLAYS

has become a subject of general remark this summer. The New York Sun recently called attention to the exhibitions—more in keeping with the atmosphere of low variety theatres than of decent families—made at Narragansett Pier, where the "aristocracy" of New England gather in groups or assembly in a state of nature as they will allow. The virtuous French are holding in their hands in horror at the freedom of manners and dress common at Long Branch, Coney Island, and Rhode Island. The worst of it is that fathers and mothers seem to feel no shame at the appearance of their daughters in costumes made, it seems, not for bathing, but for promenading on the beach, so absolutely indecent that public prints, when they publish them, run the risk of being indicted for obscenity.

Strange, after the American manner, is an institution. And any one who would find fault with the usual behavior of the males and females who enter the ocean together would be considered an eccentric, whereas unusual such an arrangement might seem to him. But public decency demands that the immoral scenes enacted by people whose claim to respectability is admitted by society, shall be abrogated. "Mon ami pas mal pensee" is easily quoted by those who would call evil with an air of innocence. If the bathing costumes continue to be as scanty as they are this year at sea-side resorts, people who hold that modesty is a good thing in a woman will be compelled to avoid them; and Europeans will almost be justified in their opinion that many American girls are devoid of it.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—The business of the sixth convention of the Irish National Foresters, which commenced on Aug. 26, in the rapacious hall of St. Mary's, Belfast, Brother John Mulcahy, high sub-chief ranger, occupied the chief chair; Brother Wm. Doyle, Executive Council Member, occupied the sub chair. The General Secretary, pro tem, showed that there are 3 branches of the society in Belfast—No. 1, total, 21; in Scotland, 23; in North Antrim, 1; total, 45 branches. The report also showed that nearly £1,000 stood to the credit of the society. The report was adopted.

Armagh.—The National Legislative Association in Armagh, has been very busy holding claims for their people to be heard in the rights and wrongs of their cases. Mr. McMahon and Mr. Dalton, second over 600 claims in the Mid-Armagh division of the County. The Conservative lodge seems to a hundred claims in this division. North and South Armagh have also been attended to by both parties, and altogether some 2,000 claims have been lodged for the three divisions of the County. If the register other counties is the same position as it is in Armagh, the necessity for appointing a distant Barrister at the revision sessions this year will be the same as it was last year.

Cork.—A correspondent writing to the Cork Herald asks a question to note the appearance of potato blight in West Cork, and expresses the hope that, in the event of the disease, the people shall be about to operate. The potato crop in West Cork has been, for the last three years, a failure, and it is very prosperous one.

Clare.—A public lock place on July 31, at Corofin, and was the occasion of a demonstration, which was very large, attended by a very demonstrative order. The sale was at the suit of Mr. Cruel and Mr. Cruel, the plaintiff, and the defendant Mr. Cruel. Before the sale an offer of the land was tendered on behalf of the defendant, and was driven through the sale, and the land was left in possession of the defendant. At the sale, the land was left in possession of the defendant. A National Leaguer was the successful purchaser.

Carlow.—On August 1st, in the convent of the Presentation, Carlow, the Most Rev. Dr. Murphy was elevated to the sacred office of episcopacy by his Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Walsh, Archbishop of Dublin and Leighlin. Father Murphy is a nephew of Mr. E. M. Murphy, Chairman of Coolbawn, County Cork, and brother to the Rev. Philip M. Murphy, Ballinakill, Navinal, Clonmacher, and Rev. Francis P. Murphy, Kirling Tower, Newmarket. After passing through the very routine of his studies in Carlow, the Rev. his friends and friends, Father Murphy, Carlow College, and received St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, where he was distinguished for eminent talent. The Most Rev. Dr. Murphy, Dr. Burke, readily perceiving the many good qualities of the young friend, was pleased to appoint him head prefect to St. Patrick's Day College. In the office of responsibility and trust, which he held for one year, he was the esteem and confidence of his superiors, and conducted without exception the fine and respectful regard of the students over whom he presided. The professors, having finished the curriculum of studies, he was ordained to the priesthood, and he was ordained by the Most Rev. Dr. Cullen, the venerable cardinal primate of Ireland, and he became the secretary of his Grace, and he was the secretary of his Grace, and he was the secretary of his Grace, and he was

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

TWILIGHT.

In the dim and misty twilight
Dark and cold the hours
Tie the hour to bold oblivion
With soft scenes the sinner

They will linger in the shadows
That follow dying day,
Till with scales on bed Hale presents
By the magic of their sway.

They will sooth or heal the capricious
And bring a peaceful calm,
Till the weary thinker, wearily
Beneath the heavy balm.

Then we feel the peaceful beauty
Of heaven, earth and sky,
Then we feel that God has made us
For something great and high.

And our weary, weary struggles
All seem to fit away,
As we sit and dream at twilight
Beneath the shadowy gray.

All the stormy, angry feelings
That linger our thoughts away
From our kind and Heavenly Father
Now vanish with the day.

And from out the shadows cometh
A pleasant spirit company,
Such a pure heart as we could wish
To worship show and class.

In our heart there even is a longing
For holy, pure, and true,
And a prayer, that half unconscious,
Its holiday hilarer before.

When the twilight gray has faded
Into the darkness of night
We will still be in the twilight
Of our hearts and souls.

And again return to duties
Which we have left for a day,
But our twilight dream has vanished
Rudely as thought away.

M. L.

O DULCIS VIRGO MARIA.

Out in the dark, and mist, and cold
I hear a voice in the city crowd,
Chanting low an from fonts of cold
Wonder-struck, and with bated breath,
Sobbing, and sighing, and sobbing,
Sobbing, sobbing, hear thy child,
Thinkest and hear thy child,
Look, O look from Heaven I pray;
Light and guard here on her way,
O dulcis Virgo Maria!

In the darkness the singer goes,
And the world is left to its sorry fate
The music trembles, then swells and dies,
Till it echoes upon the night,
Sobbing and sighing, sighing and sobbing
Sobbing, sobbing, hear thy child,
Thinkest and hear thy child,
Look, O look from Heaven I pray;
Light and guard here on her way,
O dulcis Virgo Maria!

Alas! in this distance the music fails,
Till it dies away to the list and rain,
I have lost a dream of the sweet notes
And I wean and wait for the voice in vain;
Sobbing and sighing, sighing and sobbing
Sobbing, sobbing, hear thy child,
Thinkest and hear thy child,
Look, O look from Heaven I pray;
Light and guide her on her way,
O dulcis Virgo Maria!

Literary Miscellany.

The Martyr's Rosary.

What Led to the Conversion of a Calvinist Stonemason.

CHAPTER I.

It was near midnight on March 9, 1615. Through the frosty air the moonlight fell, cold and white, on the Gothic architecture of ancient Glasgow, making the overhanging gables of the tall houses seem "many an item and twenty." One side of the open space in front of the Archbishop's palace was in deep shadow, while the other was flooded with light.

Still and smooth and gloomy object lent the moonlight show in the middle of the open space? A scaffold, surmounted by a gallows-tree. And he who is to die upon it on the morrow has a dungeon within the palace hard by, a prisoner of the Protestant Archbishop Spottiswood. The scaffold was in progress at the account, nobles, also, of the Privy Council from Edinburgh, are in the Archbishop's palace. The guards and men-at-arms have feasted and drank themselves into a state of drowsiness, while doors and gates are left unwatched.

A woman who was up at that late hour, chanced to open her casement. She looked upon the silent and deserted square, on the dim massive structure in its midst; thinking, perhaps, of the poor prisoner, the inhabitant of whose horrible fortitude under repeated torture, had thrilled all Scotland. As her eye wandered to the palace where he lay, she saw a tall figure, clad in a long loose dressing-gown, pass out from the square to the scaffold. The man's hands were joined as applied somewhat in the heart of prayer, reaching the scaffold he knelt down, and remained a considerable time. Thus the woman heard him say aloud

"Mary, Mother of Grace and Mercy
Maker Bluetooth!
Thou art hence prodigal,
Ye have merite enough."

"Mary, Mother of Grace and Mercy" are as from the enemy, and receive us at the hour of our death.

After this he arose, and returned from whence he came. The woman was very curious, a Presbyterian, and a great reader of word of Lain; but the sense and the words which she distinct heard, so impressed her that she never forgot them.

This strange nativity when, what he might be among, returned to his own apartment in his prison, was Father John Ogilvie, S. J. After twenty-two years spent in foreign universities and parochial work he had received the dangerous trust to being appointed to the Scottish mission, which she then a post of the utmost danger. The Calvinists on one hand, and King James's true Protestant bishops on the other, though they quarrelled about everything else, agreed in persecuting the Catholics, whom elsewhere they had seized, whom monasteries they had ruined, and whom they were resolved to extermination if they land. The few priests left were hiding among the mountains, in caverns or hollow trees. The faithful who dared give shelter to a priest incurred from the secular law, which was called "high treason," the penalty of death, or at least imprisonment, with loss of all property possessed.

CHAPTER II.

Father Ogilvie, who was of a noble and warlike race, had the frank and fearless bearing of a soldier, as well as the zeal of a devoted priest. He seems, wrote one who knew him, "to have but one thought and aim—to bring the fellows Catholic with courage; and to convert the heretics."

The people loved him greatly. At the risk of his life he raised and cheered them, who imagined that the plague-spot and epidemic of many persons had all disease to the Church. At Glasgow, whither he had come from Edinburgh, he was thinking of reviling the Protestant Archbishop and the minister. They engaged a man named Adam Boyd, on the promise of large payment, to falsely accuse the Father of treason, and place himself under the Father's inspection, as a the more nearly to execute and betray him. Thus like his Divine Master, Father Ogilvie was sold into the hands of the Gentiles.

When brought before the false Archbishop, the latter stood him on the fang, saying his how he dared come and say his Mass in a "reformed" city. This, he said, was a signal for all Spottiswood's attendants to fall upon their defenseless victim. "A storm of blows," the Father wrote in his journal, which has been preserved, "fell upon me from all sides. They pulled out my beard and tore my face with their nails until Lord Fleming, struck with horror, compelled them to cease so much evidence. The order was then given to strip me of my garments. They took away everything, even my breviary.

Night being come, the Father was put into the prison called the Tolbooth, and Spottiswood wrote in all haste to King James, boasting of the prize he had taken in that Jesuit Father, together with "four teen of the towns people committed of having heard Mass. Later on, some of the poor people were broken on the wheel, the rest were also condemned to death, and then only banished for life, after confiscation of all the little property they had.

Next day Father Ogilvie, in from the violence he had received, as well as from cold and hunger (for it was twenty-six hours since he had tasted food), was brought before his judges, examined at length, and then sent back to prison.

As he steadily refused to acknowledge the King as the head of the Church, or to betray any of the people he was just to the torture of the "boots"—horrible instruments made of bars of iron, in which the legs were tightly screwed until, sometimes, even the bone was crushed and broken. This cruel torture was renewed day after day. All through these hours of agony the patient and fearless Jesuit of the holy confessor amused his tormentors. "Lord Jesus," he was heard to mutter, "grant that I may be found faithful to Thee, in whom I have believed; and forgive them for they know not what they do!"

And again return to duties
Which we have left for a day,
But our twilight dream has vanished
Rudely as thought away.

CHAPTER III.

Early in December an order came for the prisoner to appear before the Privy Council of Scotland at Edinburgh. Spottiswood had given out that while under torture, the Jesuit had betrayed his acquaintances. When, therefore, he appeared outside the prison, guarded by the Archbishop's men-at-arms, he was assailed not only by a storm of maledictions, but by showers of old stones and snowballs, from a crowd of the poorer people, who believed that he had played them false. As he took no notice, but rode on cheerfully through the town, one man asked him how he could take abuse so calmly. The Father smiled, and answered by quoting a Scotch proverb: "It's past yoking when the head's off."

After riding more than forty miles through the snow, the Father reached Edinburgh on December 8, 1614. He was at first imprisoned in the Archbishop's palace, but about three days was removed to one of the castle dungeons.

To this day "the priest's dungeons" are shown in Edinburgh Castle; and very horrible they are—dark and foul, and in one there is no opening, whatever for air when the door is shut.

Laugh Father Ogilvie was brought before the council. In answer to their questions, he avoided his conversion, and gave his reasons for it, to the great confusion of the ministers; but not a word could be extorted from him which might imperil any other person.

"When you arrived in Edinburgh, where did you lodge?"

"I answer that I am not bound to tell you. Judges have the right to know my crime, if I have committed one, but not to know where I lodged."

"You refuse to obey the King, then!"

"I am sorry that the King has a right to ask, and I will obey."

"The King forbids you to say Mass, and yet you say it."

"I am not, and whether I ought to obey Christ or the King in this, judge for yourselves. The King, you say, forbids me to say Mass and Christ, as the twenty-second chapter of St. Luke testifies, instructed the Holy Apostles and consequently me to do this." (St. Luke, xxii., 19). "I will prove this to you when you like."

In rain they threatened him with fearful punishments, in rain one-more-merciful offered the race of his enemies. They next tried to tempt him by offers of a rich marriage and a large living. "Let me, then, go to the country—offers which he laughed to scorn.

The examination, of which a full and most interesting account is left, lasted for many hours. At last the council bade him reflect and whether he would obey the King or undergo the extreme penalty of the law.

"My decision is made, as I have already said.

The Father being remanded to his dungeon, he was given deliberately as to the kind of torture most likely to reduce him to a state in which he would say anything they wished him to say, and finally decided on a method of torture, which, during eight days and nights without interruption, the holy confessor was kept awake by torments, inflicted by successive relays of executioners, he was ponched, trussed with blows, pricked with pins and needles, especially under the nails. These men threw him on the ground, stood on his arms, twisted his limbs, and continued their diabolical occupation, until on the sixth day their victim appeared to be dead. A physician was called in, who, feeling his pulse, said he had not three hours to live.

The object of the Government being to compel him to sign a full, but false accusation, he was allowed a few hours of sleep, during which his wounds were dressed and dragged before his judges all exhausted and bewildered, he might make some reply to their sentence. This was what they desired; but in vain. His marvelous force of will and presence of mind disappointed all their satanic calculations.

In the dawn of this forced rigil had spread throughout Scotland, arousing indignation against the perpetrators. Many of the nobles who had expectated some to see the Father, remaining him to do the King's pleasure, and save himself from further torment; but Father Ogilvie's answer soon put them to shame.

One day many great people came to see him in his prison, and one gentleman loudly said they had worse things in store for him; that they would only trifling, as he had seen on the West Port, to make an example of his obstinacy.

"Really," said the Father, "you are worthy to be made bargemen; but I do not wind you in this land. My God will help I am ready to suffer for the truth more than you can do to me, as I may, you threaten to frighten women with, I wind them to more than the cowls of geese." A deed of lance caused, the gentleman shook out of the cell, soon followed by the rest.

CHAPTER IV.

When again placed before the lords of the council, they below him consider's a more full (?) they had been to him in not putting him to death on the spot, and proposed

To this the Father made answer: "To serve Christ and His Church I need not any legs or arms to be cut off." He was reviled by the Protestant Archbishop and the minister. They engaged a man named Adam Boyd, on the promise of large payment, to falsely accuse the Father of treason, and place himself under the Father's inspection, as a the more nearly to execute and betray him. Thus like his Divine Master, Father Ogilvie was sold into the hands of the Gentiles.

When brought before the false Archbishop, the latter stood him on the fang, saying his how he dared come and say his Mass in a "reformed" city. This, he said, was a signal for all Spottiswood's attendants

"Thou art a traitor!"

"Nay, I am the priest."

"Thou art a traitor!"

"Yes, your religion; nothing but that!"

"Very well, I will make you a traitor, or a more then I had hoped for. It is for my religion that I die, and if I had a hundred lives I would give them all willingly for my religion. I have but one, take it then, and kill me as you may."

The minister was furious with rage; heard most interesting account to left to a man hung on hurry him up the ladder. It was fixed on the afternoon, and the many had neither eaten nor slept since the preceding day, and could scarcely stand the cold. The minister, after proclaimed that he died, not for his faith, but for treason, the Father was allowed to speak, but he shook his head while his friend, John Abercrombie, who was probably also a priest, and to him: "Don't mind their lies, John, I die for the Church and for the better for you,"—a word which has passed into a proverb in the Highlands.

Wherupon Abercrombie was sent off by the Archbishop's servants, and thrown leading the scaffold. He would have been killed by the fall, but that he came upon a heap of straw below.

Then the executioner, humbly begging the Father's pardon, proceeded to tie his hands behind his back; but before they were bound the martyr threw his rosary into the crowd—the only legacy he had to give.

Then, begging the prayers of all the Catholics, that he might be forgiven as he forgave, he repeated that all his life was in the merits of Christ, his Saviour. He then knelt down and the executioner, as if to see an outpouring of his piety, but in a protestation of his faith, for even on the gallows the minister demanded it, he still insured the worship of the saints. "I beg the saints of God, the Blessed Virgin, and all orons begun to recite the Litany, the Hail, Holy Queen, that all might understand him.

The executioner reluctantly withdrew the ladder, and martyr hung in midair. Nothing would induce the men to leap on his shoulders, but, out of respect for what drew life fast down, so as to hasten death. The rest of the behavior of the soldiers was omitted because "they feared the people." St. Luke, xxii., 2; for now on all sides arose groans, sobs, and murmurs, with prayers that God would not visit this innocent blood upon the people, but only on the authors of that undeserved death.

CHAPTER VI.

And the Martyr's Rosary!

The Martyr's rosary! Fallen, struck the breast of a stranger, Baron Johann von Kekere dorff, a young Hungarian noble, who afterwards became a Jesuit, and died in Rome. His old age gave the following account to Father Ballinger, S. J.

"I was then," he writes, "traveling in the Highlands of Scotland, as is the custom for young men of the Hungarian nobility to do, and was at Glasgow on the 12 of the Faith. I chanced to find myself at Glasgow the day when Father Ogilvie was led to his execution; meantime the Archbishop and other personages went to dine. The whole city was assembled on the square and neighboring streets, while from many a hut or the Highlands were had come to catch a last word or look.

"On his way to the scaffold, Father Ogilvie was beset by one of the heretical ministers. "My dear Ogilvie," he said, "how I despise this obstinacy, which is leading you to an inhuman death!"

The Father answered on air, as it wary, of one in fear. "As if," he said, "I could help dying, after they have condemned me to death for high treason."

"Treason! Nothing of the kind, as I am to tell you. Only abjure Papery and the Pope, and you shall be loaded with honors."

"What you arrived in Edinburgh, where did you lodge?"

"I answer that I am not bound to tell you. Judges have the right to know my crime, if I have committed one, but not to know where I lodged."

"You refuse to obey the King, then!"

"I am sorry that the King has a right to ask, and I will obey.

"The King forbids you to say Mass, and yet you say it."

"I am not, and whether I ought to obey Christ or the King in this, judge for yourselves. The King, you say, forbids me to say Mass and Christ, as the twenty-second chapter of St. Luke testifies, instructed the Holy Apostles and consequently me to do this." (St. Luke, xxii., 19). "I will prove this to you when you like.

In rain they threatened him with fearful punishments, in rain one-more-merciful offered the race of his enemies. They next tried to tempt him by offers of a rich marriage and a large living. "Let me, then, go to the country—offers which he laughed to scorn.

The examination, of which a full and most interesting account is left, lasted for many hours. At last the council bade him reflect and whether he would obey the King or undergo the extreme penalty of the law.

"My decision is made, as I have already said.

The Father being remanded to his dungeon, he was given deliberately as to the kind of torture most likely to reduce him to a state in which he would say anything they wished him to say, and finally decided on a method of torture, which, during eight days and nights without interruption, the holy confessor was kept awake by torments, inflicted by successive relays of executioners, he was ponched, trussed with blows, pricked with pins and needles, especially under the nails. These men threw him on the ground, stood on his arms, twisted his limbs, and continued their diabolical occupation, until on the sixth day their victim appeared to be dead. A physician was called in, who, feeling his pulse, said he had not three hours to live.

The object of the Government being to compel him to sign a full, but false accusation, he was allowed a few hours of sleep, during which his wounds were dressed and dragged before his judges all exhausted and bewildered, he might make some reply to their sentence. This was what they desired; but in vain. His marvelous force of will and presence of mind disappointed all their satanic calculations.

In the dawn of this forced rigil had spread throughout Scotland, arousing indignation against the perpetrators. Many of the nobles who had expectated some to see the Father, remaining him to do the King's pleasure, and save himself from further torment; but Father Ogilvie's answer soon put them to shame.

One day many great people came to see him in his prison, and one gentleman loudly said they had worse things in store for him; that they would only trifling, as he had seen on the West Port, to make an example of his obstinacy.

"Really," said the Father, "you are worthy to be made bargemen; but I do not wind you in this land. My God will help I am ready to suffer for the truth more than you can do to me, as I may, you threaten to frighten women with. I wind them to more than the cowls of geese." A deed of lance caused, the gentleman shook out of the cell, soon followed by the rest.

CHAPTER IV.

When again placed before the lords of the council, they below him consider's a more full (?) they had been to him in not putting him to death on the spot, and proposed

To this the Father made answer: "To serve Christ and His Church I need not any legs or arms to be cut off." He was reviled by the Protestant Archbishop and the minister. They engaged a man named Adam Boyd, on the promise of large payment, to falsely accuse the Father of treason, and place himself under the Father's inspection, as a the more nearly to execute and betray him. Thus like his Divine Master, Father Ogilvie was sold into the hands of the Gentiles.

When brought before the false Archbishop, the latter stood him on the fang, saying his how he dared come and say his Mass in a "reformed" city. This, he said, was a signal for all Spottiswood's attendants

"Thou art a traitor!"

"Nay, I am the priest."

"Thou art a traitor!"

"Yes, your religion; nothing but that!"

"Very well, I will make you a traitor, or a more then I had hoped for. It is for my religion that I die, and if I had a hundred lives I would give them all willingly for my religion. I have but one, take it then, and kill me as you may."

The minister was furious with rage; heard most interesting account to left to a man hung on hurry him up the ladder. It was fixed on the afternoon, and the many had neither eaten nor slept since the preceding day, and could scarcely stand the cold. The minister, after proclaimed that he died, not for his faith, but for treason, the Father was allowed to speak, but he shook his head while his friend, John Abercrombie, who was probably also a priest, and to him: "Don't mind their lies, John, I die for the Church and for the better for you,"—a word which has passed into a proverb in the Highlands.

Wherupon Abercrombie was sent off by the Archbishop's servants, and thrown leading the scaffold. He would have been killed by the fall, but that he came upon a heap of straw below.

Then the executioner, humbly begging the Father's pardon, proceeded to tie his hands behind his back; but before they were bound the martyr threw his rosary into the crowd—the only legacy he had to give.

Then, begging the prayers of all the Catholics, that he might be forgiven as he forgave, he repeated that all his life was in the merits of Christ, his Saviour. He then knelt down and the executioner, as if to see an outpouring of his piety, but in a protestation of his faith, for even on the gallows the minister demanded it, he still insured the worship of the saints. "I beg the saints of God, the Blessed Virgin, and all oron

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED EVERY THUR. OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1886.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Christian parents, let us beg your serious consideration of the Important Duty that devolves upon them individually, and practically, in the matter of the Support of the Catholic Press. Nothing can be more Christian or Catholic than the Catholic Press in its principles and purpose, and the Church expects of it at this time. As frequently and as forcibly has the Supreme Pontiff spoken of the Duty of Catholics to the Press and Publishers and circulating good reading, and as assiduously have these admonitions been copied and recorded everywhere, that we certainly stand in need of arguments to be convinced of Duty. Nothing, in fact, but the Neglect of Duty in Catholics can be bringing home to the Pastors of souls practical facts needed to enlighten Catholics, and make them well recognize it as an imperious and the duty to contribute towards supporting the Catholic Press, and circulating good Catholic reading, and Catholic Literature, based well prepared with the information they impart, then the Clergy in press will be sure to attain to its rightful development and to be complete the desired mission. But choose a journal or Review, or Magazine, or Publication, or Publisher, not one that is cold, or, which indulges in sarcasm or sectarian criticism, or, which is sectarian, or, which is conducted unfairly, or, which, in fact, is not in Catholic keeping.—PASTORAL LETTER OF THE THIRD PLENARY COUNCIL.

Editorial Notes.

—Father Lacombe, of Manitoba, is having several religious works printed in Cree and Blackfoot for distribution among the Indians.

—Our Australian contemporaries mention the Most Rev. Dr. Carr, Bishop of Galway, as a probable successor to the late Archbishop Goold, of Melbourne.

—Mgr. Herzog, Prince-Bishop of Breslau, is seriously ill. Public prayers have been offered up for his recovery. Mgr. Baudri, Suffragan has passed.

—The Allemanns says that on the 15th of this month Mr. Jervis McCarthy, M. P., will sail from Liverpool for the United States, where he has made arrangements to deliver a course of lectures during the Winter season. The tour will be a literary, not a political one, and Mr. McCarthy will probably choose subjects akin to those by which he won popularity in America some twelve years ago. Even should he be induced to include historical and political matters, he has wisely determined to avoid party and controversial subjects

—The German-Hungarian College have to assure the loss of their beloved spiritual director, the Rev. Father Adolphe de Doss, of the Society of Jesus, a native of Munich, well-known throughout Germany especially in the Rhenish Provinces, he having been for years Superior of the House of the Jesuits at Meyenez, where he was expelled at the commencement of the Kulturkampf. Before coming to reside in Rome, he was Director of Music in the College of St. Sarrein, at Liege, where he acquired considerable renown from his excellent compositions of sacred music. He also delivers between the flock and true Shepherd of the Christian fold.

—On July 6th was held in the Vatican the preparatory Congregation of Sacred Rites to judge of the virtues and miracles of another hero of the faith, the venerable servant of God, John Gabriel Perboyre, priest of the Congregation of the Mission, martyred in China, September 11th, 1840.

—The Pope, it is announced, has received a confidential communication from Vienna stating that the Emperors of Austria and Germany, in their recent conference at Gastein, took into account the position of the Holy See. It is stated that his Holiness has caused his thanks to be conveyed to the two Emperors.

—The full account of the recent disastrous earthquake at Charleston, South Carolina, which we publish on the second page, will serve to show many of our distant readers that there are other places in America besides California where earthquakes occur with far more disastrous effect than ever realized in this region.

—It is reported that Mgr. Nannutelli, the Papal Nuncio at Lisbon, who was recently summoned to Rome for the purpose of undertaking a mission to France with a view of effecting a settlement of the difficulty arising out of the appointment of a Papal Nuncio at Paris, will shortly arrive in Paris. He will, it is said, bring with him an autograph letter from the Pope to President Grévy.

—Nathaniel Hawthorne says in his Biblebook romance: "I have always envied Catholics their faith in that sweet mother Virgin Mother, who stands between them and the Deity, interceding somewhat at His awful splendor, but permitting His love to stream upon them, accordingly as can on his ministery here for forty years, and has never once revisited Europe. He is the type of an ascetic: his venerable features bears with gentleness and love. His garb, like the little church, the priest's house, and the school, bear the stamp of Apostolic poverty. "He is a saint," said a Wallegan missionary to me, and this testimony is confirmed by the unanimous verdict of the white population."

—Michael Davitt addressed a very large meeting of Irishmen and others at Keenan, Michigan, recently, in which he thus outlined the course of action which the Irish tenants will carry out this winter "If Ireland we are likely to have serious trouble the coming winter. Lord Randolph Churchill's Government has already encouraged the landlords. We must resist. At first passive measures of resistance will be employed, but resist we must at any cost. I would be the last to advise a resort to anything resembling the outrages of old. In the time of Addison the educational curriculum was confined to but few subjects, and those outside the language and the classics. Now a graduate from any of our State Universities is expected to have delved deeply into thermodynamics, quaternions and spectrum chemical analysis, crystallography, pertrography, stephanotics, kinematics and a score of similar studies in conjunction with the customary curriculum of collegiate and university classes.

The result is that graduates in State institutions of all grades get a smattering of a score of different studies but their education is only superficial at best. No solid foundation has been laid upon which they can build in after life, sufficient time has not been given to enable them to drink deep of the waters of knowledge, and hence the English speaking portion of the globe presents but few men who are competent to be called literary lights in this age of the world.

The Universal Motherhood of the Blessed Virgin

This month of the Monitor being printed on the great festival of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, it is customary with Catholic centuns to lay before our readers a few considerations regarding the universal veneration accorded to the Immaculate Mother of God by saint and sage as well as by the surrounding nations. From a worldly point of view never glory judged by the outward appearance. Pride, pomp, riches and luxurious living are regarded as the truest tendancies of fortune and men who possess them are generally by the wealth loving world. Princes, Synod, Sovereign, with those who possess the world, are regarded as the fortunate of earth. Now, the Blessed Virgin Mary, on the other hand, was a poor maiden, of humble birth, and, as we learn from the Gospel, she called herself "the Handmaiden of the Lord." Yet all these things other than the Blessed Virgin Mary, on the other hand, says "all ye people from now on will call me blessed." Why? Because the Mighty One has done great things for me. Holy is His name. Now, we know that for more than 1800 years this Blessed Virgin Mary has been the most honored of all women, and in the shadow of death, and in the shadow of life, she has been the most loved of all women.

Even the sacred Scriptures, which, when speaking of the Blessed Virgin, speak of her in the most exalted terms, have not been able to hold back the tide of love and veneration which they express with which the religious families of religious orders are strewn behind. Founded by great saints, who have been noted both for the ability to teach, but which have been so eminent, and yet so meek, so holy, which have been so humble, so pure, so holy, that all these three other saints, the Blessed Virgin, who is the Mother of God, who is the Queen of Heaven, who is the Mother of the Redeemer, who is the Mother of the Redeemer, who is the Mother of the Redeemer

Farm and Home.

Marriage Maxims.

A good wife is the greatest earthly blessing.

A man is what his wife makes him.

It is the mother who moulds the character and destiny of the child.

Never make a remark at the expense of another; it is mean-mean.

Never pass without loving words to think of during your absence. Besides, it may be that you will not meet again in life.

"How easily glides the smooth life away. When the who rules still seems bet to obey."

Never talk manifest anger or vanity.

Never speak loud to one another, unless the house is on fire.

Never reflect on a past action which was done with a good motive and with the best judgment at the time.

Let each one strive to yield cheerfulness to the wishes of the other, which is the material cultivation of an absolute amelioration.

Never find fault, unless it is perfectly certain that a fault has been committed; and even then preface it with a kind, and lovingly.

Never allow a request to be repeated. "I forgot" is never an acceptable excuse.

What Onions will Do.

Onions inhabit coarse sleep, rest and repose. The soldier on his march and the exhausted iron worker get great strength from eating the onion. Tie a fresh onion around the wrist and it will make an odor transmitted and you scarcely sound sleep from its nightly inhalation.

Neglect of Children's Teeth.

Children's teeth are often neglected by parents, who give the young mouths little attention, until decay and the child's complaint of toothache warn them of their duty. Even if they know there is decay going on, they dismiss the subject with the thought that they are only the first of temporary teeth, which will soon be replaced by the permanent ones. This is a great mistake, as the regularity of the second set depends largely upon the healthy condition of the first, which should be retained in their places until the second set is ready to appear, when they will generally drop out or become loosened, and are easily removed. Much mischief is done by premature decay and the extraction of the temporary teeth. Many think that they should be removed to make room for the permanent teeth—a dangerous mistake, which should be avoided if after trouble would be prevented. One of the most beautiful provisions of nature, in the human economy, is that for the removal of the first teeth by absorption of their roots to make room for the second to advance. Sometimes this absorption does not go fast enough, and the second tooth is observed to be coming through before the first is loosened. In such a case the dentist should be consulted, who, if he has made a proper study of this frequent condition of things, will very readily correct it.

The Debt is Mother.

Mothers live for their children, make self sacrifices for them, and manifest their tenderness and love so freely that the name Mother, is the sweetest in human language. And persons, youthful and aged, know but little of the anxiety, the nights of sleepless care and painful solicitude which their mothers have spent over their thoughtless wayward-ness. Those loving hearts go down in their graves with those heart-aches of secret agony unknown. As the mother watches by night, or prays in the private chamber for her child, or wall the words which she will address to her son in order to lead him to a manhood of honor and usefulness. She will tell him all her griefs and the deadly fears which lie at her heart. She warns him with trembling lips she pray evermore. She tries to charm him with sheepy love while her heart palpitating. So worthy and successful man grew yet inner the breadth and depth of the great obligations which he is under to the mother who labored and sacrificed so at the time when his character for virtue and purity was so narrowly balanced against a counter balance of vice and ignominy. Let the dutiful son do his utmost to smooth his mother's pathway, let him obey as implicity as he has her wishes and advice, let him omit nothing that will contribute to her peace, rest, and happiness, and yet he will part from her at the tomb with his debt to her still discharged.

Good Fruit Yields.

We had the pleasure of looking through C. M. Hoover's orchard a few days ago, and to note some of the fruits growing and ripening. In apricots the White Royal is a favorite variety, he having one row only. These trees are seven years old, and have never failed to produce a crop since coming to bearing at the third year. This year the trees averaged 200 pounds of excellent fruit, which takes first rank as a dryer. The wood of the tree is strong, never splitting or breaking. He has four acres of the Yellow Royal variety, which produced about half a crop this year. Of peaches, he has sixteen varieties, the first of which ripen from May 20th to Late Jan. The latest variety is the Bivins, late, which ripens from October 20th to November 1st. This he has fresh peaches for five months continually. Of nectarines, he has about one variation, three or four of which are leaders. He has the extra Hungarian prune and the French prune, the leading varieties of the State. The Yellow Egg plum and silver plum are excellent bearers, and varieties that Mr. Hoover feels a great confidence in. In grapes about ten of the best standard varieties are raised, and the Cornichon, a late and very fine shipping grape, is doing well for him. His vineyard produced ten and a half tons per acre last year, there being 435 vines to the acre, or ten feet apart each way.—Hanford Journal.

Thirty-Nine Girls in Ten Years.

Thirty-nine girls.——

In ten years fifteen will have married.

In ten years seven of the fifteen will be widows dependent upon their own exertions for bread and meat.

In ten years fifteen of the remaining twenty-four will be sleeping beneath the sod. And how far apart will they be sleeping? One in Georgia, one in California, one in Ohio, one in Virginia, another, perhaps, in a visionary's grave in China, another amid the ashes of the ancient Aztec of Mexico, another—but only time will tell you where they will sleep.

In ten years not one of the thirty-nine but that will have tasted of the bitterness that comes in time to all human beings. Hope will be blighted, loved ones will be chained by that same adamant you behold now, yet, screen in a hundred forms will be experienced—indeed, to every one a surfeit of fond, but fruit will be cofeit.

Raise Fruit.

In view of the universal low prices of grain it would be well for our farmers to engage more extensively in fruit raising. Indeed it begins to be apparent to the farmers that grain raising does not pay at present prices, which may continue to rule for some time to come. As an illustration of the fact that fruit raising does pay we need only site the one of S. C. Dicus, of Vina, who has been offered $6,000 for the product of thirty-seven acres of orchard, on which there are about 4,000 bearing trees. This is at the rate of $1.50 per tree. The fruit raisers of Vina are realizing an average of about $200 per acre—a sum per acre greatly exceeding that realized by farmers during the most prosperous year of grain raising in Tehama county.—Red Bluff Beacon.

Family Fun.

How Me Lost His Mind.

The Columbia police took up a prominent citizen in a sad state of mental aberration the other day, and, after restoring him, learned that he probably lost his mind in trying to remember and deliver the parting message of his wife, who, on kissing him good-by in the morning, told him to "go to the dress-maker and tell her that she (the wife) had changed her mind, and would have the watered silk made up instead of the poplin, and be sure and tell her," said the wife, "that if she thinks it would look better with two blue flounces without puffing, and box plaiting below the equator, which should be gathered in hem-stitched gudgeons up and down the seams, with gusset stitch between, she can make it up in that way, instead of fluting the bobinette insertions, and placing out with point applique, as I suggested yesterday."

Why His Brother Could Do It.

At the Branch: Oubleigh has driven from the depot in a hack.

Cubbleigh—"Aw—what's the—aw—damage?"

Cabby—"Dell'rs half, sir."

Cubleigh—"Dollaw, dollaw! and a hawlf! What—aw—is a dollaw and a hawlf, my good fellaw?"

Cabby—"I believe Englishmen call it six shillings, sir."

Cubleigh—"Aw—six bob to be shaw. Here—aw—take your money. Why you aw! to lawn to talk English, my good fellaw!"

Cabby—"I couldn't if I tried, sir. My brother might, though."

Cubleigh—"Yoush bwothaw! And why poush bwothaw?"

Cabby—"Because he's such a natural born liar! I tell you he has to keep him in the asylum for fear he'll disgrace the family."

Not Her First Appearance.

Lawyer (to timid young woman)—Have you ever appeared as a witness in a suit before?

Young Woman (blushing)—Yes, sir, of course.

Lawyer—Please state to the jury just what suit it was.

Young Woman (with more confidence)—It was a son's waltz, shirred down the front and trimmed with a lovely blue, with hat to match.

Judge (rapping violently)—Order in the court!

Chicago Sat Up.

A Chicago drummer balanced his chin on the edge of the seat in front of him and tickled a sandy-haired passenger's ear with the remark:

"You're been in Chicago, of course?"

"Where?"

"Chicago."

An American look came into the sandy-haired man's eyes.

"Let me see," he mused retrospectively, "guess to me I must have passed through there. I've travelled a good deal. I know I've heard the name before. What line of road is it on?"

"Line of road! Why, it's the biggest railroad centre on earth."

"Is Chicago a place where the trains stop for dinner?"

"Yes," said the disgusted drummer, "Chicago is a place where the passengers stop for dinner.

"Of course, that's what I meant," explained the red-haired man gently. "Fact is, he went on with confidential frankness, "I've travelled so much and been in so many different places in my life that I don't pretend to remember more n a quarter of em. What's the name of the hotel in Chicago?"

"There ain't any," said the drummer gloomily.

Then he walked forward to the Ether, filled his mouth full of water and gargled his throat.

"Who is that evil-eyed, pink haired, lumpy legged, prairie-eared microbe at the other end of the car?" he asked of the conductor, who was passing; this with a leer.

"Do you mean the gentleman looking out of the window?"

"Yes,sa."

"He's a merchant traveller from St. Louis."

Testing a Refrigerator.

"Fifty dollars to the man who can prove that any two things put into this ice chest will taste of the other."

He had a refrigerator run out to the curb-stone, hung the above sign over each side, and retired indoors to await the expected crowd of customers. People came up and down the street jostled each other in their hurry, glanced at the ice box and sign, and went on.

After some hours of disappointed hopes and expectations, the dealer saw a pedestrian halt, calmly peruse the wonderful announcement, and rather hesitatingly advance to the door.

"Do you mean it?" he inquired, in an anxious tone, pointing over his shoulder to the sign.

"Yes, sir-ee" emphatically responded the dealer.

"Put up your money" continued the stranger.

"No sir!" replied the dealer in a pompous style. "My word is as good as the cash."

"All right, I'll take you," responded the stranger as he departed.

He returned shortly afterwards with a box under each arm.

"Stick to your agreement" he ordered. "Of course I will" I answered the dealer, fastening what in the name of Christopher Columbus he was had in view.

The stranger set his boxes down on the sidewalk, and a crowd began to collect. He told the dealer that he was afraid that he (the dealer) would back out of the bargain, but the latter asserted his readiness to put up the money if necessary. The stranger opened a box, lifted out a cat and placed her in a refrigerator. Then he opened the other box and took therefrom a large wire cage containing a large rat.

"Now, mister, said he, "you put that that door in a hurry when I flop the rat inside, and I'll go you another fifty that you will taste of the other in less than five minutes."

The crowd yelled and the dealer slammed the refrigerator door and slid into the store, with a remark about fools and swindlers.

He still refuses to recognize the stranger's claim to the fifty dollars, but he has taken his sign in.

Fire and Brimstone.

A West of Scotland clergyman was going to the Highlands for his holidays, and being very fond of the "Saltch Pickles," he took a bottle with him. The "Saltch Pickles" are extremely hot and should be sparingly used. Arrived at the hotel, he placed the bottle on the table and took out one or two of them. A Yankee was sitting opposite and got his eye on the pickles. "Stranger, pass the pickles, please. The clergyman said "These are private property, but you are welcome to them." He passed the bottle across the table. The Yankee emptied half the bottle into his plate and stirred them up well with his spoon. He took a big spoonful, but they were not long down when he drew in his breath and said "Oh, dodgast it! Look here, stranger, I guess you are a parson!" "Well, I am a clergyman, and preach the Gospel." "Look you here," said the Yankee, "I have heard them preach about fire and brimstone, but you are the first one I ever knew who carried a sample bottle."

Interesting Origin of Silk Stockings.

The first silk stockings ever in England were knitted by Queen Elizabeth's silk-woman, Mistress Montague, who presented her Majesty with a pair of black silk ones, which she liked so well that she kept the donor knitting silk stockings as long as she lived. Before the end of her reign stockings were made of silk, jersey, worsted, cravat, or the finest yarn and thread that could be had, and Stubbs remarks that the ladies were "not ashamed to wear hose of all kinds of other mixable colors, as green, red, white, russet, tawny and dun who not, cunningly knit and curiously indented in every point worth a praise, slender, open work, and everything elsecordingly.

The fashion thus introduced by royalty was soon adopted by the under ranks. The first per who indulged in silk stockings was that William Herbert called the "proud Earl of Pembroke." Prouder than ever, we can fancy him, in the days of trunk hose, long-waisted doublet and huge ruffs appearing at court in his new fashionable knit hose, and perhaps dancing a measure with the "virgin queen," her head covered with feathers, her feet glittering in gold and silver embroidered slippers, wearing her black silk stockings as she coquettishly held her brocaded skirt and shock her feet in the dance.

King James I, it is said, not only wore silk stockings, but was so fond of them that he lowered his kingly dignity so far as to ask one of his courtiers, to lend him a pair.

That was royalty giving a begging with a vengeance. Stubbs has erred in the letter still extant of how the king asked the loan of the "neatest hose with the gold clocks" on one occasion; when he desired to give the Spanish ambassador an "extraordinary idea of his magnificence."

It was a fancy with some lovers of the olden time to have stockings made from their ladies' hair, they desiring, I suppose to have their feet as well as their hearts entangled in the meshes of their mistress' tresses.—Philadelphia Press.

A TEASPOONFUL OF PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER in a little milk or Sugar & Water will cure Immediately! Cramp, Colic, Sick Headache, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Sour Stomach, Flatulency, Sleeplessness, and all internal Pains. Nothing so good as Perry Davis' Pain-Killer in the Stomach, or any Bowel Complaint. For Sale by all Druggists.

MISSING FRIENDS.
Address the Editor of Hall's Journal of Health, 129 Lexington Ave., New York.

REGISTRATION —FOR THE—
General Election.
ALL ELECTION DESIRING TO VOTE AT THE GENERAL Election, to be held November 7, 1882, must register their names with the Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, at his office, No. 509 Montgomery street, commencing at the office of the Registrar of Voters, on the second Monday in August, and will continue until Monday, October 7, 1882, inclusive, Sundays excepted, from 9 o'clock A. M. to 5 o'clock P. M.
By order of the Board of Election Commissioners.
F. P. WALSH, Registrar.
August 1, 1882.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,
—Importers and Dealers in—
BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS.
Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.
MANUFACTORIES O —
Patent Machine Made Paper Bags.
511 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

RAZORS!
FOR $1,000
WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HORSE OF I then to the same time like any and 12 THE WORLD
My cows make cucumber. $2 50
My Grand Razors warranted not to rust the Soft while shavin 3 50
Good English Razors 1 00
Best English Razors 1 50
Sent C. O. D. to any place
M. PRICE
415 Kearny Street.
Grinding and Repairing

G. ORSI,
HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger.
DEALER IN PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, VARNISHES, Japanese Tapestry, Gilding Paper Hangings, etc., No. 26 Montgomery Avenue, bet. Jackson and Washington Sts., San Francisco, Cal. Orders promptly attended to. Graining and marbling. Gilding on glass. Kalsomining. Decorator, Frescoer and Sign-Painter designer.

WARD & CO.'S
Male and Female
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.
608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.
Telephone No. 1871
ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Cooks, Pastry Cooks, Waiters, Waitresses, Chambermaids, Laundresses, and Married Couples for Hotels and Boarding Houses. Also, Farmers, Farm Hands, Ranch Men, without any charge to employers. Suitable situations always on hand. Call and see.

CYCLORAMA
Battle of Gettysburg.
The Decisive Struggle of the Great Civil War.
Opens by Evening. Cor. Market and Ninth City Hall
ADMISSION, 25 CENTS.

HOOPER'S
SOUTH END
Grain Warehouse,
First-Class Fire-Proof Brick-Building.
CAPACITY 10,000 TONS.
TOWNSEND ST.,
Between First and Second, San Francisco
GEORGE H. LEHMAN. Prop.
Grain taken from the dock and from the car of the C. P. R. R. and S. P. R. R. free of charge. Storage at current rates.
Advances and Insurance effected at lowest rates.
Telephone No. 827.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.
Splendid set of Teeth, only $6.
AT THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 693 S. Sansome, street.

DANIEL SHEERIN,
STONE AND MARBLE YARD,
Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts.
JUST RECEIVED
A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops.
All kinds of Monumental and Grave Work, Marble, Granite, Underbrick, Iron, country principal, at lowest rates.

WESTERN HOTEL,
212-14 Broadway Street.
JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor
(Late Nevada Hotel.)

ROBERT F. HAY,
TINTYPE GALLERY
821 Market St., bet. 4th & 5th.
Gems Size ..... Open 10 to 7 o'clock
Cabinet Size Tintypes ..... 1 for 25 cents
Ninety Size ..... 1 for 25 cents
Ninety Size ..... 1 for 25 cents
Gems Size ..... 1 for 25 cents
Large Size ..... 50 cents each
TAKES AND FINISHED IN 10 MINUTES

SOMETHING NEW FOR THE LADIES!
The most luxurious and perfect Turkish, Russian and Medicated Baths for Ladies on NOB street with the
NEW HAMMAM BATHS,
216 Post st., bet. Dupont and Stockton, S. F.

MRS. R. G. LEWIS
Has Returned to San Francisco, greatly improved in health by her recent trip through California, and will be pleased to see her friends and customers at her dressmaking parlors, 116 Kearny St.

I CURE FITS!
When I say I cure I mean not merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again, but I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS, a life long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because other remedies have failed is no reason for not sending me your case. Give express and post office address. Address Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St. New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.
JULIUS H. MEDAU,
968 and 970 Folsom St.,
Near 6th ..... San Francisco
WHOLESALE
LIQUOR DEALER.
Paramount 1879.
We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods.
The following low prices will continue 1882
Table Wines ..... 50c, 60c, 75c, and $1.
Mission Wines ..... $1.50 per gal. $5 per doz.
Muscat Vineyard ..... $1 per gal. $5 per doz.
Old Port or Sherry ..... $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2.
Kentucky Whiskies ..... $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4.
Bourbon Whiskey, ... $1.50, $1.75 and $2.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $3 per gal. and upwards
Other Wines and Liquors at lowest rates
NEW MUSIC.
J. FISCHER & BRO., New York.
A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St.
SAN FRANCISCO AGENT.
Music, in box, 40 Alphabetical, for organists and altos, by Dunstan, Fischer, Lemare, Wely, Wely, Wely

Poetry.

[From the Catholic Publication Society's Edition of Father Faber's Hymns.]

THE MESSENGERS OF GLAD TIDINGS.

(Hymn written for congregational use at the Oratory, Birmingham, given recently to the Society by the Revered Redemptorist Fathers.

Hail! Pilgrims here hailed
Setting children of a Child!
Leaders to the Promised Land
O! the pilgrims, were and faint

From their lamentable bondage freed,
And their desert journey far,
And the thirst, the sun-scorched,
Blissful entrance hale would bar

Through the Blood bespattered gate
To their destitute King's abode,
Hearsed but by the pathway strewed,
By the narrow pasture road!

But, with your Redeemer's Name
Your pure souls, strength is yours
Conquest that for Him you claim,
Lo! He Saving Name assures

Nought can check his conquering grace,
Nought its meekness might resist,
Impious fly before the face
Pen of our Benefactor!

Hail! then—"Beautiful your feet
Ye the messengers," hailed hail!
Messengers of glad tidings!
To the "Bonnet's Hidden Land!"

Through her valed and verdant plains,
Through her hills empurpled hues,
Whereon the Vine-tree clings
High their beacon crosses raise.

Through each crystal street that twines
(Ye her sight-lying) breed,
Thence, from falter, stammer shrine
Unto pure words of warning lines

Ringing through the sun struck air,
Like the gold Prince's call,
"Pathways of the Lord prepare:
"Yours be Hills! and mountains, fall!

"Lay the axe unto the root
"Of the lofty and barren tree
"Laden with colored fruit,
"Hid the living branches be!"

Lately, then, the startled Shrine
Knelt Love's pilgrim-bonus which;
Pitched near Pentecost's sign
Notes of strife and worldly die.

Shrieks bonds were cast in twain,
Tears of sweet contrition flowed,
And the angels' joyful strain
Echoed Mother Church's shade

For the lost again was found!
At his Father's Dancing-board
Sat the sinner, robed and crowned,
To his kindred restored!

This the fruit of Mission grand!
This our work, O thrice-one!
Hail! Mission, Redemption-land!
Hail! Liquor's saintly sons!

Warmer blood, and nearer tye
Of the dear Redeemer's Name;
Hearts, Mary's gardens well ye claim,
Ye shall exile it—evermore,
Ye Hills triumphant! "Golden Shore,"
Yours shall be the rich reward
Of your toil and hoping hard!
HARRIET M. SAUNDERS, (Marie.)

San Francisco.

[For THE MONITOR.]

IN MEMORIAM.

THE LATE MISS FANNY PARNELL.

WHOSE PATRIOTIC ATTUNDER HAVE SO OFTEN IN LIGHTED IRISH HEARTS ALL OVER THE WORLD.

I never looked upon her face,
I know not whether it was fair,
Or whether dead alone had set
Its glorious silent there;
For I gaze but on her spirit, and
Its beauty is all I see
Amid the pulseless frame,
Yet she was fair as I do know,
To know thence is the grave.

No tones from thy pure lips that rare
Have ever deeply been unto my ear
And yet how oft my heart has thrilled,
Thy spirit's voice to hear
Thy noble mind, whose soul was given
To the nation's holy power,
The power to which all noble souls
Do an the darkest hour.

I know that then were young; for ne're
The worn and world-scorned heart may know
Such visitings of Jacob's light
As in thy young years
Of youthful hope, and of the glow
Of hallowed enthusiasm
Thy spirit's spirit shone
Supply to weather, then,
That I should mourn thy earthly doom,
And pour as with heartfelt tears
Of my beloved tomb;
Then were thy spirit from prerogatived man
Who to the world belong;
For not alone "The Immortal King"
May claim the queen of song.

Literally, young minstrel, thou art shrouded
Proclaimed by broken's patriot fate,
Ere nature does a thousand pulse
The steps of gentle wail;
The fane Hallow of relief
That to the hard are given,
Forbid the "Spirit" to feel rest
Beneath its native heaven.

Literally—high time were stretched away
The soon for Erin and America's fame,
Yet may a poetic thought shall wake,
Young minstrel, on thy name;
And with a hard man mourn thy doom,
With many a silent tear,
A stranger's hand would fling its wreath
Of green shamrock on thy bier.

THE POOR OF IRELAND.

People Who Live for the Rewards of a Blessed Future.

A Dublin Letter in the Indianapolis Journal, says: "I have learned to respect the Roman Catholic Church more than ever before since my visit to this country. Everywhere I find the convents filled with the children of the poorer classes. Many are indeed the only surviving children who would grow up in ignorance and vice but for the Convent of Kenmare. I found over 300 hundred children received as day pupils. Many of these children came from five or eight miles in the country, so poor that a shilling per week was scarcely given 200 of them upon their arrival, and a piece of dry bread for their mid-day meal, and a bowl of porridge in the evening. The majority of buildings of the convent were thus supported, and yet I found the children in the place in a comfortable attitude. Low-cooking meals here, and I was shown the 1-depered orchard by nuns Victoria, which was being skillfully wrought by the nimble fingers of the young ladies in the schools. Said the gentle sister: "Maybe you can mention our lace to the Queen, that they as sister of us, to be appoint executive entirely through the money only of those who are and are the necessity of our work, for our people are very poor." In the Protestant Orphanage I found 300 children in mourned, sweet-faced orphans, in charge of Protestant ladies, in a Protestant district. I had the satisfaction of being told that it is almost unknown, notwithstanding their poverty, you can attribute to an enormous degree, this to there this be owing to the strict surveillance of the Roman Catholic religion upon the conscience of these people. They live more for the rewards of another life and will rather live in the place one of present. So long as English landlords reign in Ireland let the Roman Catholic priest alone, that the latter may exercise a moral influence upon the poor Irish peasantry, to this that boots the holy church poverty or even physical distress.

Pulo-Cotto Classes.

The Pulo-Cotto-Gaelic class held its weekly session Saturday in the Catholic of the Hol Branch Hall, Market St. Ward presiding in the absence of President John O'Quigley. The proceedings of Irish and Gaelic were read by Thomas Varela" by the Chairman "Gilma of Folam" in Irish style by Captain Fagan; a translation into Irish of "Alexander and the Thief," by Captain Fagan; recitation, the "Hiles," by Master Martin Henry and letter; Irish orations, by J. O'Mahoney the poem of Patrick, "The Preservation of the Irish Language," by the same gentleman who preceded. In conclusion the Chairman gave an Irish oration in which he attended eloquent thanks to the Knights of the Red Branch for their kindness in lending their hall to the class. Mr. Ward also favored the audience with the song, "Fallon Lee."

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

Text of the Resolutions Adopted by the Democracy

The following is the text of the platform of principles adopted by the Democratic State Convention:

NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION.

Resolved, That with boundless pride we cordially indorse the administration of President Cleveland for the honesty, integrity and success with which it conducting the affairs of the government, carrying out the principles of Democracy in administration, and for the manfulness with which he has asserted for our country the position of the United States of Union of States and Liberal, a country free from the unjust inequalities of centuries, to reduce taxation, to limit the expenditure of public moneys, the revival of trade, the increase of commerce, the restoration of the universal confidence in the people heritage, the peace that blessing crowds throughout our whole land, and the extinction of sectional animosities are the salient results which signalize the administration of Democratic party to power, and the response it has given to the trust reposed in it.

Resolved, That we congratulate the President on the success of the honest endeavor, and call attention to the fact that, while he has raised spurious and unworthy claims, he has always were precise bills this any of the precedences.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Resolved, That convention resolutions the passage of an act of Congress prohibiting the free coinage of both gold and silver, by the terms of which act all gold and silver coined at the several mints of the United States shall be received in exchange for money or gold or silver certificates at the rate now fixed by the standard dollars of gold and silver, which bullion coins shall be receivable for all public purposes and interchangeable for gold or silver, as the case may be.

WINE AND BEER.

Resolved, That the present tariff on wine, imposed by a Republican convention in 1886, and a Republican President, is an unjust discrimination against a great industry, and we demand the same and demand the restoration of the tariff on wine, that the vineyards of California and other states California in the development of their interests, we must heartily favor the bills now pending in Congress for the release from taxation of aliens and in the fulfillment of sweet wines and the protection of our wine industries from the injurious effects of free and the unrestricted sale of spurious wines. And we also favor legislation for the protection of the raisin industry.

LABOR.

Resolved, We are in favor of liberal wages and free labor.

All associations formed for the purpose of developing the intelligence, promoting the welfare and protecting the interests of the laborer and mechanic, and to enable them successfully to contend for and maintain their rights by peaceful and efficient means against the powerful and oppressive combinations of capital, are commended and earnestly sanctioned by law.

We favor the adoption of a national labor system as determined in the interests of free labor and relieve to certain lines of legislature business with which it seems to contain. We commend the present State Administration for its late efforts to abolish the system, and pledge our candidates, if elected, to do all within their power to carry out the spirit of the Constitution upon this question. But in no way shall the Democrat be prohibit that was made to Congress and jute code within the walls of the State prison.

CHINESE.

We are unalterably opposed to Chinese immigration and demand the abrogation of the Burlingame Treaty—a treaty through which hopeless slave labor creeps upon our shores. We plead the best of our ability in the Democratic party of this State to the enforcement of laws which shall permanently prohibit and forever such immigration. We regard labor as an commodity, and the importation of Chinese slaves as a blight to the aspirations of free labor from this country and their exclusion forever.

In the same time, and pending the agitation on this subject, the Democratic party of this State is a friend of free labor and of the interests of the people, recognizes the legal right of any citizen to emigrate to his pleasure, yet we hold that it is the right and duty of the people of this State to protect themselves against the evil of Chinese and that such labor should not be treated in any other character of labor is available.

SUBSIDIES LEGISLATURE.

Resolved, That we reaffirm the principle contained in the National Democratic platform, declaring that the Democratic party is unalterably opposed to all sinecure legislation.

RAILROAD COMPANIES.

We condemn the great railroad companies of this State for their defiance of the laws, for their corrupt practices and their persistent refusal to contribute to the support of the government. The outcome and danger lies in the fact that these corporations are so and long days to encourage communists and anarchists. We demand that the laws be made to bear with equal hand upon the corporations as upon the poorer classes of society, shall the poor be compelled to pay a dollar, while the rich are allowed to evade the payment of a dollar

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE PLEASURES OF MEMORY.

Long have I thought the twilight
The chosen companion to lie,
Of the grandest gift of God to man,
Sweet, silent Memory.
When the sober hazel of darkness,
With flitting shadows drawn near,
Who has not then been her votary,
And felt her sway or fear.

Loved forms, happy hours long cherished—
Those hours which fed as food,
Rush forward on Memory's swift wings,
From the deep abyss of the past.
And when struggling in adversity,
One sorrow drive out from our hearts
Sweet Memory's image of joy.

No! not even the sharpest darts,

As the day-lime with rays penetrating
The dew-drop drive up from its flower,
So the faint-way one of Memory
Chases out from the melancholy hours,
Of sadness, pain or affliction,
Its shadowy image of joy.
Drive up the light of our later life
And hide we liegal our fears.

Is there one who treads earth's valley,
Who with sadness has no or been filled
In pondering o'er innocent years,
With sweet recollection thrilled?
Yes! there is one, I believe,
Who has no pleasure in memory,
As we have seen in our country
Where first we saw the day.

Doubtful tale tree seems to brighten
When our first appearance is made;
Ere what when we first right gladness
The beautiful visions must fade.
Ye, what hope our hearts so cheerful,
Our minds tears can so free,
Yet strength so renewed and active?
'Tis angelic but Memory.

In the closing hours of existence,
When the friends that are now so dear
All have vanished, and we stand alone,
The time that for us is near,
When we stand alone and deserted,
The last link to Memory's chain,
The last anchor for life's tempest,
Oh, Memory! shine again.

Let us hope that when leaving this valley
The will prove a beacon light,
To guide us to heaven's shore,
Where angels will bless our sight;
Where not only Memory's joys,
In robes of gold will we,
But the Christ we have loved so mortally,
With the gift of Memory.

ERY SAERC.

San Francisco.

MICHAEL DAVITT.

Long to the pealm of an warrior bold,
Who achieves a great enterprise,
Tones not my voice that old lame be cold,
Or the pulse of my heart be cold.
But I sing to the brave name shall to earth
Be the Michael Davitt.

Or the name of the patriot true,
Whose deds shall be blazoned in letters of gold;
He suffered for Christ Redeemer
Long to the pealm of the patriot true,
Whose life has been spent in the fight;
Who has ever been fearless to dare or to do,
In humble for liberty's right;
Long shall he down to prepare grandma's
In dungeon in black as the night;
Long shall he down to prepare grandma's
The struggle 'gainst Britain's might.

Long to the pealm and so hard-covered son
Of Mars, who knows victory's rain;
But the other-defeated, the trodden one,
How wakens thy sweetest strain;
Long to the soldier who fights not with gun,
Nor with sword, but whose weapon's his brain;
Who shield is the truth, and whose blade, hope;
In bonds, shall break slavery's chain.

I What is the pealm of the brave little Erin
Of patriots in Erin, who show
Their hearts and their souls to the pealm of
Who will prove a beacon light,
To guide us to heaven's shore,
Where angels will bless our sight;
Where not only Memory's joys,
In robes of gold will we,
But the Christ we have loved so mortally,
With the gift of Memory.

ERY SAERC.

San Francisco.

MICHAEL DAVITT.

Long to the pealm of an warrior bold,
Who achieves a great enterprise,
Tones not my voice that old lame be cold,
Or the pulse of my heart be cold.
But I sing to the brave name shall to earth
Be the Michael Davitt.

Or the name of the patriot true,
Whose life has been spent in the fight;
Who has ever been fearless to dare or to do,
In humble for liberty's right;
Long shall he down to prepare grandma's
In dungeon in black as the night;
Long shall he down to prepare grandma's
The struggle 'gainst Britain's might.

Long to the pealm and so hard-covered son
Of Mars, who knows victory's rain;
But the other-defeated, the trodden one,
How wakens thy sweetest strain;
Long to the soldier who fights not with gun,
Nor with sword, but whose weapon's his brain;
Who shield is the truth, and whose blade, hope;
In bonds, shall break slavery's chain.

I What is the pealm of the brave little Erin
Of patriots in Erin, who show
Their hearts and their souls to the pealm of
Who will prove a beacon light,
To guide us to heaven's shore,
Where angels will bless our sight;
Where not only Memory's joys,
In robes of gold will we,
But the Christ we have loved so mortally,
With the gift of Memory.

ERY SAERC.

San Francisco.

Literary Miscellany.

Waiting and Winning.

A DOMESTIC STORY BY HELEN F. URAYER.

"I do don't another—Sulma had said tartly; "and I ought to have the first chance. I say of us is to call with me at Delany Beeches, it shall be me."

"You always have a selfish thing" said Noema. "Captain Delany has a large library, and you know very well that I'm literary."

"I'm the youngest, and I don't see why I should always be pushed into a corner, pouted Miss Juanita.

But Sulma, by reason of seniority of years and volubility of tongue, had carried her point.

So when New Year's Day approached, Sulma, in lovely consulted Aunt Harrington as to what she should wear, that matron counsel her large eyes with counterfeit amusement.

"You, child! she said. "Why, you're not to come in at all! The girls don't wear a whole drove in the parlor. Three women are quite enough. And you're so young, you know."

"I'm seventeen, aunt" (a tired Alice).

"Yes and three years hence will do very well for you," and the relentless elder.

"Try and put such silly nonsense out of your head!"

And this was why Aileen was crying.

Old Mrs. Harrington understood it all very well. She saw the folly of injustice in this particular case, however.

"Don't's Alice have her own way, said she. "She sin't pleasant if she thinks any one is meddlin'. I'll tell you what, Aileen—you and I'll go out to the big chamber over the stone barn, and get Pomp to build to tiddlies an old-fashioned fire of pine logs in the old chimney. There's a carpet from there and a spinning-wheel and all the kits! and I'll show you how I used to spin flax and weave rag carpet when I was a young girl."

"With you?" said Aileen, with brightening eyes. "Oh, grandma, how nice that will be! And can I roast chestnuts and apples in the ashes!—and will you tell me all about your sailor lover that was drowned off before you were married Grandfather Harrington?"

"Yes," said the old lady, "yes! We'll have one New Year's by ourselves—you and me, child."

So Aileen put away the pretty blue merino gown that she had retrimmed for New Year's Day, and donned instead the brown Merrimac calico that made her look like a robin-redbreast; and just about the time that her three cousins were quarreling for the possession of the biggest dressing glass to "do" their hair, she and her grandmother were adjusting the ancient spinning-wheel in the stone barn chamber, and piling wood in the cavernous recess of the huge fireplace.

They had a very pleasant New Year's Day after all, though the tears came to Aileen's eyes once or twice, when the carriages rolled by over the hard-frozen road towards the house.

And at dusk she lighted the shrouded candles, and down to prepare grandma's supper, with fresh corn-cakes, baked in the hot ashes, according to the recipe of Aunt Felicia, the colored cook, fragrant coffee, and sweet apples, and a little cake with cream.

But Captain Delany, riding his Morgan horse, Hotspur, through the pine-woods, drew rein close by the old farm house, to look in the red light shining out for two years.

"What can it be?" he asked himself. "It is many years since we used to play at dances up there, and I wonder if the Vaillant family lived there. Perhaps some young sisters have something of fire."

He jumped off his horse, flung the reins over a projecting pine-bough and went in to see what the meaning of this unusual illumination might be.

The door stood wide open—the whole room was aglow with a warm, ruddy light. Grandma, enthroned in a big splint-chair by the fire, was knitting her silver hair, and Aileen sat spinning at the old wheel, with cheeks softly reddened and eyes sparkling—a very picture of health and beauty. Both started at the sudden appearance of the Captain on the threshold.

"Do I intrude, pray?" said Captain Delany, lifting his hat. "I saw the light shining out, and I was afraid that something had happened."

"Something has happened," said Aileen, brightly. "I have learned to spin. And grandma and I are having a picnic. Will you sit down, Captain Delany?"

"Well, since your coffee smells so good, I think I will," said the gallant young officer.

He sip—which for lack of more expensive china happened to be a mug—was scarcely poured out, before their numbers were augmented by Mr. Ferrers and young Doctor Fenchard, who had seen the lights, and had also observed "Hotspur" fastened to the fence.

"May we venture to intrude?" said they, peeping in over the stair-rail.

"Oh, certainly!" said grandma, smiling. And Aileen distributed handiclasps cups and beautiful slices of golden-brown cornpaste, yet steaming from the fire, to her guests.

"We are hardly prepared to entertain so large a company," said she, composedly; "but you see, at all events, give you a welcome."

"Three—half a dozen more dropped in. Old Pomp was summoned to pour fresh pine cones on the blaze and bring more coffee and corn-cake.

He grinned from ear to ear.

"For Tel like the good old times," said he, to Aunt Felicia, when he returned to his cabin. "De berry cream ob de gentry ain-jiple de corn-pones an' coffee like dey was cuse ole mass'ra time. Ain't sorfin like corn-pone for rale good flavor, dat they ain't. An' the young lady from de Nort', she's as pretty as a peach. Reckon de capting thinks so, too. He, he, he!"

And old Pomp shook his sides with an inaudible chuckle of glee.

Later in the evening the gentlemen went up to the house, where stood the three Misses Harrington in a simpering row.

But their call there was limited, and several of them returned to the "Stone Barn" to finish their evening.

James Delany remained the latest of all—was late, in fact, that it was far on second grandma and Aileen to the house, under whispering pine-boughs, by the light of the big round moon.

The three cousins, whose list of calls had long since ended, were yawning in the parlor.

"Dear me," said Selina, as the little group came in. "Where have you been all day, Aileen?"

"In the old stone-barn chamber learning to spin," said Aileen, laughing and blushing.

Juanita looked sharp at her. What change had subtly crept over her voice and manner? Then she looked at Captain Delany's bright face.

"Take good care of her," said the young officer, laughing, "I shall be very much pleased from Aileen's shoulders." She has promised to be my wife, before a great many weeks."

It was not until Delany had gone that the amazede of questions burst on Aileen's devoted head.

"Girls, girls! don't all speak at once," said grandma. "It's exactly as I've always told you. The right one will be sure to come along if you lie in the chinney-corner and wait. And that was just what Aileen was doing this evening."

"O-od-by, sweet New Year's Day—the happiest I have ever known.

CARDINAL GIBBONS AT HOME.

How a Prince of the Church Lives A Veritable Ascetic.

HARTFORD, Sept. 7.—Since the glamour preceding and attending the cardinalate in-vestiture has passed away, Cardinal Gibbons has resumed his quiet mode of living, and great is the contrast indeed between his simplicity and presence. While presiding at ceremonies in the cathedral he is a typical Prince of the Church, dignified, pompous and careful that all the ceremonies should be performed with such a splendor as a new cardinalate see. In private life, however, he is one of the simplest of men. His residence has walls open doors for all comers, be they rich or poor, Catholic or Protestant, and he never refuses to minister when it is possible to grant it. The poorest parishioner in the catholicism are treated with the same courtesy as the owners of millions. He will have no formal reception. In fact anything like form outside the cathedral is hateful to him. He has a warm shake of the hand for everybody, and one of the most winning smiles in the world. His parlor is furnished with notable simplicity, being devoid of anything like ornament beyond a few pictures of Catholic prelates and scenes in Rome. The Cardinal's favorite position when conversing with visitors is leaning back in an easy chair, with feet crossed and arms folded. He is an excellent conversier, having the happy talent of saying the right thing to the right person, and has overwhelming people with the learned church talk that some prelates like to indulge in on all occasions. To visitors he appears to be a benevolent, retiring little man, with a disposition to take things easy. The priests who live in the same house with him, however, say that he is anything but an easy liver. He is an ascetic, they declare, like Cardinal Gibbons' predecessor, Cardinal Bilitiner, of Paris. While genial and all smile to callers, he observes in private life all the little penances of monkhood. His bedroom is the poorest furnished room in the house. The floor is oaken and polished, and covered in the easter with a rug which is much the worse for wear. A cot-bed, an iron washstand, a bureau with a very small glass, and two cane seat, chairs complete the list of furniture in the room.

The Cardinal believes in the maxim "early to rise," etc. He celebrates Mass every morning at 6 o'clock, sometimes at the central altar in the Cathedral and sometimes at his private alter. His days are passed in the recitation of his breviary, in studies, in receiving visitors and in recreation, of which he takes a great deal. He is an indefatigable walker. His daily office is performed while walking up and down the brick pavement in the rear of the archiepiscopal residence, and he is frequently seen perfect over some theological work while tramping in the library.

Moreover, he takes a daily walk through the streets with one of his priests. This walk is taken about 6 o'clock in the evening and often extends to the city suburbs. As he tramps along he seldom speaks to his companion, but seems intent on getting as much exercise as possible out of his walk. It is said that the young priests of the city are not particularly glad when the Cardinal invites them for a walk, for, however on joyable the walk may be to the prelate, it is not so to his companions. The Cardinal always selects a young man as his associate in tramping. As in the case of the Confessor Gibbons, he has a special fondness to take one of his young officers along on his walks. The young man who seems ready to impress as a special mark of favor, as the Cardinal walks along, is the young priest, the young priest whom he asks to tredge along with him on his hot days. In these walks he frequently make calls on his flock.

The Cardinal is one of the fastest walkers in Baltimore. Through a small man, his step is astonishingly long, and he seems never to get tired. He is always dressed, and looks at his best, in a black Prince Albert suit, generally ill-fitting as to the coat, and wears a hat which is never quite as well brushed as it might be. He is a good shoe shows that he goes in for comfort rather than for elegance.

Generally the Cardinal so manages his walks as to be back at St. Mary's Seminary, on North Paca street. He has a great love for the institution, which he helped to create, and for the professors who trained him for the priesthood. During the summer months he gets away to his summer villa in St. Charles College, sixteen miles from the city, where he received his early education. The Sulpitian fathers control the institution, and are very proud of the vinita of the prince of the church, who always speaks of them with great unction. His affection for them is shown in many ways. They are his chief advisers. He was engaged by Mr. Ferrers and young Doctor Fenchard, who had seen the lights, and had also observed "Hotspur" fastened to the fence.

"May we venture to intrude?" said they, peeping in over the stair-rail.

"Oh, certainly!" said grandma, smiling.

And Aileen distributed handiclasps cups and beautiful slices of golden-brown cornpaste, yet steaming from the fire, to her guests.

"We are hardly prepared to entertain so large a company," said she, composedly; "but you see, at all events, give you a welcome."

"Three—half a dozen more dropped in. Old Pomp was summoned to pour fresh pine cones on the blaze and bring more coffee and corn-cake.

He grinned from ear to ear.

"For Tel like the good old times," said he, to Aunt Felicia, when he returned to his cabin. "De berry cream ob de gentry ain-jiple de corn-pones an' coffee like dey was cuse ole mass'ra time. Ain't sorfin like corn-pone for rale good flavor, dat they ain't. An' the young lady from de Nort', she's as pretty as a peach. Reckon de capting thinks so, too. He, he, he!"

And old Pomp shook his sides with an inaudible chuckle of glee.

Later in the evening the gentlemen went up to the house, where stood the three Misses Harrington in a simpering row.

But their call there was limited, and several of them returned to the "Stone Barn" to finish their evening.

James Delany remained the latest of all—was late, in fact, that it was far on second grandma and Aileen to the house, under whispering pine-boughs, by the light of the big round moon.

The three cousins, whose list of calls had long since ended, were yawning in the parlor.

"Dear me," said Selina, as the little group came in. "Where have you been all day, Aileen?"

"In the old stone-barn chamber learning to spin," said Aileen, laughing and blushing.

Juanita looked sharp at her. What change had subtly crept over her voice and manner? Then she looked at Captain Delany's bright face.

"Take good care of her," said the young officer, laughing, "I shall be very much pleased from Aileen's shoulders." She has promised to be my wife, before a great many weeks."

It was not until Delany had gone that the amazede of questions burst on Aileen's devoted head.

"Girls, girls! don't all speak at once," said grandma. "It's exactly as I've always told you. The right one will be sure to come along if you lie in the chinney-corner and wait. And that was just what Aileen was doing this evening."

"O-od-by, sweet New Year's Day—the happiest I have ever known.

GRANDILOQUENT GRADUATES.

The Difference between their School Theories and their Worldly Experience.

"Where are the graduates of the class of '80?" asked the valedictorian, the recent High School commencement.

"Not answering the call to this retrospective conundrum, and as the interlocutor, or "middle man" failed to query, "Well, Mr. Simpson, what are the graduates of the class of '80?" the audience was left in Chimmerian darkness as to their whereabouts.

Curiosity being aroused we subsequently made inquiries concerning these young men and women who, six years ago "bade adieu to their Alma Mater, to second other battles, fight higher battles, win other coronals—who returned to their homes with their hearts full of bright anticipations, and their pockets full of colored bouquets and other gifts, which their parents had taken the precaution to purchase, in order that they might not be left, should they be overlooked by their friends.

Minnie Manderson, of the class of '80, who read the essay entitled "The Duty we owe to Posterity," in which Minnie so beautifully and tenderly dwelt upon the original injunction "Multiply the human and thy mother," and graphically pictured the sad shortcomings of "Adam's mistake" in leaving such an easy chair, with feet crossed and arms folded. He is an excellent conversier, having the happy talent of saying the right thing to the right person, and has overwhelming people with the learned church talk that some prelates like to indulge in on all occasions. To visitors he appears to be a benevolent, retiring little man, with a disposition to take things easy. The priests who live in the same house with him, however, say that he is anything but an easy liver. He is an ascetic, they declare, like Cardinal Gibbons' predecessor, Cardinal Bilitiner, of Paris. While genial and all smile to callers, he observes in private life all the little penances of monkhood. His bedroom is the poorest furnished room in the house. The floor is oaken and polished, and covered in the easter with a rug which is much the worse for wear. A cot-bed, an iron washstand, a bureau with a very small glass, and two cane seat, chairs complete the list of furniture in the room.

The Cardinal believes in the maxim "early to rise," etc. He celebrates Mass every morning at 6 o'clock, sometimes at the central alter in the Cathedral and sometimes at his private alter. His days are passed in the recitation of his breviary, in studies, in receiving visitors and in recreation, of which he takes a great deal. He is an indefatigable walker. His daily office is performed while walking up and down the brick pavement in the rear of the archiepiscopal residence, and he is frequently seen perfect over some theological work while tramping in the library.

Moreover, he takes a daily walk through the streets with one of his priests. This walk is taken about 6 o'clock in the evening and often extends to the city suburbs. As he tramps along he seldom speaks to his companion, but seems intent on getting as much exercise as possible out of his walk. It is said that the young priests of the city are not particularly glad when the Cardinal invites them for a walk, for, however on joyable the walk may be to the prelate, it is not so to his companions. The Cardinal always selects a young man as his associate in tramping. As in the case of the Confessor Gibbons, he has a special fondness to take one of his young officers along on his walks. The young man who seems ready to impress as a special mark of favor, as the Cardinal walks along, is the young priest, the young priest whom he asks to tredge along with him on his hot days. In these walks he frequently make calls on his flock.

The Cardinal is one of the fastest walkers in Baltimore. Through a small man, his step is astonishingly long, and he seems never to get tired. He is always dressed, and looks at his best, in a black Prince Albert suit, generally ill-fitting as to the coat, and wears a hat which is never quite as well brushed as it might be. He is a good shoe shows that he goes in for comfort rather than for elegance.

Generally the Cardinal so manages his walks as to be back at St. Mary's Seminary, on North Paca street. He has a great love for the institution, which he helped to create, and for the professors who trained him for the priesthood. During the summer months he gets away to his summer villa in St. Charles College, sixteen miles from the city, where he received his early education. The Sulpitian fathers control the institution, and are very proud of the vinita of the prince of the church, who always speaks of them with great unction. His affection for them is shown in many ways. They are his chief advisers. He was engaged by Mr. Ferrers and young Doctor Fenchard, who had seen the lights, and had also observed "Hotspur" fastened to the fence.

"May we venture to intrude?" said they, peeping in over the stair-rail.

"Oh, certainly!" said grandma, smiling.

And Aileen distributed handiclasps cups and beautiful slices of golden-brown cornpaste, yet steaming from the fire, to her guests.

"We are hardly prepared to entertain so large a company," said she, composedly; "but you see, at all events, give you a welcome."

"Three—half a dozen more dropped in. Old Pomp was summoned to pour fresh pine cones on the blaze and bring more coffee and corn-cake.

He grinned from ear to ear.

"For Tel like the good old times," said he, to Aunt Felicia, when he returned to his cabin. "De berry cream ob de gentry ain-jiple de corn-pones an' coffee like dey was cuse ole mass'ra time. Ain't sorfin like corn-pone for rale good flavor, dat they ain't. An' the young lady from de Nort', she's as pretty as a peach. Reckon de capting thinks so, too. He, he, he!"

And old Pomp shook his sides with an inaudible chuckle of glee.

Later in the evening the gentlemen went up to the house, where stood the three Misses Harrington in a simpering row.

But their call there was limited, and several of them returned to the "Stone Barn" to finish their evening.

James Delany remained the latest of all—was late, in fact, that it was far on second grandma and Aileen to the house, under whispering pine-boughs, by the light of the big round moon.

The three cousins, whose list of calls had long since ended, were yawning in the parlor.

"Dear me," said Selina, as the little group came in. "Where have you been all day, Aileen?"

"In the old stone-barn chamber learning to spin," said Aileen, laughing and blushing.

Juanita looked sharp at her. What change had subtly crept over her voice and manner? Then she looked at Captain Delany's bright face.

"Take good care of her," said the young officer, laughing, "I shall be very much pleased from Aileen's shoulders." She has promised to be my wife, before a great many weeks."

It was not until Delany had gone that the amazede of questions burst on Aileen's devoted head.

"Girls, girls! don't all speak at once," said grandma. "It's exactly as I've always told you. The right one will be sure to come along if you lie in the chinney-corner and wait. And that was just what Aileen was doing this evening."

"O-od-by, sweet New Year's Day—the happiest I have ever known.

BAPTIZED DEMOCRACY.

Father Walter Elliot on the Church and the Republic.

In the Catholic World, for September, Father Elliot, C. S. P., in spirited words shows the harmony of religious progress and modern civilization. The article is based upon a review of Mr. Andrew Carnegie's recent much-mentioned "Triumphant Democracy," or "Six Months at the Great Republic," lately published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

"Twenty servant scientists," he says, "combined to do a spiteful thing to a great peace monarchy as this one book. In two years, Mr. Carnegie's book disappeared in bulk and of double force than any book yet invented. The resources of civilization were sufficient to make them in Europe and are here brought to the highest point of efficiency." Mr. Carnegie proves the case against monarchy and aristocracy. But the author has not got at the origin question. He has told us what democracy can do for the people, but he has not told us, the author, the artisan, the miner, the mechanic, the secular scholar, "But what can democracy do for the man?"

"The democratic man naturally tends to exaggerate his importance. Instead of this vice, he joyfully welcomes the ennobling and sobering influence of Christian truth. It is our view of fundamental democracy, and it is the view of Christianity, that the man is not in his logical democracy." Mr. Carnegie's "Triumphant Democracy" is the triumph of democracy, and it is in its superior capacity for getting wealth.

"We claim that the triumph of democracy is that in this age it is the home of governments positively favorable to the humanity of man's higher and lower natures by man. Parkman stated a paradox, which we have already provided with five weeks in the Atlantic, and has left the proof as an assignment for the benefit of creditors.

"We remember how the friends of Jacob Abbot Williams, when they heard his end his essay entitled, "The Road to Ruin," pronounced it, he was sure to become a millionaire in a very short space of time. His essay was never published, prepared, and showed that fortunes were made in the road to ruin. Mr. Carnegie, Mr. Vanderbilt, Lulie, it was said by those who heard her essay, would be a prize for some more happiness than poverty than wealth. Peter Increased $800, and bought an a small grocery store. Hundreds of poor, his creditors pressing, and, finally, the sheriff took possession of his grocery and sold more goods in half-a-day than Peter had disposed of in six months. The morning after the sheriff's sale, Peter was found dead in his room, with a bullet wound in his head. The verdict of the coroner's jury was, that he came to his death from a pistol shot, fired by himself, while temporarily insane from financial troubles.

"Carrie Grimes' essay, "How to be Useful," was earnest and convincing. Carrie's graduating dress cost only fifteen dollars. It would have cost much more, but Carrie's mother had spent several nights with needle working upon it, while Carrie, the dutiful daughter that she was, sat up to keep her company, and while the mother's nimble fingers were employed on the frills and ruffles, Carrie read Ouida's latest novel. A recent visit found her as bright as a pink, painting a long-legged stork on a plaque, while her mother was still at the sewing-machine.

—He who is slowest in making a promise is apt to be the most faithful in the performance of it.

DON'T DRINK IN THE DARK.

Mrs. Mary Powers Died, and he Never Knew Her Current Address.

Mrs. Mary Powers of Cambridge, Mass., ejected from her stomach Monday night a wicked and fine bat, which she had swallowed while drinking water seven years ago. Her house was visited by a reporter yesterday. A middle-aged, pleasant-faced woman answered the inquirer's knock. She wondered if she was the person who had borne a living bat in her stomach for seven years she answered in the affirmative. Opening the reporter into the parlor, she sat down and narrated in a few moments, carrying in her hands a glass preserve jar. At the bottom of the jar a black object appeared to be moving about.

"There it is, said she, "and I'd wonder ever suffered more than I have during the past seven years, I would like to see her.

An examination of the contents of the jar revealed the body of a bat with black wings and other appendages peculiar to that animal. It was black on all sides, and the lower part of the body was covered with a thick film of dark blue. The body was about three inches long, and its extreme tip was covered with a white screen from tip to tip. The most peculiar feature of the animal was the head. It was about one inch in length, and shaped somewhat like that of a bird. From its nose jew several tufts of long dark hair hung in curling ringlets, and the eyes were well marked. The head was topped with two extremely long ears. It weighed from one to two ounces, and was well preserved.

"It is hard to believe," said Mrs. Powers, "but I'll tell you just how it happened. Once I was taking a drink of water seven years ago, when I felt something jump down my throat to get a drink of water I drew the water up in my mouth, and I swallowed it and drank it off. Immediately after I began to have a pain in my side. It grew worse as the days and months went by, and for years before morning I suffered the most terrible pain in my side and back.

"Things went on in this way for two years, when I became sick. I was sick with the torture I was enduring because so excruciating. This essay was never prepared, and showed that fortunes were made in the road to ruin. Mr. Carnegie, Mr. Vanderbilt, Lulie, it was said by those who heard her essay, would be a prize for some more happiness than poverty than wealth. Peter Increased $800, and bought an a small grocery store. Hundreds of poor, his creditors pressing, and, finally, the sheriff took possession of his grocery and sold more goods in half-a-day than Peter had disposed of in six months. The morning after the sheriff's sale, Peter was found dead in his room, with a bullet wound in his head. The verdict of the coroner's jury was, that he came to his death from a pistol shot, fired by himself, while temporarily insane from financial troubles.

"Carrie Grimes' essay, "How to be Useful," was earnest and convincing. Carrie's graduating dress cost only fifteen dollars. It would have cost much more, but Carrie's mother had spent several nights with needle working upon it, while Carrie, the dutiful daughter that she was, sat up to keep her company, and while the mother's nimble fingers were employed on the frills and ruffles, Carrie read Ouida's latest novel. A recent visit found her as bright as a pink, painting a long-legged stork on a plaque, while her mother was still at the sewing-machine.

—He who is slowest in making a promise is apt to be the most faithful in the performance of it.

There is no State in the Union where people can live better

OUR OWN CALIFORNIA

WHICH IS A VERITABLE

HORN OF PLENTY

as Edibles and Fruits are concerned.

THE SECRET

(If living cheaply and well is to be discovered by all thrifty readers it may will yet. chase their household supplies of

FAMILY GROCERIES

From the well-known firm of

SBARBORO & CO.

531 Washington St.,

The Old House Still Stands

Where for more than a quarter of a Century—Tens of Thousands of Saving, Prudent and

ECONOMICAL HOUSEKEEPERS

HAVE SAVED

Hundreds of Dollars Yearly

BY JUST KNOWING

Where to Buy their Groceries.

THE SECRET

AT WHICH

SBARBORO & CO.,

Can sell Groceries Are, cheaper than other dealers in strictly formal or those right Business Propositions

1 We buy all our goods for Cash.
2 We buy in large quantity at Bed-Rock Rates.
3 We sell to Cash Customers only.
4 We have no Bad Debts on our Books.
5 We buy cheap and can sell cheap.
6 Having no Bad Debts we require less profit.
7 We can give better goods than our competitors.
8 Our customers get the benefit of our cash purchases.

Remember, therefore, that if you want

The Best Groceries

AT THE CHEAPEST PRICES

The proper place to purchase them is at

SBARBORO & CO'S.,

531 WASHINGTON STREET

(Between Montgomery and Sansome)

READ THESE PRICES

And Call and Examine

OUR GOODS.

SUGARS

Greatly Reduced.

40 pounds Dried Apples,	$1
18 pounds Tapioca,	$1
18 pounds Sago,	$1
25 pounds Codfish,	$1
14 pounds Prunes,	$1
14 pounds Figs,	$1
10 pounds Green Coffee,	$1
Star Ground Coffee,	15c. per lb
Fine Tea, (No Humbug)	50c per lb
Fine Jar Tea,	50c per lb
Family Mixed Tea,	25c per lb
5-gallon can water-white Coal Oil,	$1.25
50 pounds P' White Beans,	$1
Golden Syrup, 5 gall. kegs,	$2.00
Flour from Old Wheat at Great Reduction.

And all other Goods Equal in Cheap.

WINES AND LIQUORS.

Claret, Zinfandel, 2 gallon,	75c
Claret, French, 2 gallon,	$1.00
Sherry, Old, 2 gallon,	$1.50
Port, Old, 2 gallon,	$1.50
Old Time Bourbon, 2 gallon,	$3.00
Old Time Bourbon, 2 gallon,	$4.00
Whisky, Hennessy, 2 gallon,	$6.00
Whisky, Old Rye, 2 gallon,	$4.00
Jamaica Rum, 2 gallon,	$3.00

All orders promptly and carefully filled and delivered to any part of the City, Oakland or Alameda free of charge.

Country orders solicited and made a specialty and shipped free of charge.

Country Produce Exchanged!

SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST

SBARBORO & CO.

R. SBARBORO, Manager.

The Church in China.

CRUELTIES PERPETRATED ON CATHOLIC MISSIONARIES.

HORRIBLE SLAUGHTER OF PRIESTS, SINNERS AND CONVERTS.

Villages, Churches and Schools Pillaged and Destroyed.

A recent issue of the Journal of Catholic Missions contains the following account of the horrible means adopted by the Chinese pagans to crush out Catholicity in the land of Confucius.

For three years Europe has awaited in anxiety the pacification of Tonquin, and the Catholic world has yielded with the deepest grief and sympathy the terrible sufferings of Christianity in China and the Chinese apostasies.

The latter territory—known to us as Farther India and to the French as Indo-China was, up to the fifteenth century, part of the Celestial Empire. Day by one, the tribes, chief of the Annam yoke and grouped themselves into the kingdoms of Annam, Siam and Anam, all acknowledging the supremacy of China. In these times, up to 1858, Christianity was unknown, and the Catholic missionaries were unused by the French, consisted of three great divisions—Southern Cambodia, or roughly, Lower Indo-China, the Central, now known as Anam, the Northern, or Tonquin. The Catholic Church was assumed a protectorate over the whole country divisions, and the Christians were not only claims to extend over Tonquin, but would as we shall presently see, claim it as permanently as she has done the southern division of Anam. For months the Christians were in a state of perpetual mortal, partially strategical. Possession of the whole province, which Christianity has offered his neck to the executioner. The Christians were deprived of their lands, and of their property, and finally, the Christians were driven from their homes, and the priests were hunted like wild beasts. They were all Dalmatian and Italian priests, and the Christians were all Annamites, and finally told no to go home. My sufferings increased. I had the use of my limbs, arms, and fingers, while the pain my back and side whenever I attempted to do anything. I was in this state for years. On Saturday, Sunday, and Monday were days of great suffering to me, and night seven years ago. About 12 o'clock Monday night there came a great pain in my side, since which time I have enjoyed the best of health. I recovered the use of all my faculties.

Once I felt people visited the house yesterday to ask if I was the person who had been cured. Several professional men here also have visited the house to see the cure. They seem to be all at a loss to account for it. I have consulted physicians, but they are all at a loss to account for it. I have no doubt it was the work of God.

THE SALOON IN POLITICS.

A Demoralizing and Disgraceful Agency in American Political Contests.

We have the seven thousand saloons of New York city done for here! They have fully corrupt government ever endured by any city, and have almost made it impossible for a decent man to accept office in such local politics, much less take office. We have seen the saloon, with its hundreds of offices to their own low level, they have established every institution that they have to do—and they have succeeded in corrupting the democratic system, making it a representative of the saloon, instead of sobriety and the village, establishing political caucuses in the saloon, at the times of the worst classes, defiling every thing, and producing at last a state of public opinion, and producing at last a state of public opinion, and producing at last a state of public opinion

THE MONITOR.

FRIDAY EVENING, SEPT. 17, 1886.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1886.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Christian parents, let us beg your earnest consideration of this important fact. But parents, as well individually, must practically support the activities of the Catholic Press, if the good work is to be accomplished the great work which the Pastors and the Church expect of it at this time. Be frequently and especially has the pulpit wonderful mission of the press been dwelt upon by our Pastors.

Catholic writers, and we unfortunately have their whose can been counted and reckoned everywhere, that we may certainly thanks in send of arguments to be constituted of this Lord. We will ever be ready to work with all, relieve it will be to be a Catholic Press, and Catholic Publication, and Catholic Publication. If the hand of our Catholic hand, will no again it as higher high and the duty to constitute towards supporting the Catholic Publication, and Catholic Publication, and Catholic Publication, and Catholic Publication, and Catholic Publication. Their hopes, then the Catholic press will be sure to attain to be rightly envisaged and be accomplish the destined mission. But choose a journal that is Catholic in its tone, that is Catholic in its spirit, that is Catholic in its aims and spirit, disrespectful in constitution, unfriendly, or biting and uncharitable to Catholic brethren.—PASTORAL LETTER OF THE THIRD PLENARY COUNCIL.

LETTER FROM BISHOP MANOGUE.

To the Rev. Clergy of the Diocese of Sacramento.

Dearly Beloved Brethren:—As previously announced, the annual collection for the Holy Father will take place on the first Sunday of October, feast of the Most Holy Rosary. You are, therefore, reminded that this collection should be announced, explained and recommended the preceding Sunday, and requested to forward the proceeds to Sacramento by the 15th of October.

Your humble and devoted servant in Christ.

✠ P. MANOGUE,
Bishop of Sacramento.

Grass Valley, Sept. 13, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

—Mrs. T. D. Stillras, wife of the Lord Mayor of Dublin, and a deputation of Irish ladies will go to Hawarden on the 21st of this month to present to Mr. Gladstone a mammoth declaration in favor of Home Rule in Ireland. The document bears the signatures of 350,000 Irish women.

—The celebrated preacher, Father Accatino of Montalvino, a Franciscan of the Observance, whose sermons have created a sensation equal to that of Savonarola in his greatest days, will preach the Lenten course next year at the Church of St. Andrea della Valle at Rome.

—Father Kenelm Vaughn has just returned to England from Mexico. He is now negotiating about a site in the southwest of London, where he and his companions hope to found the first House of Universal Expiation early in the autumn, under the direction of the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster.

—The American Catholic Seminary at Louvain has entered upon its thirteenth year of existence. Two Archbishops, six Bishops, and 350 priests have received their ecclesiastical training there, and the cause of the Church in the United States has greatly benefited by this institution. Eight priests will leave its walls for different American dioceses before the end of this month.

—During Mr. Davitt's visit to this State he will deliver lectures in this city and also in several of the chief cities and towns. From here he will go by the southern route to New Orleans, lecturing at all the chief places on his way. From thence he will go north to St. Louis and—after visiting all the principal cities—he will wind up his tour by giving farewell lectures in New York and Brooklyn, prior to his return to Ireland.

—The English government recently sent General Butler and a large force of military and emabakery to the county Kerry in order to suppress "outrages" reported by the English press as constantly occurring there. The General made an inspection of the so called "disaffected" districts, and the result was that his first war bulletin to London read as follows:

"Kerry is entirely free from crime." Another instance of how Irish criminal records are manufactured through English malice.

—The London Daily News says that Lord Salisbury's government is bidding for the support of the Catholic Hierarchy, in Ireland, by a proposal for conferring on that body largely increased powers in the matter of the control of education. The is the old lure that was used so effectively in the time of Cardinal Cullen and his immediate successor. But the heads of the Irish Church, at present, belong to a different class of men; and the bitterness of the Tory Unionists will be estimated by them at their true value—which is simply nil.

—Although the good natured Countess of Aberdeen has left Ireland for her home in Scotland, she continues to prove to the most practical manner her love for the Irish people. On the occasion of the Queen's visit to the Edinburgh Exhibition, the Countess drew the attention of her Majesty in the most special manner to the workmanship displayed at the Irish stall, and presented her with handsome specimens from each of the four provinces. The Queen admired them very much, and gave orders both then and since for several articles, especially those made at schools. Some of the most beautiful exhibits have come from the convent schools. Ireland will feel grateful to the Countess for this fresh proof of her active zeal on her behalf.

—The Unita Cattolica of Rome relates that the late Victor Emmanuel had, as his father Carlo Alberto also had, a deep affection for the Jesuits; and that there exists a letter written by Victor Emmanuel, a few days before his death, to one of his most trusted friends, in which that king records how the Jesuits always deserved well, not only of the Church and of civil society, but in a special manner of his own family. "And they will come a day," continues the Unita, "when this autograph and unconstitutional letter—because it was written without the knowledge and consent of his ministers—will be published, and it does not absolve Victor Emmanuel, at least it will constitute an 'attenuating circumstance' in the very severe judgment that inexorable history is preparing for him."

—The Ave Maria says that within the past few years three of the most active and zealous prosecutors of the Church in political centres of Switzerland have met with such terrible deaths as to attract general attention. One of these was the indefatigable Frote, of the Canton of Berne, who pursued with intense hatred the Catholics of that Canton, especially the clergy, whom he called vermin. He died insane, almost eaten alive by vermin. The second was M. Kalber, of Argovie, who distinguished himself by a tyrannical career of oppression towards the Church during forty years. His last appearance before the public was marked by a tirade against the Church, in which he scoffed at the Pope, and the excommunication which he boasted of having incurred several times. He died an idiot, abandoned by everyone. The third was M. Vigier, whose career was marked by his speeches against the Church and religion, and the number of minds led astray by his seductive words. He died recently a terrible death from cancer of the tongue. A just retribution which is sure to overtake the enemies of God who persevere in persecuting His Church.

—We publish on the third page this week the harrowing details of recent massacres of Christians in China, and the vast amount of suffering and loss entailed upon the Church in consequence thereof. But the end is not yet, as it appears from a Paris cablegram of the 10th inst. that the Chinese of that city published a telegram from the Bishop of Tonquin saying that 700 Christians have been massacred and forty villages burned in the provinces of Manhoa, and that 9,000 Christians are perishing of hunger. Hitherto Catholic interests in China have been under the guardianship of France, but the Chinese have engendered a hatred against all Frenchmen, hence they avenge their rancor upon the missionary priests and their neophytes as the wards of a nation against whom the Chinese seem determined to wage relentless war. It was in order to save the lives of such innocent victims that the Pope proposed to relieve France of its guardianship and to deal directly with the Chinese government at all diplomatic concerns so as to relieve the missionaries and their converts from the odium attached to the name of France in China.

The New Diocese of Salt Lake City.

A telegram received yesterday confirms the rumor which has been current for some time that a new Diocese would be created in Utah, and that VERY REV. LAWRENCE SCANLAN, V. F., would be nominated as its first Bishop. Hitherto the territory of Utah has been temporarily placed under the administration of the Archbishop of San Francisco, but the growth of the Church in that territory and the increasing importance of its spiritual wants, have prompted the Holy See to place its spiritual jurisdiction in the hands of a priest whose zeal, prudence and energies have been the motive power in placing the Church in Utah upon a broad and solid foundation.

Salt Lake City, which we presume will be the Episcopal seat of the new See, is well provided with Catholic institutions, all of which owe their origin and completion to the forethought and business tact of the newly-nominated Bishop. St. Mary Magdalen's Church is a spacious and handsome edifice; St. Mary's Academy is a magnificent structure attended by twenty-six Sisters of the Holy Cross; the Hospital of the Holy Cross shelters nearly a hundred patients and is attended by a dozen Sisters of the same Order. The Sisters also conduct a school for small children, where orphans and half orphans are received and cared for. Nor are the boys neglected, as Father SCANLAN has created a magnificent building for a boy's school and it has just been put into use with a very large attendance.

Thus the new See begins its Episcopal career under favorable circumstances, and we hope to see the Church therein secure a powerful influence to wean the majority of the people from the baneful and beastly practices of Mormonism, and thus remove from the escutcheon of the United States the foulest blot that mars its beauty.

The Mormons extends to VERY REV. LAWRENCE SCANLAN its heartiest congratulations on his well-deserved promotion as evinces in a portion of God's vineyard which displays so many monuments of the fervor of his faith, and we hope that he may live to see his flock multiplied ten hundred fold and to witness the Church of Christ supreme in that spiritual domain where at present the dogma of Joseph Smith are worshipping the idol of sensuality.

How the Church Grows.

As an index of the expansion of the Church in different portions of the world, an English paper points to the fact that as recently as the year 1812 there were in England 423 churches and no schools. Now there are 1,560 churches and a very large number of Catholic schools and other Catholic educational institutions. In Africa, in 1822, there was not a Bishop or Archbishop, and there were very few priests. Now there is an Archbishop (who is also a Cardinal), several Bishops, a large number of priests, and several millions of Catholics. In 1822 Asia had but twelve Bishops. Now it has twenty-six Bishops, fifty Prefects-Apostolic, and more than ten millions of Catholics. The United States, in 1822, had nine dioceses and about one hundred priests. Now there are seventy-nine dioceses and seven thousand priests, and upwards of eight millions of Catholics. In 1822 Catholicity had scarcely a foothold in Australia and Polynesia. Now there are more than twenty two Episcopal Sees and about seven hundred thousand Catholics.

—Wednesday, Friday and Saturday of the present week are Ember Days, hence all Catholics must observe the customary fast.

Why there are so few Religious Vocations.

A priest who receives many eminent letters the Church annually, and whose many years experience as a zealous missionary entitle his opinion to great weight, writes in as follows

"I have read your earnest appeal to the Pacific, about young men to enter the beautiful home the Christian Brothers have provided for them at Martinez. I regret to say your eloquent appeal will be fruitless. Our young men are more than their parents, not and first the Church, and second Ireland. A worthy Rev. Sister and the other day that religious vocations are getting more numerous in Ireland. The age Jesuitism. What is the real cause of this lack of religious vocations? Our Catholic parents have become worldly minded, of the earth, earthy; they hardly ever mention God's name at the fireside; they are taken up with traffic, commerce and worldly advancement; money is far more based at all times than church, God, heaven, or eternity. The golden eagle is the god of the country and our Catholics are fast worshipping at this shrine. The eternal today they relinquished, I fear that the good seed you sowed will not bear the golden harvest you hope for. Our young men of our country are fast worshipping at the orphan asylums or similar institutions; there the children are not molded by worldly minded parents. If the girls and boys are well trained in the home education, with if it's given, there will be quite a number who will be willing to serve God in the religious state. I hope I am mistaken in the views remarks, but observing the signs of the times, I think I hit not far from the mark."

This is a serious indictment to bring against Catholic parents and one which they must purge themselves of if ever they expect to look the face of God or to share in His glory. Can it be possible that the Catholic parents of this coast have become so utterly worldly minded as to have forgotten that by the highest honor they can have bestowed upon them by Almighty God is to have some of their children numbered among the Ministers of the Sanctuary, and what is may be asked—are the peculiar political principles of the "Anti-Party?" Have we become so degraded as to think that "American must rule America," the definition of the word "American" excluding all native born and naturalized citizens not fully in accord with Dalgety's anti-papery proscriptive policy, which is carried out according to the published ideas of the new "floss" of the Republican party—would deny the right of voting and of holding office to every Catholic citizen of California. Against such a wicked unprincipled political programme every fair-minded citizen of this State should battle with might and main so as to prove to the world that the soil of California is not congenial to the bad breed of ripeness knowingness lead on by the most fanatical fetishes that ever formulated an idea in mindless to American freedom.

We have said that the candidate for Governor on the Republican ticket was nominated at Mr. Pixley's request, and in order to prove the truth of that assertion we reproduce from the Argonaut of the 14th ult. a brief extract wherein Pixley thus praises his political protege

"Had I been asked to the Republican State Convention at Los Angeles, I should have voted for John F. Swift as the candidate of the party for Governor."

The Republican convention met the day following and nominated the candidate of the new "floss" of the Republican party—Mr. Swift was nominated.

The New "Floss" of the Republican Party in California.

Frank Pixley must feel proud indeed of the supreme power which he at present exercises over the new-formed "Republican" party in this State. The Knownothing programme outlined in Pixley's Independence Day harangue has been carried out to the letter; the gentleman designated by Pixley as his choice for Governor has been nominated, an "American" ticket has been formed, and that the Honorable Frank Pixley has placed the Knownothing brand upon the back and feet of the Republican party in California.

It is right for every naturalized American citizen to select any political party he pleases wherein to sift himself politically, but it is also the duty of the daily press to caution its foreign-born readers against the wiles of such dangerous designing demagogues as Frank Pixley, so that they may not be misled into casting their votes for narrow-minded men who—under the plea of patriotism—only seek place and power in order to deprive every naturalized citizen of his dearest rights both civil and religious. It is with this laudable design that the Monitor labors—to take a more than ordinary interest in the present political campaign, and to help defeat the proscriptive bigots of politics who—like Pixley—have no other object in life than the hope of defrauding adopted citizens of the dearest rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution and laws of the country.

In his Fourth of July Knownothing harangue Pixley purposely parodied the necessary for an "American" to be born in State, and what—it may be asked—are the peculiar political principles of the "Anti-Party?" Pixley in his speech declared—in the sense that "American must rule America,"—the definition of the word "American" excluding all native born and naturalized citizens not fully in accord with Dalgety's anti-papery proscriptive policy, which is carried out according to the published ideas of the new "floss" of the Republican party—would deny the right of voting and of holding office to every Catholic citizen of California. Against such a wicked unprincipled political programme every fair-minded citizen of this State should battle with might and main so as to prove to the world that the soil of California is not congenial to the bad breed of ripeness knowingness lead on by the most fanatical fetishes that ever formulated an idea in mindless to American freedom.

We have said that the candidate for Governor on the Republican ticket was nominated at Mr. Pixley's request, and in order to prove the truth of that assertion we reproduce from the Argonaut of the 14th ult. a brief extract wherein Pixley thus praises his political protege

"Had I been asked to the Republican State Convention at Los Angeles, I should have voted for John F. Swift as the candidate of the party for Governor."

The Republican convention met the day following and nominated the candidate of the new "floss" of the Republican party—Mr. Swift was nominated.

Irish Bishops Endorse Gladstone.

On the 9th inst. a conference of all the Catholic Bishops of Ireland was held in Dublin at which resolutions were adopted by that august body declaring that the Irish people fully appreciated and endorsed Gladstone's efforts in behalf of Ireland, and that they were fully determined to continue their constitutional demand for Home Rule until that ineffarable right was wrung from the British Parliament.

The Bishops further emphatically declared that there was the remotest danger of any serious outbreak among the Protestants or non-Catholic element in Ireland, when self government in domestic affairs was granted to the vast Catholic majority of the Irish people, as the Catholic body had ever evinced a spirit of the broadest tolerance and always participated in charity by the Protestant element in the northern counties of Ireland.

The Bishops also warned the British government that the present agitation—which kept both Ireland and all other parts of the British Empire in a constant political ferment—would continue and increase largely up for Parliamentary consideration—could never subside until Ireland's rights were secured to her by the enactment of a Home Rule Parliament.

Sermons Suitable for Catholic Homes.

The CHRISTIAN SECRET OF LIFE, or Sermons on the Fundamental Duties of Christians in general and of Christian Parents in particular. By Rev. Bernard Hafkemeyer, D. D. Cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. Price $2.00.

We know of no better work already built can be founded and purely realized in the hearts of both Catholic parents and children, than by having this work adorn Catholic homes. The sermons are plain, practical discourses, preachable alike to the laity in all conditions of life, and to the clergy in their duties as taught their duty to God, their parents and themselves; moreover people are taught their duty towards each other, towards their children, and all that pertains to the spiritual and temporal welfare of the entire household; the laity are taught their duty in their pastors, enjoined to pay them their duty towards them temporal rules; the rich are instructed in their duty towards God and also towards the poor; the poor are taught their duties and are admonished into the duties and responsibilities—consoled the truth in order that they may be consoled in their trials and tribulations.

The Clergy also will find these sermons suitable and useful, especially when they remember the difficulty experienced by Bishop Ricards in his introduction to the work when he says

"Dear Reader,

Please read attentively and meditate on the following the translation of Hamers Sermons to the Catholic public. I am grieved because the Catholic people are so poorly provided with good Catholic reading, which is instructive, edifying, and consoling, and particularly in supplying our priests with the most common body, in defending the order of the holy priesthood, and consolation arises from the fact that the great number of Catholic people are so poorly provided with good Catholic reading, which is instructive, edifying, and consoling. There are many admirable books of sermons, translations and original ones, which are suitable for the pulpit, but they are generally speaking, too elaborate, and the language too elevated, that ordinary people take away from the matter by the attractions of style. . . . The great desideratum is a word and solid matter plainly and simply put, that will fit itself in the memory, as it is read, and be ready to be reproduced and repeated in the sermons of Father Hendel. This learned gentleman, it is evident, had no thought of any other audience than the people, and that purpose of expressing what he had to say to the people in the language of the people, with neither ostentation nor affected eloquence, and as soon as it was known in the crowd that a "holy candle," as Dalgairns call it, was lighted, he never was at once surrounded by a crowd of attentive listeners. Not a tenth part of the sermons in Tweedie might be thought of which the fields had already yielded plentiful harvests of souls, and that were soon bound down with woe.

Sermons Suitable for Catholic Homes.

The CHRISTIAN SECRET OF LIFE, or Sermons on the Fundamental Duties of Christians in general and of Christian Parents in particular. By Rev. Bernard Hafkemeyer, D. D. Cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. Price $2.00.

We know of no better work already built can be founded and purely realized in the hearts of both Catholic parents and children, than by having this work adorn Catholic homes. The sermons are plain, practical discourses, preachable alike to the laity in all conditions of life, and to the clergy in their duties as taught their duty to God, their parents and themselves; moreover people are taught their duty towards each other, towards their children, and all that pertains to the spiritual and temporal welfare of the entire household; the laity are taught their duty in their pastors, enjoined to pay them their duty towards them temporal rules; the rich are instructed in their duty towards God and also towards the poor; the poor are taught their duties and are admonished into the duties and responsibilities—consoled the truth in order that they may be consoled in their trials and tribulations.

The Clergy also will find these sermons suitable and useful, especially when they remember the difficulty experienced by Bishop Ricards in his introduction to the work when he says

"Dear Reader,

Please read attentively and meditate on the following the translation of Hamers Sermons to the Catholic public. I am grieved because the Catholic people are so poorly provided with good Catholic reading, which is instructive, edifying, and consoling, and particularly in supplying our priests with the most common body, in defending the order of the holy priesthood, and consolation arises from the fact that the great number of Catholic people are so poorly provided with good Catholic reading, which is instructive, edifying, and consoling. There are many admirable books of sermons, translations and original ones, which are suitable for the pulpit, but they are generally speaking, too elaborate, and the language too elevated, that ordinary people take away from the matter by the attractions of style. . . . The great desideratum is a word and solid matter plainly and simply put, that will fit itself in the memory, as it is read, and be ready to be reproduced and repeated in the sermons of Father Hendel. This learned gentleman, it is evident, had no thought of any other audience than the people, and that purpose of expressing what he had to say to the people in the language of the people, with neither ostentation nor affected eloquence, and as soon as it was known in the crowd that a "holy candle," as Dalgairns call it, was lighted, he never was at once surrounded by a crowd of attentive listeners. Not a tenth part of the sermons in Tweedie might be thought of which the fields had already yielded plentiful harvests of souls, and that were soon bound down with woe.

Sad Condition of the Belgian Workingmen.

At the Tresles Union Congress held in Paris, and attended by delegates from England, Norway, Belgium, Austria, Germany, Egypt, Brazil, St. Etienne, Nantes, and other places, M. Anseele gave a description of the political and economical condition of the working men in Belgium. He stated that they were behind Russia, where at least women and children were protected. The right of voting was conferred by only a few thousand electors, all rich, and none representing the interests of labor. In country was the workman so poor. Minors worked 14, 15, and 16 hours daily, and received 200 parts below the surface of the earth for 24 a day. Boys under four years in the frontier the French miners earned 2c. 3c. a day. Near Charleroi he had known some young women descend into the pit at four in the morning, remain there till eleven at night, and only receive 1c. 1½c. for the quarters, in spite of the arduous nature of the labor, 2c. was the ordinary pay. In the weaving industries full grown men earned but 8c. a week, though the trade organization and strikes cutting 12,000, they had raised the salaries to 12c. a week.

The last strike was that of some young girls who received 4c. for the designing of a married woman because she had not returned to the factory at days after her confinement. The trick system also prevailed throughout the country, and the government inquiry went to prove that the employers monopolized the trade, that they fixed the out as wages to their men. As the representatives of the Belgian workmen, he spoke in the name of 1,120,000 men and 194,000 women.

A Crazy Vatican Visitor.

About midnight of August 17 last, the guards on duty near the Basilica of St. Peter's observed a man climbing the railing and with hammers, within the church and attempting to force the door of one statue near by, the sound was distinctly heard by the guards, who rushed into the temple, and the alarm being given to the Vatican guards charged with the internal service of the Vatican, a search was assumed of the premises, both within and without the church, during which every part of the Basilica was thoroughly searched, even to the dome, and the cupola, but with no result; the door was found to be down, the lock broken, and the statue, which was large having been taken from its place, and the hammers and chisel intercepted by the police detectives, who had both the suspected man and the hammers and chisel in his possession. The man was then without a guard of three, and was taken to the Vatican, where he was found to come to Rome, as well as those of the Vatican, and the Vatican, and the Vatican, and

Farm and Home.

A Good Orchard.

The Healdsburg Enterprise says: Charley Remmel, who lives a short distance east of Geyserville, is the possessor of twenty acres of orchard land which is as fine as can be found in the county. He has all planted in fruit trees. They range from two to seven years old. His peach trees this year have not bore well as the late frost in March killed almost all the buds. His bad, however, about four tons of the Jones Seedling variety, which he sold at $50 a ton to the Petaluma Cannery. This variety is a fine favored peach and makes a good peach to can. A good number of these peaches were picked and found to actually measure eleven inches. Mr. Remmel's plum trees cannot be beat. The Yellow Egg and French Petite plums are beauties. The trees are just clustered with them and it seems that every limb is vying with each other to see which can bear the most. He has 100 trees of the Yellow Egg plums which he sold to the Petaluma Canning for $20 a ton. He has ten tons of the French Petite prunes which he intends to dry. For this purpose he constructed a drier which is a model of perfection.

Parental Government.

In all well regulated households, the father of the family is supposed to wield a wonderful sway over his children. He notes their various phases of temperament and disposition; their hopes and fears; their natural tastes or disappointments; their physical developments and moral progress, and he becomes in a measure answerable to society for their good conduct. "With the help of the mother, most youthful minds may be moulded into gentlemen and gentlewomen. Filial duty then becomes a pleasurable habit that is learned during life.

A disobedient son or daughter always creates unhappiness and ultimately brings dishonor to the parent's name. A father is without power to govern his family if the mother thoughtlessly opposes him. It is utterly impossible to prevent evil results flowing from a conflict of authority on the part of the parents. The children are insensibly imbued with spirit of disobedience, and are quick to manifest it on the least appeals of parental authority.

A good mother can exercise no holier calling, than to guide the footsteps of her children in the path of duty and virtue.

Cheap Harvesting.

The Delta, Tulare county, gives a description of a lately invented harvesting machine: Cox team is employed to haul water for use in the boiler, and ten to follow the harvester to pick up the sacks of wheat. These are the only horses employed. The men engaged are the engineer, fireman, steersman, header-tender, sack-sewer, sack-hauler and sack-header. With these seven men fifty acres can be headed and threshed in a day, and the grain piled in stacks as fast as it comes from the harvester. Then the wheat standing in a field of fifty acres in the morning could be left piled in sacks in the evening.

Mr. Berry's actual cash outlay for running the harvester, in his own field, not taking into account allowance for wear of machinery and interest on value of same, amounts to about forty cents per acre. And he can make a profit on harvesting for others at $1 per acre, whereas the lowest rate charged by other harvesters is $2.

Simple Remedy for Chronic Diarrhœa.

Dr. T. C. Smith, writing in the Med and Surg. Reporter June 12, 1886, mentions the fact of his having cured a case of chronic diarrhœa, which had lasted for nearly forty years, by the administration of a mixture of solution of salt and cider vinegar, a drachm being taken three or four times a day. He also states that since the first instance where he recommended this homely remedy, without supposing that it would actually do any good, he has employed it several times in more or less severe cases of chronic diarrhœa, in which it produced great improvement, and, in some cases, cure. Where relapses followed the suspension of the remedy, its renewed administration was again followed by improvement.

The Size of a Spider's Thread.

I have often compared the size of the thread spun by full grown spiders with the hair of my beard. For this purpose I placed the thickest part of the hair before the microscope, and from the most accurate judgment I could form, more than hundred of such threads placed side by side could not equal the diameter of one such hair. If, then, we suppose such a hair to be of a round form, it follows that ten thousand of the threads spun by the full grown spider, when taken together, will not be equal in substance to the size of a single hair.

To this it was said that four hundred young spiders, at the time when they begin to spin their webs, are not larger than a full grown one, and that such of these minute spiders possesses the same organs as the larger ones, it follows that the exceedingly small thread spun by these little creatures must be still four hundred times slenderer; and consequently that four millions of these minute spiders' threads cannot equal in substance the size of a single hair. And if we further consider of how many filaments or parts each of these threads consists, to compose the size we have been computing, we are compelled to cry out, O, what incredible minuteness is here, and how little do we know of the works of Nature!

The World's Grain Crop.

The Cincinnati Price Current says: "The wheat production countries of the world, exclusive of the United States and Canada, promise an aggregate of fully 1,500,000,000 bushels this season, or 35,000,000 bushels below an annual average production for each countries, and 100,000,000 bushels short of last year's crop. In the United States and Canada the production will be about 78,000,000 bushels greater than last year, or say, 10,000,000 bushels short of what may be accepted as an average, so that the year's wheat crop of the world as now indicated, will fall 50,000,000 bushels short of an average production and approximately 30,000,000 bushels below last year. If these estimates be justified by actual results, and it be considered that the United States has an available surplus of previous growth amounting to 30,000,000 bushels, with practically normal stocks abroad and elsewhere, it appears that there cannot be likely to arise any special stringency in the needs of the wheat-importing countries during the year, and that the surroundings justify an expectation of materially better average prices than have been realized in what the past year. During the past year the United States exported 50,000,000 bushels of wheat, flour included. With a crop of fully 450,000,000 bushels this season, and an available surplus of previous growth of 30,000,000 bushels in case of needed reserves, the available supply is approximately 480,000,000 bushels, from which can be spared for export 120,000,000 to 125,000,000 bushels quite comfortably—say 25,000,000 to 35,000,000 bushels more than the disposal of the past year."

—Give money, but do not lend any; to give makes persons only ungrateful, while to lend makes them enemies.

Family Fun.

The Cause of Education.

One morning this week the son of a prominent Estelline man arrived at school about a half hour late.

"How here," said the teacher, with considerable emphasis, "you're tardy just 30 minutes. Have you an excuse?"

"Why, you, sir, you sir—you know fellers was having a little base run down at the track, and I went down and—"

"Here to a horse race, here you! Come here, sir!" and he grasped the boy by the ear.

"W-w-w-y, I-I-thought you wouldn't care," blubbered the youngster, "if I only stayed just a few minutes."

"Thought I wouldn't care—well, I'll show you. Why did'nt you come up and let me know about the race and I would have dismissed school so we all could have seen it! I'll teach you to remember sometimes when there is a chance for the scholars to improve their minds!" and he reached for a two foot rule.

A Coming Tragedy.

Brown—What's the matter with you and Robinson, Dumby? I hear that he has threatened to pull your ears the first chance he gets.

Dumby (jumping up and down)—He will, will he? Pull my ears! Well, you an bet your sweet life he'll have his hands full.

En Rapport.

"Do you realize, sir," said the longhaired passenger, "that there is One who sees and hears all we do, who can solve our inmost thoughts, and before whom we are as crushed and broiled worms?"

"Give us your hand, stranger," replied the other. "I knew just how you feel, I am married myself."

An Appropriate Design.

Tombstone Dealer (to widow)—Would you like the name of your husband's death explained on the stone, madam?

Widow—Well, sir—perhaps it might be appropriate to engrave a couple of crossbones on it, if you will.

Not the Bustle He Meant.

"There has been an awful bustle here this afternoon," said Spicer to Mrs. S., who had just returned to the hotel after an afternoon ride.

"I know it," remarked the lady vicariously, "it made me feel like a camel and I have sent it back to the clumsy woman who made it. Now, what are you grinning at, Sally?"

But Spicer bustled out of the room without vouchsafing an explanation.

Oleomargarine Bill.

"Say, Miles, when air yer going ter name yer new boy?" a negro upon meeting an acquaintance, asked.

"Does named him."

"Dat so?"

"Yes, sah."

"Hoes yer gin him or big name."

"I did. I named him arter er big congressman.

"What does yer call him?

"Oleomargarine Bill."

"Dat's right. Name him arter da statesmen so de folks kaint say dat he's er sheep. Dat gosterman what yer named him arter hold de whole congress fur a long time as 'cause now he air smart man."

Matchmaking.

"What a bad complexion Miss Sloper has."

"Well, she ought to have. She's all the time doctoring it. Actually she puts sulphur on her face!"

"Sulphur! What's sulphur good for!"

"Matches."

A Hint no Big as a Barn Door.

Editor—Mrs Devereaux is quite musical.

Host—Yes, very much so.

Visitor—Does she sing in English!

Host—She does, and I'm sorry she does not sing in Kalamazoo, or some other faraway place.

It Tickled His Palate.

A bar tender in the back room of a country store, in mixing a drink for a customer, accidentally poured in about two tablespoonfuls of turpentine.

He discovered the mistake, but saying nothing about it, he filled the glass with whisky. The man drank the mixture, smacked his lips and walked away. Pretty soon he returned and said:

"Bill, have'n I allus been er good customer arr yours!"

"Yaas."

"Always dun the best I could for yer, Bill?"

"Yes'ee, Andy; what's the matter with you?"

"Well, it's jis this. Why haven't you been givin me this good licker all the time? Been er drinkin' here ever sence you started, and jes' now is the first time you've ever give yer best licker. Hand me out another drink like the one you give me jis' now an' I'll git it agaiun.

Where They Came From.

The minister's wife sat on the front porch mending the children's clothes, one of the unsocial group. A neighbor passing that way stopped to for a friendly chat. A large work-basket half full of buttons sat on the floor of the porch. After various remarks of a gossipy nature the visitor said:

"You seem to be well supplied with buttons, Mrs. Goodman."

"Yes, very well, indeed."

"My grandma if there ain't two of the same buttons that my husband had on his last winter suit! I'd know 'em anywhere."

"Indeed!" said the minister's wife calmly. "I'm surprised to hear it, as all of these buttons were found in the contribution box. I thought I might as well put them to some use, so I—what, must you go! Well, be sure and call again soon."

She Knew Him.

"And you say you would die for me, Ray!"

"Die for you! Yes, a thousand deaths."

"You are a noble man, Ray."

"Why, darling, you know my fate."

"Well dearest, I do not wish you to die for me, but I will tell you what you can do for me to show your affection."

"What is it, my darling! Shall I pluck the stars from the cerulean dome! Shall I say to the sun, be bar! cease to fire, for my love is cold! Shall I tell you bright and inconsistent moon that a glinting the hill tops with her light that she may not shine on thy face too roughly—ha!"

"No, Ray, no," she smiling said, I do not wish you to attempt such impossibilities. All I ask of you is this—

"Yes, my darling."

"All I ask of you is this—don't call again."

—Life's real heroes and heroines are those who bear their cross burdens bravely, and give a helping hand to those around them.

Catour's "Too Late."

In connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the death of Count Cavour "who made Italy," as the Italianissimi express it, we find in a German Catholic paper an account of a conversation between Cavour and a Jesuit which is well worth recording. It appears that in 1860 Father Protesi, who had unjustly ...en kept in close confinement forty days, called on the Count to thank him for having had him set free. The following sentiments were then exchanged between them:

Cavour. I find that the Jesuits are excellent politicians, and should much like to take some lessons of them.

Protesi. We should be glad give you excellency instructions in our politics, if you will come for a month to one of our houses, and join in St. Ignatius's spiritual exercises.

Cavour. What do these exercises consist in!

Protesi. They have but two words for their foundation, viz., the quod possint de illo Gaugel. What will it profit you, Sig. Cavour, to have made Italy if you lose your soul!

Cavour (knitting his brow.) It is too late.

"Exactly a year after this," says the journal from which we extract this account, "Cavour died, and was called to appear before his Eternal Judge." The same contemporary of core remarks that it is in evidence that when Cavour had large amounts of money offered to Cardinal Antonelli to help him in making Rome the capital of Italy, the Cardinal merely replied in the words of Peter to Simon, "Pecunia tua tecum sit in perditionem.—Thy money perish with thee.

A Liniment for Earache.

According to the Canada Medical Record, Dean recommends a liniment composed of camphorated chloral 2) parts, pura glycerine 16) parts, and oil of sweet almonds 10 parts. This is to be well mixed, and preserved in a hermetically closed bottle. A pledget of very soft cotton is to be soaked in the liniment, and then introduced as far as possible into the affected ear, two applications being made daily. Frictions may also be made each day with this preparation behind the ear. It is claimed that the pain is almost immediately relieved, and even in many cases the inflammation is subdued

Cholera is Quick, Perry Davis' Pain Killer is Quicker. 46 Years experience PROVES that Perry Davis' Pain Killer is the cure for Cholera. Ought'nt you to get a bottle quickly so if you need it quickly no time will be lost? For Cholera Morbus Diarrhœa, Summer Complaint, Dysentery there is no remedy equal to P.D.P.K. Your druggist sells it. PERRY DAVIS & SON, Prop's, PROVIDENCE, R.I.

MISSING FRIENDS.

Watched the Address of Isaac Lynch, or Owen Lynch, who left Ballinasloe, County Galway, Ireland, for Australia, 40 years ago. Address, Address, 1Ivan Lynch, care of Mr. J. Fagan, Weekly News Office, Albany, Oswego County, New York. Address, Address, 1Ivan Lynch, Fort Jervis, N.Y. 1886

JOHN GUERIN, DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF Wood and Coal, 412 O'FARRELL ST., Bet. Taylor and Jones ..... San Francisco.

Wood and Coal delivered Free of Charge to all parts of the City. Orders left at the Office, or addressed to the City Office, will receive Wood or Coal. Full weight and clean coal guaranteed.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE, —Importers and Dealers in— BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS. Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc. —MANUFACTURERS OF— Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags. 512 to 516 Sacramento and 419 Commercial Sts., S. F.

RAZORS! FOR $1,000 WILL NAME A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE OF 3 times in its use as good as any razor and strop of 3 times in its use as good as any razor and strop.

My own make guaranteed $2 50
My Grand Prizes warranted not to rust 2 00
Best English Razors 1 50
Good English Razors 1 00
Best Razor Strop 1 50
Sent C. O. D. on my nail.

M. PRICE, 415 Kearny Street. Grinding and Repairing.

GORSI, HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger. PLAIN IN PAINTS, GOLD, GLASS, VARNISHING, Graining, Marbling, Paper Hanging, etc. Shop, 1009 Dupont, near Washington. Residence, Washington Ter., San Francisco, Cal. Orders promptly attended to. Graining and marbling, filling on a lower standard. American, French and English paper hangings.

WARD & CO.'S Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE. 608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F. Telephone No. 787.

LWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS SUITES in Body, Parlor, Bedroom, Dining-room, Bar-room, Church, Gardening, Camping, and Hunting Complete for private families and stockers. Also, good stock of Parlor and Bedroom Suites to exchange for furniture. Bedsteads setting rooms for sale at 608 Clay street.

HOOPER'S SOUTH END Grain Warehouse, First-Class Fire-Proof Brick-Building. CAPACITY 16,000 TONS. TOWNSEND ST., Between First and Second, San Francisco. GEORGE H. LEMMAN, Prop. Cards taken from the dock and from the cars of the C. P. R. R. and S. P. R. R. Charge Storage at current rates. Advances and Insurance effected at lowest rates. Telephone No. 927.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING. EPPS'S COCOA BREAKFAST. "By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to withstand every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack whomever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame." Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in half-pound tins by grocers, labelled thus: JAMES EPPS & Co. Homœopathic Chemists London, England.

Cholera is Quick, PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER is Quicker. 46 Years experience PROVES that PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER is the cure for Cholera. Ought'nt you to get a bottle quickly so if you need it quickly no time will be lost? For Cholera Morbus Diarrhœa, Summer Complaint, Dysentery there is no remedy equal to P.D.P.K. Your druggist sells it. PERRY DAVIS & SON, Prop's, PROVIDENCE, R.I.

LEBENBAUM BROS. Fine Groceries, 215 SUTTER ST. —AND— Polk Street, Cor. California.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU, 968 and 970 Folsom St., Near Sixth ..... San Francisco. WHOLESALE— LIQUOR DEALER, Established 1876. We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee satisfaction. The following low prices will convince you:

Table Wines	50c, 60c, 75c, and $1.
Angelica Wine	$1, $1.25 and $1.50
Mount Vineyard Jr. Port, Sherry and Sauterne	$1.25
Old Port or Sherry	$1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2
Kentucky Whiskey	$2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4
Bourbon Whiskey	$1.50, $1.75 $2 and $2.50
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc.	$2 per qt. and upwards

Other Wines and Liquors at lowest rates.

NEW MUSIC. J. FISCHER & BRO., New York and A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St. San Francisco. PACIFIC COAST AGENT. Music, in Sets, 50, Alphabetical, for organists and also, in Separate Titles, 50c. Music for Orchestra, Cornet, Violin, Flute, Clarinet, Piano, Organ, Voice, Schools, etc., etc. Price, $1.00. Catalogue, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, work of his mission, which more than life or health the good priests had at heart.

RENDACITY OF METHODIST MISSIONARIES.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

MR. VON FIELSEN CONTINUED

"I have heard that a Scotch soldier, being desirous of leaving the island, only awaited a purchaser for his house and land to supply him with the funds necessary for doing so. I want to this man, come to terms with him, and become purchaser of his place. His was the real owner and soon I was in possession. The Methodists present are soon heard the—to them—unwelcome news, and the principal of them called on me to remonstrate. I were really sorry that I had bought the house in question for the 'Idolatry,' meaning, of course, the Right Rev. Dr. P., I told him that it was quite true, and that I was very happy to be able to do a good turn for an excellent gentleman for whom I had a high esteem. The preacher, on hearing this, became infuriated, and grew so insolent in manner and language that I became angry and told him that I considered it exceedingly impertinent of him to speak to me in such a way, and ended the interview by chewing him the door—telling him while I did so that I was the representative of a free country, and had nothing to consult with Intolerant bigots like himself. On being installed in my new dwelling, the bishop's first proceeding was to erect a small wooden building which would serve as a shop, which he soon stocked with those articles of merchandise which he had brought with him in the ship. There was every variety of dress, many colored shawls, fascinating handkerchiefs, boots and shoes, mirrors, necklaces and bracelets, and many other articles of the like description. These things were displayed in the most artistic fashion to attract the attention of the native, who here as in more civilized parts of the world had an irresistible weakness for all that concerns the adornment of the person.

"EVEN THE PRESENCE OF THE WICKED MAN who was among them, loved by all, and who, as the Methodists stated, had the ugly appendage of a cloven foot and tail, could not deter them from approaching the house and having a peep at the beautiful things that were displayed in the window. It was dangerous of course, but they braved the danger. They also cast a harried glance at the terrible being within, and were surprised to find that his appearance was by no means diabolical, as they had been led to suppose. On the contrary, he seemed quite harmless-looking—nor withstanding the cloven feet and other appendages. At length one of the girls ventured in, though somewhat fearful of the consequences, but was agreeably surprised to find the proprietor by no means a dreadful being, but just as he appeared, an amiable and gentlemanly barrister indeed. He did not attempt to bite them as they feared he might, but on the contrary was extremely polite and courteous. This customer was soon followed by another; the ice was broken, and in a short time the new shopkeeper had many customers and many friends. But while the shopkeeper displayed his wares and decorated upon their beauty and excellence he found opportunities to and his mission. He declared that he had left home not to make money or to acquire land, or for any other selfish motive, but to instruct them in truths of which they were as ignorant—truths of the highest importance to them, on which their happiness depended. In a word, he explained the doctrine of the Church and pure morality to these simple people, and found they took to his teachings right, and not unwilling to hear him. It was not long before he gathered about him quite a number of neophytes who were desirous to be more fully instructed in the doctrines of the Church of which he was so zealous an apostle. A small church was then opened up under edifice surmounted by the sign of Redemption, wherein the good priests offered the Holy Sacrifice and lectured and preached incessantly. This edifice which here then to the island called away only to return after some months, bringing two other missionaries to aid him in his work. A class had to be formed to the good work he goes on, and now the Catholic population numbered by thousands—there are many priests and several churches, and the Catholic faith is firmly established in the Fiji Islands. The Bishop's ship has disappeared, but the churches established by him and his successors are spread over and frequented by devout worshippers."

SAY SOMETHING ABOUT SINNERS

THE COMETE SAID,

"One striking difference exists between Catholic missionaries and those of the Protestant churches. The former have but one object in view, the conversion of the people amongst whom they come. To their ministrations the native willingly and energy. While the latter are traders, and seem more desirous of making money than of gaining converts. They manage to acquire large landed property, and several of them are amongst the richest of the European settlers. The natives plainly perceive this and the consequence is that they hold the priest in high and honorable esteem, but upon the others as selfish and interested persons, who seek their own interest rather than that of those they profess to evangelize. I am not a Catholic, but I cannot help admiring the spirit of self-sacrifice which animates your missionaries everywhere.

"Even when priests become rich they leave their property to the Church, while the sons and daughters of wealthy Protestant ministers are the only persons who derive any benefit from them.

A CARD OF THANKS.

St. Joseph's Orphan, Pomona, Sept. 8, '86.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Permit me through the columns of the MONITOR—the bold and fearless champion of Catholicity on the Pacific Coast—to express my most sincere and grateful thanks to Miss Margaret Donnelan, of Spanish Ranch, Cleveland, Ohio, who, at the instance of Mrs. P. Finley, one of my most patriotic friends, who since my arrival in Pomona has been untiring in her efforts to further the interests of religion, has, with a Christian generosity which is rare, donated to the Church of Pomona articles to the value of $250. Such a donation coming from a lady of moderate means, and a stranger to the Church, and, as I am probably never to be personally acquainted, as he make one exclaim with feelings of the most profound gratitude: "Thank God! the spirit of Christian charity still lives and its sacred fire burns as brightly as in the days of yore." Would that we had many such ladies in this fair and fruitful State. Then would the cause of Catholicity march triumphantly on, and Satanic hosts and fiendish bigotry and the Pharisaic spirit would cease to be with us. Yours, etc.,

P. J. FINLEY.

The Chinese Times says in relation to France's contest against the establishment of a Papal Nuncio at Paris, "Other interests of religious, but also republican French interference with already affairs beyond personal protection of missionaries who are French citizens."

—G. P. Downey, physician, surgeon and oculist, West End Long Branch, corner of Ocean and Broadway.

THE LIVING ROSARY.

By reason of the horrible revolution of the last century in France, the Confraternity of the Rosary was destroyed there, and remained so, and became weakened. The Dominicans were driven from their monasteries, robbed of their possessions, and the people were thus deprived of the assistance of the apostles of the Rosary. However, the evil not lasted for ever. Pius IX. when he ascended the Papal throne, restored the Dominicans to their convents, and the confraternity became refounded upon the basis of existing institutions, and the people a devotion which had served St. Dominic in his efforts to powerfully to destroying heresies and scandals, and therefore earnestly stimulated all under their care to fly to the shelter of the Rosary through the "queen of all prayers." Mass and Rosary, each conducted in accordance with the desire of having the Rosary so delivered to the world by St. Dominic, recited by their order, also felt that it would not fail to meet to meet the realization of the Rosary, and thus, from them, since they had not lost the spirit of prayer, and had no doubt of the efficacious of spiritual things; but to draw them, as it were, humanity and by slow steps to love for the great Rosary by dividing the pater-noster and them. Hence the Rosary of France introduced among the people what are called Living Rosaries; they were so called because each circle was composed of fifteen persons, each of whom was to recite every day for a month a decade of the Rosary, and meditate on the particular mystery which had been drawn by lot for him and assigned to him by the president of the association. Thus the whole Rosary was recited every day by each circle, and hence the appellation of Living Rosary. It may here state that the pious and zealous ecclesiastics who offered it were moved to introduce the association of the Living Rosary through the medium of a pious lady named Pauline Marie Jaricot, who had strongly established the confraternity of the Propagation of the Faith. This holy lady had had great success in the Rosary, which the Blessed Virgin, which she related to find absolutely almost everybody, and which she desired, of being under the untoward circumstances of the time, to extend to the world. Success determined in 1826 under an inspiration, she formed the plan of the Living Rosary. Her intention, I cannot do it better, I cannot, in fact, and, as, say, "Marbon A. J. Journal entreaties to Dominic." Her plan was to form our tender mother who knows well, because we have experienced by her Divine mercies, and evidenced to our needs for the purpose of a meeting, or with the spirit of religion, to be held at eggs and of those associations. The Supreme Council of Lyons, of which the Pope was the apostolic benediction upon them, in his Brief Rosaries, in Rome, dated the 17th of January, 1832.

THE LIVING ROSARY IN ASIA AND AFRICA

In the Confraternity of the Rosary each mister rosaries formed the whole Rosary once a week, whereas in the Living Rosary association, the fifteen decades are divided out among fifteen persons in such a way that each person recites daily only one decade, and meditates on the mystery assigned to him, and the whole Rosary is recited in a month, when the mystery is chanted in the Rosary. The Living Rosary is a pious association, and the pious were thus deprived of the assistance of the apostles of the Rosary. However, the evil not lasted for ever. Pius IX. when he ascended the Papal throne, restored the Dominicans to their convents, and the confraternity became refounded upon the basis of existing institutions, and the people a devotion which had served St. Dominic in his efforts to powerfully to destroying heresies and scandals, and therefore earnestly stimulated all under their care to fly to the shelter of the Rosary through the "queen of all prayers." Mass and Rosary, each conducted in accordance with the desire of having the Rosary so delivered to the world by St. Dominic, recited by their order also felt that it would not fail to meet to meet the realization of the Rosary, and thus, from them, since they had not lost the spirit of prayer, and had no doubt of the efficacious of spiritual things; but to draw them, as it were, humanity and by slow steps to love for the great Rosary by dividing the pater-noster them. Hence the Rosary of France introduced among the people what are called Living Rosaries; they were so called because each circle was composed of fifteen persons, each of whom was to recite every day for a month a decade of the Rosary, and meditate on the particular mystery which had been drawn by lot for him and assigned to him by the president of the association. Thus the whole Rosary was recited every day by each circle, and hence the appellation of Living Rosary. It may here state that the pious and zealous ecclesiastics who offered it were moved to introduce the association of the Living Rosary through the medium of a pious lady named Pauline Marie Jaricot, who had strongly established the confraternity of the Propagation of the Faith. This holy lady had had great success in the Rosary, which the Blessed Virgin, which she related to find absolutely almost everybody, and which she desired, of being under the untoward circumstances of the time, to extend to the world. Success determined in 1826 under an inspiration, she formed the plan of the Living Rosary. Her intention, I cannot do it better, I cannot, in fact, and, as, say, "Marbon A. J. Journal entreaties to Dominic." Her plan was to form our tender mother who knows well, because we have experienced by her Divine mercies, and evidenced to our needs to be

Poetry.

A REVERIE.

Those hearts of ours—how strange! how strange!
How they yearn to ramble and love to range
Even through the value of the years to come,
Up through the future that fast rolls on.

Todays are dull—so they send their rays
Back to their best but pleasantest days;
The present is bleak—so they wing their flight
To future to-morrows where all seems bright.

Build them a bright and beautiful home,
They'll soon grow weary and want to roam
Find them a nest without care or pain,
They may stay a day, but they will not stay.

Those hearts of ours—how wild! how wild!
They're as hard to tame as the roaring main;
They're as restless as waves on the ocean sea,
Like the bees and the bird are the fickle and free.

Those hearts of ours—how loon! how loon!
Ever, forever, they seem to be soon;
Let them revel in joy, let them riot in cheer;
The revelry ceased, they're all ready to leave.

Those hearts of ours—how warm! how warm!
Like the sun's bright rays, like the Summer's storm!
How they loom and burn! how they gleam and glow!
Their flash and flame bids but death to know.

Those hearts of ours—how cold! how cold!
Like December's snow on the waste or wold;
And though we are December and soon take hid,
Hearts know December but pass not away.

Those hearts of ours—how deep! how deep!
Yet may sound the sea where the pearls sleep;
When never a billow hath rumbled or roiled,
Unless wild the storm that makes beasts hide and boil.

When the wild storm's trump hath ceased to blow
The wrecks of the sea the low and lone;
The wrecks of the surface may sparkle and glow,
There are wrecks far down—there are graves below.

Those hearts of ours—but, after all,
How shallow and narrow, how tiny and small;
Like constant streamlet or Summer's heat rill,
They're as easy to empty as they are to fill.

One hour of storm and how the streams pour!
One hour of sun and the streams are no more;
Or little gold—how the seeds and gold glide
One mite—five days ere no fast, they are dried.

Those hearts of ours—but what! how what!
They can lift their thoughts till they touch the skies!
They can stalk their shafts, like a miner bold,
Where whole nations raise hide their pearls and gold.

Aloft they soar with unfanled pen,
Where the halls of the Day-King burn and blaze;
Or they go with a wing that will never fail,
Or the sky's dark sea where the starships sail.

Those hearts of ours—what fools! what fools!
How they laugh at wisdom, for cant and rules;
How they waste their powers, and, when wasted,
grieve
For all they have squandered but cannot relieve.

Those hearts of ours—how strong! how strong!
Let a thousand serve—one shall not long;
They can bear them all, and a thousand more,
And they're stronger than ever when they have bore.

Those hearts of ours—how hard! how hard!
Just a single word of unkindness and ward;
Like a poisoned shaft, like a viper's fang,
Two sins slight word leave a life long pang.

Those hearts of ours—but I've said enough,
As I find that my rhyme grows rude and rough;
Ere I end let me say, that I'll none stop to
Some other day, to resume my strain.

EZRAS RYAN.

Literary Miscellany.

The Poetry did It.

AN EVENT IN THE LIFE OF MAJOR EVERGREEN RELATED BY WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER I.

An employment which he enjoyed represented Major Evergreen's life. He had plenty of money, excellent health, and a hard-headed little wife to whom he might have caused some anxiety to other men in his position. The major's constitutional tranquillity accepted responsibilities of all sorts with a good-humored indifference which set them at defiance. If Miss Mabel had eloped with the footman, he would have said: "Well, I hope they may be happy!" If she had come down one morning to breakfast, and had announced she was going to be a vivandiere to a man, he would have approved: "You know best, my dear; I only beg you won't trouble me to find the canteen."

Persons who wished to see Major Evergreen in earnest—and there were certainly only to look at him when he had pen, ink, and paper before him, and was writing poetry.

This was the employment that he enjoyed; this was the conception of every joy in his life. He must have written hundreds of thousands of lines, without a single thought in them which was not unconsciously borrowed from somebody else. Every form that poetry can take was equally easy and delightful to him. Blank verse and rhyming verse; epic poems and sonnets; tragedies, comedies, epigrams, passionate poetry in the manner of Byron; secretive poetry in the manner of Scott; philosophical poetry in the manner of Wordsworth; poetry of the modern type which gets into the pulpit, and reminds us of our sins and duties—this wonderful man was equal to every imaginable effort in verse; and, more deplorable still, being rich, he published his own works. Two magnificent volumes (first edition), and disappeared as mere paper—and appeared again (second edition), and disappeared as before. The printing was perfection; the paper was expressly manufactured to make it worthy of printing; and the happy major, closing his eyes on facts, could believe in his own popularity.

One day, towards the end of summer, the post had laid down his pen, and was considering whether he should write a few hundred lines more, when his niece looked over his shoulder, and asked if she might speak to him.

Miss Mabel was little and dark, and slim and active; her brightly restless eyes were never in repose, except when she was asleep; her voice was cheerful, her humor was brisk, and her figure was plump. She was further entitled to claim general admiration by a system of dress which was the perfection of elegance, and by possessing a fortune of eighty thousand pounds. And last, not least on the list of her virtues, she had Major Evergreen's poetry.

"Well, Mabel, what is it?"

"It's about my marriage, uncle."

"Marry anybody you like, my dear."

"Even poor ugly old publisher?"

"Yes, if you prefer him."

"Or anybody else?"

"Certainly, if you like him better."

"The fact is, uncle, you don't know what becomes of me."

"I am of your way of thinking, my dear."

"What do you mean?"

"Do you know what becomes of you?"

"Of course I do."

"Then I sure too."

There was an interval of silence. Mabel was considering what she should say next. She decided on speaking plainly, some when might of it.

"This is serious," she resumed.

The major was glad to hear it.

"I'm only afraid of one thing—I'm afraid I shall offend you."

The major fortified that it was impossible to offend him.

"Remember what you have said, uncle! I have just had an offer of marriage."

"From my ugly publisher?"

"No; from Sir John Haworth."

Major Evergreen—usually the laziest of men—jumped out of his chair, and walked up and down the room, transfigured from a pleasant uncle who wrote poetry to a disagreeable old bachelor who was angry with his niece.

And for what reason? For this excellent reason: she had mentioned the name of the enemy whom he abhorred.

Sir John Haworth was a gentleman who indulged in the hazardous speculations of modern life. He owned race horses, and he built threatres; he was also proprietor of a weekly journal. In that newspaper had appeared the only review of Major Evergreen's poems which had even noticed them to any length. Of the tone adopted by the critic, it is merely necessary to say that it merited away the easy-tempered major to his lawyer's office, to bring an action of libel against Sir John Haworth. The case lawyer pronounced the article to be simply malicious, but not libellous. Sir John (already under the influence of Mabel) expressed his regret in the handsomest manner; and declared that the article had been published by his editor without his knowledge. Major Evergreen submitted to circumstances—received his customary good spirits—and went on writing poetry more industriously than ever. But what author has succeeded in inventing an inhuman review? To mention the name of the projector of the paper was to astonish the poet in his innermost plume. When Sir John Haworth paid visits to the charming niece, the unforgiving uncle was never in his way. Major Evergreen was "engaged in his study."

"I couldn't help mentioning the name, uncle," Mabel pleaded. "I was obliged to tell you who it was that had asked me to marry him."

The major received this apology with a cold and serious advice. "You might have spared me this, my dear—you might here said, That Men. I should have known by now."

Mabel accepted the suggestion. "I wished to tell you that I didn't engage to marry That Man," she proceeded; "I only said I would think of it." Major Evergreen: "I don't like him. I rather believe I want to get away from him, before he calls again."

The major returned quietly to his chair. "Very right indeed," he said—and looked at his pen and ink. He was longing to get rid of his niece and go back to his poetry.

"This is about the time of the year," Mabel persisted, "when we go to the country."

The major was quite willing. "Just as you please; they're ready for me at Still Brook."

Stillbrook won't do, uncle. If we go to your country house That Man will follow us. Suppose we take refuge at Oakapple Hall?"

"With all my heart."

"Then I may write to Mrs. Corydon?"

"Certainly."

Mabel went away to write a letter; and Mabel's uncle remained, to write poetry.

CHAPTER II.

A widow of mild and retiring character, married late in life; and possessed of an son who exactly resembled her disposition; there is the briefly sufficient description of Mrs. Corydon.

Arriving at Oakapple Hall, Major Evergreen and his niece encountered a surprise held in reserve for them by their amiable hostess. They were received at the house door by Mrs. Corydon's son. On the last occasion when they had enjoyed the widow's hospitality, Mr. Cyril Corydon had been abroad, pursuing his studies at Oxford. He had not seen his mother since he had left school.

Cyril had greatly improved in the interval. Still modest and a little reserved, he was no longer awkward; he kept his hands out of his pockets, and his nails exhibited black rims; his fair moustache was not in ugly pimples; his vacant smile of former days had a meaning in it now; and so complete the transformation, Mabel, at her mother's, a pig approaches a trough. She also had her suspicions of the cause—and a sly tenderness in the expression of her eyes spoke of the cause, when she reminded her of a description of a Troubadour in one of her uncle's poems.

Oakapple Hall, in one respect, resembled the famous abbey described by Sir Walter—its inhabitants did as they pleased. Mabel boldness was over Major Evergreen retired to his room and left her and Mrs. Corydon resumed work on an immense antimacassar, which had already occupied her patient fingers for the greater part of her life. The two young people took a walk in the park; Cyril offered his arm, and Mabel started the conversation.

"Have you really left Oxford for good?" she began.

"Yes—and do you sorry for it?"

"I was sorry for it, until to-day."

Cyril laid a strong emphasis on the last three words, and fastened on a look which sent his artful compliment straight to its mark. Mabel acknowledged the look by an innocent little question: "Do you think I am improved, since you saw me last?"

Cyril burst into an exclamation. Expressed in letters, it was only "Oh!" Expressed in tones, the sounds were eloquent, and ought to be described. His description requires opprobrious words. Where, in this case, are the words? Mabel's innocence, requiring no description, pursued its actions and said: "Mr. Corydon, you remind me of my Corydon immediately presented herself to her.

"Dear, dear me!" You used to call me 'Cyril,' in the days when I was insufferable to that brat and happiness. My conceit ambition it to hear you call me 'Cyril' now."

"You were a boy then, Mr. Corydon; you are a young man now. I am afraid it wouldn't be quite right."

Cyril hit on a poetical illusion which might have fallen from the lips of the major himself. "Juliet didn't hesitate," he remarked, "to call Romeo by his Christian name."

"Yes—for a shy man—was, as Mabel thought, getting on at rather too rapid a rate. She turned the talk back into the prosaic channels of modern life. "If the right year mother and you were anxious people, she said. "Have you really been to the play?"

"Only to Shakespeare," Cyril reminded her. "I was taken to the theatre, in the last vacation, by a man of high position and large experience, whom I am proud to call my friend. His younger brother read with me under the same tutor—and I first came to know him in that way."

"Who is this remarkable gentleman?"

"Sir John Haworth."

Mabel stood stock-still, and looked at the astonishing hair of Oakapple Hall. That good fellow was honestly pleased. "Sir John's fame has reached you," he said, "and perhaps you may have read my humble society?"

Mabel acknowledged that she had read him, and said no more. Cyril sang his praises.

"What a man! He builds places of public amusement, he wins money on racecourses, he sits on the throne of the law and dictates the policy of Europe—and, only think, he is My Friend."

But Mabel's thoughts were otherwise employed.

A young person, hitherto free from any weak musings towards superstition, she now dimly perceived the hand of Fate, myself, ously pointing to Sir John, at the very time when she had determined to dissuade him from her mind and from her list of visitors. What would be the next event? Would he discover Oakapple Hall? Preceded by his card, would he obtain an introduction to Mrs. Corydon, and renew his offer of marriage? With the very inconsistency of her sex and age, Mabel began to feel a certain reluctant interest in Sir John. He appeared in romantic proportions in her fancy. She had left him a shadowy figure disappearing, as it were, in the background. And here he was in the front of the picture again; presenting himself through the innocent medium of this new lady to her notice of him, so grateful to her. Her curiosity was satisfied by the very man whom she had despised not three days since. She encouraged young Cyril to talk of Sir John. One of Eva's daughters—there is nothing else to be said of her; one of Eva's daughters.

The course of Mabel's walk had brought them back, by this time, to the house. Cyril suddenly made an apology.

"Eleanor, as for a moment; I have something to say to you. He ran into the house and ran out again with the local newspaper in his hand.

"Nothing that I can say of our gifted friend can be so interesting to you as this," he announced, and pointed to the column of the newspaper filled by the London correspondent with news from the fashionable world. There was Sir John again: "A brilliant circle had assembled" at the country seat of a great nobleman, situated within an hour's drive of Oakapple Hall—and in two days more Sir John Haworth was expected as a welcome addition to the number of his lordship's guests."

Mabel made the discovery that occurred to her, and escaped from Cyril to the solitude of her own room. It was high time to consider when she had better do next.

CHAPTER III.

Decision of character is generally speaking, a plant of slow growth in the human constitution. When the age is seventeen, the sixth sense of female nature, "What am I to do next?"—perplexing circumstances, in the case of young men, and seldom get it. Mabel could not venture to consult her uncle—and if Mrs. Corydon had an sensible opinion, she was not in the habit of publication on other people's advice.

Mabel's mind was in a state of complete control; and Cyril's position in the estimation of her sex, consequently, had receded, without any reason for that deplorable event which it could possibly be discovered. Some of the ways of women—in love, with the ready infinitesimality of a young man who has had no connection with the opposite sex—Mabel knew, and felt that she was perfectly sufficient to ask if he had offended Mabel. He made his mistake with the utmost humility of manner and language—and was received with a look of his head, and a reply which expressed surprise that a member of an English University should prove to be so ill-bred man.

Three days passed. Sir John Haworth (of the newspaper could be trusted) was already established as a guest at the country seat of his noble friend. In other days of recovering the ground that he had lost by any effort of his own, Cyril decided on asking the advice of the one competent and trustworthy person within his reach.

Sir John was in the house; Sir John hurried into the room in which Cyril was waiting for him, and shook hands with a cordial squeeze. This inestimable friend of Cyril's was a tall Man; pale man, rather dark than light in complexion, and a little bald; altogether remarkable for lonely eyebrows, a strong Roman nose, and magnificent white teeth; eyes bright and striking in themselves, but a little shifty in expression at times. In one word, a most agreeable person—with a little mystery in his manner, which accompanied under a surface of easy humor and hearty good spirits.

"My dear boy, how glad I am to see you! You are one of us, of course; and you have come to luncheon! No! You are not invited by my lord! Come along and see my friends! Come along and see them. Between ourselves, he's a lot of noodles. Come along and see them. You will be a perfect godsend to the rest of us. You won't! Now I look at you again, I am afraid you have something on your mind. Come, come friend! Out with it—I'm a sympathetic listener! At your age there is only one scrape to be afraid of.

"The loveliest girl in the world, Sir John! I am in a state of your advice. Can we talk here without interruption?

"Of course we can.

Hearing the bell as he replied, and gave his orders to the servant as coolly as if he had been in his own town house. He was conspicuously obeyed. The servant knew him as the proprietor of a newspaper; and, like his betters (including some of the highest personages in the land) the footmen was afraid of Sir John.

Sir John admonished his first dose of advice. "Sit down, my good fellow—take eager—and out with it!"

Cyril took the opportunity.

He gave a clear and intelligibly story. "Have you seen my cousin?" he said, by way of conclusion. "And I assure you, on my word of honor, I haven't deserved it."

Sir John admonished the second dose. "Exactly my case, he remarked coolly. "I am devoted to the loveliest girl in the world, and she treats me cruelly. Would you believe it?—she has left London to avoid me, and I don't know where to find her. Do as I do—take it easy.

"I'm too fond of her, Sir John, to take it easy.

"Yes, if you come to that, I'm broken-hearted. Suit at the moment, I feel, is a disease from myself that we are both young men of the world. You like the favorite place, thing of our opposite; and I'm the favorite thing of another. That is a bad kind of shoft."

The off-hand way of speaking of the loved object shocked Cyril. "You may be right in what you say," he answered. "Excuse me for saying that you are strong about mine."

Sir John laughed. "I was as innocent once as you are," he said. "Let's get at the facts first. Miss is quite a young one. Is yours quite a young one too?

"In the first lovely bloom of youth."

"You serious boy! Your imagination is a matter of fact. Is she rich?

All girls are alike."

Cyril indignantly struck his fist on the table. "Then you don't know what the world like my Mabel!"

Sir John suddenly became serious.

"Mabel! he repeated. "That's something in that name which sounds familiar to me. Not the niece of Major Evergreen, surely?"

"Yes!" cried simple Cyril, "the same. How stupid of me not to have thought of it before! Sir, she has told you in society; and she is naturally interested in a celebrated man like yourself. You would have some influence over her. (Oh, Sir John, if you would only see Mabel, and say a word to her in my interests, how truly obliged to you I should be!"

The impenetrable face of the man of the world expressed nothing but perfect readiness to make himself useful. For more experienced eyes than Cyril's would have discovered nothing in for John Haworth's manner even remotely suggesting that the proposal was not heard, all this time, talking of the same lady.

"What place is your place?" asked Sir John. "That where shall we find her?

Cyril stated his hand. "You good friend!" he exclaimed, with tears in his eyes. "She is staying with my mother at our house—only a short ride from this place. When will you let me introduce you to my mother?

"Whenever you like."

"At once!"

And that excellent man smiled, and cheerfully echoed the words: "At once!"

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

Everything may be mimicked by hypocrisy, but humility and love are scarcely ever counterfeited. Humility is the cement of all virtues.

VALUE OF VENTRILOQUISM

A Novel Defence Against Road Agents.

It was on a cold winter evening that a traveller on horseback rode up to a wayside inn, and throwing the reins to the ostler dismounted stiffly and wearily. The red light of wood fire streamed out with it on the old-fashioned hearth of the inn parlor, glanced on the stranger as he stepped and spread his hands to catch the warmth. It shone on a kind, good-tempered face, a pair of twinkling eyes, and a long and bushy beard. The innkeeper hustled in, and made a remark about the unusual cold the storm which seemed likely to come upon them before daybreak.

"And what may I get the gentleman for his supper?" he added, gesticulating to the waiter for an answer, his eyes caught sight of the stranger's gold chain and the bunch of seals that glittered in the firelight.

"Let me have some cold meat and a mouthful of bread and cheese, and drink me a tankard of beer, my friend. I must be on my way in a few minutes, for I have a long ride before me yet I can hope to turn in for a night's rest."

Then the traveller went back to the fire again and rubbed his cold hands, evidently wishing to make the most of the short spell of warmth that he could allow himself. Master Tinman, the innkeeper, gave a shuckle as he left the room to see after those orders he knew the hospitality he made something out of this stranger ere he left the roof again; and as he had ordered just the plainest food; yet he was curious to know who this stranger could be was, and had he had a licensed ring on his finger! Mr. Thornley, the traveller, sat in his supper in silence, and he nibbled with his heat and holding him a fair food and drink, and yet he felt ill-at-ease all the time. As soon as he had started Master Tinman pulled on a heavy coat and took down a heavy cleek from a peg behind the door. With one clove to a hatchet he left the room to see after the horse he was keen. He hoped to have

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR—IN PROGRESS

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1886.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Christian parents, who set out long year seasons, consult readers of this important truth, that upon them, and individually, most practically depend the solution of the Catholic Education question. Catholic Education accomplish the great work which Protestants and Non-Catholics expect of it at this time. Its importants and so terribly bad this pre-judicial manner, that the prejudices that doesn't spoon by Popes and Prelates and distinguished Catholics, and Catholic Journals, and Catholic Papers, and Catholic Society will co-operate in hot pursuing and in duty to contribute towards supporting the Catholic press, by subscribing for one or more Catholic periodicals, and keeping himself well acquainted with the intelligence and Catholic literature of the day. Catholic parents adhere to the highest development, and to accomplish its desired mission. Are children a journal that is thoroughly Catholic, instructive and edifying not one that could be which Catholic is superior to protestant, and which Catholic parents can safely place in their hands and authorize, or letting and recommend to their Catholic brethren.—PAPIROLI LETTER ON THE TEXAS PERIODICAL CRITICS.

Editorial Notes.

—We ask the prayers of our readers for this speedy recovery of Rt. Rev. Bishop Manogue, of Sacramento, who is quite ill at the residence of Rev. Thomas Dalton, in Grass Valley.

—Very Rev. P. A. Cadden, Vicar General of the Diocese of Albany, New York, has been appointed Bishop of the new See of Syracuse, in that State. This makes two new Sees added to those in the United States within a month.

—A press dispatch from New York, received yesterday, announces that Archbishop Riordan and his brother, Hav. D. J. Riordan, Rector of St. Elizabeth's Church, Chicago, celebrated Mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral in that city on Sunday morning last. They are guests at the Cathedral rectory.

—A cablegram from Rome received last Thursday, brings tidings of the death of Cardinal Carmine Morai Gori, who was born February 15, 1816, and created a Cardinal Deacon November 10th, 1884. From the same source we learn with regret of the serious illness of Cardinal Louis Aurelini, Pontifical Secretary of State.

—It is stated that Mr. Thomas O'Hanlon intends shortly to retire from the representation of East Cavan, in order to preside a seat in the House of Commons for Mr. T. M. Healy, who was ousted from the representation of South Derry at the General Election by Mr. Thomas Lea.

—Mr. D. H. Macfarlane, late M. P. for Argyllshire, who enjoys the honor of having been the first Catholic returned for a Scotch constituency since the Reformation, has been presented with an address in recognition of his services to the Crofter cause in the Highlands.

—The Seventh Italian Catholic Congress will be held at Lucca under the honorary presidency of the Archbishop of that city. The proceedings will continue from five days, to be treated are the Sacerdotal Jubilee of his Holiness, the administrative elections, the land question in Italy, Catholic journalism, elementary education and Christian art.

—At the regular fortnightly meeting of the National League held recently in Dublin, Mr. William O'Brien announced that the League had received from America during the past two weeks £3,000. Mr. Kenny, M. P., followed Mr. O'Brien in a long speech in which he said: "On no condition will we allow our fellow-country-men to be thrown out upon the roadside during the coming winter. We will oppose all attempts to enforce evictions by every lawful means, and if these shall have no avail we will resort to other measures which cannot possibly fail, if Mr. Parnell's Bill is rejected by Parliament.

—The Berlin correspondent of the Daily News writes: "It is the desire with of Prince Bismarck's heart to see Russia engaged in a life and death struggle with any power except Germany, leaving the Fatherland at liberty to settle scores with France. The Chancellor is reported as declaring that a little blood letting by Russia now would be conducive to the general health of Europe beneathal." On the other hand, Baron Rothschild says that he believes Russia is only blustering. "Russia is too poor and Austria too weak to fight," says the Baron; "therefore peace is certain."

Help for Charleston.

—We are glad to see that the candidates on the Republican State ticket have commenced to repudiate Frank Pixley since the Monitor called their attention to the awkward attitude they assumed before the people as they stood upon the Knownothing platform of Immortal Frank. If all the Republican candidates will come out publicly and disclaim any connection with the disreputable demagogue in question, they will arrise an expression of the spirit of American liberty which will commend them to the voters of California.

—Mr. John Bryn Bi-barie, Liberal member for Carnarvonshire, has drafted a Welsh Land Bill, based upon the ideas of Mr. Gladstone's Irish Bill, which gives farmers rights against arbitrary disturbance from landlords, and land compensation for improvements made by them. The farmer are now demanding a reduction in the rents of from 15 to 25 per cent. The struggle against the payment of tithes is spreading throughout Wales. The bailiffs, assisted by a large police force, have had difficulty in many instances to seize stock to pay tithes. At the coming session of Parliament the Welsh members will unite in support of a measure to abolish the tithes and to disestablish the English Church in Wales.

—The heretics who call themselves the "Old Catholics" are having a bad time of it in their old home, Switzerland. Even the Protestant papers are beginning to see into the hollow shams of these petty heretics. Their claim to Catholic Church property is secured by their former friends. A false paper with a long name—the Allgemeine Schweizerzeitung—says "Majorities rule and minorities must look out for themselves. If the old Catholics can prove by a plus fi that they are more numerous than the Papists, then they are entitled to the Church property. If not, let them be silent. To speak of the joint use of a church is bladerdash. A church can no more be cut into pieces than a baby that was brought before King Solomon." Verily, the "Old Catholics" are in a bad way.

—The Ministrie de Roma, a paper which, it is no secret, enjoys the personal confidence of the Holy Father himself, recently published a long article in praise of the Irish people for their bearing in the constitutional struggle, and the closing words which summed up the conclusion to which the writer of this article arrived at were these: That the Irish people were destined to win; and that for their complete and speedy triumph nothing more is wanting now than that they should keep to their present lines, marching to victory under the skilful leadership of those two great men, whose names, though one of them is that of an Englishman, have secured for themselves an undying remembrance in the grateful memory of our grateful people—the great English Minister, William Ewart Gladstone, and the great Irish leader, Charles Stewart Parnell.

—Connecticut, the land of anti-papery Puritans, wooden nutmegs and Blue Laws, is rapidly becoming Christianized. On the 12th inst. Archbishop Corrigan of New York, assisted by three Bishops and seventeen hundred priests, consecrated St. John's Church, at Middletown, the entire debt upon which had previously been paid by the large-hearted and energetic Rector, Rev. H. O'R. Sheridan. What a grand triumph for God's truth! It is only a couple of centuries since laws were passed in Connecticut condemning priests to death if caught within its boundaries, and prohibiting all people from observing the feast of Christmas, making mince pies or playing music! How fitfully are the laws of justice when they undertake to say to Almighty God: "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther." Connecticut has now a Catholic Bishop, 144 Catholic priests, 125 churches, chapels and stations, 13,780 Catholic children in Catholic schools, and 7 Catholic charitable asylums! Why is it that non-Catholics do not recognize the power of God in favor of His Church in such a miraculous manifestation of His power, mercy and love!

An Example of Protestant Morality.

A non-Catholic resident of the southern portion of the State sends us the following clipping from the Pacific—the organ of the Congregationalist ministers—and asks the Monitor what it thinks of "such Christian morality?" Here is the clipping:

"Four women of Lompoc broke into a room the other day where there was a barrel of whisky in charge of a keeper, smashed in the head of the receptacle and spilled the liquor. The amount of the effect on anyone was taken advantage of by the women. Lompoc is one of the strongest temperance towns in the State, and as such plucky women are sound.—Pacific, Sept. 2.

In reply we desire to inform our non-Catholic friend that there is no Christian morality whatever imperilled by the above transaction. If there is any morality whatever attached to the outrage, it is all that proscriptive, persecuting, Pharisaical character which illustrates the dead sea fruit of fanaticism fed by Protestantism. The four women in question were guilty of several transgressions against the law of God by their unseemly and unlawful act, and if such people imagine that they are "making the world better" by such brutalizing examples of robbery and lawlessness—they are very much mistaken. Lompoc people may have peculiar laws prohibiting the sale of liquor upon their colonized lands, but there is a law of God—greater than all earthly enactments which says Thou shalt not steal; Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods.

"Plucky women" the Pacific calls these plunderers of other people's property who deliberately planned the destruction of their neighbor's goods when the officer who was guarding it was at supper. If "pluck" consists in robbing one's neighbor or destroying his property, they were certainly very, very "plucky," but we opine that it is Satan and not St. Peter who instructed that species of "pluck" which seems to tickle the fancy of those who mistake fanatical wrong for moral right.

Help for Charleston.

Rt. Rev. H. P. Northrop, Bishop of Charleston, in his appeal for help thus describes the destruction caused to the Catholic churches, schools and institutions by the recent earthquake: "It is unnecessary to describe the terrors of the earthquake that shook this city, or to detail the ruin that it wrought. There is not a building in the whole city that is not injured—and few that are not seriously damaged. The churches have all been materially injured. The orphan houses and infirmary will need extensive repairs. Some of the school buildings are entirely destroyed, and we have been compelled to dismiss the teachers of the male schools. The residences of the clergy are much injured, and the Episcopal residence irreparably so. The Clergy, the Sisters, the Orphans, like the large majority of the inhabitants of the city, sleep in tents. The Holy Sacrifice is daily offered up in a tent shed on the Cathedral lot, amid the midst of the camp, where the people are gathered together. We are utterly helpless to repair the churches, or the people, whose property has been destroyed, are asking for bread. With the memory of our many previous appeals, and, in the midst of the ruins of this the most terrible of all, we beg you, in the name of our Lord and for charity's sake, to come to our relief."

As there may be many readers of the Monitor who would like to add their mite to the fund collected in the city churches on Sunday last, in aid of the Charleston sufferers, we will gladly receive, credit, and pay over to the treasurer of said fund, any sums sent to us for that purpose.

The Nautical Diary of a Distinguished Methodist Divine.

For several weeks we have missed from the editorial page of the Californian Christian Advocate, the unctuous drippings of that religiously-renowned writer known to the readers of the Monitor as

Brother McCreary
Pilot-owned Tipperary,

and we began to think that life was scarcely worth living if it was to be deprived of his weekly spiritual consolation. Such are religious rays from the bandlight of the great Methodist locomotive! But the mission status of our amiable acquaintance is absent at the elected light of our evangelical friend from the columns of the Christian Advocate, was fortunately restored last Thursday, when we took up the Wesleyan weekly and read thrown the thrilling sciences of Brother McCreary as he related them with all the salient peculiarities of "an old salt," in his nautical gospel to the Wesleyanians.

Our readers are accustomed to read of Catholic and apostolic missionary enterprises both by sea and land, but since the shipwreck of St. Paul on the coast of Malta, we think very much if any man missionary voyage has ever been depicted with such minuteness of detail, such heroism, such adventure, such gospel-flavored facundity—as that demonstrated by the practical hand of the holy patriarch of Protestantism.

Brother McCreary
From owed Tipperary

Our dearly-missed Methodist conference has been making a voyage from San Francisco bay to San Pedro, and the perspicing with which his powerful pen pictures the impressive scene of her departure, his sea days spent on the treacherous waves of the ocean, and the strange experiences of the port which this good man passed in really charming in its innocent simplicity, surprising in its results, and captivating in its Robinson-like tone which are so beautifully blended in the various passages from grave to gay, from holiness to Jingo! Here is the opening gem from the gospel greatness of the gentle herdsman of the Wesleyan goats.

"Engaging passage in the same room with Father Wentz, on Saturday, we started early for the boat, and got there to find the Bishop and the Pilot aboard. Our room turned out to be delightful—port side, large, clean and airy. Our friend, Captain Ingalls, and the excellent steward of the steamer did everything possible to make our voyage delightful. September with a lovely day. The sea was smooth, the sun bright. With only half an appetite for several days before, we went aboard with misgivings as to seasickness, and one fear, at first beach, a raging appetite and not a bit more sickness than a whale.

What delightful evangelical euphony permeates this passage! With what unsophisticated innocence the embarking evangelist describes his early start, his travelling companions, his port side stateroom, the gallant captain, the self-sacrificing steward, the smooth sea and the sun-bright day! How with what pneumonitah gusto does cut compare the "liberal accommodations of his spacious corporosity to a whale! "A raging appetite," and the owner a portly Methodist preacher, must have sent both stewards and waiters to recite that portion of the Protestant Litany wherein the prayer is expressed:

Brother McCreary
Pilot-owned Tipperary

From plague, pestilence and famine,
Good Lord Deliver Us.

And with what spontaneity the hungry Brother congratulates himself upon having had no transgressions against the law of God and a Wesleyan while is not Brother McCreary.—Other Methodist preachers are pitching shrimps, spring and stick-backs and also learn from the clerical-lean imparted to Catholic souls when contemplating the Pilot-inspiring representations of religious subjects.

Her Bravery, of the First Congregational Church, in the city, recently visited Europe, and in giving a description of the paintings which he saw in the Cathedrals of Europe to his congregation on a recent Sunday, he made three allusions, which, for a Protestant preacher—are very remarkable, evincing as they do the thorough emancipation of his mind from the muddled condition of most Protestant propagandists when first they start out in the world to open up the "mission" from off the fair face of the earth.

The speaker held with Hinkin that great relics were not antediluvian, but in their works of art. An impartial study of relics proves the Atlantic world never was so barbarous as to reverently and apparent discredit. A little more than a year ago in Austria does not always exhibit a picture of the Saviour and learn of His sufferings. Not only for this, but teaching much much of art that I be taught much of the Christian faith. In the city of Florence the picture of a Saint placed in a shop window attracted a street crowd, and people. Laborers would leave their work to look at it and be made better by its lesson it taught. The difference between the ancient and the modern painters is very marked. The ancient selected religious works for their subjects and their interpretation of them was holy, noble and true. The modern type of painters have worked more for money, and have painted what they have been pleased to call modern interpretations of their subjects. In art the world are three thinkers as in other things, for to violate or outrage the truth is a mistake. The early paintings served to represent the antiquities of the primitive church. Should the little in but it could be no injury from the work of artists of the cathedrals of the old world.

The foregoing line of argument affirmative of the intrinsic value of pictures as religious teachers, is innumerable allies in the imperial mind and the good taste of Dr. Hartness. But Catholics will outlive them in that the Doctor unconsciously diagnoses the disease of Protestantism by pointing out the Christian lessons which Catholics learn from a source which in art is antique, but which hitherto has been accepted by sectarian as smacking too much of "Popish idolatry."

Dr. Hartness also makes another admission which completely knocks Congregationalism and every other "ism" of Protestant conversation into "a cocked hat." He admits that should the Bible be lost it could be re-written "from the walls and altars of the cathedrals of the old world in such a different way that Rome would Protestantize and Protestant Rome would Romanize." Which is as much as to say that if the Bible was lost it would be re-written by Leo XIII. and John Ireland, with a reception in adequate in many things. Talent, sophistry, and artistic skill are to be lavished, but their adulteration might be local.

There can be no separation. No sane man, no man who reasons, no man who calculates, approves of Scotland withdrawing from the Kingdom. Those who have spent so much of our time and so much of our treasure in building up the Empire to walk away and leave it to the Anglicans. No! Let the Scot appreciate any drifting apart of this kind. Ireland always contributed, Britain, the Scottish kind would then be larger, and there would be less for the Scottish youth to go to London. The proposed explanation of the desires of the Scotch people, needs like no addends to the political demands of Ireland, from Wales. The Scotch and Welsh people have learned a lesson of liberty that would never have been heard of were it not for the echoes and the thrilling of the voice of wrongful and suffering Ireland, echoing through the continents and caught up by patriotic ears such as the coast of Africa, the Mediterranean, the Alps, Italy and Mr. Waddie give emancipation to the sentiment. The progress of humanity in the Old Country is retarded by the great Empires. Ireland, chastised to crucity, impoverished to a skeleton, and exposed under every form of relentless and inhuman English hate, has ever been the torch of liberty illuminating the world. From the lips of Irish lovers, and dead Irish patriots the world has learned battle bravely for freedom, and their burning words in poem and verse have encouraged the down trodden of Europe in their struggle for the supremacy of human right, and every man could carry on his breast the Irish tricolor, and feel the power of his fellow man to act that persisted in cannibalism.

Hence the lesson of liberty which Ireland has taught the world and which has caused many a throne to topple and many a people to be emancipated. In chains herself, she has never been a willing slave and subservient slave. She has held out against unmeasured hands so that the world might see her wrongs, and she has lifted her voice in the wilderness which England created in her fruitful island, and her sighs have been heard and her tears have been shed in a manner that has caused the world to sympathize with the sufferings of Ireland.

Ireland, starving and suffering she has sent her sons to fight for liberty in other lands, and they have fought and bled and died, and she has crowded the chaplet. When the vessel was launched from Boston with Father Wentz, commissioned of the diocese of Boston, Ireland's sons were going forth into distant lands to bear the cross of Christ, and to die on earth with all they held most dear.

Ireland's sons have spread over the world and have seen months if Dublinspirits and her poorer cousins of Catholic subscriptions crowded the Cathedrals of Europe. In the Pilot Hall of the Pilot Hall of the Pilot Hall of

Farm and Home.

Handy Things to Know and Keep.

Here are some figures and rules very handy to know and have at hand, in the mind or on paper. We advise every young reader to learn most of these "by heart" so thoroughly as to always think of them in an instant. Do it while your minds are young and impressible, and they will stay by you like the marks made in the clay of brick, or dough of bread or cake, before it is hardened by heat. Older people also do not preserve their paper much use this and keep it handy for ready reference

A rod is 16½ feet, or 5½ yards.
A mile is 320 rods.
A mile is 1,760 yards.
A mile is 5,280 feet.
A square foot is 144 square inches.
A square yard contains 9 square feet.
A square rod is 272¼ square feet.
An acre contains 43,560 square feet.
An acre contains 4,840 square yards.
An acre contains 160 square rods.
A section, or square mile, contains 640 acres.
A quarter section contains 160 acres.
An acre is 8 rods wide by 20 rods long.
An acre is 10 rods wide by 16 rods long.
An acre is about 208½ feet square.
A solid foot contains 1,728 solid inches.
A pint (of water) weighs 1 pound.
A solid foot of water weighs 62½ pounds.
A gallon (of water) holds 231 solid inches.
A gallon of milk weighs 8½ lb.
A pint (of water) holds 28½ solid inches (28.875).
A barrel (31½ gallons) holds 4½ solid feet (4.2125).
A solid foot contains nearly 7½ solid pints (7.48).
A bushel (struck) contains 2,150 solid inches.
A bushel (heaping) contains 1¼ struck bushels.
A struck bushel contains about 1½ solid feet.

Twenty Acres of Blackberries.

The successful cultivation of blackberries has been carried on by William Trubody, near Trubody's Station for many years, as most of our readers are aware. Planted in a loose, rich, loamy soil where an abundant supply of moisture lies near the surface, the vine thrives, growing luxuriantly and producing large crops almost every year. Mr. Trubody now has on his large and very productive farm twenty acres of blackberry vines all in bearing. Ten acres were uprooted a year or two ago for the reason that the variety on that portion of the field was not suited to the locality. This season the first berries were picked for the market about July 1st. During the hight of the season forty-nine men were employed in picking the large, luscious berries. Twenty acres of berries in one field is a large "patch," and when the fruit is ripe, hanging thick on the bending bushes, the sight is one of beauty.

This enormous heavy shipments were made to various portions of Solano and Yolo counties, about 120 boxes going to San Francisco. The crop was shortened by the hot weather that prevailed early in the season, which had the effect to shrivel and blast almost half the yield, rendering it worthless. Twice as many berries as were raised could have been sold and many orders went unfilled. The season closed about the 10th of August. Two varieties of berries are raised, the Lawton and the Dorchester, six acres being planted of the latter variety. Owing to the shortage of the crop satisfactory prices have ruled this season. Much labor is required to keep this large blackberry patch in good order, and care is taken to see that the vines are kept in the best condition.—Napa Register.

Wheat Growing.

All cosmer that wheat farming don't pay—that is, they compare it here with the same elsewhere, where the yield is far more per acre. Doing this, they overlook a case with which the farming is done in this section. One thing is, the wheat raisers have more twenty-dollar gold pieces than those who raise none, and their thrift is attested by the continual purchase of new machinery.—Prema Republican.

Mark Your Babies.

The mothers of children inclined to wander away and get lost would save themselves and the police much trouble if they would sew on the shirt of the child a tag upon which would be marked in indelible ink the name and residence of the parents. The child would then be taken home direct by the officer, instead of to the police station.

Large Wheat Crop.

A careful estimate places the wheat yield of San Benito county this year at nearly 30,000 tons. Its quality is as good as that of the wheat of any previous year. For milling purposes it is exceptionally good. The general opinion is that the price of wheat will reach $1 25 and probably more. Starr & Co., the San Francisco millers, who turn out 1500 barrels daily, have made a contract with the French Government for all the flour they can manufacture. If the war rumor of last hung over Europe breaks wheat will reach a figure that now is not dreamed of. The Victor mills will be able to handle at least 12,000 tons of the crop. The rest will be sent to San Francisco.—Hollister Free Lance.

California's Future Crops.

The principal crops of this State in a decade hence will be olives, figs, grapes and cocoa. Take the apparently insignificant articles of figs which appear in our markets as imported once a year; the value of the importation from Smyrna alone is nearly $2,000,000, commanding in our market 15 to 20 cents per pound. The fact that figs can be shipped and consumed in a dry state permits sections remote from the railroad to be devoted to their production.

More Farms.

Every season will serve to illustrate that there should be more farms in all the productive districts of this State. Right here in Tulare county there should be many an eighty-acre sold of the large ranches to people who would build homes on them. A man who owns more than 160 acres which is not closely cut by canals, ditches, should sell it off until he has no more left than he can effective closely and profitably. Some farmers may say it is nobody's business how much they own, and we admit that it isn't, on the ground of ownership, but when cultivation is considered every one has a right to urge good cultivation because by it all are made richer and the country looks better for it. A rich through the country now shows that many ranches are only half cultivated. It is wasteful and slovenly to look upon. There ought to be five families living and tilling the soil in the county where there are only three as a rule. This increase of population would act like a charm upon it. We hope the day will come when people will consider it better to cultivate small farms well than to slobber over large farms. They will feel more, enjoy less work and more pleasure in it.—Hanford Sentinel.

—Bullets nothing against another but upon good authority; not report what may hurt another unless it be a greater hurt to others to conceal it.

Family Fun.

Not a Partisan.

"Isn't he beautiful!" said the wife of the politician, as she dandled her baby boy, who smiled and kicked every time she threw him up.

"He is," answered the proud father as he watched the play of the little frisk, "but I'm afraid he will never be a good party man."

"Why not?"

"Because he's a kicker."

"It is these terrible things that cast a gloom over the happiest families.

He was a Swade.

A Chicago lawyer has a new office boy. The other day a client, waiting for the lawyer, noticed the boy, who is an exceedingly bright young chap, and fell into conversation with him.

"What's your name, my boy?" he asked.

"Ityan."

"What's your first name?"

"Pat."

"Ah! I see you're a Freechman."

"No, sir. I am not," said the boy, looking up like a flash; "I'm a Swade."

He Wanted to Buy It.

During the War there was a Rebel battery at Kenesaw to be taken, and the order was sent to one brigade, "that that battery the first thing in the morning." It meant death for a good many, and, sitting around the camp-fire that night, there was a deal of anxious talk. "Too sad, dearsby, I reckon, the only way to get those guns is to take 'em," and every one was gloomy, when the stutterer of the camp spoke up: "I s-s-say, boys, can't we ex-chip in enough to h-h-buy the old thing for you-c-c-cosah?" The grim humor of the thing tickled the boys, and many a one went to sleep that night with a smile on his lips who never smiled again.

"Measuring Her "Fus-sure."

"Say, are you a fortune teller?" "Yes' Miss, that's my business." "You can read the future, can't you?" "As clearly as I can the past." "Well, I'll brize around my fortune-teller. I want you to read him so I can tell if his affection is sincere.

Poor Luck Likely.

A country minister while driving to church discovered a small boy by the roadside with a fishing rod over his shoulder. He drew up his horse and said reprovingly:

"Going fishing on Sunday, my boy?"

"Yes," answered the lad. "Are you goin' fishin', too?"

"I am fishing for souls," said the good man solemly.

"For soles! Well, yar won't ketch no soles 'round here, Mister. I'm fishin' for snickers."

A Happy Ending.

Bobby came into the house sobbing, and told his mother that Tommy White had kicked him.

"Wall, Tommy White is a very bad boy," said Bobby's mother, giving him a large piece of cake. "You didn't kick him back, did you, I"

"No," replied Bobby, between bites, "I kicked him first."

Their Love for Liquor.

"Yes," said a Kentuckian who had been in the far West, "Indians are powerful fur whisky an' they'll give up everything for it. An old chief out in western Dakota offered me a pony, saddle, bridle, blanket, an' I don't know what else for a pint of whisky I had with me."

"And you wouldn't give it to him?"

"Not much. That was the last pint I had left. But it shows how fond Indians are of whisky."

Muller's Mistake.

Schultz—How do you like that parrot I sent you?

Muller—It was a bit tough.

Schulze—What! Have you eaten it then!

Muller—Well, why didn't it say so, then!

Check vs. Check.

"I'd like to look at some of your check solid," said the dude successor to his father.

"And I'd like to look at the check for your last suit," replied the merchant.

The dude considered himself checkmated, and passed out.

Why She Loved Children.

On North Madison street lives a handsome young lady, and though there is nothing strange or startling about it, the young lady is engaged to be married to an equally handsome young gentleman. For some reason, of which we know not, the maiden has the reputation of carrying the month her fair exterior a heart of flint. The aforesaid young gentleman had been duly warned of this but believed it not. Recently he accompanied her to the home of a neighbor to spend the evening. They were sitting out beneath the trees; it was cozy, deliciously warm, and it required an effort to keep comfortable. A little child of four summers toddled up to the young lady, and she took it to, and, fondling it, remarked: "I dearly love to hold the little ones such a nuthar as this." A third of fry shot through the young man's heart. Here was an ardiance of tender heartedness, although it struck him as rather strange the weather should have anything to do with it. "And why especially on a night like this?" he asked. "Because the mosquitoes, that are so bothersome, settle on the tender little things and let me alone," she replied.

The engagement is broken.

Their Honeymoon.

The colored female cook of a family living at the South End came up stairs the other afternoon, and, twisting up the corners of her apron with considerable embarrassment, said to her mistress:

"You see, missus, I thought it mought be low to be talkin' 'pon dat I—dat I done got married las' week."

"Ah, indeed! and what is your name now, Hannah?"

"Mis' Williams, ma'am. You see, my husbun', he am a cook, too. He am what dey calls a chef in a hotel."

"A chef, eh! That's very nice. And do you expect to leave me directly?"

"Ki! d'ewdy, mum. I'll stay wid ye for de present. You see my husbun' is done gone to New York an' Washin'ton on his honeymoon, an' he'll be nigh onto six weeks befo' he comes back!"

—Hasty words often rankle in the wound which injury inflicts; soft soft words assuage it. Forgiving errors, and forgetting takes away the sear.

—It is doing some services to humanity to assume innocently, and they know very little of man who think we can bear to be always employed, either in duties or mediation, without any relaxation.

QUEEN VICTORIA.

How She Appears and Acts when at Dress Parade.

London letter in New Orleans Times-Star: As we looked down this wonderful gallery from our point of advantage, these dames slowly along toward us a little group composed of two or twelve gentlemen and ladies walking in this wise in the centre of the aisle, a good, stout, red faced old lady, apparently sixty-odd years of age. This was Queen Victoria. She was a black silk dress made short enough to escape the floor. The skirt was full, the front being covered with an ample buffed petticoat. The back of the skirt hung full and plain. Over this was worn a simple little black cloth dolman wrap. A clean, large, black bonnet, from which hung a short, black, veil not of grandma fell was on her head. Her face was rosy in the point of redness, her hair very gray and brushed simply behind her ears; the cheeks were not red all over, but a sort of mottled red and white. Once she smiled as some gentleman of the party was presented to her, inclined her head towards him in a gracious but autocratic sort of way, and exposed all her teeth as she smiled; they were very white, and so even and perfect as to look suspiciously false.

The Queen carried a gold handled ebony walking stick, and made good use of it, leaning on it as she walked to look in the cases, or to talk, with her elbo akimbo, in a comfortable fashion that cried my hard go!. She walked rapidly along, moving in a dowdy, dignified, under-fashed sort of fashion, as little borne out by her ample skirts and fat, short figure.

Sir Philip Cunliff Owen, Secretary of the exhibition, walked on one side of her and a lord Somebody or Other on the other. They did not walk upalongside of her in an equal sort of way, but of about four feet from her, gracing sideways toward her with bodies, their hats in their hands, and their backs constantly curving as they courtesied and bowed in a fashion that so called cons's ideas of the days of Queen Elizabeth.

Behind the Queen came the Princess Beatrice and her husband, Prince Henry. He is a tall, rather nice-looking man, with brown hair and mustache, and dressed in a dark frock coat and pantaloons. The Prince had on a blue boland that probably cost 50 cents a pair, a white vest with white polka dots, and the long draped over-dress was edged with that white lace known as "coal antique." Her bonnet was a little French affair of white lace and dark blue velvet, and the most of her dress had a U-shaped arrangement of white lace let into it, front and back. She did not walk up alongside of her mother in a dignifiedly sort of way, but came on behind her Majesty, and politely waited until the Queen had finished each case before she ventured to look herself. The Princess is plump, very unlike a Princess in her manner, and not handsome. She has not the extreme, almost nitro-greenness and demeanor to the public that characterizes her sister-in-law, the Princess of Wales.

When the Queen got to the end of the galleries nearest us she came in a few feet toward us the space beyond the exhibits so that the hundreds collected might have a good view of her, and then, without looking at them or without any demonstration on their part, she slowly turned and, like the King of France, went back again. I observed the crowds of her subjects gathered about, and there was not an atom of enthusiasm, only the most searching, and, at times, sombre curiosity, and when she had gone a quiet turning away of the crowd. I talked the other day with an intelligent middle-class gentleman on this question of the royal family. He said: "When the Queen dies we will have the Prince of Wales for King; but after him there will be no more Kings nor Queens for old England. We are on the eve of a great revolution, and will come quietly and in order, and sensible."

The Month of September.

This a very clever month to be born in for those that love and do well, and mind their own business. The men, with luck and good management will get as rich as Crœsus; and the women, let them have their way, will generally marry agreeably to their wishes. The men will be the most obliging of husbands, when it suits their interest and inclination, and the women will be the kindest creatures in the world, when it comports with their humor. A number of both male and female will be to a good old age, a large portion of them will die in their beds, and the rest will rarely, if ever, be disturbed by the wringing of their hairs.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.

Splendid set of Teeth, only $6.

AT THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 968 Market, street.

DANIEL SHEERIN, STONE AND MARBLE YARD,

Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts.,

Entrance in Catholic Cemetery.

JUST RECEIVED

A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops.

All kinds of Monuments and Grave Work done in short notice. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

WESTERN HOTEL,

212-14 Broadway Street.

JOHN HIGGINS, - - Proprietor

(Late Broadway Hotel.)

ROBERT F. HAY, TINTYPE GALLERY

821 Market St., bet. 4th & 5th.

Gem 25c.
Ambrotypes 25 to 50 cents
Card size 25 to 75 cents
Cabinet size 50 cents to $1.50
Panel size 75 cents to $1.50

TAKEN AND FINISHED IN 10 MINUTES.

SOMETHING NEW FOR THE LADIES!

This most luxurious and pleasant Turkish, Russian and Medicated Bath for Ladies and Gents, is now ready at the

NEW HAMMAM BATHS,

214 Post St., bet. Dupont and Stockton, S. F.

Ladies attended Tuesday 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. daily.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,

968 and 970 Folsom St.,

Near 6th St., San Francisco

WHOLESALE

LIQUOR DEALER.

Importers and Jobbers

We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods.

Table Wines 50c., 60c., 75c. and $1.00 per gal.
Angelica Wines - - $1, $1.50 and $1.50
Saint Vincent - - - $2 per gal.
Port Wines - - - $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2.
Kentucky Whiskies - $5.50, $6, $7.50 and $8.
Bourbon Whiskey. - - $5.50, $6, $7.50 and $8.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. wholesale

Other Wines and Liquors at lowest rates.

NEW MUSIC.

J. FISCHER & BRO., New York.

A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St. San Francisco.

PACIFIC CLAYWARE AGENCY.

Wash. Hobart, 30 Kearny, for unpainted and fancy Chamber Sets, etc.

Wm. Cox, Dupont, Bedroom, Dining, and Kitchen Sets, Spittoons, etc.

Chas. Mason, Dupont, Bedroom, Dining and Kitchen Sets, Spittoons, etc.

Pacific Pottery, 1017 Market, Bedroom, Dining and Kitchen Sets, Spittoons, etc.

Pacific Pottery, 1017 Market, Chamber Sets, Spittoons, etc.

Wm. Cox, Dupont, Chamber Sets, Spittoons, etc.

Mason's Ironstone China, Chamber Sets, Spittoons, etc.

Wash. Hobart, 30 Kearny, Chamber Sets, Spittoons, etc.

Pacific Pottery, 1017 Market, Spittoons, etc.

Wm. Cox, Dupont, Spittoons, etc.

Mason's Ironstone China, Spittoons, etc.

Wash. Hobart, 30 Kearny

IS THE CHURCH OPPOSED TO PROGRESS?

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

karism, and are not temporal relations of a more broadly feeling? From certain standpoints, has not the political system been improved under the influence of reason and experience? No longer is private vengeance tolerated or countenanced; and the petty feudal tyrants, the wrangling communities, the wandering bands of free companions—have they not all disappeared? It is, then, true that man in society goes on perfecting himself in the political sense? Are his moral relations with his fellows, and his political condition, subject to different degree of this successive development to which man is acutely alive ere civilization end rudimentary when the conditions under which man grows more perfect in this three-fold sense are not partially developed; it is great and high when they attain a larger development; it would be complete were all the conditions perfectly satisfied." After this passage of which G. De Molinari says in the debate that it makes the reader long he is listening to one of Michel Chevalier's lectures at the college de France, the Cardinal goes on to ask whence proceed progress and civilization. They come above all, from labor. Labor was despised by the most illustrious of ancient philosophers, but "Christianity elevated, honored and sanctified it. Jesus Christ, the true Son of God, submitted himself to a poor one for days of labor, and the carpenter's shop of Nazareth did not disdain to set his blessed hand to labor." The Apostles generally earned their bread by their labor, and later, when the barbarian hordes swept over Europe, the monks tilled the soil they had ravaged, and reconstructed industry. Still later the Christian republics of Italy became the splendid centers of trade, commerce and arts. In Asia, the Black Sea, Africa and Asia were the theatres of the commercial relations and military expeditions of our ancestors; there they made important and fecund conquests; and with shouts of victory their flag floated, wrestled with glory and terror, at home they did not cease to labor.

THE CONFRATERNITY OF THE ROSARY.

THEY CULTIVATED THE ARTS, and their traders, by every honest means, added to public and private wealth. Manufactures of wool, silk, jewelry, colored glass, paper, at Florence, Pisa, Bologna, Milan, Venice, Naples, gave lucrative employment to thousands of workmen and attracted to those markets the gold and the competition of strangers. Let us, continue I, do not believe that all should be sacrificed to material prosperity of cities, the health and ease of men, and the feeble strength of childhood, and Cardinal Pecci protested against the "modern schools of political economy infected with atheism; that regard labor as the supreme end of man and man himself as a machine more or less valuable as it is more or less productive." M. De Molinari, commenting on this, points out that economists do not regard labor as an end but as a means, and that they are thoroughly in accord with their "eminent conferee of Perugia" as to the necessity of limiting the hours of labor and securing days of rest for the artisan as well as of providing the education of children; they, like the present Pope, believe that charity is necessary; they, like the wisest possible spread of education, "least was and uphold the freedom of commerce, and with sorrow contemplate "the enormous number of the victims made by the privation of education, by physical infirmities, by age, and the convulsions of trade."

AFTER MANUFACTURE AND TRADE CAUSES the accusation against the church that "she mutile into the heart a mystical notion; of earthly things, and commercially speaking, of which would extinate, all the Cardinal sees himself to refute the still more monstrous calumny which causes the church to be considered the enemy of the human and material comfort, he says, is not only absurd but impious, for it involves the supposition that the church has been occupied for nineteen lustrums in dethroning God. So far from dethroning God, science can only make manifest His power and redouble the love He inspires by the full harmony and mutual concordance of His works. See and judge for yourselves. What is there that the church can desire more ardently than the glory of God and the more intimate acquaintance with the divine workman which is acquired by the study of his works! If the universe is indeed a book, on every page of which are inscribed the name and wisdom of God, it is certain that he will be most filled with love for God will come the nearest to God, who will have studied this book most deeply and most attentively. * * *

WHAT REASON CAN THERE BE

that the church should be jealous of the marvellous progress our age has made in its studies and discoveries? Is there in them anything which, looked at from once or far, can do harm to the ideas of God and of faith, whereof the church is the guardian and infallible mistress? Bacon, so distinguished in the walks of physical science, has written that a little knowledge leads away from God, but much knowledge leads to God. The golden saying is always true, and if the church is afraid of the ruin that might be wrought by the vain ones who think they understand everything because they have a slight smattering of everything, she has full confidence in those who apply science and profoundly to the study of nature, for she knows that at the bottom of their researches they will find God, who in all His works displays Himself with the infinite attributes of His power, His wisdom and His goodness." Then the pastoral letter brings to the support of its author's position the evidence of Copernicus, of Keppler, of Galileo, of Galileo, one of the Protestant Fathers, who, after the account to which he applied himself with such patience, as

"ARDENT WISHES TO KNOW GOD."

Finally, it pays homage to the superlative efforts of science, and the sublime spectacle it offers in rendering man master of the forces of nature, in kindling within him a spark of the fire of the Godhead. "How splendid and majestic does man seem when he reaches after the thunderbolt and lets it fall harmless at his feet: when he summons the electric spark, and sends it, the messenger of his will, through the abysses of ocean, over the precipitous mountains, across the interminable plains! How glorious, when he bids steam, fasten pinions to his shoulders and bear him with the rapidity of lightning over land and sea! How powerful when, by his ingenuity, he ca n ed upon this force, inspiration is, and conveys it by ways marvellously combined and adapted to give motion—we might almost say intelligence—to brute matter, which then takes the place of man and spares him his most exhausting toil! Tell me if there is not in man the semblance of a spark of the Creator when he invokes light and bids it scatter the shades of darkness! But the Syllabus! Has not the Syllabus condemned and condemned the civilization! No; it has not condemned true civilization—that civilization whereby man perfects himself—but it does condemn "the civilization without religion, supposed to rival and destroy with it all wherewith Christianity has enriched us." It is not directed against civilization, but against atheism and materialism. Having dealt with the material amelioration of the condition of man, he says: "It would be an arrogant task to cast the same light on those things which concern the amelioration of man's moral and political condition. If, instead of writing a pastoral letter, we had set ourselves to composing a long treatise, and if we did not intend, if life permits, to return at a future day to this subject."

The Pope of 1878 will consider the very

THE CONFRATERNITY OF THE ROSARY.

The Confraternity of the Rosary is defined to be a congregation of the faithful of both sexes of every condition of life, and of all ranks in the Church who, for their own advantage and that of the Church, assemble together as if with one heart and in one body, for the purpose of imploring and honoring the Most Sacred Virgin Mary, and of learning from her example and that of her adorable Son how to walk in the path of virtue and of holiness, particularly by performing spiritual devotion to the Rosary and for all those practices that are in accordance with it. The devotees raised to the Rosary which every member of the Confraternity should recite or practice, by reason of the fact that have in view age of the simpler Mysteries they are entitled, and yet to which are annexed from concessions to attend, are the following: In the great Dominican Church of Rome, at the Rosary procession on the first Sunday of each month and on each of the three principal festivals of the Blessed Mary, near the Sanctuary, which is ornamented with indulgences, where "the Silent Tuesday" in honor of St. Joseph, and the Wednesday in honor of the Angels; "in honor of "the Month of the Rosary," "the seven Fridays" in honor of the Seven Fathers—the great preacher of the Rosary and the thaumaturgus of his age; to wear the Cord of St. Thomas Aquinas, the gilded and favored child of the Rosary, and to be his intercessor through the Rosary for the preservation of purity; to consecrate about two hours of each day in meditation, prayer and spiritual reading; for forty days each year for the double purpose of making a spiritual retreat and of calling to mind God's retirement into the desert; to make a Novena in honor of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and to pay the written exposition of the Saviour of the world; to go to Communion on the first Sunday of the Dominican Order in honor of all the canonized saints of the Order; to make the Stations of the Rosary on the days of Lent, and appointed by the Holy See, etc., etc. Even the fathers and sons are permitted from which they have been stated that Rosaries have the most ample opportunities presented to them of the most effective benefits to them by the holy Rosary and of the Blessed Virgin, the most ardent and perfecting themselves at every moment, and in the most perfect way, in the knowledge of the mysteries of the sons in Purgatory

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

PARNELL'S DEFIANCE.

Go tell your haughty bulldogs thro'
I scorn their claims of Tyrone,
Go say I will not be coerced,
Or yielding even to Ireland's right.
Tell them I'm free, thank goodness alive,
From green Tyrone to Kerry's strand,
And now we'll rule or fighting live
To vindicate our native land.

Go say the Erin once they knew
Has risen and for freedom
Go say her sons are hard to true,
Another Sidney live to prove
Our unstirred dead on sentinel duty
Did not be vain that Emmet died dreamers,
If used must be well fight and die,
But glorious victory shall be our cause.

Too long we've borne their galling chain,
Too long their sneers have stung us,
Too long we've wept in bitter pain
Our ruined home and broken sires,
Our sons were banished on the wave
In prisons cell were doomed to dwell,
Our home bones fill foreign grave,
Because they loved their country well.

But these are past, another race
Spring from their sire dry clay,
With gladiated hearts they load embrace
The binding chains of Freedom's day,
They sternly cry! "The land is our,
Our rights we will maintain,
Away with binding Saxon power,
Away with bull and chain.
And by our patriot cause,
And by their ashes that we love,
And by their sons's rebelled,
We swear to stand free Ireland's right
And read the tyrant's chain,
Or never rest by day or night,
Till every link is rent in twain.

*Leeds Salisbury, Huntington and Chartrill.

Literary Miscellany.

The Poetry did It.

AN ESSAY IN THE LIFE OF MAJOR EVERGREEN BELLATO BY WILKIN COLLINS.

CHAPTER IV.

The two gentlemen discovered Miss Mabel walking up and down the garden terrace in front of Oakapple Hall, reading her book. Good gor! It was a volume of her uncle's poetry.

"I fair sure you would be glad to meet Sir John Bowerth again, Cyril began. His manner was a great deal too humble. Before he could get any farther, Sir John spoke himself, young man.

"The happiness is all mine," he said in his easy way. "I'd happen, however, to be intruding, pray don't scruple to say so.

Mabel raised her eyes from her book. She had only to look at Cyril, to see what had happened. Her pretty, patient, fattened, amused—in this condition of small esteem she was complacently at a loss how to assert herself to the best advantage: she who took refuge in a cold composure which, for the time being at least, concealed her to nothing. "I was certainly angered in reading," she replied—and put a mark in her book with a sign of resignation.

Sir John Bowerth felt his position the blow without hesitating. "You led me to hope for the honour of being introduced to Mrs. Corydon," he said to Cyril. "Shall we find her at home?

He took Cyril's arm and led him to the house. "That's the way to manage her," he whispered. "I'll bet you five to one she's vexed at our leaving her—and ten to one she receives us more civilly when she sees us again. Don't look back! You're in my care, and I am responsible for your good behaviour. Don't look back! You're a good fellow, and I like you—and I'm sorry I spoke to you as I did just now

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY BY TUBSCRIPTION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1886.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Curious parcels, let us hug your narrow conical, cuticle of this important truth, that you are single and indivisible, most practically despoil the multitude of the genuine, whether on our side, Christ's side, or on the other side, Satan's side, Christ's side, Satan's side, Christ's side, Satan's side, Christ's

Farm and Home.

PACIFIC COAST CROPS.

Official Reports to the Agricultural Department.

WASHINGTON, September 21—Respecting the condition of the crops in California, the agent of the Agricultural Bureau for that State has made the following report: Wheat has been a fair average crop throughout the State and of very good quality. The kettasia are plump and full. Barley is grown but very little, but successfully, and is valuable, especially as an early forage crop. Barley is rather shorts the average. Irish potatoes are a good crop. Sweet potatoes are only grown for home consumption and are a fair average crop. Tobacco and cotton are only exceptionally grown and sorghum only as a forage crop. The corn crop will be fully up to the average. Apples and pears about a two-thirds crop. Peaches one-third. Plums a poor crop. Almonds and English walnuts an average crop. Canning and drying have been followed more than ever, and the shipments of fresh fruits East, have prevented glutts in the markets, although fruit is still plentiful and cheap. The yield of grapes for wine is variously estimated at from 16,000,000 to 20,000,000 gallons, which may be called a full medium crop, and the quality will be good. The grade of raisins will be much larger than last year, and the raisin makers are hopefull as to quality and prospective prices. Shipments to the East of table grapes are also very active, and the prospects point to a yield of 15,000,000 pounds, or about 2,000,000 pounds more than last year. The yield of wine will be about three-fourths of an average crop. Olives will be about one-third of an average, or 640 tons per acre. In gathering the grapes for making an estimate, Mr. Tuttle selected what he considered average vines in different parts of the vineyard. They yielded thirty pounds per vine, worth at 15 cents per pound 43 cents per vine. This would indicate a yield of 19,200 pounds per acre, worth $288. The yield from Mr. Tuttle's three acres when made into raisins will be about nine and a half tons, worth at 6 cents per pound, $1152. From this it will be seen that the irrigated lands of Fresno have something more than mere talk to back up their claims to superiority in the production of paying crops.—Fresno Republican.

Relief for Toothache.

For ordinary nervous toothache, which is caused by the nervous system being out of order or by excessive fatigue, a hot bath will soon soothe the nerves into sleep will naturally follow, and upon getting up, the patient will feel very much refreshed and the toothache gone. For what is known as "jumping" toothache, hot, dry flannel applied to the face and neck is very effective. For common toothache, which is caused by indigestion, or by strong, cold, cold, or anything very hot or cold in a decayed tooth, a little piece of cotton steeped in strong camphor or oil of cloves is a good remedy. Cloves in the diet, especially when the bowels are disordered, is helpful to mitigate toothache. If the tooth is much decayed nothing is better than its extraction.

—God knows what we are, and will hold out His paternal hand to us in a difficult step, in order that nothing may break us.

—As the flower, when plucked for enjoyment, begins to wither, so does virtue, practised for reward, begin to vanish.

—Let us keep firm hold of the merciful hand of our good God, for He wishes to draw us after Him.

Family Inn.

The Bitter Badly Bitten.

John R. McLean, the editor and proprietor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, is very lame just now, and has the good reason. It appears quite even at his age, a man in wonderful health, he was walking rapidly with a friend along Twenty ninth street in New York. At the corner of Fourth avenue he saw a hard up Hibernian standing on the pavement carrying jealously into vacancy. "Watch me surprise this old fellow," said McLean to his friend. Turn right in his face and see if it won't be a study." A second later they were abreast the old man's hand: "Have a dime quarter I owed you. Now don't go around any more telling people that I don't pay my debts. I always speak well of you and you have no reason to do otherwise by me." For a second the man's face was a study. He was amazed as the unloaded for kindness, and then as its purport dawned on him he raised his tattered hat, and said, "God bless yer sure I'll never say another word agin yer, but (and here his eyes twinkled merrily) are ye sure it wasn't a half yer owed me?" The friend roared, and as McLean rollicked to the roots of his hair, exclaimed, "Oh, pay the man in full. Don't try to beat him a quarter." The Irishman got two halves to addition to his quarter, but the editor no longer pays debts at sight unless demanded.

Willing to do Want He Could.

Madam (looking for a carry board)—You have plenty of pure milk, Mr. Hayseed? Mr. Hayseed—Yessum.

Madam—I shall want milk from cow for baby. And eggs—have you plenty of fresh eggs?

Mr. Hayseed—Yassum, but I don't reckon I can give you them eggs.

Madam—Why, I shall want them for baby. And eggs—have you plenty of fresh eggs?

Mr. Hayseed—Yassum, but I don't reckon I can give you them eggs.

Time Slipping Away.

"Excuse me, dearest," he said, disentangling himself.

Then he stalked to the edge of veranda and firmly demanded:

"Boy, what are you looking about the front yard for at this time of night?"

"Scouts' papers, sir!"

The Perils of Boarding.

"You look thoughtful tonight, Dansley," remarked Featherby as he stretched himself on the lounge.

"Yes," sighed Dombey. "I've just set down from the table."

"What does she say?"

"She says that I must pay my bill board at once or her daughter will sue me for breach of promise. I'm thinking what I'd better do.

Damon and Pythias

"Why don't you bring your friend around to the house, Mr. Fenberly?" inquired Mrs. Jay, as that young man seated himself in the parlor.

"I have a good many friends, Bobby," replied Fenberly, indignantly. "Which friend do you mean?"

"John Barleycorn. Pa says you are a great friend of his."

A Peculiar Taste.

They were speaking of a Buffalo bride's trousseau.

"Were her robes made in Paris?"

"Oh, no," another one said; "they were all made in Buffalo. She was very proud of her trousseau, and I heard her say that she was wearing nothing but Buffalo robes.

"I sel ad," continued the young man who was applying for a situation, "that I am a college graduate."

"O, that won't make any difference," was the reassuring reply. "If you stick to your work, and, besides, we want somebody about the place who is strong enough to carry in coal.

Haste to the Wedding.

"Woman in upper window (to young man in front door)—We don't want no paper envelopes.

Young man (with package of envelopes in his hand)—Eloping?

Woman—No 'tain't. We don't want no stationery.

Young man (turning to go)—That woman 'll wed or I'm a dude's gift to invitation to the wedding.

Better Than a Stove.

"And how do you like your cooking stove, Mrs. Jones?"

"Why, bless your soul, Miss Hale, I would not get along without it. I could get along without my husband better than without it.

"O, dear! I couldn't. I'd sooner have a husband than all the coal oil stoves in the world," responded the rather elderly Miss Hale.

Wise Bobby and his Mother.

"Bobby," said his mother, as she emptied one of his pockets, "how can you carry such stuff around! Marbles, string, a broken key, an empty pill box, a slate pencil—"

"Yes, I know what you've got in your pocket, Ma," interrupted Bobby, and he took therefrom an assortment of dress goods, a thimble, a poem, entitled "Sleep, Baby, Sleep," a recipe for polishing cutlery, half a paper of small safety pins, and three blind buttons.

Grief Assuaged.

A little New York girl, while spending the summer in the country, became very much attached to a pet chicken, which she wished to take home with her.

"That's impossible, Sadie," said her mother. "We wouldn't know what to do with it. If you don't want to have it here, why not let Uncle James kill it and we'll have it for supper?"

"Oh, mamma," sobbed the little girl, "can I have all the white meat?"

Doubling Up.

Jones—You haven't taken a vacation this Summer.

Smith—Yes I have, my boy. I've had six weeks' rest.

J.—I can't see how you have. You haven't been out of town.

S.—No, but the girl who plays on the piano opposite to my house has been away on a six weeks' vacation.

J.—Oh!

S.—Yes. And she came home last night. I heard her at it this morning.

J.—So your vacation is ended?

S.—It is not, I'm going now for six weeks. That gives me twelve weeks of rest for this year. Sort of doubling up, as it were.

A Bad Break.

"Yes," said the Chairman sadly, "our temperance meeting last night would have been more successful if the lecturer hadn't been so absent minded."

"What did he do?"

"He tried to blow the foam from a glass of water."

THEOPOLIS DUGGIN.

How His Blunders Caused Him to be Discharged.

"Do you think you can sell dress goods and ribbons?" inquired Mr. Nathan Wallerson, senior member of the firm of Wallerson & McGill, of Houston, Texas. The party addressed was a third young man with a florid nose, florid mustache and florid hair. He was short, quite a fat, jaunty, and his name was Theopolis Duggin.

"I reckon so," he replied.

"Can you be sure?"

"Which?

"Can you support a becoming address in the presence of ladies—politeness, suavity, you know?

"Oh, yes," answered Duggin. "In the last place I worked the boys all said I was the suavest man in the troupe and a rootin-tootin' amongst customers."

"What business was it?"

"Pumps—wooden and iron pumps, and hydraulic rams."

"Quite a different line from dress goods and ribbons.

"Well, yes, but I ain't afeared to tackle 'em."

The firm gave him a trial. The boys in the store labeled him "Pumps" from the first moment of his initiation into the dress goods and ribbon department. The second day a petite brunette inquired for some chicken down nun's nailing. Pumps began to sweat.

"What color is it?" he blurted out.

"A good only peacock blue with a shiny stare."

Pumps rushed off after a new stock of information and inquired.

"Is this a physician store or a butcher shop?"

"Why?" inquired a Hi-pound salesman who knew there was a cat there by the saw-dust on the floor.

"The lady wanted a chicken's heart, and I thought I'd ask."

"Show me some elephant's breath cambric, and an elderly lady in gold-bowed spectacles.

Pumps dropped a roll of paper cambric and again started for information.

"What's elephant breath?" he gasped.

"Hanged if I ain't thinking I've struck a nonsense.

"It is a shade of woolen goods," murmured another salesman, moving towards the elderly lady and selling her a large bill.

"Hot your boots I'll catch on," said Pumps, staggering before the glass where indeed my bronzed and hale.

Another young lady interviewed Pumps in the afternoon and said:

"You know swatches on gray velvet is considered very chic."

"Yes I know that a beautiful thing again", observed Pumps.

The young lady looked grieved.

"Show me some giraffe colored cashmere," she said quietly.

"Another animal wanted," muttered Pumps, breathlessly, as he reached the cellar of the store. He, of course, lost the sale.

"Show me some crinolettes," demanded a spare woman with a cast in her eye. Pumps was nonplussed.

"If I was you I would'nt get a crinolette," he ventured.

"You wouldn't!" sneered the lady.

"No, not at this season of the year. I'd get a pair of striped stockings and a pole bonnet."

The lady walked out.

"What did she want?" inquired Mr Wallerson, who had kept his eagle eye on the proceedings.

"She was hankerin' after a crinoline," said Pumps, "and I don't think we have them in stock."

"These are crinolettes," said Mr. Wallerson, pointing.

"You will do better than this," remarked Mr. Wallerson, impressively.

"There is a woman up at the front end who wants some Appolinaris. Hadn't I better go out and get her a glass of seltzer?"

Some more contained vaccity waited on the lady and her a petticoat, a modiste waistcoat, an ostrich feather fan, and ten yards of Italian cambric handkerchiefs. Pumps was parsly sed.

"You have have got the thing down middlin' fine," he said, pulling his varnillion moustache before the mirror.

"Evidently you have considerable to learn in the business," said the head salesman to Pumps.

"All I ask is a fair show for my money," returned Pumps dejectedly.

"What would you do if a lady were to inquire for the imperial Jersey?"

"What are you giving us!" whined Pumps. "This is no stock yard or dairy farm."

"That, my dear friend," said the head salesman, "is a delicacy that introduced into this country by Mrs. Langtry. What if she should inquire for a tourniere?"

"Sh—sh—!"

"That will do," shouted Mr. Wallerson, bobbing up from behind a bale of sheeting, "you may just turn your back on this establishment, and hove over with a longer yard."

A Neat Compliment.

The other day a young lady entering a railway carriage on a suburban line seated herself opposite to a gentleman who, from the first, with one eye at least, seemed to be staring fixedly at her. She at length became embarrassed, and ventured, "Why do you stare at me, sir?" He said he was not aware of having done so; but she insisted. "Why gave pardon, madam, but is this eye, is it not?"—pointing with his finger to the left eyelid. "Yes, sir, it's that eye." "Well, madam, that eye won't do any harm. It's a glass eye, madam—only a glass eye. I hope you'll excuse it. But really I'm not surprised that even a glass eye should feel interested in so pretty a person." The explanation and the compliment combined to put the lady in good humor.

He Was Still Dead.

A good story is told of one of our local politicians, who was canvassing for the nomination of a county office. One afternoon he attended a gathering in an out township, and meeting an intelligent looking young man, who he thought might have some influence, walked up to him and shook him warmly by the hand, inquiring:

"How is your father?"

The young man answered:

"You have asked me that three times!"

"Indeed!" replied the candidate, "I had not heard of it. I know him intimately. He was one of my best friends, and I regret to hear of it. He was one of the best and purest men I ever knew.—You have my sympathy," etc.

The same evening he met the same person in a village near by, and having forgotten his face accosted him the second time with the interrogatory

"How is your father?"

The young man looked at him for a moment and said, "He is still dead," and walked off.

Business Enterprise.

"What's the price of sausages?"

"Twenty cents a pound."

"You asked twenty five this morning."

"Ya, dat vas vhen I had some. Now I ain't got none I sells him for twenty cents. Dat makes me substraction for selling cheap and I don't loss nodthings."

Cholera Morbus

is about as sure to come as Summer is. It comes suddenly and without warning is dangerous and often fatal. ARE YOU PREPARED for it coming? If any of your family are attacked, PROMPT action only may save life. For 48 YEARS ONE medicine has always cured CHOLERA, CHOLERA MORBUS, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY and all SUMMER COMPLAINTS CHLORODYNE can take it with perfect safety. This medicine is PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER. To be on the safe side get one NOW—about 25c. on hand. For other Diseases see Pamphlet.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU, 968 and 970 Folsom St., San Francisco. WHOLESALE LIQUOR DEALER. Established 1876. We are selling Cheap for Cash and go by express. Orders from the country promptly attended to. The following low prices will convince you. Table Wines 50c., 60c., 75c., and $1. Assorted Wines $1, $1.25 and $1.50. Mount Vineyard (by qt. 75c.) Port or Sherry $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2. Kentucky Whiskies $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4. Bourbon Whiskey $1.50, $1.75 and $2. Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. and upwards. (Wine Measure and Discount Sent free.)

NEW MUSIC. J. FISCHER & BRO., New York. A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St., San Francisco. PACIFIC COAST AGENT.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE!

MALE OR FEMALE HELP

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED. Miss M. Stewart's Employment Office, Room No 1, 1020 Market Street, Corner Stevenson, San Francisco.

RED CLOVER. Recommended by the Agricultural Bureau as the most valuable forage plant for California. Sow from March to October. Ten pounds to the acre. Fifteen cents per pound. Circulars sent free. Address, Pacific Rural Press, San Francisco.

LIVE AND LET LIVE. Splendid Set of Teeth, only $6. THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 402 Montgomery Street.

DANIEL SHEERIN, STONE AND MARBLE YARD, Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts., Entrance to Conrad's Cemetery, San Francisco. JUST RECEIVED A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops. Off Lines of Monuments and Grave Work Cheaper than in other stores. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

WESTERN HOTEL, 212-14 Broadway Street. JOHN HIGGINS, : Proprietor (Late Brooklyn Hotel.)

ROBERT F. HAY, TINTYPE GALLERY 861 Market St., bet. 4th & 5th. Gem Size 25 for 25 cents. Large Size 50 cents each. TAKEN AND FINISHED IN 10 MINUTES.

SOMETHING NEW FOR THE LADIES! The most interesting and perfect Toilet, Nursery and Medicinal Rubber for Ladies are NOW obtainable at the NEW HAMMAM BATHS, 215 Post St., bet. Dupont and Stockton, S. F. Ladies admitted from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. daily.

G. ORSI, HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger. TILES IN PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, VARNISHES, Turpentine, Brushes, Putty, Paper Hangings, etc., 22 Montgomery Avenue, bet. Jackson and Pacific Sts., San Francisco. Orders promptly attended to. Kalsomining, American, French and Chinese paper hangings.

RAZORS! FOR $1,000 I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND MORE OF THEM IN THE SAME TIME THAN ANY OTHER MAN IN THE WORLD. My razors make themselves. My own make guaranteed. My Guard Razors warranted not to cut the flesh while shaving, 3 in box, $2. Good English Razors, 1 in box, $1. Sent C. O. D. to any mail. M. PRICE, 415 Kearny Street, Corner of Pacific, San Francisco.

WARD & CO.'S Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE. 608 and 610 City Street, S. F. Telephone No. 747. A MATE TO BE HAD—FIRST CLASS HOTEL Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Sawyers, Shingle Weavers, Cooks, Waiters, Chambermaids, Nurses, Private families and matrons, boarding and lodging houses, Cooks Help, without any charge to employers. Suitable situations for ladies at 608 City street.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE, Importers and Dealers in BOOKS, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS. Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc. MANUFACTURERS OF Patent Machine Made Paper Bags. 512 to 516 Sacramento and 510 Commercial Sts., S. F.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY. JOHN WIELAND, PROPRIETOR. SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM, SAN FRANCISCO. Amount of Beer sold in 1886 60030 barrels.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

KNABE PIANOS. Unequalled and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World. A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 116 Dupont St., S. F. Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

ESTEY PIANOS. Formerly the Pat. Arion Piano. THE OLD FAVORITE! (Beware of Bogus Actions.) BENJ. CURTAZ & SON, 20, O'Farrell Street, San Francisco.

EDUCATIONAL.

Academy of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, WOODLAND, CAL. THE ACADEMY IS JUST OPENING UNDER THE CARE OF the Sisters of the Holy Cross, Notre Dame, Indiana. Located at Woodland, the Seat of Yolo County, Cal. Unsurpassed for Healthfulness of Climate, Beauty of Surroundings, Facilities for the Study and Practice of Music, Painting, Drawing, Elocution, Languages, Etc. Its Course of Studies embraces the various branches of a Thorough Education. Terms Moderate. For Circulars containing full particulars, address as above.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE, SANTA CLARA, CALIFORNIA. This institution was founded in 1851, and in 1862 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It occupies its large buildings, with extensive shady playgrounds, covered gymnasium, swimming pool, etc. It possesses a most complete Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable Collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has, also, practical schools of Assaying, Surveying, Telegraphy, Photography and Commercial Business. For the latter a new building, fitted up with every facility for practical training, has been added.

Diplomas are given in the departments of Classical and English—and certificates in the Commercial course.

TERMS: (Payable semi-annually in advance) Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once, $15.00. Board, Lodging, Tuition in all branches of Washing and Mending of Linen, School Stationery, medical attendance and Medicine, Bath, etc., per session of ten months..... $50.00. For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to St. Ignatius College, 1821 Hayes street, San Francisco. REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J., President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA. THIS INSTITUTION, OFFERING CE-ELIGIBLE and every other facility to receive a solid and refined education, was founded in 1862. In 1868 it was incorporated by the State Legislature, and subsequently, the same Body conferred the title of Collegiate Institute on the ladies and pupils of this place of Learning. Its Course of Studies, including the Graduating Course, and preparatory courses, embraces every thing to make the Finished Lady. The Music Department is in charge of a Professor of Music, who has had the benefit of a European education. The Art Department, under a Lady Principal, who has had the benefit of a European education, and who has necessarily to be a lady of refined taste to be competent to her position, is in charge of a competent Teacher. The scholastic year begins on the first Monday in August and ends on the last Friday in June. Pupils are received at any period of the year. TERMS: Per quarter, payable in advance: Board, Tuition, in English, French, and Music, Washing and use of Bedding, Fuel and Lights, $75.00. Use of Piano, $5.00. Drawing and Painting, $5.00. Use of Harp, $5.00. Tuition in Ancient and Modern Languages, each, $5.00. Tuition in Elocution, $5.00. Bed and Bedding, $5.00. Washing, $5.00. Fuel and Lights, $5.00. Use of Bath, $1.00. Tuition in Drawing, Watercolors and Elocution, free. Tuition in Vocal Music, free to those who board in the Convent, $5.00 for others. All connections should be made to the Superior. Address, MOTHER SUPERIOR, COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, San Jose, Cal.

ST. CERTRUDE'S ACADEMY, 1301 VISTA, SOLANO CO. CAL. THIS ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES, UNDER the Patronage of the Bishops of California, is situated on an eminence in the pleasant and healthy town of Vista, Solano County, California, and offers every facility for the Education of the Young Ladies in the health and comfort of the pupils. The Course of Studies is that of the Academies of the Sisters of Notre Dame, and includes the English and French languages, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Drawing and Painting, Fancy Work, Etc. Pupils of all denominations are received. The Scholastic year is divided into two sessions of five months each. For further particulars address, MOTHER SUPERIOR, ST. CERTRUDE'S ACADEMY, Vista, Solano Co., Cal.

Terms per Session, Payable in Advance. Board and Tuition, with use of bedding ..... $125 00. Washing ..... 12 00. Use of Piano (private lessons) ..... 10 00. Use of Harp (private lessons) ..... 10 00. Drawing, Painting, French, Flute and Violin, each, extra, per month ..... 5 00. Bed and Bedding ..... 10 00. Fuel and Lights ..... 10 00. Use of Bath ..... 1 00. Terms per month, in advance: Junior Class ..... $15 00. Intermediate Class ..... 18 00. Senior Class ..... 20 00. Music, Piano lessons, with use of instrument ..... 40 00. Music, Harp lessons, with use of instrument ..... 40 00. Music, Violin lessons, with use of instrument ..... 40 00. Drawing, Painting, Wax Work, Embroidery, Etc., extra. For further particulars apply to MOTHER SUPERIOR.

School of the Holy Cross. A Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies, CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF CHARITY, Santa Clara Co., Cal. For other particulars apply to Sister Superior.

Convent of the Most Holy and Immaculate Heart of Mary, GILROY, CALIFORNIA. BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL, CONDUCTED BY the religious sisters of the M. H. and I. H. of Mary. For terms, etc., address, MOTHER SUPERIOR.

NOTRE DAME ACADEMY, ALAMEDA, CAL. (Branch of the College of Notre Dame, San Jose.) Term Commenced Second Week in July. THE COURSE OF STUDIES EMBRACES VARIOUS branches of a solid and refined education. Music, Drawing and Painting are taught by competent Professors. Pupils are received at any time during the term, and are charged from the date of their entrance. Terms have been reduced to the lowest standard. Pupils are not required to buy books, but may use those throughout, as also in Plain and Fancy Sewing. N. B. A private conveyance is furnished for the pupils, who are conveyed every morning and evening to and from the Academy. Address, SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY, Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco. CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF CHARITY. THE SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH. THIS ACADEMY, PLEASANTLY SITUATED in the City, combines all the advantages of a country residence with the facilities for a thorough education. The course of instruction includes all the branches requisite to a complete education. Terms, $25 per month, payable quarterly in advance. For further particulars apply to the Mother Superior.

URSULINE ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES, SANTA ROSA, SONOMA CO., CAL. For Particulars Address the Superiorress of the Ursulines, Santa Rosa. Seventh Annual Session Begins August 1st.

Academy of Our Lady of Angels, SANTA CLARA, CALIFORNIA. THIS INSTITUTION, CONDUCTED BY the Sisters of Notre Dame, affords all essential advantages for a thorough education, a refined intellectual and moral training, a mind and heart well-balanced by the Catholic spirit. Unsurpassed for healthfulness of climate, beauty of surroundings, and economy and facility for the study and practice of Music, Painting, Drawing, Etc. Pupils are received at any period of the year. TERMS: Per quarter, payable in advance. Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once. Board, Tuition, Washing and use of Bedding, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Painting, Elocution from rudiments to the highest, Needlework, French and Spanish language, per session of five months, $150. Bed and Bedding, if required, per session, $10. Washing, per session, $15. Use of Piano, per session, $10. Use of Harp, per session, $10. Use of Bath, per session, $1. Tuition in Drawing, Watercolors and Elocution, free. Tuition in Ancient and Modern Languages, each, $5. Tuition in Plain and Fancy Sewing, free. Pupils are required to bring with them complete Bedding and Toilet articles, similar to those they use at home. Linen must be marked. Uniform Dress for Summer, Plain Black Merino or Cashmere; for Winter, Plain Black Merino or Cashmere, with Black Silk Apron. Gold and Silver Jewelry not allowed. For further particulars apply to MOTHER SUPERIOR.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY, Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies, SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA. Conducted by the Sisters of Mercy. TERMS: (Payment invariably in advance.) Entrance Fee ..... $10 00. Board and Tuition, per quarter ..... 60 00. Music (vocal and instrumental) Drawing, Painting, and Private Elocution lessons, each, extra ..... 10 00. Washing, per quarter ..... 15 00. Use of Piano ..... 10 00. Use of Bed and Bedding ..... 5 00. Use of Bath ..... 1 00. Tuition in Ancient and Modern Languages, each, extra ..... 5 00. For further particulars address, COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, Marysville, Cal.

MT. ST. MARY'S, GRASS VALLEY, CALIFORNIA. THIS INSTITUTION CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS of Charity, is locally inexpensive, and unsurpassed for healthfulness of climate. The Academy has a most commanding site, the first of which opens August 20th, and the second on the first Monday in January. For Catalogue containing full particulars address the Mother Superiorress.

Pupils are required to bring with them complete Bedding and Toilet articles, similar to those they use at home. Linen must be marked. Uniform Dress for Summer, Plain Black Merino or Cashmere; for Winter, Plain Black Merino or Cashmere, with Black Silk Apron. Gold and Silver Jewelry not allowed. TERMS: Per session of five months: Entrance Fee (payable but once) ..... $10 00. Board and Tuition in English, French, Spanish, Vocal Music, Plain and Fancy Sewing, Washing and Mending of Linen, Use of Bed and Bedding, Use of Bath ..... 150 00. Use of Piano, Guitar, Vocal Music, Drawing, or Violin ..... 40 00. Use of Harp ..... 40 00. Tuition in Ancient and Modern Languages, each ..... 10 00. Tuition in Elocution ..... 10 00. Bed and Bedding ..... 10 00. Washing ..... 15 00. Use of Bath ..... 1 00. Use of Linen ..... 5 00. Tuition in Drawing, Water Colors and Elocution, free. For further particulars apply to MOTHER SUPERIOR.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. Conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Schools. Offers Every Facility for Acquiring a Thorough Knowledge of the Commercial, Scientific and Classical Branches. THOSE WHO HAVE COMPLETED THE CLASSICAL Course receive the degree of A. B. Scientific, B. S. the Commercial, Master Accounts. TERMS: (Payable semi-annually in advance.) Board, Tuition, Bedding, Washing and Mending of Linen, School Stationery, medical attendance and Medicine, Baths, etc., per session of ten months..... $50 00. For further particulars apply to the President of Saint Mary's College, or to St. Ignatius College, 1821 Hayes street, San Francisco. REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J., President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA. THIS INSTITUTION, OFFERING CE-ELIGIBLE and every other facility to receive a solid and refined education, was founded in 1862. In 1868 it was incorporated by the State Legislature, and subsequently, the same Body conferred the title of Collegiate Institute on the ladies and pupils of this place of Learning. Its Course of Studies, including the Graduating Course, and preparatory courses, embraces every thing to make the Finished Lady. The Music Department is in charge of a Professor of Music, who has had the benefit of a European education. The Art Department, under a Lady Principal, who has had the benefit of a European education, and who has necessarily to be a lady of refined taste to be competent to her position, is in charge of a competent Teacher. The scholastic year begins on the first Monday in August and ends on the last Friday in June. Pupils are received at any period of the year. TERMS: Per quarter, payable in advance. Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once. Board, Tuition, Washing and use of Bedding, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Painting, Elocution from rudiments to the highest, Needlework, French and Spanish language, per session of five months, $150. Bed and Bedding, if required, per session, $10. Washing, per session, $15. Use of Piano, per session, $10. Use of Harp, per session, $10. Use of Bath, per session, $1. Tuition in Drawing, Watercolors and Elocution, free. Tuition in Ancient and Modern Languages, each, $5. Tuition in Plain and Fancy Sewing, free. Pupils are required to bring with them complete Bedding and Toilet articles, similar to those they use at home. Linen must be marked. Uniform Dress for Summer, Plain Black Merino or Cashmere; for Winter, Plain Black Merino or Cashmere, with Black Silk Apron. Gold and Silver Jewelry not allowed. For further particulars apply to MOTHER SUPERIOR.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, MARYSVILLE, CALIFORNIA. Studies will be Resumed Aug. 20th. THIS INSTITUTION, ESTABLISHED IN 1859, CHARTERED IN THE State Legislature, and endowed with all the rights and privileges of a Female College, is situated in the Capital City of Yuba County. Reference required. For terms and particulars address, COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, Marysville, Cal.

BOOKS BOUGHT AND SOLD, ST. A. BOURDET'S Cheap Bookstore, 1 Montgomery.

Our Young Folks.

All letters, original contributions of news and so forth for this Department must be addressed to the Editor of Our Young Folks, Monitor office, P. O. Box 1260, San Francisco.

Our Young Folks' Department is written on one side of the sheet only, with pen and ink, and in a legible manner.

Crab and Monkey—A Japanese Story.

Once upon a time there was a crab who had built a hole in the sandy side of a big clay by he found a piece of rice cake. A monkey who was passing by, saw the rice cake; but the crab locked off home and planted the seed in his garden.

A fine tree grew up, and the crab was delighted to think of the nice fruit he was to have. He built a nice new home, and used to sit on the balcony, watching the persimmons. One day the monkey came along, and being very hungry, he exclaimed:

"What a fine tree you have here! Could you give me one of those nice ripe persimmons? I will not trouble you to pick it; I will go up for it myself."

"Certainly," answered the crab. "Will you please throw some down to me? I will enjoy them together."

Up went the monkey, hard for hard, and throw the seeds at the crab.

"Ha, ha!" laughed the crab, pretending to enjoy the fun as he ran out of the monkey's reach. "Ha, ha! I'm glad you are! I'm sure I'll come down from the tree pretty soon."

"Yes, indeed!" said the monkey, "I assure you I can; and immediately turned and started down the tree. He ate up all the persimmons dropped out of his mouth, for the crab had filled the tree first and ran off to his hole. The monkey, satisfied, he had crawled home, lay down and throughing and went home.

Just at that time a Samurai was travelling by with his several apprentices a-hunting, and stopped awhile. After hearing the crab's story they agreed to meet him

Marching to the monkey's house and knocking him out, they laid a pile of dried rice in when he came home. The poor fellow fell on the hearth, the step in the door, the seemed near the door, and the next over the door. When this was done man boner he lighted the fire to steep the rice, when his eye spied and so apetizing the face that he ran howling away to the cellar water to cool his face. Then the Samurai ran and stung him. In stepping in over off the wasp lie slipped on the sea weed, and then the rice mortar, fell on him, crushed him to death. The wasp and the mortar and the seaweed disappeared, neither ever afterward. This is an example of what happens to greedy and ungrateful people.

The Good God's Bread and Water.

The late Cardinal Lavigerie told this story:

One of our dear children, ten years of age, was dangerously ill. Her mind, too, showed uncommon intelligence, fell seriously ill; he was not to bed, and soon his little body was one single sore.

The Sisters of St. Joseph, who were taking care of him, had brought his patient one day when, according to custom, I was passing through the hospital to visit some of my children. I approached his bed, he took me by the hand and said to me, "Father, my soul is very weak.

"Yes, my child," I said, putting his hand on my breast, "I know you by that, yes, that my soul is black, for I am not God's bread and water."

"Bread and water, my child, what do you mean? What were you talking of?"

"Why, Father, I was talking to the Good God—you know, Father, I am tired of the food—I said to the child: "Father, I'm tired of the food—I said to the child: "Father, I'm tired of the food—I said to the child: "Father, I'm

THE EVILS OF OUR DAY.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE]

every time there is a struggle for Catholic interests! Victory will thenceforth be secure, and at least public action will become more earnest and efficacious, casting aside all tardiness and overcoming that inertia by which the enemies of the Christian name would wish to stifle every sentiment of courage among Catholics.

EDUCATION.

It will not be of less utility to the nation to make wise and judicious provision for the education of youth from early childhood. With the way the times and manners are going nowadays, a too large number, at the most of very great efforts, are laboring to detach from the vigilance of the Church and the salutary virtue of religion the lettered youth. They wish and ask everywhere for schools mixed, neutral, mixed or lay, in order that the people may grow up in complete ignorance of the holiest things and without the least care for religion. This evil being much more to be deplored and greater than the remedies, we see multiplying a generation indifferent to the seeds of the soul, ignorant of religion, often impious. Thus youth from the tendrest childhood to Christian wisdom and morality; it is a matter which nowadays more than anything else interests not only the Church but the State. It is what all those who have sound ideas thoroughly understand; it is in compliance we see a large number of Catholics earnestly occupied in the good education of youth and devoting to this work their great and most constant activity unknown even by the greatness of the sacrifices and the tenacity of the work. Considering the importance of the matter we should certainly desire and wish that in the public direction of youth the Church should have ample scope to fulfill the duties divinely confided to it, and we cannot do less than conjure you to devote your diligent attention to this end. At the same time cease not to warn fathers of families and insist upon their not permitting their children to frequent schools where it is to be feared the Christian faith is imperilled. See also that there are not wanting schools commendable for the excellence of their teaching and the probity of the teachers, and that these schools are subject to your authority and placed under the supervision of the clergy. We wish that this be understood not only of elementary schools, but also of those where the higher branches of science and literature are taught.

CATHOLIC LITERATURE.

As a preservative against erroneous opinions, or to anticipate them, it is useful to largely disseminate among the people wholesome doctrine in truth, and adapted to lead to the practice of virtue. We know that some societies are already formed with that laudable and salutary object, and that their operations are not in vain; wherefore we earnestly desire to see them increased in numbers, and daily produce more abundant fruits. We also desire that you should arouse strongly in general, but particularly those who by their education, fortune, dignity, or power have influence over others that in their respective spheres as well as public, they should have more and more at heart the honor of religion, the cause of the Church, and that, under your guidance, more amplier, they should act with more enthusiasm, and not refuse to assist and extend everything that is already established, or should be, for the promotion of Catholic interests.

A BIGOTED FALSIFIER.

Bishop Healy of Maine Defends the Jesuits Against the Assaults of a Malignant Author.

ously published a book, entitled "Portland in the Past." The Portland Advertiser of the 6th inst. contains the following letter, addressed by him to Rev. Rev. James A. Healy, called out by that book:

To Mr. Hon. Gould, author of "Portland in the Past".

Dear Sir:—Not knowing your place of residence, I venture to address you through the public press.

In the volume of which you are the author there is a Catholic Church is designated as the Russian Church. I shall not stop to remark on your reasonable taste in using this offensive term, as my purpose is to challenge the statement you make concerning Father Rasle and the Jesuits, on page 180. You say:

"Rasle was a "Jesuit of the four vows," the fourth of which is to undertake any mission to which they may be ordered. A part of the Jesuit creed is that the end justifies the means; hence, the enormity of the Indian Bloody Rasle."

The Jesuits whom you thus libel, as compared with the ordinary clergy, are what a corps for special service is to the troops of the line. They are known and esteemed in the Church as learned and pious body of men, devoted to teaching and missionary labors. With reason therefore do Catholics feel aggrieved at such a charge which they know to be false and consider unworthy of a man of your general information.

I presume that by "Jesuit creed" you mean not a creed, that is a "summary of articles of faith," as Worcester and lexicographers generally define it, but a code of morals.

As a pupil and friend of the Jesuits for 40 years, although not one myself, and being possibly conversant with their writings, I have found them all concordant with St. Paul: "And not rather (as we are slandered, and as some affirm that we say) let us do evil that good may come, whose damnation is just."—Romans iii. 8. I am told that in Europe there has been a standing offer of reward to anyone who will produce the phrase, "the end justifies the means," from any approved Jesuit writer. None, therefore, for the vindication of their good name, or for their condemnation if they deserve it, I hereby offer to pay for 100 copies of your work above named, if you produce in the satisfaction of any Protestant gentleman acceptable to both of us, from any Jesuit author known or easily available for publication that "the end justifies the means. You may begin with the handbook of Father Rasle, namely Father Busenbaum's "Medulla Theologiæ Moralis."

Let me add that the testimony of any apostate, enemy or outsider will not be deemed proof. Nor will it be worth while to discuss with you if it was a great crime Father Rasle to remember that he was a Frenchman; nor how great an enormity it was for the Indians "to drive of settlers from their own lands;" nor whether it was an abomination for them to prefer the alliance of their constant friends, the French, to that of the Puritans, who offered and paid £100 "lawful money" for the scalp of every Indian, and even for that of Father Rasle himself.

I might suggest the reading of your own book as a means of deciding whether Father Rasle or his murderers were seeking to do evil that good might come, but I waive this and content myself with inviting you, as before, to bring a single page or line of an approved Jesuit writer who maintains the above quoted detestable maxim. Not to produce it now that you have made the assertion your own, would be to close yourself with those described by St. Paul; to produce it will entail the penalty above offered by yours respectively.

JAMES AUG. HEALY,
Bishop of Portland.

Portland Sept. 1.

—Now Celibate is the Church of St. Sulpice and this church they are now indictable with overpress, for it is this month 1,000 years old, and 90 years to spare.

THE CONFRATERNITY OF THE MOST HOLY ROSARY.

Some Wise, Yet Optional Regulations, the Observance of which will Powerfully Promote the Interests of the Confraternity.

In the first place it will be found to be most beneficial to divide in a parish the Confraternity into several sections. The best way should embrace or include all the children that are capable of reciting the Rosary, but we have not yet made their first Communion. By accustoming the young to the devotion of the Rosary, they will have continually the most ready opportunity of drawing down from Heaven upon themselves special graces which will enable them to prepare themselves for the most important act of their whole life. The young people should be taught that the Rosary particularly belongs to the children that are studying the Catechism of Perseverance, or those well advanced in the knowledge of their Catechism. The Rosary will undoubtedly confirm in piety and innocence such children, and will assist for them the most efficacious graces to repress their rising passions. The third section should include all the young girls, no matter what other organizations they may belong to, for there is no higher Confraternity consecrated to Mary in the Church than that of the Rosary. In this way the spirit manifested by the early associations or congregations of the Children of Mary in the Convent of the Sacred Heart will be reproduced, and be productive of the most advantageous results. Let the Rosary be the Most August Mother of God, no one could be more fitted to take charge of the young girls, and to make what her organizations they may be long

Poetry.

THE ARTIST MONK.

I read a legend of a monk who painted
In an old convent cell he dwelt in early,
Pleasant of mortal sight, of virgin mind,
And the sweet Christ-face with the crown of thorn.

Poor dauber! not fit to be a chapel's treasure!
Full many a laughing word mock'd at his toil,
But the good abbot let him, for his pleasure,
Adorn with blooms his solitary cell.

One night the poor monk dreamt, he saw his Master
Come to Him in the cell, as close as living
Love that imparts man with the Cross I view:
"Dint sor—Me vain I toil and stain in sorrow!
What man so sorry can still use me He admits;
My life's work in all calendars—to-morrow
I'll cast my all wrought pictures on the fire."

He raised his eyes; within his cell—oh, wonder!
There stood a Visitor—the same form was He;
And a sweet voice the silence rent asunder—
"I work on work that's done for Me, O Friend!"

And round the walls the painting shone resplendent
With lights and colors to the world unknown,
A perfect beauty, and a his transcendent
That never yet on mortal nerve shone.

There is a meaning in the strange old story—
Let none judge his broken's work or need;
The pain bestowed gives to the art its glory,
The noblest purpose makes the grandest deed.

THE BRAVEST BATTLE EVER FOUGHT.

The bravest battle that ever was fought!
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not,
It was fought by the mothers of men.

Nay, not with cannon or battle shot,
With sword, or ashler peal,
Nay, not with whatever weapon of death,
From mortals of wonderful zeal.

But deep in a cottage room darkened
Of woman that would not yield,
But bravely, silently bore her part—
Lo! there is that battlefield!

No marshalling troops, no bivouac song;
No banners to gleam and wave!
But oh! those battles they last so long—
From babyhood even to grave!

Yet faithful still as a bridge of stars,
She fights the battle to win—
Fights on, and on, in the darkened room,
Fights—and fights within!

Or with banner and battle-shot!
And neither to shout nor yield,
Not even the kingliest victories fought
Are fought in those silent ways.

O! spotless woman in a world of shame,
With splendid and silent sway,
Bear back thy head, for many are yours,
The kingliest warrior born!

Literary Miscellany.

Ramon the Religious.

A Catholic Story Founded on Fact.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY A SANTA FE CONTRACTOR.

CHAPTER I.

THE CAPTIVE.

My story, every word of which is true, although the names and places may be changed, is located in New Mexico, long before railroads crossed the plains of the well-known land.

On a beautiful morning in August, Ramon, a noble boy, and fair representative of the old Spanish race in New Mexico, was reclining in the shade of a large cottonwood tree, which grew in front of his father's hacienda, or country seat, situated on the banks of the Rio Grande, which flows through the valley of Taos, in the county of Rio Arriba, in the Territory of New Mexico. The place was called Ranchito de Don Ortiz, and his father, who had met with an accident, had been unable to meet him with a carriage or conveyance, when leaving Santa Fé. This was the reason why he was alone and on foot. His kind masters had remonstrated with him on his imprudence, as he was when the Mexicans were at war with the powerful and savage Navajoes. All was in vain. His father expected him. He must go, God will protect him on the way.

So, Ramon, forming a bundle of his scanty wardrobe, a stout staff in his hand, left the ancient town and walking in the direction of the city, soon was in the valley of the Tesuque river, which at that time was nearly dried up, and following it for a while, left the pueblo of Tesuque on his left, and, passing over the divide, descended again into the beautiful valley of the Pecuaque, and ascended the lame to the north west.

Ramon had studied hard and won a medal several prizes at the commencement held that quarterly. His steps were light, his heart happy, and he counted the fatigue as nothing. He must reach San Juan that day. To morrow he must cross the river, and enter on a more painful and longer journey. But he was young and inexperienced, and all things were smiles.

In the evening he reached San Juan as he had promised himself, somewhat tired and footsore. He repaired to the house of a friend of his father who had moved from San Juan to the north west, where now is located what is called Tierra Amarilla, and there he received news of a most unpressed kind. The Navajoes had made an excursion upon the white settlements, and all the able-bodied male population were on the trail to replace them. He had hoped he could find a horse in San Juan with which to finish his journey; the man had taken the horses, and Ramon was obliged to start again on foot on his long and perilous adventure. He crossed the river with the help of an old man who was to bring back the skiff. Bidding adieu to his aged friend, he kept on his journey, although much tired. The country was decked out in all its picturesqueness, abundant rains having fallen of late. The woods sparkled under the dazzling beams of the rising sun; Ramon's heart glowed with pious ambition, and he could not refrain from kneeling down and adoring God, his Creator.

He remained some minutes in this kneeling posture, then arose and hastened joyously on, his heart full of the future he anticipated in seeing his beloved parents, particularly his sick father, once more. His family belonged to the well-to-do farmers of Tierra Amarilla, but their extensive fields had somewhat suffered from the father's sickness, and he was with the Navajoes, which had taken all the able bodied men away. Ramon was an only son, and his parents, sires above their generation, gave him what is beyond all the riches of the world, an excellent and religious education.

From his tenderest years they had taught him to know and love God, to trust in Him and in Him to seek his only happiness. They had sent him to college, despite them, across many an imbecoment to procure him the boon of education. On his side he had avoided all useless expenses, had studied hard and pleased his teachers. And now, with the view of saving his parents trouble, he had started on foot with nothing but a light bundle and staff, on his homward journey. Street and entire, so far he had found his pedestrian expedition extremely agreeable, though he did not conceal from himself the fact that his home lay far away, more than a hundred miles from Santa Fé.

His path lay through a dense wood of cypress, pines, and here and there a few stunted oaks. All was silence; the birds alone were chirping on the shady branches of the trees. Up, up went Ramon, now and then stopping to refresh himself, to take a look at the valley behind him, and to follow with his eyes the oft meandering course of the Rio Grande, which from the mountains resembles an immense serpent creeping through the verdure. Up a while more, and a turn of the road then shut out behind him the beautiful panorama. Then he sat down and rested upon a rock in the shade, and for the last time for many years behold the renowned valley.

His path now lay directly to the west for two miles. But he could seek this turn of the road by taking a footpath to his right. This path descended into a canon, where flowed a fine stream of water. He could slake upon his thirst and eat a morsel of bread. He could easily go up the other bank of the canon and rejoin the well-beaten road. Ramon continued in the path. He was often obliged to remove the branches of the young undergrowth which barred his passage; but it rather pleased him than otherwise, as it was the result of his exertion, refreshed by the presence of water at the bottom.

All at once he observed a smoke, light and blue, rising above the trees. Some travelers like himself he thought, and he was glad to find some companions to meet a friendly face. What was his horror on beholding a number of swarthy-visaged men; their faces painted, their bright blankets resting on their shoulders, their guns by their sides, eating a frugal dinner near the babbling spring! They were Navajoes! Strike he could not, to fly he did not have the strength, he remained as if rooted to the spot. They did not look at him, they seemed perfectly unconcerned. They knew, however, that he was there; their scouts had seen him far away, but he had not seen one of them following him like a fox on the path by which he came, to cut off his retreat should he attempt to fly.

A deep voice and behind his back: "Flow!" and taking the youth by the arm led him to the group below. Ramon made no resistance. Note word was spoken, although they knew enough of Spanish to understand the verbs with him. Deep face's only passed their lips. They motioned him to sit down. They offered him some water and some of their food. Ramon, who was young and hungry, not withstanding his mishap, drank the water and ate a morsel of bread which he drew from his pocket, refusing the Indian food. They offered him no violence; but after having offered him another cup of water, they motioned him to mount a spare horse, Ramon mounted. The Indians fastened his feet under the girth of the horse, and on a signal given by the chief of the band, they ascended the steep side of the canon, crossed the old road, and, through paths only known to themselves, took a westerly direction. Two Indians were sent in advance to reconnoiter, and in a single file they proceeded in silence. The horses on which Ramon sat was held by the Indians; while another warrior armed with a field rifle, brought up the rear.

When Ramon had recovered from his first terror he raised his hands to heaven: "O merciful God," he prayed, "who didst make the heavens and the earth, thou hast permitted this afflicction to befall me; grant me thy grace to live resigned to thy will. Comfort my parents. They expected my return to-morrow evening. Oh! how my mother and my little sisters will be distressed when they fail to meet me at the gate, and cannot discover what has befallen me! All their inquiries will prove fruitless. Nevertheless, I place my trust in Thee, dearest Father in heaven! Thou wilt, nor alone me to them! Thou forsakest not those who trust in Thee; Thy love and truth endure the forever."

Traveling during the night and hiding during the day, the Indians with their captive on the fourth day reached the Navajo territory, and the great chief Narbona adopted him for his son, instead of his dear boy Nakai-shah, who was about the same age with Ramon, but who had been captured by the Mexicans, and led into captivity, in the war of the year before. There he was stripped of his garments, and those of the captive boy put on him. He was quickly adopted by the chief; the ceremonies of his adoption were reserved for the sister, when the war would be over and quiet restored. No violence was offered him, and except a strict vigilance upon him, nothing was done to hurt his body. But he was a Navajoe slave.

CHAPTER II.

THE SLAVE.

Will's Ramon traveled with the Indians, he beheld with sorrowing eyes the immensities of his native country fade away in the distance. He was also on the lookout for some Mexican party who might rescue him and rescue him. Nothing of the kind had happened. For this, the Indians had avoided as much as possible the trail, for they who had advanced far away from their party to capture men and beasts, particularly the latter. Patient men, they well knew the country; always on the alert, they had escaped the encounter of the Mexicans, but they had been ordered to avoid them. However, they brought back another hundred flocks or beasts, but they had captured Ramon, and they hastened to bring him to the chief.

Thus the not a young Mexican, some years older than himself, who had been captured in some preceding war, and was a part of the chief's household. When Ramon was brought to the chief, this young man, name Pedro, was absent in the mountains of the west with an Indian, keeping watch over the flocks of the chief. Although for several years among the Navajoes and adopted by them, they would not bring him to war with the Mexicans, and thus it was that he was absent. Now this Cemio, some years before, when living with his parents, had the opportunity of passing through Tierra Amarilla, had been entertained with his father, by Ramon's parents, and a fast friendship had grown up between them, and Cemio was very attentive to Ramon.

The new slave was also sent to the mountains with the flocks, in the company of Cemio and an Indian who had charge to watch over them and prevent their escape till the return of the party which had made a dash upon the Mexicans. Cemio and Ramon were however to report to the chief every week. This week sped on, and the party returned. They had lost some of their number, but had quite a booty in horses and cattle. The booty was divided according to Indian custom, and the young men were recalled home. Ramon was now to be adopted by the chief, as a few more who had been captured were to be disposed of. A great ball was to be given, thanksgiving dances were to occupy them for a week, and the adoption, with initiation, was to be a part of the festivities.

On the evening before the chief called Ramon apart. The chief had quite a good and large home,—for the Navajoes are a rich nation and are wont to imitate the white—sitting room for the family, three other rooms and a kitchen. Two sitting room was also used as a dining-room. The chief called Ramon into one of the sleeping rooms and closed the door behind him. He sat down on a blanket and motioned Ramon to do the same. He was an old man, and his hair was as white as snow, and scarcely an old head was a finer one; tear together was passed here; he will spend the first evening of your adoption in the Indian style.

And he drew her closer to him as she spoke.

The summer is gone, and the autumn, with its rich and many-colored leaves, and storms have passed away since that evening, in the old cottonwood.

A young man, on a bright moonlight night, came reeling through the silent streets, and scaring over the quiet houses. He shouts and sings, and is jeering, and is sad by others who are half frightened at his scene. So, they all laugh at the sad, and feel sad at the jeering. He stops at one door, and the place where the moonlight shines on it, and there are a few people in the church porch. The sing-song voice of a man is heard from the tops of the graves, as though the "sacred dead" were at some mischief, they shake hands, and the man fall with a crash and jumping up, he runs off, and the sad one, the unseemly mirth of one who is not responsible for his actions.

There are two graves near the old yew tree; and the grass has overgrown them; there is a cross by and the date on it each side her just been thrown up. The sexton is standing by, and the mourners are gathering, they bow their heads and down, and lower and lower, and the sexton, with a lower voice than any one else, and yet in the hollow, in the way yonder that we know, is the clear ringing voice of a young man, and the sexton

THE MONITOR.

TRANSCRIPT TYPE OF PUBLICITY.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1886.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Christian parents, let us beg your earnest consideration of this important truth, that upon the body and individuality, most practically depend the solution of the question, whether it is possible for a Christian to accomplish the great work which Christianity and the Church expect of it at this time. Be frequently and vigorously impressed with the infinitude of your duty to Pious and Popular and distinguished Catholic Journalism. Whatever other duties you have spinned and secured everybody, that no one certainly stands in need of impressions to be convinced of this truth. But all this will be only words in vitiated, unless it can be brought home to each parent and Catholic family individually. Each parent and each Catholic family will recognize it as the privilege and duty to constitute themselves supporting the Catholic press, by subscribing for one or more Catholic periodicals, and keeping himself well acquainted with the literature of the Catholic Press. Let Catholic parents learn to attach to his spiritual development and to accomplish the doctrinal mission. But chance a journal that is thoroughly Catholic, industrious and edifying, not one that would be, while Catholic in name or profession, yet so tame, so timid, so indifferent, so lukewarm, so half serious, or so lifeless and unattractive in Catholic brightness.—PASTORAL LETTER OF THE THIRD PLENARY COUNCIL.

Our Thirteth Volume.

With this number the MONITOR commences its thirteth volume, and thus the opportunity is afforded us of returning our hearty thanks to the Rev. Clergy and a large number of the Catholic laity all over the Pacific coast, for their kind co-operation each year in extending the MONITOR's circulation, increasing its influence, and encouraging our staff of contributors to renewing fact respecting Catholic marriages in Minister and Connaught is that our marriages celebrated between Christians and Sharpeners.

Concerning the births in Ireland the Registrar General's report gives the testimony

Of the children born 112,735, or 97.5 per cent., were legitimate, and 2,910, or 2.5 per cent., illegitimate. Of the children born in wedlock there were 103.2 boys to 100 girls; of the illegitimate births there were 109 boys to 100 girls—a strange fact which the report does not attempt to explain. Taking the Distinctive births in their order of legitimacy, we find—Ulster, 1.3 per cent.; Leinster, 2.3 per cent.; Munster, 2.2 per cent.; Connaught, 0.9 per cent.

Ulster is the Orange stronghold in Ireland; the province where Protestantism prevails in many forms and sizes. Leinster and Munster contain many Protestants, but there are scarcely any non-Catholics in Connaught, save the landlords and squireens whose fathers sold their birthright for a mess of English pottage. Now let the Sightseeing Tourists visit the Emerald Island, and see for themselves "The Condition of Catholics not but Jonesand but some anti-Catholic crank convert for them a neat gross and mouldy letter to Carnal Sinners, Papal Secretary of State, asking for the removal of Archbishop Kirby from his diocese. This diabolical document was published and copies sent to every anti-Catholic organ on American—presumptive evidence that it did not originate with Catholics but that it was the deep design of Protestants to bring Rome down to the Catholics. Rome who preach a hopes religion on Sunday and then savagely dabble in the blood of their fellow-creatures on Monday.

The most dangerous element in America today is composed of that very class which is called political people. Not all of them. They are the whited sepulchres of Westminster, and whenever one of them comes up for election or appointment, the Republican Ship of State is in danger of being the Republic a great favor to defeat him so as to deter other men of his class from attempting the very same dodge.

Wesley, the founder of Methodism, was a Catholic priest, and when he died he died perfect, and when He founded His Church, he, in effect, put down all creeds, as it was thus "the pillar and ground of Truth," the religious Rock set in the Ocean of creeds, against which shall the winds be waves of Weslyanism and even the statutes and schemes of Satan shall never prevail. That, Mr Bishop, is the Catholic Church's claim. Now, what is Methodism? It is not a man made sectarian system of false religion connected with the Church? Wesley had no more right to make a religion than he had the author of a religion was tried on for treason and hanged for it. Methodism is just such a sneaking, whimpering, hypocritical scheme of religion hitherto so worthless that even the hen-pecked husband of Mrs. Wesley.

Mrs. Caudle could not hold a candle to Wesley's wife as a curtain lecturer, and in order to divert her thoughts from the eternal disturbing tongue lashings which his poor worrying partner gave poor dear Wesley, he invented and promulgated religion which would have in course—turned his away from his unhappy home and thus escape from the blistering tongue of his helpmate. Wesley was the first perpetual man took to preaching as a remedy. Methodism—although so belied by its adherents—is the only creed that Christ approved of and blessed. Methodism preaches half the Catholic Church, that we do not call it name the story of a Methodist minister and his wife. The story goes that the minister preacher in question was in the habit of constantly telling still stories about his wife's shortcomings and failings, to the great shame of his congregation, and when preaching to his congregation, and when speaking he told his sin Hawkins, regular Weslyan "whipper" after the fashion prevailed in Papal times. He was intoned piously and he prayed fervently, and then he took pious to his congregation, and he said—"Brethren, I am sorry that my wife has my Hawkins—regular Weslyan "whipper" after the fashion prevailed in Papal times. He was intoned piously and he prayed fervently, and then he took pious to his congregation, and he said—"Brethren, I am sorry that my wife has Irish Catholic Chastity and Protestant Immorality Compared.

Cold, unchanging and stern statistics are the best index of the moral or mental status of any people, hence when we roll our minds to the facts and figures which we furnish them with in order to compare the difference between Catholic chastity and Protestant immorality in Ireland, we taken from the twenty-second detailed annual report of the Registrar General, published in the London Pall Mall Gazette, they will

	Protestants.	Catholics.	Difference in Ratio.
Antrim	40	26	1.5
Down	73	37	1.97
Londonderry	49	25	1.96
Armagh	69	40	1.7
Fermanagh	54	46	1.5
Tyrone	53	47	1
Monaghan	74	26	2.8
Cavan	27	73	1.6
Donegal	27	73	1

The counties marked [*] returned Orange members to the recent Parliament, so it would seem that illegitimacy prevails greatest where the followers of "the great, glorious and immortal King William meet abroad."

Some writer has said that morality is the cement of true civilization, and, if this be true, what a set of cursed savages must not the Orangemen of the Protestant North of Ireland be! Yet, it must be borne in mind that the immorality represented by Protestantism in the North of Ireland, is only a reflex of the gross carnalism which has become chronic in all Protestant countries throughout the world! In Germany, Scotland, where some people believe that none but Presbyterians get to Paradise, the number of illegitimate births, in proportion to the population, is three times greater than in Ireland. In England and Wales the ratio is two to one. Sweden is the most anti-Catholic country in Europe, there being less than a thousand Catholics to leaven the lustful lump of four and a half millions of Evangelical Lutherans. Now let us see how those Lutherans "evangelize" morality in their native Sweden. Out of 2,714 children born in the capital city of that Protestant land, 1,077 were legitimate and 1,637 were out of wedlock. This is the hideous degradation ever reached by any people claiming to be civilized, and those statisticians seem to show what a corrupt factor Protestantism is where it has no influence to purify, elevate and sanctify at least a portion of the people.

Were it necessary we could cite nearly all the Catholic and non-Catholic countries in the world in order to prove that as a rule Protestant morality has the same baneful influence. And how could it be otherwise? What keeps Catholic men and women virtuous? Prayer, fasting, confession, penitence and the frequent reception of the Holy Eucharist. Without these Catholics would become just as carnal minded as their non-Catholic neighbors who have none of them. It is these faith, strengthened by these keeps the Catholics of all portions of the world pure and better than their Protestant brothers who have no faith for their lust passions, no check on their sensuousness, and hence they wallow in sensuality and then become baptized in crime and a stain upon Christian civilization.

—There are 165 priests engaged in active duty in the Brooklyn diocese.

The Rosary During this Month.

To home and propagate the devotion of the Rosary, the Dominican Fathers, Sacrum Apostolatus and Supremor Anno, were issued in 1883 and 1884 by our Holy Father. In 1885 by his command the Sacred Congregation of Rites ordered the Rosary and Litany of our Lady to be recited daily during October in all cathedrals and churches of the Catholic world, so long as the much lamented condition of the Church should continue. This year, the year of the Jubilee, his Holiness urges upon the faithful the practice of the Rosary. The more that public and private calamities assail us, says the Encyclical Pontiff, the firmer should be our confidence and purpose in seeking aid and relief. This should be prompted by Mary, Queen of Our mercy, who wishes us to receive all we have at her hands. The Sacred Congregation then directs the Bishops in all countries to urge

Farm and Home.

Occupation.

What a glorious thing is occupation for the human heart! Those who work hard seldom yield to fancied or real sorrow. When grief sits down, folds its hands and mournfully feeds upon its own tears, weaving the dim shadows that a little exertion might sweep away into a funeral pall, the strong spirit is shorn of its might, and sorrow becomes our master. When anxious care upon you sets heavily, can not with the waiter, wrestle not with the torrent; rather seek, by occupation, to divert the dark water that threaten to overwhelm you into a thousand channels which the desire of life never stops. Before you dream of it, those waters will fertilize the ground, and give birth to fresh flowers that will become pure and holy in the sunshine which penetrates to the path of duty in spite of every obstacle. Grief, after all, is but a selfish feeling, and most selfish is the man who yields himself to the indulgence of any passion which brings no joy to his fellow-man.

Good Humor.

Keep in good humor. It is not the great calamities that embitter existence; it is the petty vexations, the small jealousies, the little disappointments, the minor miseries, that make the heart heavy and the temper sour. Don't let them come in the way of vitality; it is always foolish, and always distressful, except in a few cases, when it is so kindled by seeing wrong done to another; and even that subtle rage seldom sends the matter. Keep in good humor.

The company of a good-humored man is a perpetual feast; he is welcome everywhere. Eyes glance at his approach, and difficulties vanish in his presence. Franklin's indomitable good humor did as much for his country in the old Congress as Adam's eyes or Jefferson's wisdom. He clothed wisdom with smiles, and softened contentious minds into acquiescence. Keep in good humor.

A good conscience, a sound stomach, a clear skin, are the elements of good humor. Get them and keep them, and—be sure to keep in good humor.

The Habit of Swearing.

The meanest, most useless and most contemptible vice that ever gave in the hot breath of the fiend is profane swearing. We protest against it as members of society, as decent men. On boats, in cars, in places of business, on the open streets, at money doors and everywhere else rings the incessant oath of the habitual swearer. Young men just learning to curse appear to think there is something manly and brave about it; while old swearers startled the unconvinced remark they were made cold-blooded blasphemies and a variety of diabolical curses. No man or woman of any refinement or decency at all can be other than both incensed and shocked by these brutal and vulgar verbal missiles every day; and to follow who is shamefully guilty of projecting them can do otherwise than think because it gives no thought of such men and women with every vile epithet they hear him utter. Public profanity ought to be an indictable offense with a penalty of ten days in jail for every oath.

How to Put Children to Bed.

Not with reproof for any of that day's sins of omission or commission. Take any time but bed-time for that. If you ever board, lodge, or even stay a little while in the family, you will be able to see what their sinning spells with a kin and a blessing. The time will come when, all too soon, they will lay their heads upon their pillows lacking baby. Let them, then, at least, have none of future sorrow or shame on their brow. Give them their rosy youth. Nor need this involve wild license. The judicious parent will not mistake my meaning. If you have ever met the man, or the woman, whose eyes Samuel Weskopp filled when a little child has crept trustingly to its mother's breast, you have seen one in whose childhood's time "Dignity" and "Severity" stood where love and joy should have been. Too much indulgence has ruined thousands of children; too much love, not one.

Every One Has His Cross.

Things are pretty well balanced in this world as far as taking comfort goes, and I begin to believe that, high or low, all have their tribulations. Fishes are hooked, worms are trodden on, birds are fired at. Worry is everywhere. Poor men's wives worry because the bread won't draw, or the clothes line breaks, or the milk burns, or the pans of grise is needed with potty, or they can't afford to hire help. Rich men's wives worry because the preserve dish is not of the latest pattern, or because somebody failed to call when they were at home, or because the party happens, or because some gander's wife overlooks them, or because their husbands never go home to eats, spoils dinners, get drunk, and cuts up shines into unfashionable. Consequently, but worry averages about the same. The scale of miles is different on different maps, but plans remain just so alar apart, and so do Humanity and Contest.

Learn All You Can.

Never omit an opportunity to learn all you can. Sir Walter Scott said that even in a stage coach, he always found somebody who could tell him something he did not know. Conversation is often more useful than books for purposes of knowledge; therefore, a mistake to be morose and sit among persons whom you think inferior, for a little sociability on your part, I draw them out, and they will be able to teach you something, no matter how lowly their employment. Indeed, some the most important remarks are made by men of this description, respecting their particular pursuit. Hugh Miller, the Scotch geologist, owes not a little of his fame to observations made when he was a journeyman stone mason, and working in a quarry. Socrates said that there was but one good, which is knowledge, and one evil, which is ignorance. Every grain of sand goes to make a beach. A gold digger takes the smallest nuggets, and is not fool enough to throw them away, because he hopes to find a huge lump some time. So in acquiring knowledge, we should never despise an opportunity, however unpromising. If there is a moment's leisure, spend it over a good or instructive talking with the first person you meet.

Little Sins.

A little hole in a ship sinks it; a small breach in a sea-lock carries all away before it; a little stab in the heart kills a man; and a little sin, as it is often improperly called, tends to his final destruction.

—Doctor—"Ah! looking badly pay! see. You have evidently not been following my instructions about taking exercise." Patient—"Yes; I walked half a mile yesterday." "Good. You remember I told you that you must always have some object in view when you walk so as to get your mind off your troubles. Did you make yesterday's outing a matter of business of some kind." "Faith! I went and bought a cemetery lot."

Family Fun.

THE DEATH OF CORNWALLIS.

A Page in Virginian History Hitherto Unpublished—Uncle Manuel's Story.

The negroes are naturally great romancers, and the last scene of the revolution having taken place here, amongst the people with an astonishing fund of anecdote and reminiscence, and the negroes were not slow to take their share. The flurry of 1812, when a British fleet lay off the mouth of York River, and the sacking of Hampton occurred, affected the very old negroes, who might possibly have been born at the time, with personal experiences enough to establish them as story-tellers. They seem to have agreed so long their recollections and traditions, and it is an excuse on to this day to find a somewhat darky who not only remembers "de revolution," but took an active part in it, and was on terms of personal intimacy with Washington and Lord Cornwallis both.

One of the most famous of these was a certain Uncle Manuel belonging to one of the old families here, whose account of the staged Yorktown was thoroughly more graphic and interesting in every way than the comparatively tame story related in the history books. Uncle Manuel was a preacher on Sunday and a general factotum the rest of the week. He was the terror of the little darkies round about, but adored by the children of the planters in the neighborhood, who never read of any event in history of which Uncle Manuel was not an eye-witness, nor ever heard of any place in the geography that Uncle Manuel hadn't been to. He had seen Napoleon Bonaparte "somewhere near de Nort' Cabiny Ind," he didn't justly remember, and had viewed the Niagara. The latter, he said, done pointed him very much, and didn't throw up half as much spray as "de whole that got stranded in the river," and he "reckon it sort he blowed de shingles off yo pa's house hard." "De battle of York" was a piece de resistance, and nothing pleased him so much as a circle of children have around him begging "Now please, please, Uncle Manuel, do tell us about the Revolution." Uncle Manuel, like a bashful young lady asked to sing, required considerable urging. "Now, children, you done heard de ole man tell bout dat."

"Yes—yes—but tell us some more." The last was Uncle Manuel's secret and could not become non-serious, because he never did it twice the same way.

"Well, honey, I speck I have to try an' tell you sumpty. 'Bout it. Dere nobody know more'n old Uncle Manuel, kase I was wid General Washington all de time."

"Oh, we know—yo' gran'pa—he jes' tole us yesterday, an' General Washington and General Lafayette dey was dere, sarkin' de pigs' tails. I hear Massa Ned say he sold de day she tole 'em bofe she warn't going to marry nuther one on 'em—so that was de fust an' oulinest time I ever see General Washington an' Lafayette. Dey bofed an' hollored dat day, an' he say, crying: 'Manuel, my heart is broke.' Well, you see, I was young, an' I jes' cut up wid de General Washington seein' dat he was mighty mad like, an' he did not seem to mind an outen his sight; so one day he say to me—he was a great one for sayin' dat, jes' like Massa, an a lisp chap. I'd like to see dat lisp, jes' to see if he wouldn't say he bes' niggers for dis fresh hog? But ole marse he say: 'General Washington, I wouldn't take ten o' yo' niggers, nor twenty on 'em, for Manuel. But I'll tell you what I'll do, jes' take de boy an' keep him till arter de resolution, an' sen' him back. An' dat's de way I got her to aid him. What I'll do, jes' take de boy an' keep him till arter de resolution, an' sen' him back. An' dat's de way I got her to aid him. Well, was hard dis week at York. De redcoats came yonder, yonder de sun rises, were there, Uncle Manuel?

"Tousands! Dere was millions on 'em—millions, chile."

"And how were French at all."

"Hit—hit—the history says—"

"Well, chillen, was de history man dar? Was de history man dar, I say? I say he wasn't here, nuther dere nor yonder, an' he hasp o' lies in books nohow. Now, I didn't see no French, an dey warn't none, nuther Washington an' Lafayette an he fit an' he fit an' he fit an' he fit an' he fit an' he fit. Every time General Washington he say dat he fitteth dem dere in a row. Sometimes he would fire an' I load an' sometimes he would load an' I fire. He rid a big white hoss, and every time he fit he fit dem dere jes' a dinner plate. I was on a big black hoss, an' we was gallopin' over de field, General Washington shouin' 'What's dat dis red coat Cornwallis? Dog my cats, but I'm a goose to aspire to hide!' Arter awhile I looked down in de hollier by a nice simmon tree, an' sho' nuff, I see General Cornwallis makin' himself small an' trying (or crawl under de fence. But de fence was too to de ground." General Washington he seen him too, an' he say: 'Manuel, yo' an' he hain't fit yo' rabbit." Den General Cornwallis he set on de ground, and he spubbla round out 'kaut you could wan gwayteen roun' sun,' an' he tuef rattle iron he had de agar. An' he say: 'Himself, he bag—gab it up!' An' General Washington he didn't say 'cuffin' tall; but he drawed he sword an' he drawed sharper'n up dat mirrum." Here Uncle Manuel would make a dreadful flourish.

"Honey, he drawed he sword—an' he cut he hide right off."

Jackson and the Portuguese.

General Jackson understood no language but English, and he was often in a dilemma from being unable to converse with foreign Ambassadors in Washington. The following comical story is told in a recent book, "Court Circles of the Republic," and is said to be true:

When Mr. McLane was Secretary of State, a new Minister arrived from Lisbon, and a day was appointed for him to be presented to the president. The hour was set, and Mr. McLane expected the minister to call at the State Department, but the Portuguese had misunderstood Mr. McLane's French and he proceeded alone to the White House.

He rang the bell, and the door was opened by the Irish porter, Jimmy O'Neil, "Of, pass mon' Monsieur le President," said the minister.

"What does he mean?" muttered Jimmy. "He says president, though, and I suppose he wants to see the president."

"Oui, Oui," said the Portuguese, bowing.

Jimmy ushered him into the Green Room, where the general was waiting his coming pipe with great composure.

The minister made his bow to the president, and addressed him in French, of which the general did not understand a word.

"What does the fellow say, Jimmy?" said he.

"Don't know, sir; I reckon he's a foreiner."

"Try him in Irish, Jimmy, and Old Hickory."

Jimmy gave him a touch of the genuine Milesian, but the minister only shrugged his shoulders with the usual "Fend d'l."

"Ah!" exclaimed Jimmy, he can't speak Irish, sir. He's French to be sure."

"Send for the French cook, and let him try if he can find out what the gentleman wants."

The cook was hurried from the kitchen, sleeves rolled up, apron on, and the carving knife in his hand.

The minister, seeing this formidable apparition, and doubting if he was in the presence of the head of the nation, he fear ed some treachery and made for the door, before which Jimmy planted himself to keep him in.

When the cook, by the general's order, asked who he was and what he wanted, and he gave a subdued answer, the president discovered his mistake. At the mention McLane name to, and the minister was presented in due form.

But it is said that General Jackson always resented allusions to this incident.

Conjugal Fidelity.

A merchant of Athens was recently captured by thieves bragging who carried him off to the mountains, whence he wrote a letter to his wife recommending his misfortunes, and mentioning the following most unpromising passage: "My captors are very ill-mannered, affronted the brigands do not receive this sum by the 15th inst. they will cut off my nose; the 16th my ears, the 17th my upper lip, the 18th my lower lip, and the 19th, if the money is not forthcoming they will kill me." The poor woman wired her best efforts to procure the required amount, but it was not until the evening of the 19th that she had managed to scrape together the 1,000 drachmas for her husband's ransom. She then said to a neighbor: "My husband must look a perfect fright by this time. I think I will keep the 1000 drachmas to make a better match with.

Saved by a Miracle.

A couple from the humbler ranks of life came before a justice of the Peace to be married, when, the ceremony being over, the newly married pair seemed in no hurry to depart.

"What's the matter," asked the new husband.

"I never told you that I don't know how to cook, sobbed the bride.

"Don't, that is all that have anything for you to cook. I'm a poet."

"Oh, I love you."

She Was a Young Wife.

Butcher (to young housekeeper)—"I have nothing left, mum, but a lean and tough old rooster."

Young housekeeper—"Very well, you may send a tender young hen."

Not a Natural Boy.

"Wonder what's the matter with Smallie's little boy. He doesn't seem right in his mind to me. How is he to you?"

"O, yes, the boy's all right. There's nothing really wrong with his mind. "He's a good boy and religiously inclined, that's all."

"Ah! Well, I thought there was something wrong with him, that is, something odd—different from other boys, you know."

A Wise Father.

Youth—"I have come to ask you for the hand of your daughter."

Physician—"Do you have!"

Y.—"Yes sir. I have enough of this world and I want to insure her in comfort, even in injury."

P.—"Yes, I am aware of that, but will you treat her kindly? Will you be a good husband?"

Y.—"Sir, I vow——"

P.—"O, never mind rowing. You intentions are all right, no doubt. But I must be sure that you won't worry and lick the life out of her after you get her. Take off your coat and let me sound you to see what kind of a liver you've got."

Be Lost the Combination.

"Did you see the butchers' parade?" asked the sub-editor of a casual caller yesterday afternoon.

"No."

"Sorry that man throwing sausages at the reporters."

"Well, I never sausage a thing before."

"But it's the truth, I tell you."

"Why, the butcher caller arrested at home he said he was a liver."

"My dear, in the butchers' parade to-day there was a man throwing sausages to the spectators."

"Yes, I know I never saw anything like that before."

"Neither did I."

He waited five minutes for his wife to laugh, and then went out to wonder how he lost the combination.

Somewhat Absent-Minded.

Prof. Zauberer of the University of Bonn is a very absent-minded man. He was busily engaged in solving some scientific problem. The servant hastily opened the door to the study and announced a great family event. "A little stranger has arrived."

"Eh?"

"A little boy."

"Little boy! Well, ask him what he wants."

Working Up.

Two men who were once warm friends but who had not seen each other for nearly twenty years met on a railroad train. After an exchange of greetings one of them said:

"Jim, you looking feather then you did. Congress?"

"I beg your pardon, but it's 'General' now."

"What?"

"My friends call me 'General.'"

"Well, General, we used to call you 'Congress!'"

"Yes, I am proud when I came out of the army."

"Thank what I thought. I don't see what you could have done since to raise your rank."

"Why, sir!"

"No, I don't. What was it?"

"I've moved farther West for times."

Mistook His Marks.

"I had intended, fellow citizens," said a man who attended a political meeting in Missouri and had been unexpectedly called on to address the crowd, "not to say anything to-day. I came to listen, not to be heard. At some future time I will take pleasure in talking to you on the political issues of the day, but will thank you if you will let me off now with no remarks.

"You can't get off with Nora Marks, you dirtiest dog from nowhere," yelled a stalwart and corrupt young Missourian who had brought Miss Nora to the meeting himself from one of the back townships, and he pulled off his coat and coaxed the speaker to adjourn with him outside the crowd and fight it out like a man.

A Boston Girl, of Course.

"Let me see, mount Echalinda De Wogge, as she set on the porch last night with her young man.

As she stopped short Charles remarked, "Echo, what about to speak, Miss De Wogge?"

"Yes, but stopped in time, you might have considered it a hint."

"Will you tell me what you were about to say?"

"You will not feel offended?"

"Certainly not."

"I was thinking it was about a month since I had tasted ice cream, but, of course—"

"Don't mention it. The fact is, I was thinking of inviting you to join me with a generous, but I had to dig that a chasm and disconvered tyrodynamics in the universe."

"Indeed! Then I will join you. Charles, and we will see if we can find any tyrodynamics. I do take such an interest in these scientific discoveries."

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,
968 and 970 Folsom St.
San Francisco
—WHOLESALE—
LIQUOR DEALER.
Established 1870.
We will sell the following low prices with receipts from this date:
Table Wines . . . 50c, 75c, 90c, and $1.
Angelica Wines . . . $1, $1.50 and $1.50
Mount Vineyard 1877 15, 18 & 24 Gas . . . $1.
Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2.
Sauternes Rhinewine . . . $1.50, $1.50 and $1.
Bourbon Whiskey. . . $1.50, $1.75 and $2.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc. $1 per gal. and upwards
Orders from country will receive prompt attention.

NEW MUSIC.
J. FISCHER & BRO., New York.
A. WALDTEFEL, 737 Market St. San Francisco.
PACIFIC COAST AGENT.
Music, in Sets, M. A. Quintet, for orchestra and 1 to 3 parts, Mazurka, Polka, Polka Mazurka, Polka Schottische, Waltz, Quadrille, Lancers, Schottische, Galop, Polka Quadrille

DAVITT IN SAN JOSE.

Origin, Objects and Labors of the Irish National League.—The Land Question in Ireland.—Home Rule Certain to be Secured by Parnell and his Compatriots.

On last Thursday, Mr. Davitt arrived in San Jose, and was received by a committee consisting of Hon. B. D. Murphy, Joseph Enright, Joseph McNally, M. Byrne, A. M. McCabe, M. Nihill, and M. F. Green. He was escorted to the Lemoine House, where his high, frank and sacerdotally was the guest of H. E. Rhodes. On Thursday evening he lectured before an unusually large audience in Turn Verein hall, where he was received with rapturous applause.

Hon. B. D. Murphy, as chairman, introduced Mr. Davitt to the audience, and announced a song from Mrs. Prescott, who accordingly sang, with exquisite expression, sofily yet distinctly, "Kathleen Mavourneen," and in response to a hearty encore, favored the audience with "The Last Rose of Summer."

THE LECTURE.

Mr. Davitt on again coming forward was emphatically welcomed and he returned thanks for the kind reception. Though it was the first time, he remarked, that he had visited San Jose personally, he had long been familiar with its name, having often, in connection with the work of the Land League and of the National League, found occasion to recognize its generous efforts in aid of the fight across the seas for years past. He begged, in behalf of the Irish people and Mr. Parnell, to thank the people of San Jose for their generous aid. He believed they were well satisfied that good work had been done by the financial assistance thus rendered. The Irish question was not the same now that it was ten years ago. There was now, though connected, two distinct struggles in which the Irish people were engaged. One was conducted in the British Parliament for home rule; the other was to bring about a better land system. In regard to both, there had been an enormous progress of late, both in the House of Commons and in Britain public opinion that was equal to half the battle. Certain it was that in two or three years more of fighting, a substantial victory could be won and they should have an Ireland—that for which Irishmen for several generations had fondly hoped—a Parliament with the right to legislate for home affairs.

OBJECT OF THE ADDRESS.

The object of his address would be twofold. First, to give the audience an idea of how the struggle was progressing; and secondly, to endeavor to satisfy the intelligent desires of those not of the Irish race as to the facts and figures necessary to the justification of the cause, the latter being the most important portion of his duty, the value of the moral support, from a moral public opinion being simply enormous. It had been the boast in England for a generation that if you scratched an American you would find a Briton, and he hoped the American people without exception declaring that Gladstone was right in acceding to the demands of the Irish people for nationalization. Home Rule as the political phrase was well understood in America, but the social or land phase was less so. He would therefore first endeavor to give the hearers the leading features of the great agrarian movement, as the struggle this winter would be more on root than on Home Rule.

THE PRESENT LAND QUESTION.

In the United States, England, and the lower part of Scotland there were alternative employments, so that the masses of the people were not confined to the land as a means of subsistence. Nothing of Irish history well know, however, that English rule had purposely crushed out in the past all manufacturing industries in Ireland, necessitating its people to cling to the soil with extraordinary tenacity. The mere mention of agrarian trouble in Ireland connected with the overthrow of the British Parliament, and the passage of the act of Union in 1801. Prior thereto, our ancestors resided in Dublin or on their estates, thus having kindly relations with their tenants and spending the money in the country they received it from the people. But when the Parliament went to London, the landlords followed, leaving an aristocracy, which they could only do by increasing their rents. This answered so long as war prices lasted. But when this inflation ceased or the conditions of competition were by no means proportionally reduced. Competition with the United States, Canada, Australia and India, in most of which countries rent was not paid, made a reduction in production in the prices of the agricultural staples of Ireland, viz.: grain, cattle, butter and flax, so all rating agreement on Great Britain, as well as in Ireland, that in 1879, British Ireland had more land under cultivation then it has to-day, and there had been an increase in the number of horned cattle, while in the United States alone that year 100,000,000 more acres had been placed under cultivation. In view of this enormous influx of food products, it could be understood why farmers in Ireland could not pay rent and compete successfully with those who did not pay rent.

ORIGIN OF THE LAND LEAGUE.

These conditions gave rise to the Land Leagues and to the formation of the Irish Land Leagues. The result was the introduction of Gladstone's land bill of 1881, the scope of which was that the tenant who had no lease might give notice to a landlord or a land court as to any unfairness in rent, and the landlord had to show cause why it should not be reduced. But this court was offended and influenced by landlords, so that its reductions only amounted to five per cent on the total rents of Ireland, and eighteen per cent for 200,000 out of a total of 600,000 tenants in Ireland, all who had leases being expressly excluded from the benefits of this act. Yet some three leases had commenced, and within the last twelve years, the four chief staples of Ireland had decreased in value from 30 to 50 per cent, proving periodical adjustments of rent to be necessary.

Last week Parnell introduced a bill to stop evictions pending investigation on payment of twenty-five per cent, which the Tory Government rejected. Last March the enfranchised Conservatives nominated Sir James Caird, wrote the London Times, which is howling for evictions, that rents must disappear and the lands were not worth purchasing at any price. If there had been any doubt as to the evictions bill fail, it had been obviated in 1881. It is best to leave evidence to landlords and the government, but when men's wives and children were assaulted with destruction, we need not be surprised if they resorted to any available means of resistance. Offers that the landlords had scornfully rejected a few years ago they would jump at to-day. But public opinion was set in against any tenant buy out Irish landlords, the feeling being to let them make the best terms they can with the people, who will not be a hard on them as they are with their tenants. And that is what they want some to.

Ireland at the late election returned twelve rule members by 4 to 1, Scotland, 3 to 2, Wales, 6 to 1; Outside of England proper, 129 are for Home Rule and the substitution of federation for bureaucracy.

"The next few years," he concluded, "will see Ireland's Parliament restored and with it that peace and prosperity, happiness and content which were born by right and which the American people I am sure heartily wish she may enjoy." At the conclusion, there was much cheering, and the assemblage was dismissed, well pleased with the address.

Correspondence.

We urgently solicit correspondence from all parts of the Pacific Coast on matters pertaining to the progress of the Church in the general interest.

All communications should reach our office by Tuesday, noon, to be insure insertion.

OUR STOCKTON LETTER.

Stockton Fair. Irish Times among the Stocktonians.—Grand Success of the Catholic Fair.—Names at Prize Winners.

STOCKTON, Cal., Oct. 4, 1886.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir:—This year last May Rev. M. McNabb, of Stockton, was appointed by the Bishop of Alameda. On taking charge of the new parish he found the church debt so large, that in no small to meet the requirements of his congregation. Again the debt was so large, that since attached to the church which left it so burdensome on the parishioners, that on the Parsonage thing things, the newly appointed pastor commenced a series of entertainments for the parish to devise some means of liquidating the debt on the church, and supplying funds for a residence. They determined on holding a fair, which was a fine success, was held in Stockton last week, and lasted five days. The fair, which was a fine success, was held in Stockton last week, and lasted five days. On the 13th last. Aside from the charitable objects in view, the attractive nature of the fair was well deserving of taking a ticket, or, a three days' visit, to the gift of Mr. McCurdy, a lotto gift which, the gift of Rev. P. Brady, a gentleman's table, the gift of Rev. T. McNabb, a painted mirror, the gift of Miss Kane, etc., etc. Nothing will be found wanting in the Irish lassies in charge, who are as full as Irish Table Rose, Miss Lizzie Kane, Miss Nellie Kane, Miss Mamie Kane, Mrs. Sullivan, Mrs. Carbonel, Mrs. Elmer, Mrs. Holmes, Mrs. Tobin, Mrs. Mullen, Mrs. Mc. Cory, Prudent, Fancy Table No. 1—Mrs. Edwards, Miss M. Kelly, Miss M. B. Smith, assisted by Misses Buckner, Snow, Donahoe, Lynch, Mrs. Dunda, Mrs. McCarthy, Refreshment Table—Mrs. Mc. Cully, Mrs. Higgins, assisted by Mrs. Cory and Misses Mc. Cory, Tyson, Table—Mr. and Mrs. Leidan, Master W. Liston, Sofa Pillows—Misses Flowers and Post Office—Misses M. Vanoey, E. O'Brien, Shooting Gallery—Misses Mere Institutes.

Yours respectfully,

CORRESPONDENT.

FINANCIAL RESULTS OF THE SACRED HEART FAIR IN TEMESCAL

Following is the financial result of the Catholic Fair recently held in St. Lawrence Hall, Emp Avenue, Temescal, for the benefit of the Parish of the Sacred Heart of that place:

Fancy Table No. 1—Mrs. Jaramillo (Country), assisted by Misses Mary Kane, Mamie Frazier, Maggie Redwood and Jeremiah O'Connor, realized $[illegible]

Fancy Table No. 2—Mrs. P. Dunn, Misses Lizzie Dunn, Mamie Doyle, Minnie Cora Blessed, Mary Hinchman and Mamie Doyle and Mr. J. Buckley, realized $[illegible]

Fancy Table No. 3—Mrs. T. H. Sullivan and Miss Mary O'Rourke assisted by Misses Julia O'Rourke, Maggie Dunn, Maggie Walsh, Julia White, Moore Dunn, Mrs. Mc. Cully, Mrs. O'Rourke, Jr. and Richard Montgomery, realized $[illegible]

Refreshment table, Mrs. P. Doyle, assisted by Mrs. M. Farrell, Mrs. Mc. Cully, Mrs. Dunn, Mrs. J. Moran, and Miss Doyle, realized $[illegible]

Mission Table—Mrs. Mc. Cully, Misses Mary Moran, Mamie Mullen, Mercedes Villa, Nonie and Maggie McFarlane, Master Joseph Mullen and Faustino Gallant, realized the sum of $[illegible]. At the close, by accepted Mr. Vincent de Paul Conference, $[illegible] was collected, making a total of $[illegible] for expenses, $[illegible]. Net total, $2,[illegible].

Rev. Father Shea feels sincerely grateful for the result of the Fair, and he wishes to return his thanks to the ladies who had charge of the tables and their assistants, also to the gentlemen, and to all those who have in any manner contributed to make the fair a success, without forgetting the Mr. Mc. Cully, the liberal donation of the Fair during its progress.

A beautiful scene recently occurred in St. Michael's church, Lipscich, on account of which will appear next week.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Cork.—A few nights ago upwards of one hundred men, some with horses and carts and others with sledges, crowbars, and skibbs, appeared on the farm of Kilebarter of an evicted tenant named Donohoe, and in the dead of the night pulled down the cabin, and had them all removed before morning. Mr. Sanders is agent over that estate.

The anniversary of the death of Sister Magdalene Jennings, of Charleville, was observed by religious rites. With the other Sisters of Mercy she had come to Charleville in the month of the cholera epidemic, and for the time of her labors her holiness was at its height there. She labored with the unselfish devotedness which always characterizes those of her holy calling, and lately, while endeavoring to alleviate the pains of the fever stricken, she herself caught the germs of the disease to which, after a brief illness, she succumbed.

On Sunday, Sept. 5th, a collection was made at the rate of this Chapel at Kilfarglan, in aid of the Irish Parliamentary Fund. The collection was being made by the members of the National League, and when Father Ahern, P.P., came to the chapel he expressed his pleasure at what they were attempting the patriotic work. The collection refused to leave, and, though the men were not honoured by the fair, the collection remained close by during the collection. The action of Father Ahern was commented upon at the National League meeting which was subsequently held.

Clare.—On Sept. 6th, at Cullina House, St. Patrick's Bridge, Cork, a dejeuner was served on the Most Rev. Dr. Flanagan, Bishop of Killaloe, on the occasion of his visiting the city. Amongst those who sat in address and a testimonial on behalf of the laity of the diocese. Addresses were read from the various parishes, and along with the clergy were Messrs. J. Gunnon, M. P., M. Cleary, J. Patrick Shea, J. P., D. O'Donnell, Quin, C.E., T. Neville, J. P., Dr. Kennedy, Ennis, Dr. Cleary, Ennis, Dr. Hynes, Ennis, Dr. Lynch, Ennis, Dr. Hynes, Ennis, Dr. Lynch, Ennis, Dr. Hynes, Ennis, Dr. Lynch

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

THE SAILOR BOY.

The breeze blew load as the evening close
Revealed the Armont moon,
And hailed the mighty star that night
That hailed the mayde soon;
Soft breeze dreams, like weary beams,
Of the sailor boy, who
Asleep under some tree where shade
Or the billows whistling creed.
Oh, Annie fair, with golden hair,
I'll see thee yet soon more,
My love as true with spirit of blue,
And, oh, what joy of pure alloy
Rose in his soul like flame,
As 'neath the sky with sparkling eye
He saw her onlooker beam.
The warbler trees in the sorrel breeze,
Sang a lullaby to him,
Yet still was strong and like a thrum,
With his memory lay once more,
Oh, Annie dear, I soon shall hear
Thy laughing voice once more.
My darling girl with locks of pearl,
Our bark nale to the shore.
Now on the strand the sailor stand,
And loved ones lovingly greet,
But where's the form that in every storm
Smiled on his shipboard sweet,
Alas, they said, she is gone, she is dead,
Her life's work is done,
And never again in joy or pain
Will you see your true love more.
Yes, dear, dead, my hopes are fled,
I ne'er shall see her more,
My joy, my pride, my promised bride,
Why did you leave our shore?

In a lonely dell where the willows dwell,
He sadly stray'd to grieve,
And when there in the midnight air
Heard a sweet spirit voice
Breathe a sweet spirit sailed the main
With white sail as before,
For he was and sighed, and dropped and died
Near her grave by his olive shore.
Oh, Annie fair, Earth's latest lair
Ill shed alms for thee,
For we shall meet in Heaven's home,
From pain and sorrow free.

FRANCIS QUINN.

Literary Miscellany.

Ramon the Religious.

A Catholic Story Founded on Fact

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY A SANTA FE CONTRIBUTOR.

CHAPTER III.

THE SEAL.

Winter had passed and Ramon had been solemnly adopted, but, with the reluctant consent of all the braves united in council, had not been initiated into the religion of the mission. Camilo, who was often in Ramon's company, was as kind to him as ever, but was colder and more distant than before. Ramon confessed it but did not know why. He asked if he had offended him.

"No, no, dear Ramon," said the unfortunate youth, "but I have a sorrow that no one can cure."

"Tell it to me, dear Camilo," said Ramon, "I will pray for you to the Blessed Virgin will help thee."

"I cannot," said Camilo. And his eyes filled with tears. Ramon did not understand. Alas! Camilo had been initiated into the religion of the mission, he had forsaken God for the devil, had forever abandoned all prayer, he was a Navajoe!

Spring had now come with all its beauty, nature was clothed in her best robe, and seeming to his mind the great chief was to go north, east, south, west, but one, and there, every year he went with his family; he war there surrounded by all his possessions. A few patches of land were planted with vegetables, there particularly he grew the potato for his year's use. On the last day of May he set out in light wagon, his Indian from the east. The chief, his wife Ewa-to-mi-os, and her two daughters sat in the cart. Ramon followed on horseback. Camilo with some Indians were there already to prepare the house. The chief and his family took possession of the house, which was to be kitchen, dining-room and sleeping-room; the boys were to sleep in an outhouse adjoining the principal apartment. The house was of adobe, the entrance was of boards nailed together, and a coarse roof.

All went well; Ramon was the constant companion of the two girls, who lored to ramble about the flocks, and sometimes venture across into the wood, to gather wild raspberries and straw berries, and many other kinds of little fruits, in which the old chief delighted.

One evening, after the heat of the day was somewhat abated, the chief proposed to Ewa-to-mi-os to go and see how the shepherds and their animals were. Ramon and the two children followed. The sun had already gone down, and the shepherds kindled the night fire to keep away beasts of prey which abound there. The chief and his wife went farther to look at the mountain where lofty pines covered; pale still glossed in the evening sun, though the valley was fast sinking in shade. Ramon and the children ran about collecting fuel. On a sudden, Ewa-to-mi-os utters a loud cry and falls to the ground. A bear was approaching swiftly, and the chief could neither run away without his wife nor lift her. Ramon took in the whole situation at once. Seizing a brand from the fire, he ran swiftly towards the bear. The beast saw close upon the chief. Ramon keeps his self-possession, swings the brand rapidly over his head, and causes it to blaze fiercely. The bear stops uneasy. Whirling before him this fiery wheel, he advances boldly against the fearful animal. The bear who had taken two steps forward stops again. Ramon advances; the bear with his eyes fixed upon the youth, retreats a few steps. The savage beast stands still again; it waits as if to devour the young man, and annihilate him with its heavy paw. Ramon making always no fear, and still advances with his fiery weapon. The bear quails, stands still a while, but, turning, turns away to a considerable distance, and in the thickening gloom of the approaching night. Ewa-to-mi-os is saved.

Ewa-to-mi-os paralyzed with fear could hardly rise, but supported by the chief and Ramon, she returned to the house, in a state of great nervousness. The children surrounded her, and with caressing words made her little by little forget her fear. The chief only said, wringing Ramon's hand: "My son, thank you." He could say no more for the present, as his heart was full. The night came on, and nothing more was said on the subject that evening. In a short while all retired.

CHAPTER IV.

RAMON'S MIND.

Next morning, Ramon rising early went out on the mountain side and gathered a fine bouquet of wild flowers, as varied and as abundant in New Mexico. No doubt the flora of the territory is as fine a one as that of the Savoy and Swiss Alps. The variety is extensive, the hues magnificent, the scent astonishing. A botanist who would have time and leisure, could form of New Mexico flowers alone an immense and rich herbarium.

Ramon placed his flowers in a glass upon the table, and was about to withdraw, when Ewa-to-mi-os who was up called him back "Dear Ramon," said she, "thou art a noble boy. Thou saved my life at the risk of thine own. It was a great and noble action.

"Oh!" replied Ramon, whose heart was still full of the conversation he had before with the sachem, "it was but my duty as a Christian. Christ who gave his life for us bar commanded us. 'Love one another, as I have loved you.'"

"That is a noble precept," said Ewa-to-mi-os, "I should like to learn thy religion. Tell me all it is. I am a poor ignorant Indian woman, I have worshipped the lion and the serpent as my manitous. But since thou saw thou dost not believe in the manitous, but thou prayest when alone, thy lips move, and I have seen thee touching thy forehead and thy breast. What does it mean?"

Ramon sold with great feeling how his father and mother had instructed him from his childhood in the Christian religion; how they taught him to know God, and Jesus the well beloved Son of God; how Jesus commanded us to love the Father in heaven above all and to love all man on earth as ourselves. He told of the sufferings and death of Christ; he remembered all the history of the passion of Jesus and detailed it to the poor Indian woman. Many of these sayings he repeated word for word. He spoke of the beauty of the Christian religion, and made a deep impression upon Ewa-to-mi-os.

The dying Saviour's words upon the cross "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do," drew tears to her eyes, and to those of the little girls who had come near during the words of Ramon.

"That is true love," said Ewa-to-mi-os "This Jesus was in all that he did and suffered, love and mercy itself."

Ramon told them of his college life, and his studies; of the frequent confessions and communions, of the order observed in the house; he spoke to them of his success, and showed them the medal he had obtained with the prizes he was carrying along to place in his mother's heart, when he was ensplored by the Navajoes, and brought to her hut.

"What alone troubles me here," said he bursting into tears, "is the affection of my mother and two little sisters. Oh! how anxiously must they await my return. And my poor old father, who expected his son to take his place while he is sick, and before returning to college! Oh! poor father and poor mother!"

Ewa-to-mi-os was moved—how moved in silence for a long time, deeply meditating in the Indian hut. She had seen nothing but revenge and blood, and the Christian religion taught nothing but love towards all men. But she said no more and dismissed Ramon while tears were coursing down her cheeks, and the two girls thanked him for what he had told them of the Christian religion.

CHAPTER V.

EXECUTION OF A WRAT REBELLE.

Ewa-to-mi-os for two hours was engaged in this conversation, two hours that flew like minutes, but now breakfast had been on the table for these two hours and had remained untouched. She commenced to be uneasy at the prolonged absence of the old chief. She knew he loved early in the morning to stroll about the premises, and the thought of the bear of the preceding day recurring to her mind, she became exceedingly uneasy, and she begged Ramon to look after her and call him. He found him not far from the house, seated upon the dewy grass, buried in deep thought, so that he did not hear the young man's step, till he was close upon him. He beholding Ramon he smiled and shook hands heartily with him and called him son. The great sachem was pray to two different ancestors; after the service rendered him by Ramon he could not keep him as a slave or a peon, and the idea of separating from him was breaking his brave old heart. What should he do? These thoughts were causing his torment.

With a serious and gloomy air he entered into the apartment.

"Oh my dear husband," cried Ewa-to-mi-os, "as he entered the room, "I wish you had been here and heard all that Ramon had to say upon the beauty and excellence of the Christian religion over our breakfast. When I was a child my father had a Mexican woman, snatched away by our people; she was good, good, kind, she was a mother to me. She often spoke to me as Ramon has just done. Her relations came to visit her, and, making arrangements for her, and still my father, they took her away to her happy country. We shed many tears at parting. Ever since I used to think of her, and wonder, Ewa-to-mi-os, that you will one day be a Catholic, that in a true Christian." I wish I was a Christian, I have wished it for years, and the words of my father's slave still ring in my ears."

The chief looked thoughtful. Not a word escaped his lips for a while. He was considering the difficulties in his way. he was afraid of the resistance of the Navajoe part. Those medicine men or jugglers, also called sorcerers, are no other than spiritualist mediums. They are spread over all the Indian tribes of both Americas from the Esquimaux who inhabit the arctic regions to the extremity of Patagonia.

All interiors agree in saying that the most perverse and wicked men in all the tribes are the medicine men. In almost every tribe each individual Indian has his manitou, his tutelary spirit or divinity. To this manitou the Indian addresses his prayer or supplication and offers his sacrifice, when he is in any danger, sets out for war, goes fishing or hunting, in fact in any enterprise in which he is about to engage, in order to obtain success or some extraordinary favor. He believes that he can ask everything of his manitou, reasonable or unreasonable, good or bad. To obtain favor he must be able to handle the bow and arrow or the revolver, or the rifle. Initiation to the manitou being considered as the most important act of life, the adept is required to submit to ceremonies and practices which are generally very difficult and often very painful. The young man after making deep incisions on the fleshy parts of the body, or after a rigorous fast, is supposed to discover in his dreams the form or resemblance under which the manitou manifests itself. During his whole life he is bound to bear the image or a mark of it, and on all occasions he makes presents, offerings and address his prayers to it. Fetishism is the feather or lock of a bird, the claw or tooth of an animal, a root, an herb, a fruit, a stone, no matter what. He believes that this tutelary spirit will protect him against the evil spirits or genii who injure the children of earth, excite the winds and waves, lightning, thunder and storm. This spirit protects him against the attacks of his enemies and all beasts, and against all disease.

Now, all these ceremonies must be performed by the medicine man, and woe to the man who would try to get rid of them. Their diabolical arts always impose upon the simple and ignorant Indian. They are the deadly enemies of all virtue, their harvest is most plentiful in the greatest ignorance. For all their tricks they receive some sums, either in money or kind, according to the solemnity of the prayer or sacrifice.

Should a man in the state of mind of the great chief, strive to become better, they will first by tricks and reviling throw obstacles in his way; if they are unsuccessful, they will excite some fanatic under the guise of a command from his manitou to do his bodily harm, and even to put him to death in great secret, and throw his body away, so that no one is ever the wiser. Religion, they know is their enemy; for if men pray their old superstitious, their private interests are lost, their illicit gains vanish, their wealth is destroyed. Hence, their hatred and resentment towards all that is good, hence their incessant war against education, hence their fury against all that is spiritual and moral in life, and their increasing persecution, whenever they can exercise sufficient influence over their adherents.

The chief said nothing, but his heart was divided between righteousness on the one side, and the fear of the medicine man on the other. He should be very wise. Accepted not to arouse the suspicions of the Navajoes in their home fish. Hence his cheerful and even his warding sign made his wife keep silence.

After breakfast the chief ordered Ramon to take the children and play about the house, but not to stray far.

"Dost thou know," said the chief to his wife, "that Ramon was sworn—how sworn served Ramon day and night, his in a hero. He would not for favors deny his God, he never would consent to worship the frog and serpent. The chiefs have very constantly allowed me to adopt him without initiation. But they are suspicious of him. The medicine man are busy against him, and they will spare neither thee nor me, dear wife."

"Why not fly with him to his country, far away from the Navajoes?" said his wife, "or at least give him an occasion to flee, and we will follow."

"Thou art a silly woman! Dost thou not know that every step of ours is watched; that the medicine men and chiefs have their eyes?"

"But no one will suspect thee if thou takest the garb and language of a pueblo Indian, and go in search of our lost son. Thou hast said many times that thou intended going thyself to search for him, as the men thou hast sent for that purpose were unsuccessful. Thou hast money, hide it, take it away; load a pony or two with what thou best most precious, take some Navajoe with thee—leave here Ramon, but visit his parents, consult them, leave with them what thou has taken away; return at once, say that thou hast some tidings of our son, and then will make another voyage, when the third of Heaven will enable us all to go away and reach his father's house. At thy leisure then thou canst return thy search for our son.

"Thou art a wise woman," said the chief, his brow clearing up, "more wise than the chief of the Navajoes. But, tell me, will thou leave Hermon at the mercy of the chiefs and medicine men?"

"No," said the wife, "when we leave the last time, it will be to go together to meet our son and return with him to our tribe. Appoint one of the chiefs to command in thy stead during our absence. He will be thy friend, and the lord of power will render him happy in thy absence. Thou will send Ramon with Camilo, whom no one will suspect, on some errand, to the house in the Rio Grande, and there will meet thy son, father, thy took her away to her happy country. We should many tears at parting. Ever since I used to think of her, and wonder, Ewa-to-mi-os, that you will one day be a Catholic, that in a true Christian." I wish I was a Christian, I have wished it for years, and the words of my father's slave still ring in my ears."

The chief looked thoughtful. Not a word escaped his lips for a while. He was considering the difficulties in his way. he was afraid of the resistance of the Navajoe part. Those medicine men or jugglers, also called sorcerers, are no other than spiritualist mediums. They are spread over all the Indian tribes of both Americas from the Esquimaux who inhabit the arctic regions to the extremity of Patagonia.

All interiors agree in saying that the most perverse and wicked men in all the tribes are the medicine men. In almost every tribe each individual Indian has his manitou, his tutelary spirit or divinity. To this manitou the Indian addresses his prayer or supplication and offers his sacrifice, when he is in any danger, sets out for war, goes fishing or hunting, in fact in any enterprise in which he is about to engage, in order to obtain success or some extraordinary favor. He believes that he can ask everything of his manitou, reasonable or unreasonable, good or bad. To obtain favor he must be able to handle the bow and arrow or the revolver, or the rifle. Initiation to the manitou being considered as the most important act of life, the adept is required to submit to ceremonies and practices which are generally very difficult and often very painful. The young man after making deep incisions on the fleshy parts of the body, or after a rigorous fast, is supposed to discover in his dreams the form or resemblance under which the manitou manifests itself. During his whole life he is bound to bear the image or a mark of it, and on all occasions he makes presents, offerings and address his prayers to it. Fetishism is the feather or lock of a bird, the claw or tooth of an animal, a root, an herb, a fruit, a stone, no matter what. He believes that this tutelary spirit will protect him against the evil spirits or genii who injure the children of earth, excite the winds and waves, lightning, thunder and storm. This spirit protects him against the attacks of his enemies and all beasts, and against all disease.

Now, all these ceremonies must be performed by the medicine man, and woe to the man who would try to get rid of them. Their diabolical arts always impose upon the simple and ignorant Indian. They are the deadly enemies of all virtue, their harvest is most plentiful in the greatest ignorance. For all their tricks they receive some sums, either in money or kind, according to the solemnity of the prayer or sacrifice.

Should a man in the state of mind of the great chief, strive to become better, they will first by tricks and reviling throw obstacles in his way; if they are unsuccessful, they will excite some fanatic under the guise of a command from his manitou to do his bodily harm, and even to put him to death in great secret, and throw his body away, so that no one is ever the wiser. Religion, they know is their enemy; for if men pray their old superstitions, their private interests are lost, their illicit gains vanish, their wealth is destroyed. Hence, their hatred and resentment towards all that is good, hence their incessant war against education, hence their fury against all that is spiritual and moral in life, and their increasing persecution, whenever they can exercise sufficient influence over their adherents.

The chief said nothing, but his heart was divided between righteousness on the one side, and the fear of the medicine man on the other. should be very wise. Accepted not to arouse the suspicions of the Navajoes in their home fish. Hence his cheerful and even his warding sign made his wife keep silence.

After breakfast the chief ordered Ramon to take the children and play about the house, but not to stray far.

"Dost thou know," said the chief to his wife, "that Ramon was sworn—how sworn served Ramon day and night, his in a hero. He would not for favors deny his God, he never would consent to worship the frog and serpent. The chiefs have very constantly allowed me to adopt him without initiation. But they are suspicious of him. The medicine men are busy against him, and they will spare neither thee nor me, dear wife."

"Why not fly with him to his country, far away from the Navajoes?" said his wife, "or at least give him an occasion to flee, and we will follow."

"Thou art a silly woman! Dost thou not know that every step of ours is watched; that the medicine men and chiefs have their eyes?"

"But no one will suspect thee if thou takest the garb and language of a pueblo Indian, and go in search of our lost son. Thou hast said many times that thou intended going thyself to search for him, as the men thou hast sent for that purpose were unsuccessful. Thou hast money, hide it, take it away; load a pony or two with what thou best most precious, take some Navajoe with thee—leave here Ramon, but visit his parents, consult them, leave with them what thou has taken away; return at once, say that thou hast some tidings of our son, and then will make another voyage, when the third of Heaven will enable us all to go away and reach his father's house. At thy leisure then thou canst return thy search for our son.

"Thou art a wise woman," said the chief, his brow clearing up, "more wise than the chief of the Navajoes. But, tell me, will thou leave Hermon at the mercy of the chiefs and medicine men?"

"No," said the wife, "when we leave the last time, it will be to go together to meet our son and return with him to our tribe. Appoint one of the chiefs to command in thy stead during our absence. He will be thy friend, and the lord of power will render him happy in thy absence. Thou will send Ramon with Camilo, whom no one will suspect, on some errand, to the house in the Rio Grande, and there will meet thy son, father, thy

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

Obligation Resting on Catholic Parents to Support Them.

There are a few Sundays yet before we give their chap. a lecture on the subject, their obligation as to goods supporting parochial educational institutions begun and with their own children, and if they do anything beyond this for the support of Catholic schools, it is a work of supererogation and deserving of high praise.

This, however, was very erroneous way of looking at the subject. It is not that the obligation of the parents, or parents, to give their chap. a Catholic education, is based upon the parental relation, and the obligation is apart out of that relation. But the obligation to establish, maintain and support Catholic schools, is not confined, in their case, to provide Catholic school facilities merely for their own children. It includes them, I comes, and first and before others, but it extends out beyond to all children, no matter who they are.

Moreover, Catholics who are naturalized and have no children are under an equal obligation though based on another reason than that just mentioned, with Catholics who are married and have children, to support Catholic schools. This statement may surprise some of our readers, but it is true nevertheless.

The ultimate purpose and design of Christ our Saviour, lead us that all the children of Christian parents should be educated in the knowledge and love of God Him, their Redeemer and Father. Christ Jesus has frequently declared that the children are the hope of the Church, and the recent Plenary Council of Baltimore based its reasonings and its practical conclusions on this, in multiply parochial schools upon the express and emphatic declaration that they are necessary to the existence and prosperity of the churches, and that without parochial schools the existence or the future of churches that do not maintain them will be imperiled.

Now no one can deny that it is the duty of every member of the Church to contribute to the Church's support. Though not from the Church he derives all spiritual privileges and means of grace he enjoys, and the reception of which is necessary to the maintenance of his soul's spiritual life, he has no manner and ground, in grace, not to do his share of the work. As thus he receives much from the Church, it is but simply justice, and, what is more honesty, that he should give much of what he can give to the Church in return. In like manner, therefore, it is the duty of every member of the Church, without regard to his having children or not, and without regard to where he resides his own children, if he has any, to contribute to the full extent of his ability the parochial schools. For upon them especially and emphatically the continued prosperity of the parochial churches depends, and without the parochial schools the very existence of those churches would be imperilled.—Catholic Standard.

Growth Since the Last Census.

How shall we realize something of the nation's progress and power of growth? Since 1860 the population has increased from 31,443,321 to 50,155,783, an increase of 19,000,000 inhabitants, almost as many as the least fertile of the states in years as but one of the elements at work. From abroad we have added during the last ten years nearly a million, a population greater than that of the entire State of Illinois. Another element of population than this nation was when it entered on its independence, has been brought to these shores across the seas, and has grown with our growth. Twenty-seven years ago the Pacific coast of Europe, opportunity or stimulus to effort, he is not but little. Here he produces the power of the nation. But when a population so large as that of Illinois, is added to from across the sea, another population greater than that of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut together in 1860 has been added by immigration, while in 10 years. Consider what these four States were and what they produced in 1860, and then consider what the population of these four States has been added to the country in ten years.

Growth in population, surpassing that of any other country, has been the most striking general feature of the nation's development. In round numbers the population of the United States at the first of September we had 132,000. The Middle States had added one third to their mileage, the Southern between them and the Mississippi only one-third, and the Southern States west of the Mississippi and the States east of the Mississippi more than one half—over 12,000 miles. In four States and one Territory—Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota and Dakota—we have added 10,000 miles. These consider that every mile of new railway, in regions thinly populated, brings within reach of market 6,000 acres of land, enough to supply the entire population of the country, and that we have add 6 in as years the means of supplying 60,000 such towns.

Three Catholic Girls.

Of the three daughters of F. A Drexel, who have just left for Europe, a writer in the Philadelphia Times says: "Each of them is gone a year, and in that time they will visit all the chief educational institutions abroad, with the view of gaining additional knowledge to be used in the carrying out of the great educational charity that they have begun at Torresdale, and which is now only the nucleus of what it is to become. All their affairs have been put in order, and their immense charities—of which, indeed, the community knows really little—will go on as heretofore. It is said they will be drawn upon for an immense sum in the shape of a new charitable purpose. They have now very nearly $4,000,000 each. Starting as it may seem, they give away almost all the interest of their income from this immense fortune, aside from their own living expenses, in charity. Rome can represent surprise that they would manage to dispose of so much, Rome says that they could find use for another million in the same channel if they had it. They have a regular roll of pensioners, and a number of institutions, besides their institutional and local charities that are constantly giving to the poor in all parts of the country indeed in all parts of the world. Their own expenses are extremely small. They live and dress plainly. Their only luxury is high-bred horses, for which they are credited by some as all the ladies of the Drexel family are, and among them they have a very good stable. They have been but one year their head-to-the-sight.

The Italian and his wife stood beside her crying, and smiling, and cursing them by turn, and the Italian was in the Popedom of Rome and a Hunter, and the good angel of the Italian, and the good angel of suffering had made them all children of one Father.

Girls Ought to Learn to Work.

A young wife, whose husband has been disabled, lately sent an article to a paper on the subject of her duty to her husband, and the only thing she could discover was that she should "be a good wife." Perhaps a little more definite advice would be acceptable to her, and to others in similar circumstances. The opportunities for earning a livelihood are different from what they were a few years ago. Then, a young lady could generally find an income from this kind of work, from certain trades, from teaching, from visits and retreats; but produce would fetch far more than he endeavors; he raises chickens, and they in turn, add to the income of the nation. But when a population so large as that of Illinois, is added to from across the sea, another population greater than that of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut together in 1860 has been added by immigration, while in 10 years. Consider what these four States were and what they produced in 1860, and then consider what the population of these four States has been added to the country in ten years.

Growth in population, surpassing that of any other country, has been the most striking general feature of the nation's development. In round numbers the population of the United States at the first of September we had 132,000. The Middle States had added one-third to their mileage, the Southern between them and the Mississippi only one-third, and the Southern States west of the Mississippi and the States east of the Mississippi more than one half—over 12,000 miles. In four States and one Territory—Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota and Dakota—we have added 10,000 miles. These consider that every mile of new railway, in regions thinly populated, brings within reach of market 6,000 acres of land, enough to supply the entire population of the country, and that we have add 6 in as years the means of supplying 60,000 such towns.

Three Catholic Girls.

Of the three daughters of F. A Drexel, who have just left for Europe, a writer in the Philadelphia Times says: "Each of them is gone a year, and in that time they will visit all the chief educational institutions abroad, with the view of gaining additional knowledge to be used in the carrying out of the great educational charity that they have begun at Torresdale, and which is now only the nucleus of what it is to become. All their affairs have been put in order, and their immense charities—of which, indeed, the community knows really little—will go on as heretofore. It is said they will be drawn upon for an immense sum in the shape of a new charitable purpose. They have now very nearly $4,000,000 each. Starting as it may seem, they give away almost all the interest of their income from this immense fortune, aside from their own living expenses, in charity. Rome can represent surprise that they would manage to dispose of so much, Rome says that they could find use for another million in the same channel if they had it. They have a regular roll of pensioners, and a number of institutions, besides their institutional and local charities that are constantly giving to the poor in all parts of the country indeed in all parts of the world. Their own expenses are extremely small. They live and dress plainly. Their only luxury is high-bred horses, for which they are credited by some as all the ladies of the Drexel family are, and among them they have a very good stable. They have been but one year their head-to-the-sight.

The Italian and his wife stood beside her crying, and smiling, and cursing them by turn, and the Italian was in the Popedom of Rome and a Hunter, and the good angel of the Italian, and the good angel of suffering had made them all children of one Father.

ONE TOUCH OF NATURE.

An Affecting Episode in Real Life

It was the 1st of July. The great city railway station was crowded with gay, well-dressed people, bound for their day's outing in the mountains or by the sea. In and around them was a group of ragged Italian emigrants, with whom a much-tried child was apparently the centre.

"I tell you this is my poor station!" raising his voice as people are apt to do in foreign parts. At the other side of the Emigrant station Tony rules Come, clear out!"

The target of his abuse, a shabby-looking, unfortunate, "Tedldo," as he was called, and holding out a bit of written paper, "Tedldo, this," read the train hand "Tordo—Ida—Ida of watches as stupid as dog—going round the world with dolls—big but that scrap of paper to guide them be specialized—Ida—Tordo—Ida."

He hustled away and the emigrants shrank back into their corner. The man looked at his pale, hunger-bitten little girl and his wife, and there arose a group like some shrieking and laughing—Ida—Ida. Some young girls drew their light dresses aside, as if to avoid contact with the loathing middle-aged woman muttered something in their ears. The group shrank away, as if it feared to contagion, and some laughed a jeering laugh at the group of Italians in Tordo—Ida—Ida. Tordo—Ida—Ida. Tordo—Ida—Ida.

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1896.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Catholic papers, let us hug your success, could sensible of this unvarnished truth, that upon you mainly and individually, most positively depend the solution of the Catholic Question in this Republic. Upon you, more than upon any other agency, depend the Church's chance of life or death. Be Temperate and Industrious. Be Prudent and Economical. Be Independent and Self-Reliant. Be Patient and Hopeful. Be Catholic in Spirit. Be Supported and Be Thankful. Use the providential blessings of the times. Don't depend on Popes and Prelates and distinguished laymen. Don't wait for Pastorals and Encyclicals. Don't you have a paper and respected everywhere, that you are absolutely stands in need of an organ to be its continual advocate? Well, all this will be duly worth in the act, unless it can be brought home to each parish and family. Unless it can be made to appear that the Catholic Press is still an organ that is an institution and has duty to constitute towards supporting the Catholic press, by contributing for one or more Catholic periodicals, and keeping himself well acquainted with the Catholic Press, and Catholic Literature in general. Unless we can be simple in its digestive development and to impart the Journal wisdom. Big classes a journal that is thoroughly Catholic, instructive and edifying, and not that it shall be, with Catholics in name or patronage, Catholic in fact, and yet, in spirit, and in its tendencies and influence, as bitter and unchastened as Protestant bigotry.—Pastoral Letter on the Press Plenary Council, Baltimore.

Editorial Notes.

— The Society of Jesus mourn the death, which occurred at Clatte Sandalla on the 6th ult., of their Procurator-General, Father Joseph Betts, after a lingering illness.

— Mgr. Stanton and Bishop Brindel were present at a Catholic exhibition at the Fla hand mission recently, when 600 Indians received Holy Communion in the chi ehurch, erected in 1856, by the celebrated Father De Smet, S. J.

— "Subdeliteness" is the latest word coined by some Protestant preacher who imagines that big words carry more weight than little ones. The reverent humans of those who practice subdeliteness will never be stayed by such orthographical senselessness. That's very evident!

— A cablegram of the 8th inst. states that the Sovereign Pontiff, had that day sent private instructions to the different Nuncios abroad regarding the anti-clerical agitation in Italy. The Pope is anxious that foreign Governments should be fully informed of the increasing menace and dangers to which the Holy See is exposed.

— The Holy Father is at present reorganizing the Vatican Archives, and has confided the direction of that laborious undertaking to the Dominican Father Xiol, who is already zealously at work on these important documents, which embrace, it is said, decisions and resolutions of the various Sacred Congregations of Rome down to 1876.

— Very Rev. James Ludlow, recently nominated for the new See of Syracuse, New York, is a native of county Mayo, Ireland, having been born in Castlebar. The new Bishop is blessed in possessing every virtue that can adorn his exalted station and holy calling. His family has given three priests to the Church, and two members of Religious Orders.

— The species of mystery attending the Bishop of the German Old Catholics, has it seems been recently fathomed by the discovery among the ranks of the Foreign Legion at Tonquin of a soldier whom it has been held the position of Bishop in his own country; this indication reveals the place of refuge of that unfortunate apostate.

— The cause of the Land-Leagues has just won its first victory in Wales. A farmer's goods at Rurlwen were distrained for rent and his horse was sold for £3 and cow sold to the tenant. The sale came to a standstill. The auctioneer and bailiffs fled, pelted with rotten eggs. Then followed an indignant mass meeting of farmers. Wales is now taking a step from its serfdom.

— American conscience seems to be playing sad havoc with the agreed tariff in lieu of Great Britain. At Carcarbury, England, one of the lace farms in the far-eared district of East Kent was put up for sale recently. The land is used for hops, fruit and corn, and the north tower is old that's 5 per cent the farm would be worth £9,000. Not a single bid was made for the property.

— The advocates of high license for liquor sellers are the last friends of temperance. In Missouri the plan has been found to work well. A single year of high license in that state has decreased the number of saloons by 3,000 to 2,000, and increased the revenue from $647,000 to $1,500,000. Isn't that better than prohibition which doesn't prohibit? There is no reason why the high license system could not produce as gratifying results in every city and town in Cold ruin.

— One by one the most large minded ministers of the sects are coming round side with the Catholic Church on the School Question. The latest preacher who evinces that foresight is Rev. Dr. Dunne, editor of the Christian Weekly, who has come out openly in opposition to the system of education as taught in the public schools, and favors denominational or sectarian education in schools conducted by each denomination. He denounces the present system of public education in which Science is taught, but in which in conscience they cannot send their children, and holds that such a system is an injust, un-American, undemocratic and injurious to the community.

— In accordance with the request of Cardinal Simeoni, as set forth in a letter from Rome dated August 20th last, the Archbishops of the United States will assemble at Baltimore for the purpose of taking into consideration the status of numerous secret societies in this country which, although not condemned by the Church, are doing a great deal of harm among the faithful in leading them towards Masonry, Odd Fellowship, and kindred organizations condemned by same. This is a very important question and every priest in the land will be glad to have that the Ordinaries.

note decisive action has been taken upon a matter upon which there is room for such a diversity of opinion.

— With that spirit of patriotic philanthropy which has ever animated Bishop Bonacum of Lincoln, in every movement for the defence of the tenant farmers of Ireland, he has been the exclusive mouthpiece in Ireland to rouse his own and several other subscriptions to the fund now among in order to keep evicted tenants out of the poor houses. Bishop Higgins advises that in cases where the tenants are unable to pay their rents in full, and the landlords are unwilling to give reasonable reduction, an effort be made by the tenants to buy their holdings on equitable terms under the land purchase act, and is now doing done in many instances all over the country.

— The Mendicanti Romo says that several journals have published alarming news about the health of his Eminence Cardinal Ludovico Jacobini, and that the Monitore is in a position to assure its readers that, although still very fatigued, the eminent Cardinal Secretary of State is improving, and his condition inspires no alarm. The Cardinal requires rest and probably a year of travel. Freedom from care is the only thing likely to restore his health. The only fifty-four, and has a good constitution. Mgr. Vannutelli, now Nuncio at Lisbon, and a very able man, would probably act as his substitute. The strongest man at the Vatican is the Pope himself, who regularly works from twelve to fourteen hours a day, and is wonderfully clear, decisive, and methodical.

— In last week's issue of the Monitor we published some very forcible facts concerning the immense influence of Protestantism in Europe, and we sought supplement it with the information that the stream of immigration to the Mormon settlement at Utah still continues, despite the efforts of the United States Executive. Over three hundred recruits for Salt Lake recently landed at New York, and amongst the party were quite a number of well-dressed, pretty and intelligent girls. As usual, the religious classification of the immigrants affording a striking illustration of the high moral tone of all Catholic countries. Not a single Catholic was found among those Mormon neophytes. There were Scandinavians, English, Scotch, Swiss, and Germans, but no Irish, French, Spanish or Italians. Thank God for the benign and purifying influences of Catholic faith!

— In advocating the change of Thanksgiving Day from black November to golden October, several of our Eastern secular contemporaries make an admission of Puritan bigotry that shows how intensely the Pilgrim Fathers ...ated Christianity. The sectarian organs admit that the last Thursday in November was chosen as "Thanksgiving Day" purposely, so that it might take the place of Christmas, which the Pilgrims looked upon as "a Popish festival" and, therefore, hateful to Puritans. Poor Goldfish fanatics! How amazed they would be were they in America to day and witnessed not only Catholics but also Methodists, Episcopalians, and Presbyterians celebrating the birth of our Blessed Redeemer regardless entirely of that blasphemous bigotry which tried to proscribe the birthday of Christ in the land discovered by the Catholic Columbus on October 11th, 1492. How unsagacious are the children of man when opposed to the will of God!

— An Encyclical Letter has been issued by Pope Leo XIII. establishing a Catholic Hierarchy in India, in which the Holy Father, after enumerating all the Dioceses and Apostolic Vicariates into which India and Ceylon have been hitherto divided—and from the provinces of the Convention with Portugal concerning the Archbishopric of Goa and its suffragan Sees of Cochin, Malacca, and Cinnamon—and constituting the Sees as Ecclesiastical provinces. His Holiness next erects all the Apostolic Vicariates of India and Ceylon into ordinary Episcopal Sees, and raises to the dignity of Archbishoprics the Sees of Agra, Bombay, Verapoly, Calcutta, Madras, Pondicherry, and Colombo, reserving the Suffragans of their provincial or suffragan Sees for his own further decision. The Archbishops of Goa and his suffragan Bishops are to refer the affairs of their churches to the Sacred Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, and the other Archbishops and Bishops are to refer them to the Sacred Congregation of Propagande.

Parnell's Anti-Eviction Fund Appeal.

On the first page of this issue our readers will find an urgent appeal from President Fitzgerald of the Irish National League of America, calling upon the members of that League, and all other friends of Irish liberty, to commence at once the creation of a fund to be known as the "Anti-Eviction Fund, in order to assist such Irish tenant farmers as may have "sentences of death, in the shape of eviction proceedings, imposed upon them during the coercion case which the Irish government is about to inaugurate in Ireland.

From what we already know of the sympathetic generosity of the Irish race on this coast, we feel that it is only necessary for the Monitor to call attention to President Fitzgerald's letter and its accompanying document from Mr. Parnell, in order to arouse among the friends of Ireland that enthusiasm for Ireland's cause which the exigencies of the crisis calls for.

We hope, therefore, that a generous and ready response will be given to President Fitzgerald's appeal, so as to show the enemies of Ireland that America is still prepared to stand by the Land Leaguers of the Irish Parliamentary Party in every measure which it may undertake for the amelioration of any portion of that oppressed people, or for the freedom of Ireland from English misrule.

The President has set a noble example by opening the subscription list with his own personal donation of three thousand dollars. Such generosity as this should stimulate other Irish Irishmen to vigorous and prompt action in the land will be glad to have that the Ordinaries.

Oh! Those Jesuits!

Jesuits are the big Bugaboos of all sectarian bigots who never tire of fitting truth into falsehood in order to blacken the character of those of Christ and his apostles of Christianity the world has ever furnished. But oh! those Jesuits! they have a way of "getting even" on their enemies which is the roughly identical in its origin and operation.

When the Jesuits of the Church are lying as bees in summer time slumbering the church of God, and trying to persecute people that the Church is opposed to science, of gets a couple of Jesuits on a scientific mission at the request of some Protestant government and make men disbelieve in astronomy, chemistry or some thing. And then those Jesuits keep multiplying the once men which scientifics set up as the impossibilities of Protestant gospels as compared with "effete Rome."

It used to be a favorite saying of fidelity-ridiculous that the Catholic church kept the sacred Scriptures as sealed book from the overmastering eyes of the laity. In fact there was a few old-fashioned priests who still stuck to this state-ridiculed with the fidelity of that prophetic which is one of the legacies left them by their bigoted predecessors who made the Blue Laws. Ah! those Jesuits! How they have given work to Poets and actually upset the old fogies who had kept the Church back from the ruin of the State of California, the Mormon women to multiply the virtuous anti-Catholic influence—which, truly and sorely, in this section, has not that weight of flavor rather may be a change, of odors, and then remove the helpless blind-ridiculed Protestant children from the contagion of such such diseases which openly and openly, in reality and ridiculously, publicly and flagrantly state at work, in season and out of season, in order to prevent Catholic children from Protestantism.

What do the Protestant bigots and superstition Catholic bigots think of that trick of the ever-astute Jesuit—instruction which the Catholic fidelitoids are engaged in the minds of Catholic children by means of anti-Catholic prejudices, publicly and flagrantly state at work, in season and out of season, in order to prevent Catholic children from Protestantism.

What do the Protestant bigots and superstition Catholic bigots think of that trick of the ever-astute Jesuit—instruction which the Catholic fidelitoids are engaged in the minds of Catholic children by means of anti-Catholic prejudices. Some idea, therefore, may be formed of the false statements in a poor, helpless Catholic child who falls into the hands of such veritable robbers that in the non-sectarian forty of the State.

We further charge that in this Legislative Bill Factory instituted any Catholic child that clings even faith has to encounter the frowns, the sneers and the cruelty of the different clergy, as well as to forfeit any and all chances of securing scholarships.

Gentlemen, in order to show that we have not exaggerated the situation, and that to undermine the faith of Catholic in nation, we cite the fact that portions of the Protestant fables are read to the children every morning, and a photo of the Pope and from a Protestant standpoint.

Again, as claim the Pope and a thing during a Sunday School at which the children are in attendance and then exposed Catholic children by using the in the Pope's position for presenting purposes.

Still further, we charge that Catholic pupils are given Catholic children were to break down their Catholic faith and make them fall into the sectarian net which the Jesuits manufacture.

Those charges are all incapable of proof if we be needed to show the prosecuting purposes of a public institution which such a villainous fact as that which we just was circulated among its Catholic pupils. It was leaked. What are the Board of Directors doing to guard such a system of proselytism? Well, with our notable non-Catholic exception, the Board of Directors seem to be content to be the tugsty cattail on the institution, judging from the report of a meeting of the Board published in the Daily Pacific of the 10th inst. Mr. Wedeen is the only member of the Board who manifests a conscience or conscientiousness. He is the only Catholic in the Board, and he is the only one who has the courage to do his duty as a Catholic

Farm and Home.

What the Farmers Must Lose by Clinging to Wheat.

The low price of wheat, taken with the poor crop this year, ought to awaken the attention of land owners to the fact that an immediate change is necessary in the plan of farming.

The days of high prices for grain have gone by and farmers must be willing to grow wheat at a cent a pound or change to other crops. What these crops shall be we are not prepared to say, nor do we believe they can be told by any one without a series of experiments.

A small piece of land ought to be set aside by farmers and experiments made with a variety of crops. We can do better than grow wheat at a cent a pound, but what crops shall take the place of wheat remains to be proved by trial.

We believe a variety of crops must be grown, for no one plant is equally adapted to the heavy black adobe lands, the rich loamy river bottoms and the red gravelly soil of the foothills.

Our advice is to plant and experiment. Try flax, hemp, castor beans, corn, alfalfa, rye, as well as others. Keep a careful record of the cross sown, the cost of tillage and the return from the crops.

Study the question carefully and thoroughly. Don't give up the land and say you can't make it pay, but search diligently for such a crop as your particular piece of land will produce best and give you the largest returns. Wheat growing to export should cease, and the sooner the better for every farmer in the State, as long as that cereal remains at its present price.

Wheat at one cent a pound means the old house, tumble-down fences, poor clothes and mufflin duds. It means a lower value on land, hard work, no vacation and a mortgage on the farm at 10 per cent. interest.

Desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and wheat at a cent a pound is as bad as an incurable cancer or a bad case of consumption.

Don't wait a single week, but subscribe for a good agricultural paper and see what has been done elsewhere and then make some trials of your own. Try something, try anything, try everything, but don't continue to grow poorer and poorer by growing wheat at a cent a pound.—Oroville Register.

Valuable Interest Rules.

1 Rule, Commercial year of 360 days, or 30 days per month.)

4 per cent.—Multiply the principal by the required number of days, divide by 9 and point off.

5 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 72.

6 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, divide by 6, and point off three figures from the right.

8 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 45.

9 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, divide by 4, and point off three figures from the right.

10 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 36.

12 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, divide by 3, and point off three figures from the right.

15 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 24.

16 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, divide by 2, and point off three figures from the right.

20 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 18.

The interest in each case will be in dollars and cents.

A Remedy Worth Knowing.

A number of persons engaged in fruit-drying and raisin-making complain bitterly of destruction and damage wrought by the insects. Thousands of these little birds seem to congregate about some orchards and vineyards and prove quite a nuisance. Some parties find it necessary to stand guard over the trays of grapes drying in the sun, in order to keep the insects away. While speaking on this subject to day, a well-known fruit grower suggested a remedy—one that he had tried successfully. He takes a watermelon, of which birds are very fond, eats it into halves, with smooth surfaces, and then sprinkle strychnine over the surfaces. It is a good plan to rub the two surfaces together, in order to distribute the poison. There is no danger from this remedy providing the dead birds are gathered and burned. Our informant killed eighty in less time an hour by this method. The same remedy is suggested in the case of robbins and other small pests that annoy the vineyardists.

Read What You Sign.

The newest swindle on farmers is operated by a man who travels the country claiming to represent a large publishing house in one of the leading cities, and to be desirous of learning from farmers their opinion of the news. The sharper produces a note book, questions the agricultural already and carefully takes down his answers. The examination completed the inquirer induces the farmer to sign his name to the report to give it due weight and appearance of accuracy. In a few farmer turns up in the back country the purchaser, and he finds himself sorely not having heeded the hundreds of warnings he has received to be careful where he puts his signature.

Late Hours.

There is nothing more unfavorable to female beauty than late hours. Women who spend most of the day in fancy work, at the piano or elsewhere, have always a pale, faded complexion, and dark rimmed, watered eyes. Too much sleep is almost as baneful as too little, and is sure to blunt the person with a pallid and unwholesome fat. A prompt and excessive indulgence in eating and drinking is fatal to the fresh charms. The appetite should never be assuaged during the intervals between meals on pastry, confectionery, or any other trifler of the appetite which gratifies the taste but does not support the system. Exercise is, of course, essential to female beauty.

Successful Farming in Napa Valley.

Thomas Walsh, who lives a short distance from Calistoga, has 175 acres of land, 45 acres of which are used for pasture. Of the 130 acres under cultivation 30 compose a young vineyard well cared for. He is assisted by his two sons—young men who are workers—and they does his own farm labor with little if any outside assistance. This year he sells 170 tons of grapes at $26 per ton, or $2,600; 120 tons of hay for $10 per ton, amounting to $1,200; and the value of other products and cattle will increase the amount of his income the present year to nearly or fully $4,000. This is accomplished by thinking very rapidly these days on a 175-acre farm, and should be very satisfactory to Mr. Walsh.—Calistogian.

— Pala fruit is not without its alleviations. It may be rather costly and frequent, but it is seldom both violent and long enjoyed, and its pauses and intermissions become more positive pleasures. It has the power of shedding a satisfaction over intervals of ease, which few rapidly these days on a

Family Fun.

"By Gum and Tim."

The City of Vineland was just casting off from the pier when a man in citizens clothes who appeared to be greatly excited rushed up the gang plank, and shouted to the captain to wait. Three or four minutes later it was understood that a desperate robbery was on foot, and that this excited man was his victim. None of us remembered observing "a ragged, desperate-looking chap" come on board, but the man was sure of it, and we began to search. Nobody visited a rubber and desperado aboard, and the search went on with a will. After about ten minutes the man who had rushed aboard uttered shouts of exultation. He had discovered the arch villain hidden under some furniture on the lower deck, and the man produced a revolver, and ordered the fellow to come out or take the consequences.

"He prepared—back out from him," continued the excited individual, and three or four more pistols came into view, and others secured bolts and bars.

The desperado came forth. He was a boy of fifteen, ragged, dirty and frightened. He had something wrapped up in a newspaper, but he had no weapons.

"Is dat the one who robbed me—there's his pistols?" shouted the victim, and three or four man closed on the lad.

The package was taken from him and opened.

We expected to see bonds or money or jewelry, but instead it was that our eyes rested on a half-eaten loaf of bread.

"I hadn't anything to eat for two days!" said the boy as he looked from face to face, and his big blue eyes filled with tears and his chin quivered.

"What a cross, reader, and I'll send him to the State prison!" exclaimed the man, as he seized the boy by the collar.

"By gum!" growled a voice from the gang way, and a fat-red faced man, who had armed himself with a heavy stick, threw it down with a crash and pushed into the crowd and asked—

"Hey, who are you?"

"Tim Williams."

"Where's you home?"

"Nowhere."

"Did you rob this man of that loaf of bread?"

"Yes, sir, but I was starving."

"Yes, you young villain, I'll stop your thieving and robbing," shouted the loser of the bread. "Stone one help me to get him ashore!"

"By gum!" said the fat man, as he felt in his pockets.

He fished up a nickel, handed it to the baker, and continued—

"By gum! I guess not! There's your money, and I stand by the boy. Yes, sir—by gum, sir!

"He's a thief!"

"Can't help that, sir! He's a boy, and he was hungry and had no other means to get bread. I'm his friend, sir—the boy's friend! Anybody who lays a hand on that boy has got to climb over me, by gum!

Fifteen men cheered the fat man and groaned the baker, and the latter gripped his nickel and walked ashore.

"Captain," said the fat man, "give this boy a chance to wash up, and I'll look him up some clothes. I'm going to give him a show, sir—by gum, sir! I was kicked and cuffed and stepped on myself when I was a boy, and I can feel for this chap, sir—by gum, sir, yes, sir, and I'll probably take him with me. Come, Tim, by gum—but there's nothing desperate about you, and we'll have a talk and see how we can better your fortunes. Yes, sir—by gum, sir!

And as the boat moved away everybody gave three cheers for "By Gum!" and Tim.

Why the Dog Failed.

"Pain, what made you unlie the dog last night?" asked a fellow-lodger at one breakfast table.

"To protect the gate," replied the old gentleman sternly.

"I—I don't believe he succeeded in doing it, she returned.

"Hey?" what do you mean?" and a savage glare dared over the coffee pot.

"Why, the act time I saw Harry he was taking a tremendous get up the wall, and I thought perhaps—" The old man's groan was so deep that she desisted.

He Practiced.

Mrs. Finlatep had been making an earnest effort to have her son Johnny taught to play on the piano. A few days ago Mrs. Finlatep called up stairs.

"Why aren't you practicing your piece, Johnny?"

"I am."

"You are not. "You haven't touched the cover to the last half hour."

"I've been practicing all the same. There are pieces in the match and I am practicing them over and over until I know them perfectly.

They Can Do It.

The girls in some parts of Africa have to wear a foot high hat before they are sorry. The Africans probably think that a small woman cannot manage a husband. A hint recently from the Dark Continent would soon teach them better.

A Countryman's Explanation.

Country yokel to his son at a concert during the performance of a duet "Hye see, Tom, now it's getting late, they're singing two at a time, so as to get done sooner."

How He was Bought.

"Say, pape, quered a little boy, "I thought you told me they couldn't buy people in auctions?"

"They can't my child," replied the father. "The late Civil War settled that forever. Before, the people of the South owned slaves, but the war liberated them and an amendment to the Constitution made it impossible to hold the colored people as slaves in the United States.

"I don't mean colored people, continued the boy. "I mean white gentlemen like you. Was you ever bought or sold?"

"What a question! What put that idea into your head?"

"I heard Mrs. Gossip talking to a caller when she didn't think I was around. They got to talking about you and mamma. Mrs. said mamma was as homely she would stop a clock, and that her money bought you, body and soul.

She was Fly.

"Dearest, I love you. Fly with me," said a base ball player to his best girl.

"I would, said the fair one, "only it would never be a success

"Why not?

"Why you know I'm are always caught on the fly, and—

But he rang his gong, and fled.

How Some Married Women Go to Sleep.

There is an article going the rounds entitled "How the Girls Go to Sleep." The manner in which they do so is very interesting to the article, can't hold a candle to the way married women go to sleep.

Instead of thinking what she should have attended to before going to bed, she thinks of it afterward. While she is revolving these matters in her mind, and while musingly tucked up in bed, the old man is scratching his head in front of the fire and wondering how he will pay the next month's rent. Suddenly she exclaims.

"James, did you lock the door?"

"What door?" says James.

"The outer door," says she

"No," says James.

"Well, you had better go down and lock it, for I heard some one in the back yard last night.

Accordingly James paddles down the stairs and locks the door. About the time James reaches his bed, she has thought of another.

"Did you shut the stair door?"

"No," says James.

"Well, if it is not shut the cat will get into the chamber."

"Let her come up, then," says James, impatiently.

"My goodness, no" returns his wife, "she'd suck the baby's breath.

Then James paddles down stairs again and stops on a tack, and closes the stair door, and comes the cat, and returns to the bedroom. Just as he begins to climb into his couch his wife observes—

"I forgot to bring up some water. Suppose you bring up some in the big tin.

And so James, with a muttered curse, goes down into the dark kitchen and falls over a chair and rips all the trousers of the wall in search of the "tin," and then jerks the stair door open and howls "Where are the dance are the matches?"

She gives him minute directions where to find the matches, and adds that she would rather go and get the water herself than have the whole neighborhood raised about it; after which James finds the matches, procures the water, and comes up stairs and plunges into bed.

Presently his wife says "James, let a have an understanding about money matters. Now, next week I've got to pay——

"I don't know what you'll have to pay and don't care," shouts James as he lurches around and jams his face against the wall, "all I want is sleep.

"That's all very well for you," snaps his wife, as she pulls the covers violently, "you never think of the worry and trouble I have. And there is Avoginia, who I believe is taking the measles"

"Let her take 'em," says James.

Hereupon she begins to cry softly, but the time James is falling into a gentle sleep she pinches him in the ribs with her elbows and says

"Did you hear the scandal about Mrs. Jones?

"Where?" says James sleepily.

"Why, Mrs. Jones.

"Where?" inquires James

"I declare," said his wife, "you are getting more stupid every day. You know Mrs. Jones that lives at 211. Well, day before yesterday Tissie Smith and Mrs. Jones Thompson that Sam Harker had said that Mrs. Jones had——

Here she paused and listened. James is snoring in profound content. With a sweet of rage she pulls all the covers off him, wraps up in them, and lies down on the edge of the bed, thinking how badly used she is.

And this is the way some married women go to sleep.

"Boul as He Spected."

An old colored man of Wingo, Ky., had procured some one to write a letter for him to one of his friends in Tennessee. In due course of time he expected an answer to his letter and made frequent inquiries of the Postmaster. One day Uncle Jones looked in as usual, and was told by the Postmaster that a letter had come for him, but it was a dead letter. The old darky's face changed to a sad expression as she skipped his hands on his knees and said, "Jus' boul as I spected. some of them would be dead when I heard from them."

The Pet Failed.

"Pain, what made you unlie the dog last night" asked a fellow-lodger at one breakfast table.

"To protect the gate," replied the old gentleman sternly.

"I—I don't believe he succeeded in doing it, she returned.

"Hey?" what do you mean?" and a savage glare dared over the coffee pot.

"Why, the act time I saw Harry he was taking a tremendous get up the wall, and I thought perhaps—" The old man's groan was so deep that she desisted.

He Practiced.

Mrs. Finlatep had been making an earnest effort to have her son Johnny taught to play on the piano. A few days ago Mrs. Finlatep called up stairs.

"Why aren't you practicing your piece, Johnny?"

"I am."

"You are not. "You haven't touched the cover to the last half hour."

"I've been practicing all the same. There are pieces in the match and I am practicing them over and over until I know them perfectly.

They Can Do It.

The girls in some parts of Africa have to wear a foot high hat before they are sorry. The Africans probably think that a small woman cannot manage a husband. A hint recently from the Dark Continent would soon teach them better.

A Countryman's Explanation.

Country yokel to his son at a concert during the performance of a duet "Hye see, Tom, now it's getting late, they're singing two at a time, so as to get done sooner."

How He was Bought.

"Say, pape, quered a little boy, "I thought you told me they couldn't buy people in auctions?"

"They can't my child," replied the father. "The late Civil War settled that forever. Before, the people of the South owned slaves, but the war liberated them and an amendment to the Constitution made it impossible to hold the colored people as slaves in the United States.

"I don't mean colored people, continued the boy. "I mean white gentlemen like you. Was you ever bought or sold?"

"What a question! What put that idea into your head?"

"I heard Mrs. Gossip talking to a caller when she didn't think I was around. They got to talking about you and mamma. Mrs. said mamma was as homely she would stop a clock, and that her money bought you, body and soul.

She was Fly.

"Dearest, I love you. Fly with me," said a base ball player to his best girl.

"I would, said the fair one, "only it would never be a success

"Why not?

"Why you know I'm are always caught on the fly, and—

But he rang his gong, and fled.

How Some Married Women Go to Sleep.

There is an article going the rounds entitled "How the Girls Go to Sleep." The manner in which they do so is very interesting to the article, can't hold a candle to the way married women go to sleep.

Instead of thinking what she should have attended to before going to bed, she thinks of it afterward. While she is revolving these matters in her mind, and while musingly tucked up in bed, the old man is scratching his head in front of the fire and wondering how he will pay the next month's rent. Suddenly she exclaims.

"James, did you lock the door?"

"What door?" says James.

"The outer door," says she

"No," says James.

"Well, you had better go down and lock it, for I heard some one in the back yard last night.

Accordingly James paddles down the stairs and locks the door. About the time James reaches his bed, she has thought of another.

"Did you shut the stair door?"

"No," says James.

"Well, if it is not shut the cat will get into the chamber."

"Let her come up, then," says James, impatiently.

"My goodness, no" returns his wife, "she'd suck the baby's breath.

Then James paddles down stairs again and stops on a tack, and closes the stair door, and comes the cat, and returns to the bedroom. Just as he begins to climb into his couch his wife observes—

"I forgot to bring up some water. Suppose you bring up some in the big tin.

And so James, with a muttered curse, goes down into the dark kitchen and falls over a chair and rips all the trousers of the wall in search of the "tin," and then jerks the stair door open and howls "Where are the dance are the matches?"

She gives him minute directions where to find the matches, and adds that she would rather go and get the water herself than have the whole neighborhood raised about it; after which James finds the matches, procures the water, and comes up stairs and plunges into bed.

Presently his wife says "James, let a have an understanding about money matters. Now, next week I've got to pay——

"I don't know what you'll have to pay and don't care," shouts James as he lurches around and jams his face against the wall, "all I want is sleep.

"That's all very well for you," snaps his wife, as she pulls the covers violently, "you never think of the worry and trouble I have. And there is Avoginia, who I believe is taking the measles"

"Let her take 'em," says James.

Hereupon she begins to cry softly, but the time James is falling into a gentle sleep she pinches him in the ribs with her elbows and says

"Did you hear the scandal about Mrs. Jones?

"Where?" says James sleepily.

"Why, Mrs. Jones.

"Where?" inquires James

"I declare," said his wife, "you are getting more stupid every day. You know Mrs. Jones that lives at 211. Well, day before yesterday Tissie Smith and Mrs. Jones Thompson that Sam Harker had said that Mrs. Jones had——

Here she paused and listened. James is snoring in profound content. With a sweet of rage she pulls all the covers off him, wraps up in them, and lies down on the edge of the bed, thinking how badly used she is.

And this is the way some married women go to sleep.

"Boul as He Spected."

An old colored man of Wingo, Ky., had procured some one to write a letter for him to one of his friends in Tennessee. In due course of time he expected an answer to his letter and made frequent inquiries of the

They Let Him Skirmish.

The striking mania reached a colored preacher in a town in Mississippi the other day, and the action taken by his congregation and said "Clarion, I've been trying hard to preach the Gospel 20 a week, an I do get discouraged. You has asker get to raise dis salary—$2 or I'se gwine to get out and skirmish for hogs an' chickens long wid de rest oh you, an' take my chances oh gwine to Heaven." By a unanimous vote of the congregation it was decided to increase the salary at $2 and let him skirmish.

Cholera Cramps Colic

all Summer Complaints and all Bowel Troubles are cured by

Perry Davis' Pain Killer

All druggists sell it.

LAVE AND LET LIVE.

Splendid Set of Teeth, only $6.

AT THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, M.D.

DANIEL SHEERIN, STONE AND MARBLE YARD,

Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts.

JUST RECEIVED

A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops.

WESTERN HOTEL,

212-14 Broadway Street.

JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor

(Late Sherman House.)

ROBERT F. HAY, TINTYPE GALLERY

817 Market St., bet. 4th & 5th.

G. ORSI,

HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger.

RAZORS!

FOR $1,000

WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND MORE OF THEM THAN ANY MAN IN THE WORLD.

M. PRICE

415 Kearny Street.

Grindine and Repairing

WASTE EMBROIDERY SILK

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.

608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.

Telephone No. 707.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,

— Importers and Dealers in

BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING

PAPERS.

Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.

— MANUFACTURERS OF —

Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags.

512 to 516 Sacramento and 419 Commercial Sts., S. F.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.

JOHN WIELAND - - - - PROPRIETOR

SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Amount of Beer sold in 1875, 60000 barrels.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,

968 and 970 Folsom St.,

Near 6th, — — — San Francisco

— WHOLESALE —

LIQUOR DEALER.

Established 1858.

Sole Agent for the celebrated Cincinnati Beers, Wiedemann's Rheinwein, Cognac Brandies, Jamaica Rum, Scotch and Irish Whiskies.

Enter our goods.

Table Wines . . . 50c., 60c., 75c. and $1.

Angelica Wines . . . $1, $1.25 and $1.50

Metal Tinctured Port, Sherry, etc., $1.50 a $2.

Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2.

Kentucky Whiskies . . . $0.50, $0.75 and $1.

Bourbon Whiskey . . . $1.00, $1.75 and $2.

Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $0 per gallon upwards

Only Wines and Liquors at lowest rates.

NEW MUSIC.

J. FISCHER & BRO., New York.

A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St. San Francisco.

PACIFIC TRADE AGENT.

Music, in Sets, Or Separately, for orchestra, viz.:

Dancing Piece, 10c.

Dancing Piece, with Cornet Solo, 15c.

Dancing Piece, with Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, 20c.

Dancing Piece, with Cornet Solo, Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, 25c.

Dance Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, $1.50.

Dance Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, $2.

Dance Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, $2.50.

Dance Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, $3.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $4.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, $5.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $6.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $7.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $8.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $9.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $10.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $11.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $12.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $13.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $14.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $15.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $16.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $17.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $18.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $19.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $20.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $21.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $22.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $23.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $24.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $25.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $26.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $27.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $28.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $29.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $30.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $31.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $32.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $33.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $34.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $35.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $36.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $37.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $38.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $39.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $40.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $41.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $42.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $43.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $44.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $45.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $46.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $47.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $48.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $49.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $50.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $51.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $52.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $53.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $54.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $55.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $56.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $57.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $58.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, $59.

Music, Complete, for Full Orchestra, and Cornet Solo, and Cornet Accompaniment, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and Full Chorus, and Full Orchestra, and

OUR BOOK TABLE.

VOIDERTS ANCIENT HISTORY.

Lehrbuch der Alten Geschichte von Dr. Adolf Voidert, Professor am Friedrich-Wilhelms-Gymnasium zu Berlin. Autorisirte Uebersetzung nach der 12 Auflage des Original-Werkes. Erster Theil. Geschichte des Orientalischen Altertums. Mit 1 Kartenskizze und 3 Plänen. Paderborn: Druck und Verlag von Ferdinand Schöningh. 1886.

The activity of the present century not only in the field of science, but in almost every branch of study in which research and observation play a part, has made it necessary for literary three studies, if that is true of history itself.

This is beautifully and tersely expressed by the learned author in his preface to the present work for us: "The deciphering of the Egyptian hieroglyphics; the discovery of the Babylonian pronunciation of the cuneiform [illegible] of Assyria; the excavations made in Troas, Greece and elsewhere; finally a more critical study of Greek and Latin authors, have thrown on many points of ancient history—both sacred and profane—an entirely new light." And the aggregate of knowledge increased with the increase of age, though pursued in books and stored away in libraries, is daily growing to such proportions that, from their necessity, the mass of the learned themselves are becoming more apologetic. Life is too short to master perfectly, and the mind is becoming too practical to master, but imperfectly, the many branches of human knowledge. He who, therefore, in the shortest space and yet with the most judicious selection, puts the greatest amount of knowledge within reach of the student, is the man to do a service to the student himself and the age he lives in, even a debt of gratitude may be owed him. While this is true of every study it is doubly true in the great world of history, and not less so in science than in modern history.

But, as every student of history knows, the mere number of facts and a just selection thereof are not all that he seeks. The manner and form of narrating and of grouping these facts, not merely appealing to the intellect, but making the text a part of map by which to arrest the sight, and add the memory, impact to the study of history one of the greatest charms, which evidently rendering it easier and more profitable. We believe that Father Voidert in the work in question, has combined all these to a degree not yet reached by any other that we have read. And we are of opinion that it is not too much to say that in this age of steam and electricity, when there is a sort of hotel of speed in nearly every thing, even school books are too frequently ordered off for the market to make a premature exit—and by those who have had no experience in the high vocation of teachers.

Father Voidert is not only a pipe scholar, but what many pipe scholars are not—one of the best educators in the land. A member of the same religious body than gave us Father Probst, Father Valbert, a worthy son of the saintly order, using where he could the work of his predecessor and others, without following so closely the form of any, has stamped upon his history the experience of nearly twenty years spent in the professorial Chair at St. Charles' College, near Baltimore, Md. He has seen and felt the want of the students in his serious labors, and entering into them supplied them; and so perfectly has he put his conception into his book that without reading it one feels that he is sitting at the feet of the Professor still.

We feel that we are doing a service not only to students and teachers in our schools and colleges, but to the more social, in inflicting attention to a work of the most permanent character of the book that appears on comparing its contents with those of other works of the kind, the history of inestimable value to that class which contents to a man in itself, pointing out at a glance the general arrangement, and the notes as regards the various nations of antiquity and the general history of each—together with the chronologic and subdivisions of subjects clearly expressed. In the chapter of Egypt and Assyria, the student has before him in a brief compass the most interesting details extracted from the hieroglyphic inscriptions and the cuneiform documents. Helps to the student. This part of the history will be found to be something absolutely new and fascinating. It is the work of a life-time, and the result of a life-time.

Of the Jewish history, the Mosaic and Prophetic periods have been faithfully laid in Greek and Roman history, we find a fusion not so much of the mere student and teacher—the by-no-means brief chapter on Rome, and the historical is clearly drawn—a feature, the want of which in the ancient Greek and in the work of the "full-supply of kit-cy," is sometimes bewildering. Then follow the conflicts between class and class, resembling curiously enough those of the present. Dr. Mitt P. Freed in gradual development of popular government. In the case of Rome we see how it had to do with a master's hand, her strong military organization, strength, and yet, in spite of a spacious hand, the seeds in the Roll, then the gradual expansion of the Roman Empire, and the rise of Christianity. The Jews, will we see family brought to the Christian Era, whereto during the first centuries we trace the progress of the Gospel, where influence is felt first in private, next in society, and finally in public life.

The last chapter of the work sums up and completes the details concerning Christianity for the first five centuries in a sort of general tableau which will be peculiarly interesting to those who have had occasion to read Church history. Throughout the work, besides the gradual development of the arts, printing, sculpture, architecture, and of the literature of the ancient nations, we find a pleasantness, a pleasantness, a pleasantness, or rather, we find a pleasantness, or rather, we find a pleasantness, or rather, we find

Poetry.

(WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR.)

EVOLUTION OF LIFE.

There are four ropes in the life of man
That mark his fashionable plan.
The first is powerful Hide-bound that bears
With all most liberal and pure.
The second, Bigbud—Hide-bound is the when Fate
First sows the seeds whose harvest shall problem
The value and the greatness of man.
Bigbud stays with the lad—Hide-bound
Is left behind—Bigbud is left
For childhood is the fresh fold overshaped.
And manhood is the finished structure of
Our vision and sublime proportions
The last, old age—that venerable link
Connecting man with an unseen world
Then Death comes on, and on his massive forge
He welds that link, and makes out from man
Angels.
And like awakening from a troubled dream,
So we awake and great Eternity!

Oh! let us seek our lives a stronger set chain,
Linking together Virtue, Love, and Truth;
So when the awful summons comes we shall
We answer it with confidence and ease
Born of a well-spent and a perfect life!

We need not guard our Manhood—for God
Still incarnates us at that time
And stands a good Nature, or from all ill!
With Bigbud, Free will the upon for throne
And wields her sceptre over our destiny
But Reason balances that sovereign sway
And forms a justful equipoise.

In Bigbud we shield are those fruitful seeds
Which in good time shall bear a fruit on Manhood.
And cast from out the garden of our souls
All poisonous weeds by fruitful passions sown.

With Manhood, we should strengthen every part
Of our great structure lest it sink decay
And leave the ruin to the Ages.

When Old Age comes, our work is nearly done;
For come age gray and venerable
And guides us with unerring certainty
To that great goal of all humanity
Be steadfast to the coming, but as blessed
To those who walk the narrow path of Truth—
Eternity!

C. ANTHONY DOYLE.

TO MICHAEL DAVITT.

(The following lines appeared in Mr. P. M. Ring's Irish Republican paper of March 1st, 1882, and are now published in the MONITOR in response to a request from a prominent present have expressed in publication.)

Hence ones drink the health of Moore,
In water, like a Turk,
A draught most fit for Friendship, sure,
When coming heiress now out.

Well, I wish am no poet, nor
Aught but a simple noddy,
Well produce the cause we're met here for,
In Irish whisky toddy.

But stop, stop, the toast, "drink divine,"
In solitude can't shed a tear on,
I'll give it by the sparkling wine
That soft is placed before us.

Here is this room, so snug and trim,
Midst friends who love and will
Fill, sirs, your glasses to the brim—
I give you "Chas. Na Gael!"

And with that toast I'll give the "Clan"
A name—I'm sure they'll have it—
I give their first and foremost man—
Dood honest Michael Davitt!

THE MANDALAN.

Only a Magdalen found in the river,
Nobody's sister, nobody's child,
Nobody's heart to throb and quiver,
Nobody's lips to pale and chiver,
Only a Magdalen found in the river,
Tossed on the drift of the incoming tide.

Beautiful, stainless pride of humanity,
Was there no spot on the earth's broad breast,
No nook but the moss and drift of the river,
Out from the glow of the sun-lighted day,
Out from the glow of the sun-lighted city,
Out from the glow of the sun-lighted roar,
Only the voice of the river to sing a dirge,
Up from the gloom of the wave-beaten shore.

Stains of waile made drift over the water,
Stains of leaden and sodden shame,
Because, like shadows, rock by on the river
Come from the darkness the harbor lights gleam.

A shivering piece of humanity crouching,
Hurried from sight into the cold unfeeling bosom,
Dumb with the woe of life's cruel mystery,
The force, bitter sobbing and tortured moan.

Moaning, demaning, her was lips a quiver,
Life's ecstasy is fought; her room has been rent;
She's a Magdalen found in the river of dying,
Her white face of sorrow outwound to the sun.

Literary Miscellany.

Ramon the Religious.

A Catholic Story Founded on Fact

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY A SANTA FE CORRESPONDENT.

CHAPTER VI.

HAPPINESS.

It was now the beginning of October. The Navajoes, dissatisfied with the result of their last war with Mexico, were anxious for another war through the winter months. The thing was discussed around the great council fire. The chiefs, however, were against the undertaking in winter, for they would have to suffer more from the inclemency of the season than the Mexican people, they would be far away from their homes, and should snow fall in abundance, and windy and stormy weather set in, they might be hindered in their return, butchered by the enemy, or die of want. The great chief was strongly in favor of waiting till next spring; and his advice prevailed, the war was postponed.

Before the close of the council, the old sachem arose, and motioning silence with a wave of his hand, he said:

"Brave Navajoes! my nation; scarcely snows have passed over my head; the roses have bloomed fifty times since I am at the head of the warriors. As you know, the Great Spirit had given me a son, brave among the braves, although only recently initiated to the mystery of the manitou. He was and a coquette in the land of Mexico; my heart tells me he is not dead, but a fearsome above me day and night, and bleshes my locks; will they not raise his in their Christian ways? A thousand deaths rather than that disgrace!

"Now, brother warriors and braves of our nation, I have sent in search of the young man, as you all know—the messengers came back bringing nothing but despair to my heart; they had no tidings of him. Now, I can wait no longer. Wars at peace till the snows have passed away; I am determined to take one of my persons and go in search of my flesh. I thought of adopting another as my son, but alas! his heart is not with me, as he is dead, a fair enemy of our mention, you only suffer him on my account. Here me back my son and Hasson will be his slave, Ramon shall be a Navajoe."

The old man, full of emotion, sat down and signed his pipe.

Kinlichinim, one of the principal chiefs of the Navajoe nation, arose. He cast his eye as an eagle o'er the assembly, and then turned to the old sachem.

"Natachee, said he, "thou art the bravest of the braves." Thy counsels, for many moons, has uttered nothing but wisdom. But the head is frozen, and the winter flowers surround it. Thy limbs are getting weak and cold. Art thou not afraid to set out in winter? With thou not be buried in the snows? Will not the wild horse, wild tiger, wolf, bear, mountain lion, and the fierce Ute? Remember thy reputation, brave Natachee; as all love thee. I have said."

And Natachee arose, almost tottering, his face pale, his eyes full of tears

"Brave Kinoletashee, and you warriors, hearken to my words. I must find my son, and take a good Navajoe, or I will pierce his breast with a bullet. My hand is not unsteady, he will worship the manitou or die. Such are the words of Natachee."

He sat down, waiting the decision of the braves.

Nakubah, the young and corpulent warrior, son of Nakubah, the brother of Natachee, also had taken a prominent place among the chiefs; he was far from his heavy and undaunted courage, than he the protection of the old chief, arose amid the acclamations of all.

"Ut, brave Natachee!" said he, "thou art always brave, in the love of thy son and the respect of thy manitou, as in thy aces with the paroches of New Mexico. Go, may the Great Spirit lead thy steps, and bring back the young Nebamoch to the Navajoes. I have said."

And all the warriors, with one voice, expressed their desire to see the old sachem start before the cold winds of winter had set in.

Natachee arose a third time.

"My heart, brave warriors, is full, I go. When the moon shall rise, I shall be on my journey. Should I fall in the way, except my death, the manitous demand it. Whilst I am roaming far way, the brave Nakubah shall be the great chief, in the place of Natachee, during his pilgrimage in the land of the enemy. Farewell."

A murmur of approbation arose from some of the warriors who admired the brave young man and loved Natachee; others, who had hoped to be Natachee's lieutenant during his absence, expressed their anger by words and low murmurs. But the active and ambitious Nakubah hastened to rise.

"I think, thee, brave sachem, great chief of the Navajoe nation. Thy will is my will, and the will of all of us. Behold, Natachee, there is only one word of approbation through this venerable council."

And turning to the braves, he carried down his discourse by his withering looks, and all exclaimed:

"Nakubah shall be the sachem of the Navajoe nation."

Then they all shook hands with Natachee, and the chief retired amid the acclamations of the council, which was then dissolved. The old man retired to his hut, to make his preparations and all retired slowly, as they had come, and the whole village was soon plunged into deep silence, broken now and then by the barking of some solitary dog, and the howling of the coyotes in the distant forest.

At midnight, Natachee, embracing his wife and children, and shaking hands with Ramon and Camilo to whom he had told all, enjoining the strictest silence upon them, took his departure from the village with a solitary companion. Driving before them two well-laden horses. Looking up to the rising moon, they took that direction, and at the down of day were far away from the Navajoe villages. They traveled in silence. The heart of the old chief was too full for words and the attendant respected his silence. Not a word had passed between them up to the moment when the sun rose over the Sierras in the east.

But Seke-pate, the attendant, so called from his early hair, felt the pangs of hunger. Stop with his master's horses he had not eaten a morsel in the evening. He timidly raised his eyes to the sachem, and said:

"Brave Natachee; the horses need water. Just then approve of turning somewhat north, and stopping at the foot of the mountain?"

"Yes, my good Seke-pate, and thou must be hungry. Strive the way."

They soon reached a bubbling spring of icy water; drank and gave to their horses; then sitting down partook of a frugal repast, to which Seke-pate did honor, while the sachem hardly touched the food.

After an hour of rest, during which Natachee slept, as the attendant watched the horses, the word was given to start. Soon they went through narrow canons, with high cliffs on either side; reached the passage at the crest of the Sierras, and descended the eastern slope, going constantly, as Indians alone can do, in an eastern direction. They pressed on, and the night overtook them, as they entered the scattered village inhabited by Ramon's parents. They knew perfectly well the house, by the description given by Ramon, and without inquiring of any one they stopped at the gate.

Two young persons were at the door; they called upon their father, who had long ago cast off his crutches, but was yet weak and pale. The travelers had not come down from their horses, and were waiting at the gate. Ramon's father hastened to them, not without some apprehension.

"How," said the sachem.

"Amigos," said Ramon's father.

"They both leaped from their horses, and Natachee, searching into the depth of a pocket pressed on his heart, drew forth a letter. He handed it to the Mexican. Hurdly had he opened it, then he turned pale. His joy was too much for him. Seke-pate took hold of him. The sachem pressed his finger on his lips, and motioned him to enter the house. Hot his wife and daughters who, from the house had seen seen all that had passed, hastened to him, and all together entered the house, while Seke-pate was directed to bring the horses to the corral in the rear of the house, where he finds a good feed. Ramon's son was to help him to unload them.

As soon as they were in the house, the good father, who read the letter, said to his wife:

"Let the good Ramon and give thanks to God; our Ramon is alive and well."

And all kneeling down, raised their hands to heaven, while Natachee stood by the silent witness of a great happiness.

The letter written by Ramon contained the following:

"Dearest Father, Mother, and Sisters,

"The bearer is the brave Natachee, the great chief of the Navajoes, my adopted father. He will explain to you the object of his visit, and will tarry with us. I am well; I embrace you. Your loving son,

RAMON.

All sitting down, Natachee told them of Ramon's adoption and firmness in faith, of his refusal to be initiated to the mysteries of the manitou, of his great knowledge of the Great Spirit, and his unfailing custom of praying to Him, many times on the day. During his rental, abundant tears were shed by the audience. The poor mother frequently raised her hands to heaven, pronouncing at the same time, a order of thanks.

But Seke-pate and the boy were entered the house, to know where the prisoners should be placed. Natachee sent out with Hebron's father while the mother and sisters went to have said bread themselves to prepare an abundant repast for their welcome guests.

The money and precious objects were placed in Ramon's trunk which had been brought from Santa Fe, and the key was given to the great sachem.

When the parents of Ramon did not see their son at the appointed time, they had despatched a man to Santa Fe to inquire about him. When there, the man was astonished to learn that Ramon had left the very day after the closing exercises. He went to the old man where he had slept at San Juan. He had ferried him across the Rio Grande, that was all he knew, and he returned to his master with sad news.

Ramon's father was dying of the pain of his parents and sisters at such terrible news. His body had been searched for on every road and on the path from the river to their habitation. No one had seen the party of Natachee, during his pilgrimage in the land of the enemy. Farewell."

A murmur of approbation arose from some of the warriors who admired the brave young man and loved Natachee; others, who had hoped to be Natachee's lieutenant during his absence, expressed their anger by words and low murmurs. But the active and ambitious Nakubah hastened to rise.

"I think thee, brave sachem, great chief of the Navajoe nation. Thy will is my will, and the will of all of us. Behold, Natachee, there is only one word of approbation through this venerable council."

And turning to the braves, he carried down his discourse by his withering looks, and all exclaimed:

"Nakubah shall be the sachem of the Navajoe nation."

Then they all shook hands with Natachee, and the chief retired amid the acclamations of the council, which was then dissolved. The old man retired to his hut, to make his preparations and all retired slowly, as they had come, and the whole village was soon plunged into deep silence, broken now and then by the barking of some solitary dog, and the howling of the coyotes in the distant forest.

At midnight, Natachee, embracing his wife and children, and shaking hands with Ramon and Camilo to whom he had told all, enjoining the strictest silence upon them, took his departure from the village with a solitary companion. Driving before them two well-laden horses. Looking up to the rising moon, they took that direction, and at the down of day were far away from the Navajoe villages. They traveled in silence. The heart of the old chief was too full for words and the attendant respected his silence. Not a word had passed between them up to the moment when the sun rose over the Sierras in the east.

But Seke-pate, the attendant, so called from his early hair, felt the pangs of hunger. Stop with his master's horses he had not eaten a morsel in the evening. He timidly raised his eyes to the sachem, and said:

"Brave Natachee; the horses need water. Just then approve of turning somewhat north, and stopping at the foot of the mountain?"

"Yes, my good Seke-pate, and thou must be hungry. Strive the way."

They soon reached a bubbling spring of icy water; drank and gave to their horses; then sitting down partook of a frugal repast, to which Seke-pate did honor, while the sachem hardly touched the food.

After an hour of rest, during which Natachee slept, as the attendant watched the horses, the word was given to start. Soon they went through narrow canons, with high cliffs on either side; reached the passage at the crest of the Sierras, and descended the eastern slope, going constantly, as Indians alone can do, in an eastern direction. They pressed on, and the night overtook them, as they entered the scattered village inhabited by Ramon's parents. They knew perfectly well the house, by the description given by Ramon, and without inquiring of any one they stopped at the gate.

Two young persons were at the door; they called upon their father, who had long ago cast off his crutches, but was yet weak and pale. The travelers had not come down from their horses, and were waiting at the gate. Ramon's father hastened to them, not without some apprehension.

"How," said the sachem.

"Amigos," said Ramon's father.

"They both leaped from their horses, and Natachee, searching into the depth of a pocket pressed on his heart, drew forth a letter. He handed it to the Mexican. Hurdly had he opened it, then he turned pale. His joy was too much for him. Seke-pate took hold of him. The sachem pressed his finger on his lips, and motioned him to enter the house. Hot his wife and daughters who, from the house had seen seen all that had passed, hastened to him, and all together entered the house, while Seke-pate was directed to bring the horses to the

CHAPTER VII

THE REUNION.

Early the next morning Natachee was on foot; the horses were made ready by Seke-pate and the young man. The good hostess and the sisters were hastened; a plentiful breakfast had been served, and almost at the break of day the travelers were on their journey to Conejos. On, on, they pressed forward, taking almost no rest; and early in the afternoon they reached the valley, which they had beheld from the summit of the Sierra as a green spot, a true Eden, through which flowed the sluggish Rio Grande.

The evening was beautiful, the sky was

THE FIRST NUN OF NEW ENGLAND.

Jean Allaire's Angel Daughter. A Charming Chapter in Colonial Life.

Henriette Blake have recently published a very entertaining work entitled "Catholic Memoirs," from which we cull the following instructive narrative of the first Nun of New England.

Fanny Allen was the daughter of the famous Ethan Allen, who, after the Revolutionary Colonial disasters, emigrated to the Green Mount Country, of Rutland, Vt., on the bank of the Winooski River. Having the profit of the village of that name. Ethan Allen, after whom the town of Ethan Allen, had entered at Westminster, Vt., a widow lady, Mrs. Buchanan, on February 16th, 1762. Fanny was born on the 6th of November of the same year. From a note to Ethan Allen's hand writing, quoted by J. Pierson, in Vermont Historical Gazette, p. 5, 5250. Ethan Allen caused to be baptized in the spring of the year 1763 and received into the farm known since as the Van Ness, and now as the Brockaters. He had there in a fit of apoplexy on February 12th, 1783. It is thus that Fanny Allen must have lived in Burlington, Vt., and that she was for years old when she left it with her mother to return to Westmount, after Ethan had left her father. In October, 1781 her mother was married to Jean Allaire, a French Penitentiary, and she continued to live with them round the old brewery, Jean having been appointed collector of customs in Swanton. He had made the family to the Canadian Frontier, in the year 1784. When his term of office was over, he bought the Pontiac farm in Colchester, near the high bridge across the Winooski River. Mr. Jean Allaire, Senior, died in 1788, practicing the rich treasure committed to his care to the parish of Longueil, Lower Canada. Fanny was left in the country afforded was secured to devote a portion of the gold which he was inexpensively. Fanny's Angel Every advantage

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF ARCHDIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The Monitor has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1886.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Christian people, let us lay your shoulders to some of this important work that upon you, single and individually, is set particularly before you. Let us, as a Catholic people, show that we can accomplish the good work which Providence and the Church expect of it at this time. Be frequently and fervently has the pious doxology of the priest been uttered, "Let us go to the altar of God, to God who gladdens our youth." Let us continually ask that doctrine be certainly stamped in now of sufficiently to be remembered by this church. But all this will be only again in the Catholic Press, and the Catholic Press will be the main purchaser in such behalf. If the body of each Catholic family will recognize as its responsibility and its duty to contribute towards supporting the Catholic press, by subscribing for one or more Catholic periodicals, and recommending the Catholic Press to every acquaintance that inquiry, then the Catholic press will be enabled to do its rightful development and be accomplish its destined mission. But, unless a journal that is thoroughly Catholic, instructive and edifying, is placed in every family, the Catholic press will be, as it is now and ever, disreputable to exercise an authority, or bring and maintain in Catholic families.—Pastoral Letter of the New York Provincial Council.

Editorial Notes.

—The Most Rev. Procurator General of the Dominican Order has forwarded to all the Very Rev. Provincials copies of a Rescript granting for the diocesan of All Saints days in honor of St. Thomas Aquinas the same indulgences as those attached to the Six Sundays in honor of St Alopsius

—The consecration of the Father Burke Memorial Church at Tullaghy, Ireland, took place on Sunday, the 10th inst. His Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Walsh, Archbishop of Dublin, officiated at the sacred rites, and a sermon was preached at the twelve o'clock Mass by the Very Rev. Nicholas Walsh, S. J.

—The Holy Father is actively engaged in the realization of his project of founding a great University in the Apostolic Palace of the Lateran for the higher scientific and literary studies of the clergy. The superior direction of this institution, which will be called the Leonine University, will be entrusted to Cardinal Mazzella, S. J.

—His Eminence the Cardinal-Archbishop of Sydney, the Right Rev. Dr. Lanigan, Bishop of Goulbourn; the Right Rev. Dr. Murray, Bishop of Maitland; the Right Rev. Dr. Dunne, Bishop of Brisbane; the Right Rev. Dr. Byrne, Bishop of Bathurst, and the Right Rev. Dr. Breville, Coadjutor Bishop of Sandhurst, have publicly given their support to the Home Rule movement.

—Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, declares that the statement that the Pope disapproves of the attitude of the Irish clergy towards the Nationalists is founded upon malice. "It only necessary," he says, "to read the Moniteur de Rome and the Osservatore Romano to see that the Irish cause is safe with the Pope." Thank God! The day has gone by when British influence could exercise a potent influence at the Vatican.

—The Polish journalists announce the formation of a banking concern whose aim will be to prevent a division of the great estates of the Dudsy of Posen, and thus counteract Bismarck's Germanizing policy. The bank will advance loans to embarrassed land-owners, and buy the lands as against German purchasers. The chief subscribers are members of the Polish nobility of Austrian Galicia.

—The National Monuments Committee of the Young Ireland Society have retained a very beautiful design for their contemplated monument over the grave of O'Mahony and his comrades in Glasnevin. It will be chaste, stately, and most gracefully emblematic, and will form one of the most striking ornaments of the cemetery, as well as a fitting memorial of the resting place of four brave soldiers of Irish liberty.

—The French press has perceptibly increased in its hostility towards England. The papers are daily filled with articles boasting of the immense strength of the French army and navy, and declaring that France is in readiness for offensive or defensive war. These attacks are also, in many instances, pointed at Germany. Since the success of last autumn's manœuvre the French mind has become possessed of the belief that the army of France is a match for that of Germany

—The action of a fashionable Episcopalian church in Ottawa, Canada, has been detected in the act of robbing the poor box in the church. He had been twenty years in office, and might have gone on for twenty more without suspicion; but he built a fine house lately, and the neighbors of the person could not see how he did it on a small salary. So they put a detective to watch him, and he was taken in the act and admitted his guilt. This is about the moanest instance of human depravity we have ever read of.

—Thirteen Popes, like Pius IX., have lived to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their first Mass. They were Gregory XII., who died in 1409, aged 92 years; John XXII., who died in 1415, aged 81; Paul III., who died in 1549, aged 82; Paul IV., 1555, aged 79; Innocent X. 1655, aged 82; Clement X., 1676, aged 86; Innocent XII. 1700, aged 86; Benedict XIII., 1730, aged 86; Clement XII., 1740, aged 78; Pius VI., Pius VII., and Benedict XIV., 1758, aged 83; Gregory XVI

—The Prussian Government anticipates the establishment of complete cordial relations with the Vatican before the opening of the Reichstag. They meet tactics of the Right with the statement that negotiations between the Pope and the Baron von Schlozer, the Prussian representative at the Vatican, looking to an agreement, are proceeding with alacrity, and have reached the stage of an exchange of protocols. Upon the conclusion of the treaty Baron von Schlozer will become the fully accredited Ambassador of the German Empire.

Hospers—Worthy, which, however, modified at Ireland and the Irish, is now a strong advocate of Home Rule. In a recent article on the Chicago Convention it says: "Mr. Matthew Arnold is undoubtedly mistaken in saying that the weight of opinion in this country is opposed to Mr. Gladstone. Without approving of and knowing all the details of his scheme, the most intelligent American opinion unquestionably favors a policy of Home Rule for Ireland under the auspices, which is Mr. Gladstone's, of constitutional development."

The Council of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith has issued its report for the year 1886. It is pleasing to find that, on previous occasions, the Council are able to state that the efforts taken in the British Empire are increasing, and that they are able to speak with satisfaction of the alliance of the sexes as well as of the progress of the movement which it is endeavoring to promote. During the year 161 pupils passed the National Board examination in Irish, as compared with 93 the year before in 1884 since 1881 there has been an enormous multiplication of the number of successful pupils, as evidenced by the fact that in that year 1612 pupils passed the examination.

As Englishmen may say, one Cardinal Newman gently slumbered his fellow Oratorian of Birmingham, and was followed by a sudden attack of illness, which nearly left him in an extreme state of prostration. Happily his Eminence rallied, and though still weak and bending beneath the burden of eighty-five years, he sustains his daily routine of life, which includes rising every morning at half past four and making his own bed, in accordance with the common rule of the community. It is generally said that his Eminence entertains no fear of premature, and his medical advisers now think that his mental health has been restored, and that he is stronger than he was three years ago.

—Mr. Charles L. Webster, of New York, has just returned from a visit to the Pope, with whom he has completed an arrangement for the publication of a life of his Holiness which is now being written by Bernard O'Reilly, based on an authentic manner furnished by the Pope himself. The work will be published simultaneously in London by Messrs Sampson, Low, Marston & Co., and in New York by Messrs C. L. Webster & Co. Translations will be issued by the houses of Firmin Didot & Co., Paris; J. F. Bachem, Cologne; Espasa & Co., Barcelona; L'Union Typografic Editrice, Turin; and Le Maniebhoppe de Katholsk Illustratie, Holland. All contitimental arrangements pass through the hands of Messrs Sampson, Low & Co. the American Catholic publishers seem to have "got left" in this enterprise.

—It was a matter of boasting for some weeks that M. de Freycinet, the French Premier, was a significant diplomatic victory over the Pope in the Chinese question. It was the determination of the Pope to spare the French protectorate, and to deal directly with China in a special manner. M. de Freycinet thought and that if the Pope persisted in his plan he would abolish the Concordat. This would mean the separation of Church and State in France, and the suppression of the ecclesiastical budget of two millions per annum. The Pope yielded. But the Ruler of China has now been taken into account. The Chinese Government, it seems, favored the Papal plan; and it is said that the Government will oppose the claims of France and refuse to recognize any treaty without authorization from an accredited agent of the Pope. If China should remain in this mood France may yet find herself in a very awkward dilemma.

—The Knownothing party, under the leadership of Bishop, has placed Abraham Lincoln on a pedestal as "American" ticket in the field. It is made up of odds and ends from other tickets, bedaubed and sprinkling of Philippine to give it the regular Knownothing flavor. We have to bear testimony that a single one of the Bishop anything Catholic will be elected, and Pius IX. may shed the window of the serpent in refusing to accept the nomination for Lincoln. Tammany Democrats tendered him on the dark lantern platform which has dupes adopted.

The Pacific Churchman is publishing a California story from which we extract the following from a passage:

The battle had subsided in the Sierras, and the sun stillness that followed a month's battle in a tree close by burst forth into a cry ecstacy of song.

We congratulate both the author and the "mocking-bird" upon this very natural dénouement. The "mocking-bird" may have known that "Israelite" are seen but large entirely, and so when he saw one had "unhinged" he very naturally "burst forth into a very ecstacy of song." The "mocking-bird," may all subsiding "Israelite" he greeted likewise!

Fanatical Foolishness.

The extent to which fanatics will go in their cravings for something sensational, was well illustrated recently by an organization of fanatical females calling itself the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Burlington, N. J., who capped the climax of brutal eccentricity by offering a prize of fifty dollars for "the best sermon on a confirmed drunkard," to be exhibited at the county fair at Mount Holly last week. Such a beastly proposition could only emanate from fanatical women whose hearts are hardened by Puritanical Phariseeism and whose natural tender emotions have all been turned into vermicelli and gall by Calvinism. There is not a particle of Christianity in a whole church full of such fanatics, and such exhibitions as they propose should be promptly stopped by the strong arm of the law, as they must exercise a debasing and demoralizing influence in any community where they are tolerated.

The Irish Nationalists of Manchester and Salford recently presented to Bishop Bagshawe, of Nottingham, an address of thanks for the part he had taken in behalf of the Home Rule movement. The Bishop in responding expressed his conviction that the cause would ultimately triumph, and expressed his regret that the Government are making no provision for the winter for the thousands of tenants who were being evicted.

—It was a matter of boasting for some weeks that M. de Freycinet, the French Premier, was a significant diplomatic victory over the Pope in the Chinese question. It was the determination of the Pope to spare the French protectorate, and to deal directly with China in a special manner. M. de Freycinet threatened that if the Pope persisted in his plan he would abolish the Concordat. This would mean the separation of Church and State in France, and the suppression of the ecclesiastical budget of two millions per annum. The Pope yielded. But the Ruler of China has now been taken into account. The Chinese Government, it seems, favored the Papal plan; and it is said that the Government will oppose the claims of France and refuse to recognize any treaty without authorization from an accredited agent of the Pope. If China should remain in this mood France may yet find herself in a very awkward dilemma.

—The Knownothing party, under the leadership of Bishop, has placed Abraham Lincoln on a pedestal as "American" ticket in the field. It is made up of odds and ends from other tickets bedaubed and sprinkling of Philippine to give it the regular Knownothing flavor. We have to bear testimony that a single one of the Bishop anything Catholic will be elected, and Pius IX. may shed the window of the serpent in refusing to accept the nomination for Lincoln. Tammany Democrats tendered him on the dark lantern platform which has dupes adopted.

The Pacific Churchman is publishing a California story from which we extract the following from a passage:

The battle had subsided in the Sierras, and the sun stillness that followed a month's battle in a tree close by burst forth into a cry ecstacy of song.

We congratulate both the author and the "mocking-bird" upon this very natural dénouement. The "mocking-bird" may have known that "Israelite" are seen but large entirely, and so when he saw one had "unhinged" he very naturally "burst forth into a very ecstacy of song." The "mocking-bird," may all subsiding "Israelite" he greeted likewise!

Political Proscription of Catholic Citizens.

Several subscribers residing in the south part of this State have sent us material respecting the Los Angeles Express a Republican organ with which the Democrats happen to be in sympathy.

There are two candidates in the contest, Democratic and Republican, both of them Catholics. How they stand on the public school question, and what is their attitude in the matter of the Catholic Church, when they are in office, we do not know. We understand that Mr. Wolfskill, the Democratic candidate, is a native of California, and is a Catholic, and that he is a member of the Knights of Honor, and that he is a member of the Knights of Honor, and that he is a member of the Knights of Honor

Farm and Home.

HOUSEHOLD MANAGERS.

The Different Kinds of Homes Made by Good and Bad Wives.

Good management on the part of the wife makes a safe one of what is the property of the mortgage and turns to advantage all that there is of the money or means left to be managed. Perhaps nowhere can the result of good management be so well perceived as in many families to be found in every large city. Many of the providers for these families receive small wages, have five or six children to support and their homes are comfortable, cosy, and abodes of peace and happiness. The children are clean and healthy and even neatly clad. In other homes whose heads are earning far more respectable wages we find just the opposite state of affairs. There is nothing enticing in the house. The children are hungry, poorly clad, and even filthy. Debt continually hangs over the couple and their credit is bad. They have but few friends and these friends are only nominal. Why the difference? The answer must come that in one case it is the wife and mother who makes the home what it is—a place of real comfort. She helps her husband to get along and turns to the best possible use every dollar entrusted to her. She has no debt and she has the comforts of a good home and that home is her own, saved since her marriage from the earnings of the man to whom she promised to be a helpmate. If the most home can be traced to the good qualities of the good wife, the filthy home and starving children can also be charged to the want of proper qualifications in the worthless woman. She married in order to have an easy time. If a dirty home and untidy children constitute an exalted idea of an easy time, she has such time to her heart's content. Her husband soon grows sick of her and her wretched hovel and he will seek elsewhere companions suitable to a taste which a worthless wife began to disprove. There are those who will assert that marriage is little better than a lottery, but such is not the case. A sensible young man cannot easily be caught and will not be very apt to link his destiny with a foolish girl. The girl will act learn after marriage to work when before she was too lazy to do what she should have done. She will not give up her novel reading, nor will she care to help her husband, because she is firmly impressed with the idea that it is his duty to keep her. They may be poor and they will die poorer.

Common Salt as a Cure.

A correspondent writing to Scientific Notes says: "Some years ago I was almost given over by my medical man on account of stubborn abscesses in the breast. I was sent to my native air, which did little for me, when a poor woman asked to be allowed to dress those open wounds with salt butter. What would appear an excruciating remedy became most soothing, and in a very short time effected a perfect cure. Later I poisoned my lip, which was quickly cured by simply rubbing common salt on the place. Quite recently a child in school had a running sore on her finger, which at once succumbed to the remedy; and within the last few days I have been successful by dint of perseverance, in curing a ringworm on a child's neck by simply wetting the tip of my finger, dipping it into salt and rubbing it on the place affected. The pain arising from the process is but momentary, and when we consider the benefit, it must be owned not worth consideration."

Always Walk Downstairs.

A Toledo physician: "It is a good rule always to ride up in an elevator, and, when coming down, to take the stairs. Going up hill, walking upstairs is hard work, and sometimes risky especially for people with weak lungs, defective respiratory organs or heart disease. But going down-stairs here nobody, but is good as new; going down on a brisk run is really a good thing—it shakes up the anatomy, without incurring the danger of physical over exertion; the shaking up is good for one's internal mechanism, which it accelerates, especially the liver, the kidneys, and the blood circulation. When going up into a building I invariably ride up on the elevator, if there is one; but when going down I take the stairs for it. It's a good rule, depend upon it."

Profit in Figs.

James Stewart, of Downey, sold his fig crop last week to Barnard & Benedict, of Los Angeles, manufacturers of organized fruit, for $50 per ton. Mr. Stewart has but one acre out to figs, and his crop will amount to between twelve and fifteen hundred tons. Last year the crop from the same trees yielded twelve tons, and Mr. Stewart says he crop this year is much heavier than that. His trees are all the Smyrna variety. This is a good showing for one acre of ground, being, at twelve tons, $600, which will amount to more per acre than the best Mission vineyard in the State, and very few orange orchards will compare with it. At these figures, ten acres set to Smyrna figs, in full bearing, would bring an income of $6 000 a year, equal to ten per cent on $60,000. How is that for Southern California figures?—San Gabriel Sentinel.

Apple Drying in New England.

At one time during the year nearly every house here is festooned with long strips of dried apples. The people make the apple season a rather picturesque and certainly a very busy period of time. The heavy two-wheeled carts drawn by oxen are guided to the small orchards, and the picking begins. This continues for several days, and then the paring and quartering commences. Every one takes a hand, and not an overnicety based in this last. After the apples are duly peeled and divided into pieces of proper thickness for stringing, they brush off the sides of the house with long brooms and get ready for stringing.

All hands sit down with needles and long threads and sew for days and days. When all the apples are strung, from every pound his proportion is hung a fastoon of apples to dry. They swing from nails, they cover the sides of the house, and their fragrance—if fragrance it can be called—fills the air. The rain beats on them, the sun pours his rays down on them, the dust scatters over them, and the flies and bugs and grasshoppers over them from early morn until deep eve. Then, after a sufficient experience of all these things, they are ready for commerce or pies.

Proof on my word, or tell me lies,
But don't pass my dried apple pies.

—Hampshire Letter.

Hindoo Widows.

The Hindoo widows have ghastly times of it, but the acutest part of their sufferings comes from the fact that for two days of every month, all during the period of their widowhood, they are obliged to abstain from all food and drink, even to water. The aged sisters, hardly able to totter across her floor, must pay the penalty as well as the young widow of twelve. Weeping sisters and drying place stand about, wringing their hands, but no one dares help the sufferer.

Family Fun.

A Terrible Shock.

First preacher—"Na, I am not well. I received a shock last Sunday that completely prostrated me."

Second preacher—"Ah!"

"Yes, it happened in this way. One of my congregation who was a bedfy for lingering and alarm clock for a fewil and expecting to meet him after service put it in his pocket to give it to him, and right in the middle of my sermon the thing went off."

"I wonder what he was doing with it?"

"Well, you see, I thought it was a chestnut bell."

No Use on a Farm.

Farmer—"What is it you say you call that thing?"

Agent—"A patent jack, sir, for lifting great weights, works with a screw and lever, and with it you can raise anything, no matter how heavy."

"Can't see what use it is to me."

"Well, suppose you want to move that barn, for instance, you——"

"I ought to cease for to move that barn."

"Well, anything, no matter what. Have me something heavy to raise and I will show you how it works."

"Ain't got anything of the kind, mister, unless you want to try your hand on this mortgage.

Thoughtful.

An old bachelor who died recently left a will dividing all his property equally among the surviving girls, "because," said he, "to them I owe all my earthly happiness."

Never Snub a Newspaper Chap.

A good-natured newspaper chap was at a recent party and rashly said to a young lady without the formality of an introduction. He happened to see a great big caterpillar crawling on her lace collar, and jumping toward her, and

"Madam, permit me to——"

"But the young lady waved him off with an imperious and insulting gesture, and said:

"How dare you speak to me without an introduction. You are certainly no gentleman, sir."

Here the caterpillar overbalanced itself and fell down her neck.

"Youth! Oh! Help! Take it off! Oh, please do take it off, somebody!" screamed the fair one.

The newspaper man was the only "somebody" at hand, and he said:

"I couldn't think of it, madam; I haven't been introduced to the caterpillar."

She Agreed With Him.

"The colored female cook of a family living at the South and come up where the other afternoon and twisting up the corners of her apron with considerable embarrassment, said to her mistress.

"You see, missus, I thought it might be best to be tellin' you dat I—done got married last week."

"Ah, indeed! and what is your name now, Hannah?"

"Mah name, missus, is Mrs. Williams, ma'am. You see my husbar' he am a cook, too. He am what dey calls a shoft on a hotel.

"A chef, eh? That's very nice. And do you expect to leave us directly, Hannah?"

"Not directly, ma'am. I'll stay wif you for de present. You see my husbar' has done gone to New York an' Washington on his honeymoon, an' I'll be nigh onto six weeks befor' he comes back."

Woman's Perennial Curiosity.

Mrs. Valuable—Do you know, my dear, that they do say Mrs. Italiano's husband is likely to die at any moment!

Mrs. Tongfree—Indeed! That will be nice.

Mrs. V.—Nice! Why, how shocking! What do you mean!

Mrs. T.—Why, we shall then have a chance to see how she looks in plain black.

An Effect.

Father-in-law: "Perhaps, sir, you think I'm going to support you for the rest of your natural life?"

Son-in-law: "Well, I don't know why you shouldn't. I took your daughter off your hands."

Religious Persecution.

"Mandy," said a white woman, addressing a colored lady who had been engaged to do the cooking, "What do you mean! You went away at 10 o'clock and come in at 2, and we have not had a bite of dinner. Where have you been all this time?"

"Been down to de depiter."

"Didn't you know that you should have come back in time to get dinner?"

"Wan't thinkin' 'bout no dinner. Thinkin' relicion sends dat was searched outen de jaws o' Satan. Wan't no time ter stop an' feed wid de pork. I'm so tellin' yer."

"That's all very well, but we have to eat, and besides, you were not hired to save souls. I will look you for one day."

"Look heah, you dem mean dat, lady? Yes, I do."

"An' me been sittin' south, lisk a poison for dese de Lawd's work! Why, I had ter stay dar ter show! when da scared sun-under. Wan't nobody dar dat could shout like me, an' now yer gwine ter dock me after all dat?"

"Well, I don't believe I want you any longer. You needn't come back."

"Wuts we ter spill, eh?"

"Yes, that's what I want."

"An' jus' because I helped ter save souls Lordy, yer neighbor he ordained o' yer! I ter persecute Jigger in dis way. Why I'm de work o' de Lawd gwine ter prosper wh da white folks hucks regin it de way! I'm sorry for yer, for ole Satan git his eye on yer, sho."

Accepting a Daughter's Correction.

There's an old legend of the time when Bidwell was candidate for governor. He had a servant at the door, who demanded cards from his visitors before they could be admitted. Cards do not grow in the rural districts, and even the playing cards are not of the best quality. But the story has nothing to do with cards. One day an old farmer and his family called. The servant answered the call.

"Is the Governor's folks at home? demanded the old farmer.

"Are, papa, are, mit is," said the Miss seventeen daughter.

"Are the Governor in? said the old man, and the young lady fainted.

She Had Good Cause.

"I used to think Tim Simpson was a real nice young man, but I have him now," said one young lady to another.

"Why, what has he done?"

"He treated me shamefully. That's what."

"In what way?"

"Why, the other evening at the party I said to him, 'Let's eat a pineapple, and if you say 'yes' or 'no' to any of my questions I'll owe you a box of candy, and if I say 'yes' you'll give me a box.'"

"Then—"

"After he petty he took me home, and all the way there he talked just as sweet as could be about love in a cottage and how should not live along and all that. And when he got to the front gate he said 'Pauline, I have acted like a fool a mighty long time, and you sorry me?' 'Yes,' I said."

"And what did he do then? I suppose he kissed you?"

"And what did he do then? I suppose her listener eagerly.

"He just—hollered 'Thingumy!' such all his might. That's what he did, and she ran blush and scuttle to her room."

She'd Lost Something.

A lady came into town the other day from one of the near suburbs trundling her baby, a year and a half old, in a baby carriage, and looking into the shop windows as she sauntered along. There was a milliner's window that was particularly resplendent, and the admiring lady stood looking at the bonnets a long time. Then she started on her way across the street trundling the carriage before her.

On the other corner a grocery man who stood in front of his store with a peck measure in his hand said to her:

"Ain't you dropped somethin', ma'am?"

"Why, no, I guess not. What makes you ask?"

"Nothin', only you seemed to be shoutin' that baby carriage kind o' careful like, as if there was somethin' in it, and there ain't nary baby there."

The lady turned around and looked into the carriage. It was empty.

"Why, I declare!" she said, "I do believe I have lost it! Thank you for telling me!"

"Don't mention it, ma'am," said the grocery man, as she hurried toward her home. She hurried back almost breathless, and, as she passed the grocery man, she said:

"Thank you very much, sir, for your kindness. It left to us to straighten out this tangle, and we are the men to do it."

Shears or Pair of Shears?

Perhaps some of our readers are critical enough in the use of language to decide whether the customer at the clerk was right in the following dialogue: Customer (to clerk in a hardware store)—"Show me a small, low priced shears." Clerk (facetiously)—"Perhaps you mean a pair of shears. Customer (severely)—"I mean precisely what I said." Clerk (delicately, upon a spritsail article)—"Are there not two blades here? and don't you make a pair?" Customer (triumphantly)—"You have two legs, does that make you a pair of men?" The shears were done up in perforated shingle.

About an Even Thing.

A Dutcher who was driving across one of the northern counties with a loose and buggy this summer met a farmer on foot, and asked him not far it was to Greenville.

"Which one?" was the query eliar half a minute spent in reflection.

"Why, I didn't know that there was but one Greenville."

"Didn't you! There's one in South Carolina, a second in Kansas, a third in Ohio, and a fourth in Iowa. Which one do you want to go to?"

"The nearest one."

"Well, that's about even odds off. Now I can't pretend to figure for Greenville yet a better name than Stats. Do any tobacco?"

"Which tobacco do you want?"

"Why, I didn't know as there was more'n one tobacco."

"Yes, you there is. There's plug tobacco, fine cut, short, and smoking. Which did you want?"

"Well, I'll take plug."

"The nearest one."

"Then I'll take fine cut. Next time you inquire for tobacco you'd better mention the kind."

The two looked each other over for a minute, and then separated for life.

"Hi tied to your neighbor in spite of a bellicose manner or an exuberance of anger."

46 Years experience Proves Perry Davis' Pain-Killer the CURE for CHOLERA Cholera-Morbus, Diarrhœa Dysentery, Summer Complaints, and all Diseases of the Bowels.

DANIEL SHEERIN, STONE AND MARBLE YARD, Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts., Entrance to Catholic Cemetery, San Francisco.

JUST RECEIVED A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops.

WESTERN HOTEL, 212-14 Broadway Street. JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor (Late Steamer Hotel.)

ROBERT F. HAY, TINTYPE GALLERY 821 Market St., bet. 4th & 5th.

RAZORS! FOR $1,000 I WILL MAKE 6 BETTER RAZORS AND HONE OR STROP THEM THE SAME DAY THAN ANY MAN IN THE WORLD. Mr. Geo. Wilkes, Cutler, Sheffield, Eng., Sole Agent for the Celebrated Wade & Butcher Razors. Mr. Wilkes's Celebrated Razors are for sale by all Cutlers and Dealers in Cutlery throughout the United States. Mr. Wilkes will Hone and Strop Razors for Gentlemen at his Rooms, 638 Sansome St., San Francisco, Cal. TAKES AND FINISHED IN 10 MINUTES.

G. ORSI, HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger. PARLOR IN PAINTS, OIL, GLASS, VARNISHES, BRUSHES, Corner Pacific Avenue and Jackson Street. 22 MONTGOMERY AVENUE, San Francisco. Work executed in the best manner and at reasonable rates. Orders promptly attended to. Specialty: Gilding, Silvering, Graining, Marbling, Kalsomining, Decorating, Calcimining, Painting, Papering, Glazing, Frescoing, Stencilling, Scenery, Signs, Etc. Estimates Free. Residence, 1020 Dupont St., near Pacific Avenue.

WASTE EMBROIDERY SILK Is the finest and most durable Silk for Embroidery, Fancy Work, Etc. Sample Package, containing 1 yard of each color, sent on receipt of 25 cents. Address, WASTE EMBROIDERY SILK CO., 1 Exchange Place, Providence, R. I. Agents Wanted. Mention this paper.

WARD & CO.'S Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE. 608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F. Telephone No. 717. ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST CLASS HOTEL & Ship, Farm, Hotel, Teamsters, Dairymen, Barmen, Waiters, Cooks, Porters, Chambermaids, Laundresses, Nurses, Seamstresses, Housekeepers, Housework Girls, Also, good English Boy, willing to work for his board and attend school. Also, Chinese Boy, willing to work for board and attend school. Also, Chinese Cooks, Waiters, Washers and Gardeners, with good recommendations.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE, Importers and Dealers in BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS. Card Stock, Straw and Bluders' Board, Etc. MANUFACTURERS OF Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags. 512 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY. JOHN WIELAND — — PROPRIETOR. BEYOND STREET, NEAR FULSOM, SAN FRANCISCO. Amount of Beer sold in 1880 636,000 barrels.

MISCELLANEOUS. JULIUS H. MEDAU, 968 and 970 Folsom St., San Francisco. WHOLESALE AND RETAIL LIQUOR DEALER. Established 1876. We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods. Table Wines 50c., 60c., 75c., and $1. Angelica Wines $1, $1.25 and $1.50. Malaga Vineyard dry 25, three dos. $2. Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2. Kentucky Whiskies $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4. Bourbon Whiskey, $2.50, $3.75 and $2. Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per doz. wholesale. Other Wines and Liquors at lowest rates.

NEW MUSIC. J. FISCHER & BRO., New York, A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St., San Francisco. PACIFIC AGENT.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE! Wilhelm Fischer's Old Established Employment Office, Removed from 626 to 628 Clay Street. MALE OR FEMALE HELP Always on hand at short notice. Always apply to me when you want help of any description. COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED. Office Hours, from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M. Miss M. Stewart's Employment Office, Room No. 1, 1826 Market Street, Opposite Lick House.

LIVE AND LET LIVE. Splendid Set of Teeth, only $5. A FIRST DENTAL DOCTOR—F. T. SULTON, 845 Kearny, street.

RED CLOVER. Price of Seed per Bushel, Prepaid. Red Clover, $1.50; Alsike, $1.50; Alfalfa, $1.50; Lucerne, $1.50; Sweet Clover, $1.50; Orchard Grass, $1.50; Hungarian, $1; Millet, $1; Red Top, $1; Kentucky Blue Grass, $1.50; Tall Meadow Oat Grass, $1.50; Perennial Rye Grass, $1; Sorghum, $1; Japan Millet, $1. Per pound, by mail, 25 cents. Prepaid, 12c. Per 1000 lb. Beautifully and profusely illustrated, containing a Calendar of Operations for every month, and a Table showing the best time for the Planting and Harvesting of Vegetables, Flowers, Etc. Sent free to all applicants. Address, HOME SEED CO., Lock Box 1, Lancaster, Pa.

Home Seed Company's Almanac. 1887. Sent free to all applicants. Address, HOME SEED CO., Lock Box 1, Lancaster, Pa.

Per 1000 Pounds, free by mail, 25 cents. Prepaid, 12c. Per 1000 lb. Beautifully and profusely illustrated, containing a Calendar of Operations for every month, and a Table showing the best time for the Planting and Harvesting of Vegetables, Flowers, Etc. Sent free to all applicants. Address, HOME SEED CO., Lock Box 1, Lancaster, Pa.

20th Thousand of Catholic Belief. 40 cts. Paraphs, $2.50. Paraphs, $12.00. Lithographs, $20.00. Sold by all Catholic Booksellers and Agents. BENZIGER BROTHERS, Publishers of Ecclesiastical Works, VESTMENTS & CHURCH ORNAMENTS, 36 & 38 Barclay Street, New York, Cincinnati, St. Louis.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. KNABE PIANOS. Unsurpassed and Unrivalled by the Best Pianos in the World. A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 653 Market St., S. F. Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

ESTEY PIANOS. Formerly the Pat. Arion Piano. THE OLD FAVORITE! BENJ. CURTAZ & SON, 20, O'Farrell Street, San Francisco.

EDUCATIONAL. Academy of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, WOODLAND, CAL. STRICT ACADEMY IN ONE OF THE GARDEN SPOTS OF CALIFORNIA. Large Grounds, Fine Buildings, Pleasant Rooms, Good Fare, Terms Moderate. Pupils received at any time. Address, MOTHER SUPERIOR.

EDUCATIONAL. SANTA CLARA COLLEGE, SANTA CLARA, CALIFORNIA. This Institution was founded in 1851, and in 1867 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It possesses large buildings, with extensive shady play-grounds, gymnasium, swimming pool, etc. It possesses a most complete Philosophical Apparatus and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Zoology. It has, literally, 1,000 pieces of Drawing, Surveying, Engineering, Philosophy and Commercial Diplomas. The Musical Department is in charge of good teachers, and has an attendance of 100 pupils. TERMS: Diplomas are given to two departments—the Classical and Scientific—and certificates in the Commercial Course. TERMS: (Payable semi-annually in advance.) Matriculation fee, for the full term, $15.00. Tuition, Bedding, Washing and Mending of Linen, $250. Music, Use of Instrument and Modern Languages, each, $50. Drawing, Painting, etc., each, $50. Bed and Bedding, $20. Washing, $30. Dispensary fee, $5. For further particulars apply to the President, Santa Clara College, or to Rev. Joseph Bravo, 211 Hayes street, San Francisco. REV. P. E. BANNON, S. J., President. Letter-Paper for Missionary Boxes.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA. THIS INSTITUTION, OFFERING TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS THE SAME ADVANTAGES TO YOUNG LADIES WHICH THE MOTHER OF ROME TAKES TO HER OWN DAUGHTERS, IS PLACED UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN, AND IS CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME. The course of studies embraces the Classical and Scientific branches, with Music, Drawing, Painting, Fancy Work, Etc. Terms (payable quarterly in advance): Board, Tuition in English, French and Latin, Bed and Bedding, Washing and Mending of Linen, $250. Use of Piano, $50. Use of Harp, $50. Painting in Oil, per lesson, $1.50. Painting in Water Colors, $1.50. Drawing, per lesson, $1.50. Vocal and Instrumental Music, form extra charges. For further particulars, address, COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, San Jose.

ST. GERTRUDE'S ACADEMY, RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL. This Academy is situated in the Town of Rio Vista, on the Sacramento River, 80 miles from San Francisco, and is accessible by Steamers and Cars. The Academy is a large building, with all the modern improvements, including a Gymnasium, Swimming Bath, Ample Grounds, Shady Walks, Fruit Trees, Flowers, Etc. The Course of Studies embraces the Classical and Scientific branches, with Music, Drawing, Painting, Fancy Work, Etc. TERMS: Per Scholastic Year (payable in advance): Board and Tuition in English, French and Latin, $150. Bed and Bedding, $20. Washing, per month, $1. Use of Piano, $50. Use of Harp, $50. Painting in Oil, per lesson, $1.50. Painting in Water Colors, $1.50. Drawing, per lesson, $1.50. Vocal and Instrumental Music, form extra charges. Pupils received at any time. For further particulars, address, MOTHER SUPERIOR.

EDUCATIONAL. SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. Conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Schools. Offers Every Facility for Acquiring a Thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial. THOSE WHO DESIRE TO GIVE THEIR CHILDREN A SOUND, SOLID, AND COMPLETE EDUCATION, AT A MODERATE EXPENSE, ARE INVITED TO SEND THEM TO SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE. The Commercial course has been established in accordance with the wants of the age, and will afford young men every advantage that can be obtained in any Commercial College. The Classical course has been established in accordance with the wants of those who desire to give their children a good practical education in as short a time as possible. The Commercial

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—A special correspondent of the Liberal New Ireland, who has been visiting the Protestant districts in the North of Ireland, writes: "It is amazing how quickly he has to find a very considerable number with whom I can unreserved, both professional and commercial questions, as well as business, in favor of Home Rule. In the counties of Antrim, Down and Derry, several Protestant farmers, whom I know personally, told me that they were very reluctant, they said, at first, before they had made up their minds to Home Rule party, but confessed that it was every bit as a religious question as any other that they had back for such a considerable time. Some of them also stated that public opinion is coming round to Home Rule principles, and that another general election will work wonders in the North.

Carlow.—Anti-tenant, county Carlow, Mr. D. Miller was elected some short time ago out of Oranmore House. The landlord Mr. Durdin—not emergency—to use the term for a medium. The sum, it appears, did not pay in those bad times. The heirs of the case have long since been in Parliament of the people, and it is hoped that they may not be known in that one of Dublin Bay, and that the man who is an emergency man was the last and only one that Miller had with the half-blue.

Clare.—The Freeman's Journal of Sept. 22d says: "The most satisfactory change has taken place in the weather in west country Clare during the past fortnight. A great shake of rain has been evident throughout the entire district, while the hay has been permanently richer and secured in winter twine. There are still quantities of hay being cut down and saved in temporary ricks. There is every prospect that the potato crop will or will not fail. The farmers's position about these weeks ago threatened to be somewhat, owing to the inclement weather which we were then experiencing.

Cork.—On September 19th a valuable ship (the Victoria Cross) and her cargo were seized on this Cork harbor. The ship's agent in Queenstown had left Queenstown for Liverpool, stating that she had to be sent to Liverpool, and another was received from Dublin's Port Commissioners, to the effect that the stock upon Hamit's Rock.

Mr. William Lane Joynt has been approached with regard to the vacancy in the representation of North-East Cork, caused by Mr. Lamey's resignation. Mr. Lamey represented the division that abolished Mr. Wilfred Lucy's Parliamentary seat of Mallow. It would be in the interest of Irish Mr. O'Brien seated Parliament once more as the representative of Mallow.

The venerable and patriotic pastor of Bohercrow, Father McMahon, expired on the 19th of last September in his 84th year. The deceased was the oldest priest in the whole diocese of Cashel, and was the last of the Bohercrow Parish, Tipperary, Ireland.

On September 17th the sheriff's bailiff from Cork, accompanied by a force of police, visited the premises of Ourrasgreen, between Kilbeggan and Mogeely, and seized five cows, ten sheep, and two horses, the property of a farmer named John O'Brien, for rent due to the landlord amounting with costs to £37. The landlord is Mr. R. H. Deane. The proceedings passed off quickly.

September 22d, a sad case of suicide took place at Ballybrown, on the south of Lough Derg. The unfortunate man, Michael Ryan, was a married Dutchy, with several small children, aged 2 and 7 respectively. She had about 15 acres of the worst land and very difficult tillage.

Dublin.—A National, named Hugh McKenna, residing in Tullamoylin, near Derry was fired at recently when returning from Clogher Revision Sessions. Last November the same man's house was fired into, shots were fired, protected to present assaults, and the guilty party can be brought to Mullingar.

Dublin.—The Viceregal procession through the streets of Dublin, on September 24th, was the attide which has taken place whether it may. About the public entrance of Irish Lord Lieutenants into Dublin, the crowd cheered, and some, for a short time, the cheers were very hearty. The Lord Mayor, Sir Edward Sullivan, and his Lady, were the most popular. The landlord party are now strong in maintaining that the Lord Lieutenant represents the Sovereign, and not a party. Lord Aberdeen was Lord Lieutenant. When the landlords represented his father's name to boycott the Queen?

Fermanagh.—Lough North Fermanagh is covered on each that Colonel Nolan had compulsorily purchased, which gave the landlord right nor reason on their side. The landlord's agent

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MY TWIN BOY.

Music hath a wondrous power
To soothe the troubled breast,
It hath a charm in every tone
To lull the soul to rest;
But there's a still more potent spell
To deals of delightful fame,
A spell to which my heart responds,
Far youth and lovely dame.

A note to sings the soldier's breast
And the battle hour is near,
For soulless music is inactive of rest
Amid the battle's fear;
A gentle lullaby, yet of stirring force
When happy hearts lie calm meet,
It hath a soft entancing power
To lure the gentle dame's feet.

On Sunday morn a world of love
It brings onto the heart one,
It speaks of Heavenly rest where
To every child of Jesus dear;
It tells of Nation's charioted pride
Past fire to another glory,
Of kings of men who lord sway
Where man is subdued by story.

In England's home or over the main
When evil assailing foolish about the Church
Which Neal laughed a little, and
Lightly answered him, lol, growing emphatic
Hath made a very good defense of the Church he loved.

After dinner, he found Philip waiting at the door for him. Philip tapped him on the shoulder.

"I would like to get to your church with you," Philip said.

"You are very condescending," answered the young man, irritably, for he had lost his temper, and the amusing impossibility of making the boarders understand him, and he para way to a desire—although his conscience uncise him—to return the dislike which he thought Philip had for him.

"You can go by yourself if you wish to."

Philip made no answer; he stumbled over the young man's feet in turning to go upstairs, and the young man thought that he had never seen a more disagreeable young person. He said to himself, that Philip's manner was only one way of being clever;
but he was not sure of this, and the more he considered it he thought that he ought to have been more charitable, the more angry
he became at it. Finally, he forgot all about it, except that he had a vague increase of dislike for Philip, and he did not mention it to any one, not even to his wife.

Certainly, in the eyes of this little world,
there did not exist a more stupid, awkward,
unfeeling, unamiable, zealous being than little Philip.

Young Neal discovered, however, that he had found a Catholic Church, for he saw him, in his threadbare suit, standing behind the last pew in Philip's church on Sunday. Its first thought of taking him into his pew, but he resisted the impulse, as he does of his lavender-colored kid gloves, and spread a silk handkerchief under his knees on the bench. Perhaps Philip's threadbare suit had something to do with this impulse.
Neal smiled at the landlady's "little Philip."
It seemed so inappliable to this long-faced,
shabby-looking youth.

"He has come here only to mock and ridicule sacred rites," Neal said to himself, by way of apology. "I'll not notice him."

The landlady overheard that little Philip went out more than usual; and after a month or so, he let himself out of the house at two o'clock in the morning, and came back in about an hour. The landlady and her husband had been sleeping soundly when the door opening to sing some Latin words to himself in his room. The young boarder next door knocked and jeoulsy said that he was trying to see who
"He was queer and no mistake;" he did not try to stay again.

During the winter, he went out very early, and came back for his breakfast about ten o'clock every morning. He took his meals in his room, and the landlady words to himself in his room; but the boarder next door knocked and jeoulsy
asked him if he was trying to see wood.

"He was queer and no mistake,"

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE ARCHDIOCESE.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1886.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Christian parents, let us see your answer cannot consist in the unspeakable folly that upon you supply the schools, whether we can by a judicious use of the schools, whether we can by a judicious use of the means which Christianity and the Catholic Church have placed at our disposal, to make our children, by the grace of God, Christians and Catholics, and we sanctioned, have their minds, we have control and supported every where, that no one authority should be found of sufficient to be constituted a this truth. But all this will be only words to the wind, if we do not, by our example, show our children that we believe in such a Catholic Church. If the head of such Catholic truth will be against us as aggressive and his duty to contribute towards supporting the Catholic press, by subscribing for one or more Catholic periodicals, and by recommending them to our friends, we shall be ever to attract to its rightful development and to encourage its devoted writers. But, where a journal that is thoroughly Catholic, instructive and edifying, is established, it is the duty of every Catholic, whether assailable in time and opinion, disrespectful to constituted authority, or lacking and contentious in Catholic Guidance.—Pastoral Letter on the Press Pastoral Council.

Editorial Notes.

— Rome has adopted a new plan. Young ecclesiastics who are able and talented will, with the consent of their ordinaries, be kept there for a year or two, to be trained into the mode of carrying on business with the Roman congregations, especially that of the Propaganda.

— We have received from Hoffman Brothers of Milwaukee, the October number of their Quarterly Clergy List. It has a portrait and sketch of Right Rev. Alfred A. Curtis, Bishop-elect of Wilmington, also of Right Rev. Bishop Katzer of Green Bay, and is a very handy publication for both priests and laity.

—The Very Rev. Father Fidelis (Dr. Kent Stone), Superior of the Passionists in South America, recently laid the foundations of a new church and monastery in Cerro-Alegre, Valparaiso. Mr. Arthur Edwards and his mother have donated $50,000 towards the buildings. Mrs. Edwards has already built houses for the Sisters of Mercy and other Religious at her private expense.

— Every year the number of Protestants and other non-Catholics who send their children to Catholic schools and academies is on the increase. This cannot be because they believe in Catholicity, but must be because they love their children and want them reared well and purely. What an involuntary but all the more profound tribute to Catholic education.

— A movement was recently inaugurated in England to erect a memorial church in honor of the fiftieth year of Queen Victoria's reign. An Executive Committee was named, but Mr. Gladstone subsequently sent a note positively declining to permit his name to be used in connection with the movement. This looks a little singular on the part of the ex-Premier, and it is not unlikely that Gladstone is looking towards Rome.

— The infidel who manipulates the news factory in Rome, sent over a telegram to the Associated Press on Monday, in which he repeated the oft-exploded falsehood that Bishop and the Cardinals recently had under consideration the expediency of removing what he calls "the Papal seat" from Rome. The rumor of this "news" sold of more recent years was a mere repetition of the tumult, violence, slander and destruction of property which marked the character of its progenitor in the Catholic hatred. What moral principle or vital Constitutional right was gained by the abolition of two supremely engaged in the Kneeshing Party? None whatever. The rise and progress of that disreputable Jack-lantern dynasty was detrimental to the best interests of the American people who—as a cosmopolitan community—should all live united in the bonds of friendship, justice and truth.

The Pixley-Wiggenson party in this State has been organized on precisely the same lines that marked the foundation of the "Native American" party of nabdom-ous memory. The chief conspirator in this and Catholic-baiting organization depends entirely upon his usual weapons of fraudulent misrepresentation and malignant calumny against the Catholic Church in order to carry the State for the Knownothing candidates. It is the public creed of Pixley that to call lies is justifiable under certain circumstances, and he has practiced this disreputable demagogue carried out to its fullest capacity in a freshly, fanatical fashion which has fired off in Oakland last week, and to which we desire to call the attention of MONITOR readers in order that they may have some faint idea of the audacity of the most debased demagogue that ever disgraced the political arena in America.

Pixley pretended to read to his hom-logged Oakland audience extracts from the Syllabus of Errors condemned by Pope Pius IX. In 1861, yet so true was his notorious falsifier to his favorite maxim, "Falsehood is legitimate under certain circumstances," that he did not cite a single proposition correctly! This seems almost incredible, but it only goes to show how base a man may become when blackhearted bigotry gets possession of his mental faculties and warps his sense of right and wrong.

Pixley told his dupes—most of whom did not know the difference between a Syllabus and a sylloquia—that the Catholic Church "opposes liberty of speech and a free press, and that Pope Pius IX., in an Encyclical dated December 8th, 1864, "anathemas" "all who maintain the liberty of the press and all advocates of the liberty of speech." But this Inverical Herod did not tell his dupes that the "press" freedom which the Church condemns is that vilely gross, immoral and infidel literature which is hourly let loose upon society and which is rapidly transforming the young men and girls of America into houlihans and harlots. Nor did Pixley explain that the "freedom of speech" condemned by both Popes and all decent people, is that "freedom" exercised by anarchists, fanatics and freelands who purposely flaunt their false, destructive and dangerous doctrines in the faces of their fellowmen, so as to incite their fiendish, at another, violence or to wreak destruction upon the property of their more peaceable and conservative citizens. The Catholic Church is the friend of good government; she has ever been the patron of pure literature, she glories in allowing even "the Devil's Advocate" freedom of speech, but when such problems their friends attempt to attack Christianity, civil and civil rights, such as Pixley and Wiggenson have done, then the Church, through his pastors, lifts up her voice in condemnation of such illegitimate and all-other-loving claims, given in the fact that Almighty God has left our power on earth which has the energy, strength and ability to lead down into earthly hell the rebellious element that would sow discord, vice, immorality and nullidity in communities where peace, quietude, purity and Christianity prevail.

Pixley sting still to read from the Syllabus of Pope Pius IX., the later bowdlerized Pixley told his doubly deceived dupes that the professors of the present glorious Pontiff declared that "Public Schools open to all citizens for the education of the young should be under the control of the Roman Church." He pretended to quote from the same Pontiff this expression—"The Roman Church has the right to exercise authority without any limits set to it by the civil power; he further followed his bigoted, evil authority by quoting from the same document the assertion that "the Pope and the priests ought to have dominion over temporal affairs, and then he capped the climax of his audacious absurdity by pretending to quote Article XXX of the Syllabus as laying down the doctrine that "The Roman Church and her ecclesiastics have a right to immunity in civil law."

We have stabbed the word Roman in the foregoing extracts only that expression Pixley has put its own diabolical brand upon every word he malignantly and dishonestly attributed to Pope Pius IX. It is also sufficient to say that no Pope, Prelate or Priest in the Catholic Church desires the control of the Public Schools. The Church teaches all Catholics that they must "render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and to God the things that are God's," hence we cannot Pixley of the gross falsification by merely showing that the Civil power has jurisdiction which is entirely its own; and as such is cheerfully acknowledged by the Catholic Church and taught to her children. The Pope, every Bishop and every Priest in the Church is just as amenable to the civil law as Frank Pixley or the "no Popery" politicans who follow in his Satanic shadow, and the fact falsifying fraud knows this just as well as any man in America, but he wants to elect the "American" ticket, and—he willfully evades the truth in order to secure success if possible.

This dishonorable trick of falsifying Papal documents, corrupting the text, and distorting its meaning, is one of the tricks degraded writers like Pixley have resorted to in all ages since Satan held his reign on earth. All well-informed non-Catholics know this to be true, hence there is no necessity of dwelling upon this point. Pixley next informed his infatuated and infamed dupes that the Roman Catholic Church was the most dangerous in America, when he knew he was flatly falsifying every historical record from the days of Charles Martel down to the capture of Richmond. But as Pixley was discussing "civil loyalty" it is a great pity he did not inform his dupes that his co-partner in the anti-Catholic and anti-American party—E. D. Wiggenson—proved his disloyalty to his Northern birthplace by figuring as a Copperhead traitor and traitor during the Civil War, and as the concocter of dogged documents in which he denounced President Lincoln as a tyrant and Jefferson Davis as a villain. Pixley the friend of Wiggenson the Copperhead necessitate traitor—as leaders of a party consisting of ex-secessionists!!! Birds of a feather flock together, and when such a scandalous pair of scare-crows command, we imagine that a certain lot of "patriots" will be ready to take up the rag-and-bob-tail brigade of the anti-American party. The one is a traitor at heart the other is a traitor from principle, and we hope to see the whole lot of "patriots" sent to the same macadamic where rest the bones of "Know Nothing" lost and only found in long memories!

In order to give apparent force to the Pixley falsehoods with which his Oakland speech was interlarded, Pixley pretended to quote the sentiments of Catholic Bishops, priests and newspapers, in order to show his badly-sold dupes how earnestly all the forces of the Catholic Church in America were marching in order to pull down "that bulwark of our liberties—the public schools. These spurious extracts—like his distorted and counterfeit extracts from the Syllabus—were all the output of Pixley's prejudiced mind and were manufactured for the sole political purpose of beating the party of immoderate "patriots" into power.

Of course every intelligent American knows that Father Hecker, the Paulist, of New York, never said that "there is no long to be a State religion in this country, and that state religion is to be the Roman Catholic, but it serves to rank the men of anti-Catholic hatred into and American hearts, hence Pixley proclaims it with a glee worthy of the Father of Lies.

The other extravagant ideas contained in Pixley's pretended extracts from Catholic Prelates, Priests and newspapers were equally from a disreputable sheet issued by a bigoted blackguard in Washington. It is called the American Protestant, and—like Pixley himself—is filled with falsehood and fanaticism against the Catholic Church. Yet this is the vile and venal native literature who sets himself up as the censor of Catholic citizens!

We have not the slightest fear that such a firebrand's fanaticism can ever succeed in the malevolent Masonic conspiracy against the Church of God, yet it is well to put unsuspecting and credulous people upon their guard as they may not be influenced by the numerous utterances of this notorious Knownothing into the belief that Catholics are bad citizens or that the Catholic Church is prone to despotism or the Golden Calf of Aaron and make a bonfire of the American Constitution on Bunker Hill.

Let no non-Catholic be carried away by the fervent of untruth which Pixley pours forth every week. The Catholic Church look fear the history of Angers and then discover the contrast between Popes, Priests and Bishops have ever attempted to lessen the sacred liberty in this land, or to forge the nomadic cut slavery upon the freedom of American citizens. The citizens exist in every community, they occupy places of trust and honor, and, in every instance where they are good Christians, they do honor to the people they represent and serve them, since without a stain upon their character. From the birthday of American liberty down to the hour no Catholic citizen has ever proved a traitor to his country—not a Waggoner among them—they have proved honorable citizens, fellow-citizens, aiding in building up and sustaining Christianizing institutions which are pointed to as the glory of our Republic. But such a sight is not pleasing to British bigots, Knownothings and Pixley-polished scoundrels, hence every device of these Things imaginable is made against the Catholic Church, with the hope that they can raise an political prominence and obtain position upon the surface of the wave of rancorous hate which the passing storm of slander arouses, and it is this hope that induces the lessons of Pixley and Wiggenson party in this State, hence we need not be surprised at the enormity of the falsehoods which they fabricate, as then victory can only be achieved by filling the minds of the people with the foulest falsehoods which fanaticism can invent.

Is there any special cause for the present furious onslaught upon the Catholic Church in this State? Yes, there is. The Church in America, or have Catholics themselves permitted any current of treason against State or nation? No a thousand times No. Then, the great basis of the American people possess that extra amount of intelligence which enables them to see through the dodgers and tricks of the Knownothing party, and to vote accordingly. Pixley and Wiggenson know this, and they know that if the Catholic Church can be made to appear in the eyes of the people as the great enemy of liberty in California or near Truckee, Both Pixley, Wiggenson and the rest of the Public Schools. The Church teaches all Catholics that they must "render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and to God the things that are God's," hence we cannot Pixley of the gross falsification by merely showing that the Civil power has jurisdiction which is entirely its own; and as such is cheerfully acknowledged by the Catholic Church and taught to her children. The Pope, every Bishop and every Priest in the Church is just as amenable to the civil law as Frank Pixley or the "no Popery" politicans who follow in his Satanic shadow, and the fact falsifying fraud knows this just as well as any man in America, but he wants to elect the "American" ticket, and—he willfully evades the truth in order to secure success if possible.

This dishonorable trick of falsifying Papal documents, corrupting the text, and distorting its meaning, is one of the tricks degraded writers like Pixley have resorted to in all ages since Satan held his reign on earth. All well-informed non-Catholics know this to be true, hence there is no necessity of dwelling upon this point. Pixley next informed his infatuated and infamed dupes that the Roman Catholic Church was the most dangerous in America, when he knew he was flatly falsifying every historical record from the days of Charles Martel down to the capture of Richmond. But as Pixley was discussing "civil loyalty" it is a great pity he did not inform his dupes that his co-partner in the anti-Catholic and anti-American party—E. D. Wiggenson—proved his disloyalty to his Northern birthplace by figuring as a Copperhead traitor during the Civil War, and as the concocter of dogged documents in which he denounced President Lincoln as a tyrant and Jefferson Davis as a villain. Pixley the friend of Wiggenson the Copperhead necessitate traitor—as leaders of a party consisting of ex-secessionists!!! Birds of a feather flock together, and when such a scandalous pair of scare-crows command, we imagine that a certain lot of "patriots" will be ready to take up the rag-and-bob-tail brigade of the anti-American party. The one is a traitor at heart the other is a traitor from principle, and we hope to see the whole lot of "patriots" sent to the same macadamic where rest the bones of "Know Nothing" lost and only found in long memories!

In order to give apparent force to the Pixley falsehoods with which his Oakland speech was interlarded, Pixley pretended to quote the sentiments of Catholic Bishops, priests and newspapers, in order to show his badly-sold dupes how earnestly all the forces of the Catholic Church in America were marching in order to pull down "that bulwark of our liberties—the public schools. These spurious extracts—like his distorted and counterfeit extracts from the Syllabus—were all the output of Pixley's prejudiced mind and were manufactured for the sole political purpose of beating the party of immoderate "patriots" into power.

Of course every intelligent American knows that Father Hecker, the Paulist, of New York, never said that "there is no long to be a State religion in this country, and that state religion is to be the Roman Catholic, but it serves to rank the men of anti-Catholic hatred into and American hearts, hence Pixley proclaims it with a glee worthy of the Father of Lies.

The other extravagant ideas contained in Pixley's pretended extracts from Catholic Prelates, Priests and newspapers were equally from a disreputable sheet issued by a bigoted blackguard in Washington. It is called the American Protestant, and—like Pixley himself—is filled with falsehood and fanaticism against the Catholic Church. Yet this is the vile and venal native literature who sets himself up as the censor of Catholic citizens!

We have not the slightest fear that such a firebrand's fanaticism can ever succeed in the malevolent Masonic conspiracy against the Church of God, yet it is well to put unsuspecting and credulous people upon their guard as they may not be influenced by the numerous utterances of this notorious Knownothing into the belief that Catholics are bad citizens or that the Catholic Church is prone to despotism or the Golden Calf of Aaron and make a bonfire of the American Constitution on Bunker Hill.

Let no non-Catholic be carried away by the fervent of untruth which Pixley pours forth every week. The Catholic Church look fear the history of Angers and then discover the contrast between Popes, Priests, Prince Bishops have ever attempted to lessen the sacred liberty in this land, or to forge the nomadic cut slavery upon the freedom of American citizens. The citizens exist in every community, they occupy places of trust and honor, and, in every instance where they are good Christians, they do honor to the people they represent and serve them, since without a stain upon their character. From the birthday of American liberty down to the hour no Catholic citizen has ever proved a traitor to his country—not a Waggoner among them—they have proved honorable citizens, fellow-citizens, aiding in building up and sustaining Christianizing institutions which are pointed to as the glory of our Republic. But such a sight is not pleasing to British bigots, Knownothings and Pixley-polished scoundrels, hence every device of these Things imaginable is made against the Catholic Church, with the hope that they can raise an political prominence and obtain position upon the surface of the wave of rancorous hate which the passing storm of slander arouses, and it is this hope that induces the lessons of Pixley and Wiggenson party in this State, hence we need not be surprised at the enormity of the falsehoods which they fabricate, as then victory can only be achieved by filling the minds of the people with the foulest falsehoods which fanaticism can invent.

Who among intelligent men is not familiar with the grand profession of his faith made by St. Pacian, the illustrious Bishop of Barcelona, in the fourth century? This holy and heroic Confessor of the Faith says that the name Catholic comes from God, and is necessary to distinguish the dove, the undivided Virgin Church from all sects which are called after their particular founders. Further on he says that the name Catholic comes down to him from the holy Prophets, Confessors and Martyrs. "My name," adds this great Saint of God's Church, "is Christian, my surname Catholic, the one distinguishes me, the other points out to others." "No name," he concludes, "can be more proper to express the Church, which is all-diffused throughout and on and the same throughout the whole world."

What audacity, therefore, on the part of a handful of second-hand heresies whose religious entities are hardly known outside of a few States in this Republic, to attempt to arrogate to itself a title which is reserved for its antipathy, recognized for its security, and known for its universality, and familiar to people of all nations as designating the true, Church of Christ and distinguishing His flock of lambs and sheep from the kids, goats, gophers and gentiles of the so-called gospel sects of a few Protestantism!

There never has been, as there never will be, but one Church of God in the world, and that is known by its ancient or Catholic title of Catholic Kings of religious rebels against the Rock of Peter may manufacture plastic Protestantism with pseudo-Christianity. They may call them selves what Catholics—Non-Catholics—but Because of this they are not Catholics.

Facts are but one Church of Christ, one Bride and one Church which Christ Purchased with His Blood, and Christ is not divided. Christ is not divided. Christ is not divided. Christ is not divided. Christ is not divided.

SACRAMENTO CATHEDRAL.

Work Thereon Progressing Very Favorably.

Work in the new Catholic which Bishop Manogue is erecting for the diocese of Sacramento, is progressing very favorably. The walls are being rapidly placed above and lighting engagement for a long time to come. The amount of the building fund is $50,000, and $25,000 in addition has been expended in the building. The total amount of this fund is $50,000 in building the foundation of the main edifice. This, about $25,000 has been spent upon it to date. The general contractor recently selected for the work, in accordance to which contractors are based in sections, and the hardwood structure of the edifice is being carried out by the Sacramento Lumber Company, who are doing the work in a satisfactory manner. The dimensions are as follows: Length of the edifice, 175 feet; width, 75 feet. It is not expected that any contracts for completing the edifice will be made, but it is hoped that the work will be completed in 3 years. The plans are very beautiful, and the edifice when completed will be one of the finest in the State. The work is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible, and it is hoped that the Dedication will take place in the year 1888.

FATHER KAVANAGH OF KILDARE.

Sad and Singular Accident by which He Lost His Life.

Return of Father Bouchard, S. J.

Rev. Father Bouchard, S. J., the Canadian Missionary, has returned from his long and arduous missionary tour through the North-west, embracing the Territories, Manitoba, Alberta, and British Columbia, and Montana, Idaho, Oregon and Utah. After incessant labors in the Indian Missions, and in the Mining Camps, he has at last arrived at his home, and is now starting on the other side, a tour of an equally arduous character, in the interest of Dr. Kavanagh on the head, and from the effects of which he is now suffering, and he declared to be unfit for the sharp edge of a sudden attack of pneumonia, which he had been seized with in the mountains, but only to last for had recovered very rapidly when the tour was to be had personally. When a stretcher had been provided for him, he was carried out, and the very day of consciousness, expired in the arms of his brother, who was in charge of the tour. Father Bouchard's remains were conveyed to the Jesuit Church, where the Obsequies were celebrated by the Jesuit Fathers, and the Rev. Father Bouchard's remains were conveyed to the Jesuit Cemetery

Farm and Home.

The Incentive to Own a Home.

The Manufacturer and Builder thinks that the man who is working to secure a small piece of property substitutes a new and distinct ambition for a nomadic and vagrant one. Day dreams about large estates and princely incomes may be very amusing, but they are not half so profitable as a room of a lot 100 by 200, with a snug little dwelling house upon it. With this before him, a man will rise early and retire late, turning his hand cheerfully to any and every kind of work. He will have a motive for rigorous economy which will make it a pleasure. He will have the vision of the last payment before him as a perpetual motive to moderation in pastimes, economy in expenses, abstinence from expensive pleasures and from expensive companions. Thus it will come to pass that a judicious debt, incurred at the beginning of a journeyman's or laborer's career, will become his good genius, watching over him, inciting him to all industry and to self government. Every laboring man ought to own his house. The first duty of the working man should be to convert his earning into real estate.

Wheat in the Salinas Valley.

The quantity of wheat raised in this vicinity and between this place and the mountains south has been carefully estimated by parties who have access to the best sources of information to between 145,000 and 150,000 sacks. This will bring to the farmers nearly $150,000, a sum which will do much to improve their financial condition. A large proportion of these proceeds have but just commenced to improve their places, and this is their first crop. The crop was generally good and the quality superior in its kind. But many farmers would have been better off had they sown the Propo wheat instead of the Sonora. The former is said to be equal to the latter in productiveness, and the price on an average is 5 per cent higher. There is another point in favor of the Propo, namely, it will many times find ready sale when the Sonora is difficult to dispose of. We understand that the most expert millers invariably recommend raising the Propo wheat. The interests of the farmer and miller in this particular are identical; both are benefited by the production of a superior quality of flour. There will be opportunity the coming season for the farmers of this valley to procure the best varieties of seed, and they should not fail to do so.—San Miguel Messenger.

The Body and Its Health.

Fire things make people die young, cause their blood vessels or nerves to degenerate, make them prematurely old—kill them: 1. Glutony, or mere quality, high living. 2. Alcohol, familiarly known by many names; 3. Sloth, or lack of exercise; 4. Bad air, or indoor life; 5. Worry. These are the strongest allies of Death, the Lord High Executioner of this Human Race, who plies his trade, relying on man's personal foolishness.

Directly the sun begins to decline, let every maiden and housewife, and man and woman and child, with an eye for the picturesque, and a feeling for health and beauty, throw up the Venetian or Parisian blinds. Open your rooms to the glories of the evening; throw up and pull down the sashes; open wide all your doors. Let cool breezes enter into corridor and cellar and garret and room; let the "caller" air circulate through every inch of the house hour peculiar hour while you are getting your evening meal, while you are saying your prayers, while you think of others who toils all the day. If it be your precious lot to dwell apart from city life, and have outside your cottage or villa or mansion, flowers, those lovely gifts of Dame Nature, let scents of rose and thyme come in at every gap in the hedge, at every rift in the wall, at every sunny of the house—scents of rosemary and mignonette, and lavender and borgonia, and lily and sidarbery. Welcome the delicate perfume on its cooling, refreshing, healthy mission. It is Hygeia's gift—a superlative boon for the dog days.—Chambers Journal.

In the Hop Fields.

John Rooney of Brighton, at the beginning of the hop picking season, employed all the white labor that appeared to him for work. Some were tramps, who would only work long enough to get a "whisky stake," but forty-two of the number remained until the crop was gathered, and their earnings averaged $1 50 per day. After the picking was over he let a contract to white labor to clean up the hop field, and what cost him $50 last year to do with Chinamen this year cost him $27 50, and the white men made good wages. He says he will build a boarding and lodging house in order to accommodate white labor next year, and he emphatically declares that he will never hire another Chinaman. He had several applications from entire families to pick hops, but was not prepared to accommodate them. Four white men picked hops for A. Monkton at Mayhew's station and boarded themselves. At the end of the season they had cleared enough to seek another field. Mr. Rooney says the hop yard yielded 21 64 per day picking hops for John Rooney. How is that for a boy? Rooney says if the boy men will make proper arrangements they can pick every pound of hops in the American river valley with white labor. J. Rooney has thirty five white men engaged in picking grapes, and there is not a day but from two to six ask for work.—Stockton Ind.

Seven Tribes Worth Remembering.

For the disagreeable sensation known as heart burn, which so often accompanies indigestion, a mixture of common salt dissolved in half a wine glass of water, and drunk, is an effective remedy as a dose of laxative water, and a much pleasanter and safer one. Bathing a bruise in vinegar and then in spirits of turpentine will usually prevent the unsightly black and blue spot which not only tells tales, but deforms. When there is an unpleasant odor about the feet a small quantity of a weak solution of salicylic acid in the footbath is a sure destroyer of the offense. Many of the patent extracts and bitters are compounded of an alcohol, derived from wood and this is said to be a peculiarly dangerous form of alcohol capable of producing very serious brain disorder. One of the most trustworthy medicines in all the pharmacopeia is the hydrate of chloral which is so commonly used; cases are reported where 200 grains have been taken in safety, and other cases were ten grains have proved fatal or alcohol only narrow escape from death by timely aid and effort; this drug should never be taken but with the advice and under the care of a physician. Iron articles will seldom rust if they have been cleaned from oil by hot soda water and afterward dipped in hot lime water and dried. Collodion, spirits of turpentine, and the common salve called cuticle of cure, are such as are available ready to apply to horses and sores before a physician can arrive to do better, is to be done, and sweet oil and lime-water beaten up together make a cooling and healing ointment for them, as good as any medicament known.

Family Fun.

The Young Preacher's First Wedding Fee.

It was their first wedding. The groom was "new," so was the bride, and the clergyman had committed matrimony only in his imagination. Finally, however, it was all over, the knots was once flesh, and the bride was sweeping in the arms of the mother. The groom slipped out in the terrible, and as the young gentleman was about to pass out into the night, press of a room into his hand.

"A gold gold piece," thought the young preacher. His heart beat faster now that their he was officiating at the wedding. He handed the money so much. Indeed, he felt as if he was worth more than a half eagle, he had such difficulty in collecting it. And now to receive 20 all at once. Why, it—Then it occurred to him that it was customary for the minister to make the bride a present of his first marriage fee. The young man sighed as he removed his shoes overcoat and retired to the room where the guests were offering their congratulations to the newly wedded couple.

"I forgot something, said he as he approached the bride. "This is the first marriage fee I have ever received. It is yours. It should be kept as a reminder of this occasion."

The bride stretched out her hand and the coin rang as it touched her marriage ring. The guests looked up the innocent-eyed bride did not close her hand upon the fifty cent piece that lay there, and all saw it. The minister was glad it was his first marriage; the guests tried to appear as if they did not see the half dollar, and the reporter quietly smiled, and thought perhaps the young husband was saving up to buy a cracker.

Youthful Perspicacity.

A Waterbury 5-year-old set down a cup of milk, which he had raised to his lips, with the remark "Mamma, I believe the milkmaid has drawn it."

He Was Shot.

It was in the wild and picturesque Chickamauga battle-field relative skurry from one breastwork to another, and the squirrels chatter as they look down from their perches at men wandering from point to point in the jungles. We were skirting Snodgrass Hill, when we heard a rustling in the bushes by a series of yells and whoops. Pushing into the woods a few rods we came upon an old darkey seated on a log with his pants leg rolled up. There were four or five tiny streams of blood coming down, and it was plain enough that some scattering shot had struck him.

As we reached him a colored boy about 15 years old came out of the brush with a light shot gun in his hands, and the old man looked up and said:

"Julius, look back! You has shot your father in de leg."

"Why, pap, I did spoond you was rabbit. I heard sumthin move in de brush an' I fired away."

"Lordy, Julius! I correspond. You dun took an ole nigger weighin' 180 pounds for a little rabbit. Sont a boy long as pat big suff to make soup for one. Julius, I'se gwine t' whip you de difference to reason a rabbit an' your ladder."

He had been setting on a fence when he talked, and when he finished he took off his hat, sat down and played the fool so hard that the young man jump about two feet high and sung out like a Sabbath Army mule. By and-bye we gently interfered to prevent further punishment and the old man had the boy all naked.

"Julius, does you mean me?"

"Yes, ladder."

"Does you know me from a rabbit?"

"Yes."

"But you start for him an' pick up dat how an' make dat ev'thinl echo, an' de nex' time you go hunkin' you holler t' your mont bein' you shoot t' fyer you flam'en, ind'ed mamm, an please wine dis' bottle disrupshun."

He Had Thought Himself Just Too Smart to Live.

Mr Kerry Kimbe, the auto and autoist collector of the gas company, strolled into the office yesterday, laughing as if his sides had been tickled with a horsecloth grater. "Say, you should have been with me down at old Solomon Levy's just now," he gasped as his sack exhausted into a chair. "Why, what's the matter with old Solomon?" inquired the obituary editor as he turned back and clasped his hands across the back of his neck.

"Why, it's another to rich, responded Mr Kimbe when he had recovered his breath. "You see, I had a gas bill to collect amounting to thirty dollars, and when I presented it the old galoot said, 'All right, Mr. Gumps,' and going to the safe he brought out a 100 dollar bill and stuck it at me, saying, 'maybe you can change dot bill, Mr. Gumps.' I looked at the bill, and saw at once that it was a counterfeit. I was going to lamp the old son of a gun, but an idea struck me like a pain driver. I had a lot of bogus money in my pocket that I had been stuck on a day or two before, and I gave him the change in counterfeit, and he never knew the difference. He just pocketed the bill and took the dollars, and

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Armagh.—On Sept. 27th, the month's mind of the late Very Rev. Canon O'Toole, P. P., Middletown, county Armagh, was held in the church of Ballynascreen. The deceased was a descendant of the kingly line of the O'Toole's of Wicklow.

Mr. John McFarland, of Armagh, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county Armagh. Mr. McFarland is a Liberal gentleman who is held in great respect by those of his neighbors who are of his own persuasion. At Armagh, as at every other town in the North of Ireland, he has almost entirely conquered prejudices of the religious creed.

Antrim.—Of the six summer fairs on the 20th and 21st, at Ballyclare, James McKee, Esq., of Mount Pelliser, and 63 Donegal street, Belfast, was appointed Assistant Agricultural Commissioner in the North east of Ireland.

Cavan.—On Oct. 1st, the ceremony of a religious profession took place in the Convent of Poor Clares, Bailieborough. The lady alluded to is the sisterhood is Miss Tuckey, in religion Sister Mary Teresa, Jesuit.

A new fire extinguisher has just been started at Virginia, county Cavan.

Clare.—On Sept 25th, Major Purcell O'Gorman, who at one time represented Waterford in Parliament, arrived near his tenants in Ennis, county Clare. The tenant, Patrick Kennedy, and his wife, and one children, were removed from the house to the roadside, where they have since remained. The tenant's cow and farm produce were seized to satisfy the demands of the man represented. Consideration was promised with the cows at the expiration of twelve months, but Kennedy's wife, who is delicate, was with difficulty removed, and the sick children, who were not half clad, were compelled to leave the kitchen a second while they were sealed, notwithstanding their tears and protestation.

Carlow.—The saw church of St. Patrick Raheinby, now rapidly approaching completion, will rank among the finest ecclesiastical edifices erected in Ireland in recent times.

Cork.—At a meeting of the Bantry Board of Guardians, on Sept. 28, the National members proposed a resolution in reference to the imprisonment of the Rev. Father Fahy, but the chairman, Mr. Payne, refused to receive it. The resolution was, however, carried, as the Unionist members left the room.

Donegal.—On Sept. 29, Mr. Patrick O'Flea, M. P. for the West Riding of Donegal, arrived at Glenties, from Stranorlar, and was accorded a most enthusiastic reception from his constituents at Glenties. The ardor of his arrival was exceedingly short, but the mass crowd rapidly formed an enthusiasm not in a large crowd of people lined the streets.

Dublin.—Mr. Richard McEnnery, of the firm of Messrs. McEnnery, Brothers, who are well known in Dublin and Bridge ch. Dublin, was married to his cousin, Miss Mary Ellen Wickhow, where he had been shooting.

Official announcement is made that orders have been given for several drafts of troops to be sent to do the service battalions in Ireland.

The Very Rev. Monsignor Farrell, Parish Priest of Booterstown and Blackrock, died on Sept. 25th, at his parochial residence. The vacancy, deceased, who had attained a ripe age, was in declining health for some time past, and had been previous to his removal to Booterstown, Parish Priest of St. Catherine's, Meath street, Dublin.

The Rev. William Maloney, S. J., a venerable person, who reached his eightieth year, died on Sept. 27th at St. Francis Xavier's, Upper Gardiner street, Dublin. He was a native of Limerick, and after his theological studies in Maynooth distributed the duties of curate for some time in St. Mannin's parish in that city. He has been retired from the active ministry, and was admitted to the Society of Jesus in the year of Catholic Emancipation, nearly sixty years ago.

Fermanagh.—The funeral of Mr. Pat McMahon, of Ballyhaise, took place on Sept. 27. The remains were removed to St. Michael's Church, where a Solemn Requiem Mass was celebrated by the Rev. P. McDonnell, the Master of Ceremonies being Ven. Archdeacon Sullivan, and the Deacon, Rev. M. Maguire, P. P. Attendance of clergy present was interest in the convent service of mourning.

Galway.—The Very Rev. Canon Pope has addressed a letter to the Lord Lieutenant, earnestly asking that an inquiry may be instituted into the unusual and unknown fever resulted in the imprisonment of the Rev. Father Fahy.

Kilkenny.—William Fleury, of Inishnee, in the county of Kilkenny, grocer, was on the 21st of September, allowed to depart.

He Urbanus Mullin, who has a lot of sandstone near Kilkenny, paid £27 for cutting and carting his bill this year, for which he got altogether £4.

The Bishop of Ossory has left Kilkenny for Rome on his visit ad limina. He is accompanied by his uncle, the Ven Archdeacon Burke, P.P., Lady's Island, Wexford. The visit is expected to extend over a period of at least two months.

Meath.—There seems every prospect of a hard seven-days campaign in Meath during the coming winter, and some of the landlords, notably Lord Kenmare and Lord Headley, are preparing against their tenants, shade of prudence be blind to consequences. The Kilkenny members of Parliament, Messrs. Sexton and Dillon, accompanied by Mr. T. Harrington, M.P., made at some estates between Killarney and Tralee, which tenants have been evicted, and where others are negotiating for the purchase of their farms. The Irish police who have been protecting several Kerry landlords for some time past have been withdrawn. It is understood, at Tuesday Baller's direction, as he disapproves of the system.

Longford.—In a pastoral letter, issued recently, the Bishop of Ardagh, urges his clergy to preach to all landlords who will listen to them, the duty of kindness to their tenants in the evil days. Let us trust that the Earl of Granard and all one of those who will listen to the Bishop of Ardagh, will take the place Prelate's advice to heart. The Bishop of Ardagh is a man who is not to be suspected to patronize with other every lawful means to save them from oppression, or to warn the oppressor of the necessity he may render to an all just and all powerful God.

Limerick.—The Rev. Dr. O'Connor, P. P., Ashford, died at Blarney, on September 26th, aged 72 years. He has for over forty years a Priest, his mission being in St. Mochella's parish, and subsequently in Partown, where he was promoted as Parish Priest at Ardagh, and where such is the Universality of Admission, which he retained up to the time of his death—thirteen years. He was held in the highest affection everywhere, and at Thomogdale he was idolized by the Hill and Infantry, by whom he was a voluntary regard, and a battle for whose preservation he was in fighting through Ireland to the people, and it reached the House of Lords at last. The children were delivered to Mr. Thomas Fitzgerald, of Ballyhaise, and the tenancy for his lock but trouble should befal them.

Mayo.—Great preparations are being made in Ashill to prevent the landlord taking up the crops, which are just ripe. The people seem determined to stop the purchase of the seed given them by a charitable public to their families, for which it was intended, and let to the landlords.

On Sept. 29, under warrant of the Lord Chancellor, four children, Catholics, were taken from the Rev. Mr. Armstrong's institution, in Castlebar, Mayo. The children were delivered to their grandfather, a resident of London, who, with their grandmother, came to Castlebar, and through a missionary Protestant establishment, had a mentally brought them in Belfast.

Monaghan.—On Sept. 29, Mr. Patrick O'Connor, writes as follows, from Blackwell, Dundalk, Sept. 25th:—"About ten days ago, Fenian intelligence of a strong eviction party proceeding from Castle Saunderson on the Ashwell estate, to the mountain district of this parish. Immediately I proceeded to the same only to find that my information was but too true. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather—and a most dreary or drenching day could hardly be seen—deterred like unnecessary obstacles of hardship from their revel and inhuman work. The party consisted of the estate bailiff, with the sub-Sheriff of the county, Mr. Swan, and the usual accompaniment of Sheriff's bailiffs.

Tipperary.—A great popular demonstration was held on September 26th at Dundrum, county Tipperary. The occasion was the eviction of the sale of the cows which had been seized for rent by the landlord, Viscount Harberton, and which were restored to the owners by Mr. Hayes, M.P., a sentiment was carried and the cows were released. After the ceremony with the same Mr. Hayes, M.P., Father Ryan and others addressed the people.

Tyrone.—On Sept. 26th, a large and most enthusiastic National demonstration was held in Anne street, on the occasion of a meeting held in front of a fine old stone building erected as a railway hotel, in which the office of the Ulster branch of the Irish National League are located. This being a market day the town was densely crowded with country people from the surrounding districts, and their cars lined the roadway on both sides. From some of them very long small American flags, the stars and stripes fluttering gaily in the breeze. Mr. W. J. Shaw, Dungannon, presided, and Mr. Sayers, M.P., who, with a number of laymen and clergymen sat inside him in the waggonette, which was to serve as a platform, to the placard meeting, and made the enthusiastic address of a peoples in the crowded thoroughfares.

Wexford.—The Most Rev. Dr. Browne has appointed the Rev. Denis F. Kavanagh to the office of Diocesan Chancellor.

In Wexford much of the corn has been taken up in a more or less damp condition, and it will be to be regretted in order to insure it. During recent years the secretary, the agent, the sub, the absolute loss arising from the state of the weather and its influence upon our crops, has proved a source of great vexation and disappointment to the farmer. The operation thereof for the future of Ireland is not at all encouraging.

Waterford.—It is stated that the county Waterford Board will not allow any bonfire over their lands during the Superintendent of Father Fahy.

Wicklow.—For many centuries there was no Catholic church at Enniskerry. Forty years ago the Rev. Thomas O'Dwyer was sent as a working curate to preside for the spiritual wants of the people. For twenty years he resided in a humble house adjoining a little rural chapel on the mountain side at Cullenswood. On the death of the Rev. Alexander Keogh, P. P., of Bray, the parish was divided, and Father O'Dwyer was appointed parish priest of that portion in which the village of Enniskerry is situated. Aided by the contributions of his generous parishioners and the Protestant gentry, he worthily paid a fine church and a good parochial residence, which for appearance and convenience, are not surpassed in Bray or any parish in Ireland. Not satisfied with monument to his untiring energy and steadfast zeal of purpose. The venerable pastor now appeals to his friends to assist him in completing his church by the building of the tower and spire.

W. H. H. HART'S NOMINATION FOR ATTORNEY GENERAL

At the late Republican Convention at Los Angeles, in nominating W. H. H. Hart for Attorney General, the Republicans of California have made a good choice of a candidate for public office. Before he reached the age of twenty-one he had fought the Mormons in Utah. He drew such a vivid picture that the U. A. Congress passed a law making it a crime for any man of seeing his Hey Hare stealing through the underbrush. His address was as follows:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Convention: The Mormons have been driven out of Utah, through circumstances over which some months of it were no point—the necessity of the case, and the necessity of the soldiers very much like that of Jonathan Edwards, who in the early days of Boston, said, "Sinners! you were in favor of war, but suppose we should turn out to be Indians?"

We have proved ourselves to be good soldiers, we have commended their conduct, we admire their courage, we glory in their success, but we have not nominated any of them for Congress.

I have a little story to tell the Convention. It was related to me to-day, and the story of every fact which I shall state there is has been vouched for by a gentleman in whose integrity and truthfulness I have the utmost confidence. In the year 1862, when I was a boy of 14 years old, I attempted to enlist in the Union Army. I was refused because I was too young. My father was a Democrat.

But I mental friend had authorized the formation of an independent company (Hussars) in Union Scouts—and he was permitted to enlist in that company. I was served at Fort Humboldt, Fremont, at Stockton, and in all the battles which resulted finally in the capture of Vicksburg.

The company of which he was a member was detailed from time to time to Utah, during the year by Lieut. Ann from Tennessee and Northern Georgia, and he with others established a system of knowledge of what I may call the Georgia dialect, which enabled him to render the best service to the country of which I am about to speak.

During the campaign of Lee's Army of Northern Virginia, Sherman's army was at the Battle of Missionary Ridge, there he had been arrested in the second day of the battle, the 25th of November 1863, that at 3 o'clock Sherman, in company of his staff, should meet the Rebel Generals Georgia army. But, through the carelessness of the Confederates that Fleur was weak over the mountain and left in order to march his forces to the right to meet the expected attack of Sherman.

He his return by a circuitous route to General Sherman's headquarters and delivered the information. Sherman at the Battle of Chickamauga, and the great General immediately ordered Hooker's and Howard's division to make an attack upon Bragg's weakest center and left, his army having been weakened by the loss of the flower of the power attack of Sherman's army, and that same unfinished charge upon the rebel center and left, which was the turning point of the battle, and which resulted in the capture of Chattanooga, while in the battle of Missionary Ridge.

Gentlemen, I have said that I was a boy at the war, the names of the Generals who commanded those movements and of the bones who carried them, will go down to posterity. There is another story to which the name of the Hey Hare will be written in letters of light as the tree of Independence. (Cheers).

After his recovery from the wounds he had received in the battle of Fort Donelson, he was sent to Fort Humboldt and Hooker's Point, near Fremont, Ohio.

He finished his term of the war and completed the service until mustered out after peace was declared.

During the last six months of his service he pursued a course of Blackstone in his leisure and then commenced the study of law.

He continued it, and he was mustered out of service and graduated with honor, and was in due time admitted to practice and practiced for five years in Iowa; came to this State, practiced for two years in the city of San Francisco, where he has until up a large clientage, an honored and honorable position at the bar.

Gentlemen, I present to you for the office of Attorney General—I present to you a soldier of my regiment, but I present to you in the name of the soldiers of this republic, hitherto neglected by the Republican Convention. I do not ask you in the name of those who in rear the correct of the Mississippi, who in battled circuitous stock at Lookout Mountain, who sang the chorus of Sherman marching through Georgia from Atlanta to the sea (chorus): who carried our banner, boldly, into Richmond and Petersburg and Appomattox, still loved by all pure-hearted and true Republicans, and hated by all the Democrats in the side-hills and swamps of Southern Republicans, the matured, sagacious, and well-tried Republican party Hicks, the Hon. William H. H. Hart. (Loud and prolonged cheers and three cheers for Hart of Missionary Ridge).

WOODLAND'S FAIR.

The following is the result of the fair lately held here for the purpose of raising funds to pay off the debt resting upon the Catholic church. The whole income was—Receipts, No. 93; donation, No. 77; plants, No. 43; lunch-room, set, 1 cent; cow-pasture, No. 1; fancy work, No. 64; Silver set, No. 131; sofa cushion, No. 64; Silver set, No. 131; sofa cushion, No. 64; 20 gold piece, No. 1; silver dollars, No. 1; 20 gold piece, No. 1; 1 silver dollar, No. 1; No. 233; sold river cake, No. 1; 1 silver dollar, No. 1; 1 ladies' gold watch, No. 1. The many beautiful non-ticketed articles in the fancy department were sold at the close of the sale are all known.

Take No. 1, by the young ladies of the parish, returned in 1886; Table No. 2 or Barrel (Fred) Table, $337 75; Table No. 3, Mrs. Mary Table, $666; Table No. 4 or Winters and Madden Table; $666 75; the lemonade Table, $175; the Refreshment Table, $153 75. In the raffle for the cake Mr. W. Loofen bought and lodged, sum of $137 20, whilst Mr. Charnock turned in $1 for the same cake for the gold watch. Miss Annie Loofen was the popular candidate, and little Miss Florence Gifford carried off the doll, "The Pride of the Fair."

The fair was a success both morally and financially. It realized over $1,000 net to the church. The debt now resting upon our beautiful convent is only $2700.

Sincere thanks are here given to the ladies who were in charge of the fair and to all who in any way contributed to its success.

MARRIED.

THOMPSON-DONALDY, in Oakland, at St. Mary's Cathedral, on Sept. 29th, by the Rev. Father Wolfe, Mr. Joseph Thompson, of Sacramento, to Miss Mary Ann Maude Donaldy, of Sacramento.

BRYANT-TRACY, in St. Ignatius Church, Oakland, Sept. 29, 1886, by the Rev. Father Wolfe, Mr. Thomas Bryant to Miss Mary Tracy.

WOLTON-DROWN, in Oakland, October 14, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Thomas Drown, Mr. Thomas Wolton, of Sacramento, to Miss Esther Drown, daughter of the Rev. Father Drown, of Oakland.

KELLEY-MACADE, in Oakland, October 12, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Thomas Kelley, Mr. Thomas Kelley, of Oakland, to Miss Dorothy E. Macade, daughter of Mr. Thomas Macade, Twenty-Third Street, Oakland.

DIED.

GUIDON—In Sacramento, Stephen, August 29, Patrick Guidon, a native of Ireland, aged 70 years.

LANDIGAN—In Sacramento, August 29, Patrick Landigan, a native of Ireland, aged 70 years.

MOSKE—In this city, Oct. 1st, Julia, beloved wife of Mr. Moske, a native of Ireland, aged 70 years.

MAHONEY—In this city, Oct. 1st, Mrs. Jane Mahoney

Poetry.

FOR THE SOULS IN PURGATORY.

Ye souls of the faithful who sleep in the flame
Hot as yet are shut out from your final reward,
Oh! would I could lend you some portion of my
From your prison below to your palace on high!

O Father of Mercies! Thine anger withhold,
These works of the heart I offer for them in behalf;
Too off from Thy path they have wandered astray,
But Thou, their Creator, Thy children dost pity.

O tender Redeemer! their misery see,
Dark the night that they have endured by Thee;
Behold how they lies thee, despite of their pains
Bosom thee, before them to lavish love again

O Spirit of Grace! O tender divine!
See how for Thy presence they longingly pine;
Ah! bless, to relieve them, Thy sacred dove,
And the flame with pure love and with joy to inflame.

O Mother of Mercy, dear mother in grief
Send them to thy bosom a balmy relief,
Oh! temper the rigor of justice severe,
And soften their flames with a pitying tear.

Ye Patrons! who watched o'er their safety below,
Oh! think how they pine and how long they wait
And stir all the Angels earth Saints to the why
To plead for this noble work of pity.

Ye friends! who, once sharing their pleasure and pain,
Now lonely already in Paradise reign,
Oh! comfort their hearts with a balm of love,
And call them to share in your pleasures above.

O Penitents of Gethsemane! scorn of our sight,
O Thy mercy hasten what Thy justice delays,
So may Thy poor captives, released from their woes,
Thy praises proclaim, while eternity flows.

All ye who would honor the Saints and their Head,
Humanity, remember to pray for the dead.
And they, in return, from their misery freed,
To you will be friends in the hour of need.

Literary Miscellany.

The Haunted Organist.

A Wild Story of a Sacrilege and Its Punishment.

CHAPTER I.

There had been a thunderstorm in the village of Hurly Burly. Every door was shut, every door in his kennel, every rut and gutter a flowing river after the deluge of rain that had fallen. Up at the great house, a wing from which the rooks were calling to one another about the freight they had been in, the lawns in the deepest were ventilating their timid heads from behind the trunks of trees, and the old woman at the gate-lodge had risen from her knees, and was putting back her prayer-book on the shelf. The sky was still lurid behind the holes of the spinal cole, but the birds had begun to dive in and out of the ivy that wrapped up the house and the Hurly of Hurly Burly.

This thunderstorm took place more than half a century ago, and we must remember that Mistress Hurly was dressed in the fashion of that time as she crept out from behind the square chair, her that the lightning was over, and, with nervous fingers towards the window, sat down before her husband, the tea-urn and the muffins. We can picture her fine lace cap, with its peachy ribbons, the frill on the hem of her cambric gown just touching her ankles, the embroidered clocks on her stockings, the rosettes on her shoes, but not so easily the blue shade of her mild eyes, the satin skin, which still kept its delicate bloom, though wrinkled with age, and the pale, sweet, puckered mouth, that time and sorrow had made angelic while trying vainly long, with blacker settings, mouth large, sweet, and melancholy. She was all dead, smooth and open; her nose and chin were nothing.

The visitor crossed the floor hastily, dropped a courtesy in the middle of the room, and approached the table, saying stagily, with a soft Italian accent:

"Sir and madam, I am here. I am come to play your organ."

"The organ," gasped Mistress Hurly, "the organ!" stammered his master.

"Yes, the organ," said the little stranger lady, playing to the back of a river with her fingers, as if she felt notes under them. "I was but last week that the handsome signor, your son, came to my little house where I have lived teaching my music since my English father sold my Italian to their and brothers and sisters died and left me alone."

Here her fingers left off drumming, and two great tears were brushed off our from each eye with each hand, child's fashion. But the next moment the fingers were at work again, and if only a blind stary were on ing the tongue could speak.

"The noble signor, your son," said the little woman, looking trustfully from one to the other of the old couple, while a bright blush shone through her brown skin, "he often came to see me before this, always in the evening, when the sun was warm and I was all through my studio, and the sonata was calling up in my heart, and I could play out grand with all my soul; then he used to come and say, 'Hurry, little Lisa, and play better, better still. I have work for you to do by and by.' Sometimes he said, 'Excellentissima!' but oftenest he came to me and said, 'It is enough. Will you swear to do my bidding, whatever it may be?' Here the blush again fled. "And I said: 'Yes. And he said: 'Now you are my betrothed.' And I said: 'Yes.' And he said: 'Pack your music, little Lisa, and go off to England to my English father and mother, who has an organ in their house which must be played upon. If they refuse to let you play, tell them I sent you, and they will give you leave. You must play all day, and you must get up in the night and play. You must serve him. You are my betrothed, and you have sworn to do my work.' I said: 'Shall I see you there, signor?' And he said: 'Yes, you shall see me there.' And I said: 'I shall know my vow, signor.' And so, sir and madam, I am come.

The soft foreign voice left off talking, the fingers left off drumming on the chair, and the little stranger gazed in dismay at her auditors, both pale with agitation.

"You are deceived. You make a mistake," said they, in one breath.

"Our son!—begin Mistress Hurly, but her mouth twitched, her voice broke, and she looked piteously towards her husband as the poor lady had her prayer-book on the shelf. The sky was still lurid behind the holes of the spinal cole, but the birds had begun to dive in and out of the ivy that wrapped up the house and the Hurly of Hurly Burly.

This thunderstorm took place more than half a century ago, and we must remember that Mistress Hurly was dressed in the fashion of that time as she crept out from behind the square chair, her that the lightning was over, and, with nervous fingers towards the window, sat down before her husband, the tea-urn and the muffins. We can picture her fine lace cap, with its peachy ribbons, the frill on the hem of her cambric gown just touching her ankles, the embroidered clocks on her stockings, the rosettes on her shoes, but not so easily the blue shade of her mild eyes, the satin skin, which still kept its delicate bloom, though wrinkled with age, and the pale, sweet, puckered mouth, that time and sorrow had made angelic while trying vainly to define in heaven.

The squire was as rugged as his wife was gentle, his skin as brown as hers was fair, his eyes, which looked out from under his shaggy brows, as keen as hers were dim, and he looked at his wife often, and very often she looked at him. She was not a tall woman, and he was only a small man. They were a quaintly, well-matched couple, despite their difference. She turned to you with nervous sharpness and revealed her tender voice and eye; his spoken sentiments proved rough, but the turn of his head was courteous. Of late they lived one another better than they had ever done to the heyday of their youthful love. A common sorrow had developed a simpler likeness between them than in former years the cry from the wife had been, "Don't crack your nut so much!" and from the husband, "You run the lad with softness." But now the idol that had stood between them was removed, and they saw each other better.

The room in which they sat was a pleasant, old-fashioned drawing room, with a general spider legged character about it, from the dining, spinet and guitar in their places, with a great deal of soiled music beside them, on carpet, tawny crushes on pale blue; blue fittings on the walls, and faint gilding on the furniture. A huge urn, crammed with roses, in the open bay window, through which some delicious airs from the garden, the twittering of birds settling to sleep in the ivy for close by, and occasionally the pattering of a flight of rain drops, swept to the ground as a hooped bowl in the breeze. The urn on the table was ancient silver, and the china rose. There was something in the room for luxurious ease of the body, but everything of glass or metal reflected a ray.

There was a great beau all over Hurly Burly, except in the neighborhood of the rooks. Every living thing had endured from heat for the past month, and now, in common with all nature, was receiving the boon of refreshed air in silent peace. The mistress and master of Hurly Burly, as the general spirit that was abroad, and were not talkative over their tea.

"Do you know," said Mistress Hurly, at last, "when I heard the first of the thunder beginning, I thought it was—it was—"

The lady broke down, her lips trembling, and the peachy ribbons of her cap stirring with great agitation.

"Fahaw!" cried the old squire, making his cup suddenly rise upon the saucer, "we ought to have forgot as that. Nothing has been heard for three months."

CHAPTER II.

At this moment a rolling sound struck upon the ears of both. The lady rose from the seat trembling and folded her hands together, while the tea-urn fluttered the tray.

"Nonsense, my love," said the squire; "that is the sound of thunder. Where can he arriving?

"Fahaw!" cried the old squire, making his cup suddenly rise upon the saucer, "we ought to have forgot as that. Nothing has been heard for three months."

"Dear, dear," said the little foreigner. "If you have thought him dead, have good cheer, dear sir and madam. He is alive; he is well, and strong and handsome. Hear one, two, three, four, five (on the fingers) days ago he was blessed by my side."

"It is some strange mistake," said the old squire, with a pitiful shake of his head. "Our son is dead."

"Our son!"—begin Mistress Hurly, but her mouth twitched, her voice broke, and she looked piteously towards her husband as the poor lady had her prayer-book on the shelf. The sky was still lurid behind the holes of the spinal cole, but the birds had begun to dive in and out of the ivy that wrapped up the house and the Hurly of Hurly Burly.

This thunderstorm took place more than half a century ago, and we must remember that Mistress Hurly was dressed in the fashion of that time as she crept out from behind the square chair, her that the lightning was over, and, with nervous fingers towards the window, sat down before her husband, the tea-urn and the muffins. We can picture her fine lace cap, with its peachy ribbons, the frill on the hem of her cambric gown just touching her ankles, the embroidered clocks on her stockings, the rosettes on her shoes, but not so easily the blue shade of her mild eyes, the satin skin, which still kept its delicate bloom, though wrinkled with age, and the pale, sweet, puckered mouth, that time and sorrow had made angelic while trying vainly to define in heaven.

"Dear sir and madam," said the little stranger, clasping her hands, "I am sorry

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1886.

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR.

By reading the announcement of the forthcoming CHRISTMAS MONITOR which appears on the eighth page, our regular and occasional contributors will learn what desirable premiums we offer for all classes of Christmas literature, and those who have a faculty for writing upon such subjects for the Christmas will do well to set to work at once in order to win some of them.

We desire to develop and encourage as far as possible the talent of Catholic writers, hence we hope many of our veteran contributors, as well as a large number of Catholic graduates and pupils of Catholic institutions, will take to make the forthcoming CHRISTMAS MONITOR a representative issue of Catholic talent.

Full particulars concerning contributions will be found on the eighth page.

Editorial Notes.

— Prince Joseph de Broglie, oldest son of Prince Raymond de Broglie, has taken Holy Orders.

The death is announced of Mgr. Funder, Prince-Bishop of Gurk, Klagenfurt, Austria, from cerebal apoplexy.

— It is announced that the Dutch Embassy to the Vatican, which has been interrupted since 1869, is now to be resumed.

— The health of his Eminence, Cardinal Jacobini is much improved, and it is hoped that ere long it will be completely re-established.

— The Very Rev. Dean Ruggle, of Thonon Sti Gall, Switzerland, Vice-President of the Swiss Pius-Verein, will celebrate his silver jubilee on Nov. 8.

— The health of his Eminence Cardinal Melchers has been in a great measure restored by his sojourn at Trent, from whence he has returned to Rome.

— The cost of the two spires of St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, will be $192,000. The total cost of the Cathedral will be $2,500,000. This, without doubt, is the most expensive pile of ecclesiastical architecture in the United States.

— The learned Father Balling, S. J., second Prefect of the Vatican Library, is making researches in the leading libraries of Austria and Germany with the view of completing an important work on which he has been engaged for a number of years.

— From a valued correspondent at Salt Lake City we learn that the consecration of Right Rev. Lawrence Scanlan as Bishop of Utah will take place in this city, but the time therefor has not as yet been decided upon.

— We return our grateful thanks to the Catholic Columbian, Catholic Union and Times and all our other contemporaries, genuine who gave the Monitor such laudatory notices upon our thirtieth birthday. We hope they may all realize that property which their merit as advocates of the truth of God so well deserve.

— The corner-stone of a monastery for the Capuchin Order was recently laid at Herman Station, Pa. This is the only monastery of the Order of Capuchins in the United States, and it will consequently be the mother house of the Order in this country.

— Horses are to be founded are long in the West and through the South.

— Now that the political excitement consequent upon the Protestant Episcopal scandal is over, we hope to hear from the friends of Ireland concerning the Anti-Friction fund mentioned in the Monitor a month ago, but not for which no funds have yet been forwarded from California. Set the ball rolling at once in every Branch of the League so as to help drive landlordism out of its last ditch in Ireland.

—Knowothingism did not amount to much in the election yesterday. Pixley and his traitorous followers spent about $20,000 to make a respectable showing for the Knowothing ticket, but Copperhead Wiggington was completely washed out, and it looks now as if it cost about $5 a vote to coax people to vote the Knowothing ticket. Lass Dat! California is too thoroughly American to follow in the lead of firebrands, fanatics and fools.

— It is reported that the Rev. Dean Gibney has been appointed coadjutor Bishop to the Most Rev. Dr. Grimes of Perth, Western Australia. It will be remembered that Father Gibney is the priest who distinguish-ed himself during the fight with the Kelly gang at Glenrowan. His feat in entering the hotel while it was in flames, in spite of the assurance of the police that there was danger of the bushrangers' firing at him, and rescuing the wounded man who lay there, is one of the finest in the annals of the colonies.

— The cause of Catholic education is flourishing—thank God!—in a wonderful way all over the country. In Salt Lake City Father Scanlan, the Bishop-elect, recently opened the College of All Hallows (called after his own Alma Mater in Dublin), and at present it has 52 boarders and 65 day scholars. St. Mary's Academy, under charge of the Sisters of the Holy Cross, has 90 boarders and 100 day scholars. The Sacred Heart Academy at Ogden has 70 boarders and 90 day scholars. St. Mary's of the Assumption at Park City has 175 day scholars. Holy Cross school at Salt Lake City has 60 day scholars. Evidently Christian education is appreciated in Utah.

— It has been generally supposed that the sad death of Dr. Kavanagh, at Killaloe, recently, by the fall of a statue of an angel from over the altar, was an altogether unprecedental case. Strange to say, some thirty or forty years ago almost identical case occurred at Bruges. The curé of the Madeleine was saying Mass when the statue of an angel, but this time a wooden statue, for the altar is of carved wood, fell upon him. Notwithstanding the temporary stun of the blow, the curé made an effort to finish the Mass but was obliged after a few while to desist. He was carried to his home, and died in the course of the day.

— "The Otto Dunin Princess is the name of a new novel by W. H. Mallock, which A. I. Bancroft & Co., have sent to this office and which cost us the loss of a couple of hours valuable time in discovering to be the worst lot of literary trash ever published since Adam. Some people are such people even among the precious remnant of this brief life in paying over each sixpence ten sentimentality as this Mallock nonsensical mystery, is passing strange. A most imprintent so military, continuous even could hardly become interested in such a common-place compilation of fiction and fustian as goes to make up the whole 500 pages of this transparent literary flummery.

— Rome has always been looked upon as the "Home" of "Old Catholicism." Will it be believed that at the recent census, not a single Old Catholic appears, either for Rome or for Cobleuz! The figures given are: "Roman Catholics, 27,786; Apostolical Protestants, 7,428; Jews, 685; other Protestants, 72; Greek Catholics, 8; Dissenters, 12; of "unknown religion, 3. What has become, then, very suddenly into the Deutsche Reichszeitung, of "Bishop" Reinkens, the "Vicar General," Professor Knoesel, of the Old Catholic university, and of all the Old Catholic professors and of the community to whom they minister? They are sought for in vain. Their existence seems to be that they have entered themselves as "Roman Catholics. Incredible as it sounds, we suppose it must be so.

— The Bulls from Rome authorizing the consecration of the Bishop-elect, Alfred A. Curtis, of the Baltimore Cathedral, as Bishop of Wilmington, Del., having arrived, the ceremony will take place in the Baltimore Cathedral on the 14th inst., and be performed by Cardinal Gibbons. The diocese of Wilmington was established in 1868, and comprises the State of Delaware and the Eastern shores of Maryland and Virginia. The Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Becker, D. D., who was consecrated in August, 1868, was the first and only regular Bishop which the diocese has had. Bishop Becker is now in Savannah, Ga., where he went to fill the place of Bishop Gross, who succumb Archbishop of Oregon City on Feb. 22, 1886. There are in Wilmington about seven churches, including the Cathedral. The diocese comprehends about forty churches and a great number of colleges and schools.

— It is a singular fact that nine out of ten defaulters are always church members or Sunday School Superintendents. After they skip for Canada it is learned that they have been walking and praying for years.—Sin Francisco.

If our esteemed contemporary had substituted the word "Sabbath" for "Sunday" in the foregoing extract, the Monitor would have heartily endorsed its sentiments. The man who make a mockery of religion by claiming Christ's name only beneath it, usually patronize the Sabbath schools of Satanism, whilst the Sunday School teachers in the Catholic Church are proverbially filled with piety, purity and zeal. In fact to include them with "Sabbath-school" cankerage is considered a direct insult by the besom—as one of them expressed herself the other day—"we never speak as we pass by."

Is Protestant Unity Possible?

The members of the recent Chicago Convention of the Protestant Episcopal sect appointed a committee for the purpose of undertaking the herculean task of uniting all the heretical sects in one grand organization of Christendom. Since the unsuccessful attempt to build the Tower of Babel, this is certainly the most gigantic undertaking which has yet presented itself to the hallucinations of the human mind.

The proposition of Christian unity would certainly be laudable were it not for the fact that Protestantism—like the Tower of Babel—is not agreeable to God. The Catholic Church has always represented Him on earth and always will continue to be His voice in the world. And when the founders of many sects—religion set up divers sects in opposition to the Catholic Church, they merely repeated the feeling words of those who projected the Tower of Babel. "Come," said they to each other, "let us build a tower whose top may reach even to heaven." The design of the misnamed Reformers was to glorify themselves rather than God, to run counter to His Church and to crush Christianity as it had existed in the world from the beginning. Here, again, however, we behold the mercy of God in protecting His Church and in defeating the ends of His enemies. Among the builders of the Tower of Babel Almighty God created such a confusion of language that the builders no longer understood one another, unity of plan and proportion were lost, the work was left unfinished and the builders were scattered broadcast over the land. Among the projectors of Protestantism Almighty God created such a confusion of ideas that—from Luther to Lapponi—no two of them have any unity of doctrine. Here, then, it becomes at once apparent that Protestant unity is impossible—because God and error can never commingle.

The Protestant Episcopal sect is the pioneer of that impossible move, for before it undertakes to unite the sit of Episcopalianism with the water of Seventh-day Adventists, it had better unite its own grain under one hopped banner. There are High Church and Low Church Episcopalians; Ritualistic and Anti-Ritualistic Episcopalians; Baptized and Non-baptized Episcopalians, and before such a sect can bring about religious amity between the Old School and New School Presbyterians, the Mormons and the Methodists, the Campbellites and the Universalists—it will be directly in the line of duty to set its own house first in order and prove to the Protestant world that Episcopalian bad ten dwell in unity together.

Whether among the authority for one upon Rome. Notwithstanding the temporary stun of the blow, the curé made an effort to finish the Mass but was obliged after a few while to desist. He was carried to his home, and died in the course of the day.

— "The Otto Dunin Princess is the name of a new novel by W. H. Mallock, which A. I. Bancroft & Co., have sent to this office and which cost us the loss of a couple of hours valuable time in discovering to be the worst lot of literary trash ever published since Adam. Some people even among the precious remnant of this brief life in paying over each sixpence ten sentimentality as this Mallock nonsensical mystery, is passing strange. A most imprintent so military, continuous even could hardly become interested in such a common-place compilation of fiction and fustian as goes to make up the whole 500 pages of this transparent literary flummery.

— Rome has always been looked upon as the "Home" of "Old Catholicism." Will it be believed that at the recent census, not a single Old Catholic appears, either for Rome or for Coblenz! The figures given are: "Roman Catholics, 27,786; Apostolical Protestants, 7,428; Jews, 685; other Protestants, 72; Greek Catholics, 8; Dissenters, 12; of "unknown religion, 3. What has become, then, very suddenly into the Deutsche Reichszeitung, of "Bishop" Reinkens, the "Vicar General," Professor Knoesel, of the Old Catholic university, and of all the Old Catholic professors and of the community to whom they minister? They are sought for in vain. Their existence seems to be that they have entered themselves as "Roman Catholics. Incredible as it sounds, we suppose it must be so.

— The Very Rev. Dean Ruggle, of Thonon Sti Gall, Switzerland, Vice-President of the Swiss Pius-Verein, will celebrate his silver jubilee on Nov. 8.

— The health of his Eminence Cardinal Melchers has been in a great measure restored by his sojourn at Trent, from whence he has returned to Rome.

— The cost of the two spires of St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, will be $192,000. The total cost of the Cathedral will be $2,500,000. This, without doubt, is the most expensive pile of ecclesiastical architecture in the United States.

— The learned Father Balling, S. J., second Prefect of the Vatican Library, is making researches in the leading libraries of Austria and Germany with the view of completing an important work on which he has been engaged for a number of years.

— From a valued correspondent at Salt Lake City we learn that the consecration of Right Rev. Lawrence Scanlan as Bishop of Utah will take place in this city, but the time therefor has not as yet been decided upon.

— We return our grateful thanks to the Catholic Columbian, Catholic Union and Times and all our other contemporaries genuine who gave the Monitor such laudatory notices upon our thirtieth birthday. We hope they may all realize that property which their merit as advocates of the truth of God so well deserve.

— The corner-stone of a monastery for the Capuchin Order was recently laid at Herman Station, Pa. This is the only monastery of the Order of Capuchins in the United States, and it will consequently be the mother house of the Order in this country.

— Horses are to be founded are long in the West and through the South.

— Now that the political excitement consequent upon the Protestant Episcopal scandal is over, we hope to hear from the friends of Ireland concerning the Anti-Friction fund mentioned in the Monitor a month ago, but for which no funds have yet been forwarded from California. Set the ball rolling at once in every Branch of the League so as to help drive landlordism out of its last ditch in Ireland.

—Knowothingism did not amount to much in the election yesterday. Pixley and his traitorous followers spent about $20,000 to make a respectable showing for the Knowothing ticket, but Copperhead Wiggington was completely washed out, and it looks now as if it cost about $5 a vote to coax people to vote the Knowothing ticket. Lass Dat! California is too thoroughly American to follow in the lead of firebrands, fanatics and fools.

—It is reported that the Rev. Dean Gibney has been appointed coadjutor Bishop to the Most Rev. Dr. Grimes of Perth, Western Australia. It will be remembered that Father Gibney is the priest who distinguish-ed himself during the fight with the Kelly gang at Glenrowan. His feat in entering the hotel while it was in flames, in spite of the assurance of the police that there was danger of the bushrangers' firing at him, and rescuing the wounded man who lay there, is one of the finest in the annals of the colonies.

— The cause of Catholic education is flourishing—thank God!—in a wonderful way all over the country. In Salt Lake City Father Scanlan, the Bishop-elect, recently opened the College of All Hallows (called after his own Alma Mater in Dublin), and at present it has 52 boarders and 65 day scholars. St. Mary's Academy, under charge of the Sisters of the Holy Cross, has 90 boarders and 100 day scholars. The Sacred Heart Academy at Ogden has 70 boarders and 90 day scholars. St. Mary's of the Assumption at Park City has 175 day scholars. Holy Cross school at Salt Lake City has 60 day scholars. Evidently Christian education is appreciated in Utah.

— It has been generally supposed that the sad death of Dr. Kavanagh, at Killaloe, recently, by the fall of a statue of an angel from over the altar, was an altogether unprecedental case. Strange to say, some thirty or forty years ago almost identical case occurred at Bruges. The curé of More Methodist Mendacity.

"Apostles in China" is the type which Brother McCrary grinds out week from the heathen handbooks yclept the Cyclopaedia Christian Literature. Now, Brother McCrary knows more about Chinese than Chinese know about Chinese, and he knows that Mandarins are not practising the sentimental meaning of "the Mikado Way," but he happened to have an English Methodist friend who "spoke and lived with a copy of the Manchester Guardian as shown to be found the letter of a London correspondent of that paper—and so

Brother McCrary

Made the text somewhat vary—

and he put in the Manchester Guardian matter some editorial manufactured from the biblical blunders of the local "whole" of Chinese.

The "truth" in Brother McCrary's compilation, but leaves by no chance what over the text that follows, as he has "stolen it from the English paper" already enumerated. This is another instance of the perverse nature of Methodism, the influence of which has made men not only contemptible—nonsense, duplicity and hypocrisy, in all their feelings with their fellows and the Almighty—but actually in the brazen of its victims a brand mass of bigotry which blinds the poor victims so that they can see and feel only in their own shadow. And when Brother McCrary's shadow falls upon the expectant earth, that good man thinks—or, only God knows the Blessed Trinity and the whole Legion of the Apostles—Gods included—

The letter in the Manchester Guardian which caused Brother McCrary to commit literary piracy, changes the Catholic Church with being the cause of the recent disturbances in China. The Catholic Church—the Catholic Church—the Roman Church—the Roman Church—the Roman

Farm and Home.

UNCLE SAM'S GRAIN WANTED.

The Crops of Europe will be 50 and 55 Per Cent, Less This Year than Last Year, and she is Looking Toward this Willing Land.

According to the majority of exporters of wheat, corn, and flour on the Produce Exchange, America has done and will do a larger business with foreign countries during the cereal year which began, as figured by Mr. W. H. Trafton, the Potter statistician on the subject, on Sept. 1. Statistician Fitzsom H. Walker says the cereal year ought to and does begin earlier, but the purpose of this story is not to tell how or why two such veteran dingers, but to tell why the stay of exporters down some is more brisk, why their general appearance is more snappy and chirpy, and somewhat as it was in the days in 1879 80, when the foreigners took from us nearly 192,000,000 bushels of wheat and 118,000,000 bushels of corn. In 1883-84 America sent abroad only half that amount, and in 1884-85 the situation was not much better. But from the very moment that this cereal year was ushered in, on Sept. 1, an increased export movement began.

The exports from Sept. 1, to Oct. 8 were: Flour, 933,148 barrels; wheat, 17,066,190 bushels; corn, 2,945,817, bushels. For the corresponding period last year the exports were: Flour, 620,763 barrels; wheat, 3,662 658 bushels; corn 4,580,057 bushels. It will be seen that the exports of wheat and flour are largely in excess of what they were this time last year, and the conservative merchants on the Produce Exchange believe that the improved export trade will continue. They are that it cannot well be otherwise when the statistical situation of all the wheat growing countries of the world is considered. They say that Europe has for shows that her crops will average less than last year by 30 to 35 per cent., and Mr. Edwin R. Livermore figures that England, France, Germany, Austria, and Italy will need from America somewhere in the neighborhood of 80,000,000 bushels of wheat. Mr. Trafton puts the deficiency at 70,000,000 bushels, but adds: "As the situation becomes more fully developed and better understood no doubt my figures may require some little revision. But one thing is plain, European wants from abroad are to be very considerably greater this year than last, and in any event there is an immediate deficiency in this year's production as compared with the requirements, and it will have to be made good by drawing upon the reserves of old grain. There may be enough wheat to go around, but there is every prospect that stocks everywhere will be very nearly exhausted before another harvest comes off, and whether this can be done and prices at the same time be held down by their present low level, would seem to be exceedingly questionable."

Then Mr. Harlan A. Pierce, another eminent authority, moves a point for Uncle Sam by recalling the fact that the shipments of four to England are daily growing larger, as the Englishmen are slow to adopt the new roller process of making flour now in full operation in the big flour mills in Minneapolis. Another bright feature are the recently advanced rates demanded by the steamship companies to carry the grain abroad. At one time during the summer merchantmen was shipped to Liverpool at two and two and a half cents a bushel. The rate is now eight cents a bushel, and is evidence of the increased demand for tonnage. The steamship people are also happy to be interviewed on business subjects.

A Profitable Ranch.

Ever since coming to this State 11 years ago we have had no small opinion of its products, and the outdoor exercise which we took to R. B. Blowers' premises the other evening added greatly to our already high estimate of the productive powers of the soil of Yolo county. Mr. Blowers has a State reputation as a raiser of grain, and is not only found him and forty hands making raisins, but also making hay and drying prunes and figs—all at the same time. The hands were sorting of raisins when the author was laying fat on the ground was planted not more than six months ago, and this is second cutting. Mr. Blowers has forty acres of grapes, some of the varieties, such as the seedless Sultana, making sunny tops to the acre. He also has eight acres of the finest table and shipping grapes that we have ever seen. They are large in size and dark red in color, and are so well calculated to stand the test of shipping that they have been forwarded to England. The name of the variety has escaped my memory. One not acquainted with raisin-making cannot realize the magnitude of the business, and the large number of boxes a forty acre tract of ground will produce. The most noticeable object that attracted our attention was his own water works. The works are composed of one large well, in which the water at this season of the year stands within 15 feet of the surface of the ground, and furnishes an abundance of the useful fluid with which to irrigate the whole ranch. The engine which runs the pump is 8½ inches, and performs the extraordinary feat of filling a 2,000 gallon tank in 15 minutes. While Mr. Blowers has the Mason water ditch passing through his place for the benefit of his neighbors, he makes no use of it, his own water supply being sufficient to irrigate his entire ranch. What R. B. Blowers has done in utilizing the body of water that underlies the shallow surface of the rich soil of Yolo county is within the power of every land holder in this part of the State, and that, too, at no extraordinary expense. To realize the value of a bountiful supply of cheap water in increasing the soil's productive capacity, it is only necessary to visit Mr. Blowers' place and witness the earth's surface fairly groaning with luscious grapes that will yield ten tons to the acre, fruit orchards that are laden with the choicest fruits, watermelons that are so plentiful that they have ceased to be of value, alfalfa hay that can be made to produce ten tons to the acre, for trees that are fairly bending under their heavy burden of tropical fruit, and the growth of the ever useful walnut trees, which has been so wonderful as to cause us to dismiss our former fears of the near extinction of this admirable wood.—Woodland Democrat.

Dissatisfied with Chinese.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Cowles, of El Cajon, are in the city for a few days' rest, being guests of the Horton House. Mr. Cowles has just finished picking his grapes. He has had 90 hands at work, 50 of whom were Chinamen. He is very much dissatisfied with the work of the Chinamen, and says he does not want any more Mongolians in his vineyards, claiming that their work is not done nearly as well as by Americans. However, he is glad he made the experiment, as he had heard so much that the Chinamen were better than white laborers. Mr. Cowles will have 10,000 boxes of raisins from four-year old vines.—San Diego Union.

A Word to Grape-Growers.

"Tell your grape-growing readers not to be in too big a hurry about putting in their vineyards," said Mr. Priebor of the Napa Valley Wine Company. "So long as there is no danger of rain," he continued, "it would be better for the grower and better for the wine-maker if the grapes were allowed to hang on the vines until they get riper. As it is the grapes we get in the yellow average about 19 per cent of sugar, when 22 per cent is required to make good wine. The unripe, half-pressed bunch of grapes a man picks to-day would, if left on the vine until it was ripe, weigh three quarters of a pound, and have the required amount of saccharine matter."—Napa Register.

Family Fun.

Naming the Baby.

"I think," said the fond mother, "that as the baby's name is Brown, it would be better to give him some first name less common than Harry. There are eleven columns of Henry Brown in the directory."

"Thirteen, darling," said Mr. Brown; "I counted them yesterday. What we want for the baby is a unique first name, a name that will be distinct and peculiar, that will make it possible always to identify him. Isn't that it dearest?"

"Certainly.

"Well, I have prepared a list from which we can pick. Suppose we think over it? Let's begin with the twelve tribes of Israel. Are there any among them that you like?

"I think not."

"How would Gad do? God Brown?"

"That would be moral, anyhow."

"Possibly. The others are all rather common. Dave Ivanhoe strike you? I rather like Ivanhoe Brown. Or, if we wanted to give him a middle name we could call him Ivanhoe Alcibiades Brown."

"It is too long and, besides I am not certain I could always spell Alcibiades correctly in marking his underclothing."

"Plutarch, then?"

"Mr. Brown, that is outrageous!"

"Outrageous, love? Plutarch! Why what do you mean?"

"No child of mine shall ever be named after the god of the infernal regions!"

Mr. Brown explained the blunder that she had made in mistaking Plutarch for Pluto and passed on. "What do you say then to Galileo? There is not a single Galileo Brown in the directory."

"Was Galileo an Israelite?

"No, love.

"I thought from his name perhaps he came from Galilee," said Mrs. Brown, thoughtfully.

Mr. Brown was too astonished to replies. He resumed the reading of his list.

"Peleiah is a Scriptural name. Would you care for Peleiah? Peleiah Brown?"

"I think not," said Mrs. Brown. "It sounds like an impeachment of the dear child's veracity. I don't think we ought to start him in life with an insinuation that he will be a story-teller."

"It might not be right. Suppose then we call him Pumpkin?"

"Is that a Bible name?"

"No."

"To be sure not! I was thinking of St. Peter. I think, William, I should prefer an American name of some kind if we could find one.

Mr. Brown concealed his feelings and turned a new leaf of his list.

"I have a few Anglo-Saxon," said he, "that belong to this continent and that are marked by strong individuality. Ragsome, for instance. His was an Anglo-Saxon.

"Was his last name Brown?"

"I think not. No, I am certain it was not, and there was no Nebuchadnezzar; he was a king, too."

"Why, child would never put such a name as that on an umbrella handle."

"True," said Mr. Brown. "The king probably had no umbrella. Spotted Tail, however, is a native American name, which—"

"And you would give that name to your child—your own child?"

"I don't know, Spotted Tail Brown might answer for—"

Mrs. Brown suddenly fainted out of the room with a remark intimating that she was going home to her mother's. After she had had a cry, Mr. Brown folded up his list and agreed to call the child Thomas.

A Sweet Dose for a Preacher.

Occasionally the Methodist minister come to a certain village in Maine from one of the neighboring towns. After "meeting" was over it was customary for one among the more favored in this world's goods to invite him home to dinner. On this particular occasion, it was Gen. Sp. Ind. Aunt Sally—one of the last and poorest—kindly asked him to go home with her. The table spread, she poured out the tea; its sugar was beyond her means she was surfeiting in the molasses for sweetening. "Well, sister," said the parson, "if that's not what's plenty, thank you!" Aunt Sally with another generous dash—starting vigorously, replied "Law sakes! if I was not ashamed to mention it! I thought it would be sweet enough for the minister!"

Luck of Confidence.

Gentlemen—"There you are, Uncle Hastan. You just hand that order to Mr. Smith, and he will pay you the money."

Uncle Hastan (examining the document)—"Am dis a verbal order, sah?"

Gentleman—"No, I'll gave you a verbal order he wouldn't pay it."

Uncle Hastan (relieved)—"Yes, dat's what I wot. Mr. Sand' sayin. He sayin I brought a verbal order dat he wouldn't pay it. I reckon he hasn't got much cash dance in you', sah."

Do Pharaoh Feared in Judgment.

A planter owned a slave named Moses, who was an inveterate possum hunter. Away back in 1851 there was a most remarkable meteoric shower, popularly known as "when the stars fell." Uncle Moses was out in a hurricane lick, where the niggy shook, indulging in his favorite pastime. His boy Jeff was with him, and they had caught a possum and inserted his tail in a cleft sapling, in the usual fashion, and Jeff was carrying the pole on his shoulder. Suddenly the whole earth was illuminated by the shower of falling meteors. Uncle Moses looked up in a non-committal way as the blazing stars went showling hither and thither scratching their flaming tails across the entire heaven in an awe-inspiring manner. Then he stampeded. He would run a short distance over a log, and then get on his knees and pray. Then he would make another dash, trip over a dangling branch, and begin praying again. Jeff scrambled after him, still holding on to his possum. All of a sudden Moses remembered that it was Sunday night, and he prayed louder than ever. Jeff called out: "Daddy, wot mus' I do with dis possum? 'Tissed Lord ob mercy! Jeff! bab p p p dat dis possum yit! Turn 'im loose at 'im go yo' foot cuggin! De word am o-mid to-ma-rah we's do Lord as ma wi-ll. I mean by kindly possum on Sunday night, dun yo know I down want dat possum to pass in judgment agin me?"

An Angelic Young Man.

He was a real nice young man, wore good clothes, went to Sunday school with regularity, and had an excellent opinion of his own moral character. He asked into a great deal of society in search of a situation, and said—

"I would like a place."

"Any experience?" asked the head of the great establishment.

"Not much; but I am a man of good habits."

"So?"

"Yes. I never swear, drink or chew; never play cards or go to the races. I don't bet on baseball games or run round at night."

"Anything else?"

"I don't gamble, frequent bucket shops or bet on elections."

The employer seemed satisfied, for he called out to the head salesman with

"Jemse, just see if our angel department is full, and if not, send this young man up."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cholera is Quick, Perry Davis' Pain Killer is Quicker. 4b Years experience PROVES that Perry Davis' Pain Killer is the cure for Cholera. Ought'nt you to get a bottle quickly so if you need it quickly it may will be lost? For Cholera Morbus Diarrhœa, Summer Complint, Dysentery there is no remedy equal to P.D.P.K. Your druggist sells it. PERRY DAVIS & SON, Prop's PROVIDENCE, R.I.

DANIEL SHEERIN, STONE AND MARBLE YARD, Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts. Entrance to Catholic Cemetery.

JUST RECEIVED A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops. All kinds of Monuments and Grave Work cheap in short notice. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

WESTERN HOTEL, 212-14 Broadway Street. JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor (Late Brosnan Hotel.)

G. ORSI, HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger. DEALER IN PAINTS, OIL, GLASS, VARNISHES, Brushes, Alabastine, Lime, Plaster Paris, Cement, etc. Most complete stock of Wall Paper in the City. Washington St., near Sansome, San Francisco. Orders promptly attended to. Painting and marbling kalsomining, graining. American, French and English paper hangings.

WARD & CO.'S Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE, 606 and 610 Clay Street, S. F. Telephone No. 767.

ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Cooks, Waiters, Waitresses, Laundresses, Second Hands, Dressmakers, Chambermaids, and Martinet Couples for Hotels, Boarding Houses, Ranches, Also, good Cooks, Nurses, Housemaids, Waiters, Laundresses, Seamstresses, Servants of all kinds to employers. Social Office Fees—Ladies at 500 "Cts. actual.

RAZORS! FOR $1,000 I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND SOLD OR show to the man more than any man in the WORLD. My own make guarantees ..... $2 50 My Grand Razor warranted not to rot the finest shaving ..... 3 50 Good English Razors ..... 1 00 Best English Razors ..... 2 00 Strop ..... 50 Cts. Sent C. O. D. or by mail. M. PRICE 415 Kearny Street. Grinding and Repairing.

WASTE EMBROIDERY SILK. Packed in 1 oz. and 2 oz. packages, 25c. and 50c. per package. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address, THE WASTE EMBROIDERY SILK CO. 811 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. 77 W. Broadway, New York.

MATTEI'S SCROFOLOSO Is the Most Wonderful Remedy Ever Discovered. It is a blood tonic, purifying the blood from impurities, and thereby curing Scrofula, Eczema, Ulcers, Abscesses, Rheumatism, Sick Headache, Nervous Prostration, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation, and the Troubles Peculiar to Females. It is Perfectly Harmless. One Vial, with Directions for Use, 75c. SCROFOLOSO CURES. DR. J. BERNOULLI, 323 Geary Street, San Francisco. Sole Proprietor and Inventor. Matlaes Electro-Homœopathic Remedies, Book, Etc.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE, Importers and Dealers in BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS, Card Stock, Straw and Bluders' Board, Etc. MANUFACTURERS OF Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags. 512 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY. JOHN WIELAND . . . PROPRIETOR. SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM, SAN FRANCISCO. Amount of Beer sold in 1885, 60,000 barrels.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY, PRINCIPAL OFFICE, 648 MARKET STREET BRANCH, 1356 MARKET ST. LAUNDRY, 17th St., bet. Folsom and Howard. S. P. Co.

$15,000 IN GOLD AND SILVER AND $6,000.00 IN HANDSOME PRESENTS GIVEN AWAY. THE KANSAS MAGAZINE FREE BIBLE COMPETITION! "SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES" AT ONCE. An Easy Chance for a Big Reward. To the 36 subscribers first answering correctly the following Bible Question we will give away THAN $6,000 IN HANDSOME PRESENTS. Question No. 1. Who was the father of Jesse? Question No. 2. Who was the father of David? Question No. 3. Who was the father of Solomon? Question No. 4. Who was the father of Rehoboam? Question No. 5. Who was the father of Abijah? Question No. 6. Who was the father of Asa? Question No. 7. Who was the father of Jehoshaphat? Question No. 8. Who was the father of Jehoram? Question No. 9. Who was the father of Uzziah? Question No. 10. Who was the father of Jotham? Question No. 11. Who was the father of Ahaz? Question No. 12. Who was the father of Hezekiah? Question No. 13. Who was the father of Manasseh? Question No. 14. Who was the father of Amon? Question No. 15. Who was the father of Josiah? Question No. 16. Who was the father of Jehoiakim? Question No. 17. Who was the father of Jehoiachin? Question No. 18. Who was the father of Zedekiah? Question No. 19. Who was the father of Shealtiel? Question No. 20. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 21. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 22. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 23. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 24. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 25. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 26. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 27. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 28. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 29. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 30. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 31. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 32. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 33. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 34. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 35. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 36. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 37. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 38. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 39. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 40. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 41. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 42. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 43. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 44. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 45. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 46. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 47. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 48. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 49. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 50. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 51. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 52. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 53. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 54. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 55. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 56. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 57. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 58. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 59. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 60. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 61. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 62. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 63. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 64. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 65. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 66. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 67. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 68. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 69. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 70. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 71. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 72. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 73. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 74. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 75. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 76. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 77. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 78. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 79. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 80. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 81. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 82. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 83. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 84. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 85. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 86. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 87. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 88. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 89. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 90. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 91. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 92. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 93. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 94. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 95. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 96. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 97. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 98. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 99. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 100. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 101. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 102. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 103. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 104. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 105. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 106. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 107. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 108. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 109. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 110. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 111. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 112. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 113. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 114. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 115. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 116. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 117. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 118. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 119. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 120. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 121. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 122. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 123. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 124. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 125. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 126. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 127. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 128. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 129. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 130. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 131. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 132. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 133. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 134. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 135. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 136. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 137. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 138. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 139. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 140. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 141. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 142. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 143. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 144. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 145. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 146. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 147. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 148. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 149. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 150. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 151. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 152. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 153. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 154. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 155. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 156. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 157. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 158. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 159. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 160. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 161. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 162. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 163. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 164. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 165. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 166. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 167. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 168. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 169. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 170. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 171. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 172. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 173. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 174. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 175. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 176. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 177. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 178. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 179. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 180. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 181. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 182. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 183. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 184. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 185. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 186. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 187. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 188. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 189. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 190. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 191. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 192. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 193. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 194. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 195. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 196. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 197. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 198. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 199. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 200. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 201. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 202. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 203. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 204. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 205. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 206. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 207. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 208. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 209. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 210. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 211. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 212. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 213. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 214. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 215. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 216. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 217. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 218. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 219. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 220. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 221. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 222. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 223. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 224. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 225. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 226. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 227. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 228. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 229. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 230. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 231. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 232. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 233. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 234. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 235. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 236. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 237. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 238. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 239. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 240. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 241. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 242. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 243. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 244. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 245. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 246. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 247. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 248. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 249. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 250. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 251. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 252. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 253. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 254. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 255. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 256. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 257. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 258. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 259. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 260. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 261. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 262. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 263. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 264. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 265. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 266. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 267. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 268. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 269. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 270. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 271. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 272. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 273. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 274. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 275. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 276. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 277. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 278. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 279. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 280. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 281. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 282. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 283. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 284. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 285. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 286. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 287. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 288. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 289. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 290. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 291. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 292. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 293. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 294. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 295. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 296. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 297. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 298. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 299. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 300. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 301. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 302. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 303. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 304. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 305. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 306. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 307. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 308. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 309. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 310. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 311. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 312. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 313. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 314. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 315. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 316. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 317. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 318. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 319. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 320. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 321. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 322. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 323. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 324. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 325. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 326. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 327. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 328. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 329. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 330. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 331. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 332. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 333. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 334. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 335. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 336. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 337. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 338. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 339. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 340. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 341. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 342. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 343. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 344. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 345. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 346. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 347. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 348. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 349. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 350. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 351. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 352. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 353. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 354. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 355. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 356. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 357. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 358. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 359. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 360. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 361. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 362. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 363. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 364. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 365. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 366. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 367. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 368. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 369. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 370. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 371. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 372. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 373. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 374. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 375. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 376. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 377. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 378. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 379. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 380. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 381. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 382. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 383. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 384. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 385. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 386. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 387. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 388. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 389. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 390. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 391. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 392. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 393. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 394. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 395. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 396. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 397. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 398. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 399. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 400. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 401. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 402. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 403. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 404. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 405. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 406. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 407. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 408. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 409. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 410. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 411. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 412. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 413. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 414. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 415. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 416. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 417. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 418. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 419. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 420. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 421. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 422. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 423. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 424. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 425. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 426. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 427. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 428. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 429. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 430. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 431. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 432. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 433. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 434. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 435. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 436. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 437. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 438. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 439. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 440. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 441. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 442. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 443. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 444. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 445. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 446. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 447. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 448. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 449. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 450. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 451. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 452. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 453. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 454. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 455. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 456. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 457. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 458. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 459. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 460. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 461. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 462. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 463. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 464. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 465. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 466. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 467. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 468. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 469. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 470. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 471. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 472. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 473. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 474. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 475. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 476. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 477. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 478. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 479. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 480. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 481. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 482. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 483. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 484. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 485. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 486. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 487. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 488. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 489. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 490. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 491. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 492. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 493. Who was the father of Achim? Question No. 494. Who was the father of Eliud? Question No. 495. Who was the father of Eleazar? Question No. 496. Who was the father of Matthan? Question No. 497. Who was the father of Jacob? Question No. 498. Who was the father of Joseph? Question No. 499. Who was the father of Jesus? Question No. 500. Who was the father of Mary? Question No. 501. Who was the father of Zerubbabel? Question No. 502. Who was the father of Abiud? Question No. 503. Who was the father of Eliakim? Question No. 504. Who was the father of Azor? Question No. 505. Who was the father of Zadoc? Question No. 506. Who was the father of Ach

THE CHURCH IN EUROPE.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

Bar. Dr. Leonard, Bishop of Cape Town. The ceremony which took place in St. Mary's Cathedral, Cape Town, was performed by the Right Rev. Dr. Leonard, assisted by the Right Rev. Dr. Jolivet, of Natal, and the Right Rev. Dr. Ricards of Grahamstown. The new Bishop is a native of Ireland. He studied at All Hallows College, and obtained his degree of D.D., by examination at Rome. He arrived in Cape Colony in 1867, and since then he has labored with wonderful zeal and success at Simon's Town. On the occasion of the consecration Bishop Ricards delivered an eloquent and polished discourse on the unity of the Church. The new Bishop was afterwards presented with the episcopal ring, and other episcopal ornaments, and received the greetings of the Holy See, and wishing Bishop Rooney of success.

THE SEMINARY OF ERLOUCH

have founded at Lourain, under the patronage of St. Albert of the Congo, a seminary for the preparation of priests whose mission will be to bear the glad tidings of Christianity to the inhabitants of the Independent Congo, where thirty million souls await the grace and gift of the Faith and the benefits of civilization. Besides the education ordinarily given to candidates for the priesthood, the students of the new seminary will be instructed in the Congo dialects, and in branches of medical and sanitary science specially applicable to the equatorial climate in which they are to labor. The seminary is under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Malines, and the missionaries will remain secular priests. While exercising the sacred ministry they will be directly under the control of the Sacred College of the Propagandia. Provision will be made at the seminary for those Fathers who, on the completion of their work, may stand in need of a comfortable retreat for their closing years.

A NEW YORK ELECTION.

What a Political Campaign Costs in the City Hotels.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—The cheapest municipal election campaign in this city within fifteen years cost $20,000, and the dearest $150,000. These figures represent, be it understood, the outlay on behalf of the city, and county ticket by a party, and has nothing to do with Congressmen, Assemblymen, or Aldermen. The town is divided into 847 election districts, so that the average number of voters at one point is small. The safeguards of the law are so many and the supervision of the polls so thorough, by rival interests that actual fraud to the taking and counting of ballots is very rare. This army of watchers an election-day is a heavy expense. The aggregate vote is about two hundred thousand, and it costs $4,000 to merely mail a set of ballots to each voter. The maintenance of general headquarters is chargeable to the party fund, and on are certain contingent outlays, but the orators, banners, fireworks, and other amusements belonging to outdoor meetings are customarily provided by separate political clubs, candidates and interests. What are regarded as honest expenditures are here misnamed. The direct purchase of votes is a matter of speculation, and is by no means so common as in some rural districts. When done at all it is practised in parts of the town where personal character is lowest.

The biggest assessment ever paid to a party by a candidate was taken by John Kelly for Tammany from John Reilly, the present Register, and it was $50,000. The office was then worth about as much as that annually for two years in fees, but has since been reduced to half yearly. The usual price has been $20,000. The County Clerkship was assessed to various parties, and had the Sheriffship $50,000. But some of the assessees have been vastly outstripped in the pecuniary sense through outputs of money beyond the regular contribution to the party fund. It is computed that Mayor Grace spent $100,000 in his last campaign, and not many dollars were wasted, for he conducted his own political affairs and would not let the aforesaid hornets and would not let the aforesaid hornets buz much. P. Henry Dugro offered to Tammany $100,000 for the Mayoralty nomination which has been given to Abram S. Hewitt, per the leaders and not thinkt that could be elected independently, and so went into a fusion with the rest of the Democracy. Dugro is very rich and ambitious. Roswell P. Flower would have spent as much on the Governorship, but had nominated him instead of George. His liberality is remarkable. He donated $50,000 to the Cleveland fund and $25,000 to the election of Hill as Governor. He spent $50,000 to beat Willis Astor for Congress in the present remarkable struggle for the Mayoralty, Theodore Roosevelt and Abram S. Hewitt are wealthy, and yet the campaign will not cost them much, Hewitt's assessment is only $10,000, and it is doubtful if he will spend as much of it individually. Roosevelt has paid in a big amount to his party treasury. Hewitt's election is deemed certain, and Roosevelt's beaten. Hence there is no call for money in big quantities. The bulk of the campaign funds will be gotten from the assessment will be instructed in the Congo dialects, and in branches of medical and sanitary science specially applicable to the equatorial climate in which they are to labor. The seminary is under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Malines, and the missionaries will remain secular priests. While exercising the sacred ministry they will be directly under the control of the Sacred College of the Propagandia. Provision will be made at the seminary for those Fathers who, on the completion of their work, may stand in need of a comfortable retreat for their closing years.

A NEW YORK ELECTION.

What a Political Campaign Costs in the City Hotels.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—The cheapest municipal election campaign in this city within fifteen years cost $20,000, and the dearest $150,000. These figures represent, be it understood, the outlay on behalf of the city, and county ticket by a party, and has nothing to do with Congressmen, Assemblymen, or Aldermen. The town is divided into 847 election districts, so that the average number of voters at one point is small. The safeguards of the law are so many and the supervision of the polls so thorough by rival interests that actual fraud to the taking and counting of ballots is very rare. This army of watchers an election-day is a heavy expense. The aggregate vote is about two hundred thousand, and it costs $4,000 to merely mail a set of ballots to each voter. The maintenance of general headquarters is chargeable to the party fund, and on are certain contingent outlays, but the orators, banners, fireworks, and other amusements belonging to outdoor meetings are customarily provided by separate political clubs, candidates and interests. What are regarded as honest expenditures are here misnamed. The direct purchase of votes is a matter of speculation, and is by no means so common as in some rural districts. When done at all it is practised in parts of the town where personal character is lowest.

The biggest assessment ever paid to a party by a candidate was taken by John Kelly for Tammany from John Reilly, the present Register, and it was $50,000. The office was then worth about as much as that annually for two years in fees, but has since been reduced to half yearly. The usual price has been $20,000. The County Clerkship was assessed to various parties, and the Sheriffship $50,000. But some of the assessees have been vastly outstripped in the pecuniary sense through outputs of money beyond the regular contribution to the party fund. It is computed that Mayor Grace spent $100,000 in his last campaign, and not many dollars were wasted, for he conducted his own political affairs and would not let the aforesaid hornets buz much. P. Henry Dugro offered to Tammany $100,000 for the Mayoralty nomination which has been given to Abram S. Hewitt per the leaders and not thinkt that could be elected independently, and so went into a fusion with the rest of the Democracy. Dugro is very rich and ambitious. Roswell P. Flower would have spent as much on the Governorship, but had nominated him instead of George. His liberality is remarkable. He donated $50,000 to the Cleveland fund and $25,000 to the election of Hill as Governor. He spent $50,000 to beat Willis Astor for Congress in the present remarkable struggle for the Mayoralty, Theodore Roosevelt and Abram S. Hewitt are wealthy, and yet the campaign will not cost them much, Hewitt's assessment is only $10,000, and it is doubtful if he will spend as much of it individually. Roosevelt has paid in a big amount to his party treasury. Hewitt's election is deemed certain, and Roosevelt's beaten. Hence there is no call for money in big quantities. The bulk of the campaign funds will be gotten from the assessment will be instructed in the Congo dialects, and in branches of medical and sanitary science specially applicable to the equatorial climate in which they are to labor. The seminary is under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Malines, and the missionaries will remain secular priests. While exercising the sacred ministry they will be directly under the control of the Sacred College of the Propagandia. Provision will be made at the seminary for those Fathers who, on the completion of their work, may stand in need of a comfortable retreat for their closing years.

A NEW YORK ELECTION.

What a Political Campaign Costs in the City Hotels.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—The cheapest municipal election campaign in this city within fifteen years cost $20,000, and the dearest $150,000. These figures represent, be it understood, the outlay on behalf of the city, and county ticket by a party, and has nothing to do with Congressmen, Assemblymen, or Aldermen. The town is divided into 847 election districts, so that the average number of voters at one point is small. The safeguards of the law are so many and the supervision of the polls so thorough by rival interests that actual fraud to the taking and counting of ballots is very rare. This army of watchers an election-day is a heavy expense. The aggregate vote is about two hundred thousand, and it costs $4,000 to merely mail a set of ballots to each voter. The maintenance of general headquarters is chargeable to the party fund, and on are certain contingent outlays, but the orators, banners, fireworks, and other amusements belonging to outdoor meetings are customarily provided by separate political clubs, candidates and interests. What are regarded as honest expenditures are here misnamed. The direct purchase of votes is a matter of speculation, and is by no means so common as in some rural districts. When done at all it is practised in parts of the town where personal character is lowest.

The biggest assessment ever paid to a party by a candidate was taken by John Kelly for Tammany from John Reilly, the present Register, and it was $50,000. The office was then worth about as much as that annually for two years in fees, but has since been reduced to half yearly. The usual price has been $20,000. The County Clerkship was assessed to various parties, and the Sheriffship $50,000. But some of the assessees have been vastly outstripped in the pecuniary sense through outputs of money beyond the regular contribution to the party fund. It is computed that Mayor Grace spent $100,000 in his last campaign, and not many dollars were wasted, for he conducted his own political affairs and would not let the aforesaid hornets buz much. P. Henry Dugro offered to Tammany $100,000 for the Mayoralty nomination which has been given to

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.
IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—Leonard Calvert, of 35 Great Hill-street, Belfast, in the employ of the well-known and implement merchant, was on the 5th of October, adjudged bankrupt.

In Belfast Mr. Maurice Healy is waging a daily war against the Orange clubs in Carson Revision Court of West Belfast, and adding to the Surgeon roll many scotch and Irish supporters of Mr. Sexton. Mr. O'Doherty is loudly engaged in similar work in Derry, and they output service. Mr. Wilson, in East Donegal, is strenuously at work in the Revision Court, and Mr. Michael McGahey is fighting a stubborn battle with the Orange Institute of South Tyrone, and adding many good men and true to the roll. Mr. Reynolds has had a very busy time of it in the East Tyrone, and has considerably improved the prospects of the National party in that division of the county.

Amongst the most important bits of evidence given in Belfast, on October 2, were some statements of opinion by Mr. Collins, Assistant Inspector General of Constabulary. This officer declared his belief that a good deal of respectable Orange opinion was in favor of the recent minor reports; to an inflammatory letter in the Belfast Evening Telegraph from Mr. Tu Cohalo, M.P., and to the sending addresses of the Rev. Dr. Hanna and the Rev. Dr. Kane. The responsibility of the local magistrates for withdrawal of the police from streets was also pretty clearly established by the evidence of Messrs. Carr and Collins.

Clare.—Though the earthlors of the Rev. Thos. McMahon, P.P., of Kilmihill, near Kilrush, and his curate, the Rev. J. Upton, of the following landlords, having retains in the county Clare, have made general offer of a rent to their tenants only to the present great agricultural depression—Judge Lawson, Colonel Charles George Crofton, Colonel Vandeleur, Mr. Fitzgerald, Mr. Ball, Mr. Ball, of Fortlawn, Captain Fitzgerald, Mr. McMahon, J.P., Carrahan, near Quinn; Mr. Ryan, J.P., Brown, county Limerick, Colonel Stewart Vandeleur has granted an abatement of 20 per cent. to his tenants. E. P. Wesley, J.P., has granted an abatement of 15 per cent. to his tenants at Kilmacduane, Shannon, and at Maurus Kann, J.P., has given an abatement of 15 cent. to his tenants near Carrigaholt.

Cork.—As outrage by moonlighters occurred at Ballyhea, near Kanyellmanus, on Sunday being two young ladies named Kate and Bridget Joan, daughters of Daniel Joan, a respectable farmer, living at Glountaleaun, by the district. They were disturbed by a party of men who were recently returned home from a fair, and were ordered to leave the house, and to shut the door in the right side. The prisoners, and on entering the house discovered the two young women, who in a good of blood and humanity. The only motive assigned for the outrage is the refusal to give to a man, who has been a prominent member of the local branch of the National League.

There has just died at the Presentation Convent at Youghal, aged 82, Mrs. Mary Hennessy, known in religion as Sister Mary Clare. The deceased lady was a native of the town of Youghal for fifty years, being a member of the Hennessy family, a family intimately identified with that Convent when first established in Youghal.

On Oct. 1st, at Little Island, Thomas Curtin, a stonecutter, was struck by the falling of some tools and killed. He was employed at the Little Island quarries, half way between Cork and Queenstown.

A building is in course of erection at Ballincurrane which is to be devoted to the purposes of a pecuniary industrial school for the benefit of Irish fishermen. It is the first project of the kind undertaken by the Irish Fishery Commissioners, and should, and will be followed by similar attempts in that direction all together. The company's fund for the year amounts to £2,590, and including workshop, machinery, and fittings, the new building will probably be not less than that sum. Only £1,500 of this has not been raised by the Commissioners, the Cork Grand Jury contributed £1,000. Then £2,000 is still required, and the Commissioners are now anxiously needed by carry on the work.

Dublin.—Early in October the case tried Kelly for Tammany from John Reilly, the present Register, and it was $50,000. The office was then worth about as much as that annually for two years in fees, but has since been reduced to half yearly. The usual price has been $20,000. The County Clerkship was assessed to various parties, and the Sheriffship $50,000. But some of the assessees have been vastly outstripped in the pecuniary sense through outputs of money beyond the regular contribution to the party fund. It is computed that Mayor Grace spent $100,000 in his last campaign, and not many dollars were wasted, for he conducted his own political affairs and would not let the aforesaid hornets buz much. P. Henry Dugro offered to Tammany $100,000 for the Mayoralty nomination which has been given to

THE GRAND OLD MONITOR'S CHRISTMAS MANIFESTO!

Premiums for Christmas Contributors!

THE "CHRISTMAS" MONITOR

WILL BE ISSUED ON

DECEMBER 15th NEXT

—AND WILL CONSIST OF—

TWELVE PAGES

OF BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED

Pure and Edifying Catholic and Miscellaneous Reading.

BUY IT. READ IT. SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

IN ORDER TO MAKE

The CHRISTMAS MONITOR

The Product of the Catholic Genius and Intellect of

THE PACIFIC COAST,

—WE OFFER—

THE FOLLOWING PREMIUMS

To Successful Writers of Original

CHRISTMAS STORIES,

CHRISTMAS POEMS,

And Other Literary Matter for

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR!

LIST OF PREMIUMS:

FOR THE BEST ORIGINAL CHRISTMAS STORY,

Occupying about twenty pages of foolscap paper, written on one side only, as clear as a Pension a Magnificently bound copy of

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR!

FOR THE SECOND-BEST STORY,

We offer a superbly bound and illuminated copy of a beautiful historical work entitled

Primitive Christianity and the Catholic Church. Quarto, 302 pages, with Portrait of Pope Leo XIII, and Chromo-lithography, 26 full page and about 250 smaller illustrations, printed on the finest paper, bound in extra cloth, gilt cover and edges.

FOR THE THIRD-BEST CHRISTMAS STORY,

Of 8 pages of foolscap manuscript, we offer a superbly bound illuminated copy of

The Cause of Ireland Pleaded Before the Civilized World. By Rev. Bernard O'Reilly, D.D., whose Interesting Letters from Rome have made his name familiar to all Monitor readers.

FOR THE BEST ORIGINAL JUVENILE STORY,

For the Monitor's "Young Folk's Department," to occupy from eight to ten pages of foolscap paper, we offer a very handsome illustrated copy of a beautiful work entitled:

Christian Symbols and Stories of the Saints.

FOR THE SECOND-BEST JUVENILE STORY,

We offer a splendidly bound book of Catholic Devotion

FOR THE BEST ORIGINAL CHRISTMAS POEM, of from 100 to 120 lines in length, we offer The Poems of Pope Leo XIII., with both Latin and English text, the English translation being made by the Queen of Wholesteck Cloister. Illustrated with a superb life-like portrait of the super-eminent author.

FOR THE BEST CHRISTMAS POEM, of 40 lines, we offer a Beautiful Gilt-top copy of Miss Ellen Allen Slater's popular work Pilgrims and Shrines, profusely illustrated and containing the autograph of this lady-Catholic author.

FOR THE BEST CHRISTMAS POEM,

of 24 lines, we offer a Beautiful Gilt and Illustrated copy of a Magnificent Catholic Work.

FOR THE BEST ESSAY ON THE FESTIVAL OF CHRISTMAS,

To occupy about six pages of foolscap paper, we offer Blunell's Sermons on the Christian State of Life. Price, cloth. A valuable work for the Rev. Clergy and Laity alike.

FOR THE SECOND-BEST ESSAY ON CHRISTMAS,

we offer a Beautiful Copy of a useful book on Catholic Devotion.

FOR THE BEST SETT OF ORIGINAL MYSTICS,

Comprising Thirty-six Sacred Puzzles, Acrostics, Hidden Names, Transpositions, Cryptograms, Diamonds, Square Words, Enigmas, or other Fancies selected by the composer—written on foolscap paper, we offer a splendid copy of a valuable Library Work.

FOR THE SECOND-BEST LIST OF MYSTICAL FORMS,

We offer a handsome copy of a useful book suitable for Female reading.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

ALL MATTER MUST BE ORIGINAL—written on one side of each sheet of foolscap paper, and must be mailed to the Monitor on or before each the office not later than December 1st, so as to give us time to examine the same and make careful contributors to the Monitor of the 8th prox.

The name or nom de plume of each contributor must be annexed to each manuscript. Contributions may be written in ink or indelible pencil, at the option of the contributor.

The Premiums are open to contestants residing in any portion of the Pacific Coast. All manuscripts should be forwarded to the office at once, as soon as completed, so as to be carefully read by competent judges prior to awarding the Premiums.

SEND COPIES TO YOUR EASTERN AND EUROPEAN FRIENDS.

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR mailed to any address in the United States or Europe on receipt of TEN CENTS in coin or postage-stamp.

DO NOT DELAY

In sending in the Names of all your friends to whom you desire us to mail copies of the CHRISTMAS MONITOR, so heretofore many subscribers were disappointed in receiving the Christmas Monitor, which was entirely exhausted. Send your lists and date at once, and then your friends will be certain to receive a most welcome Christmas or New Year's gift (or which they will long feel grateful).

DR. LANE'S WINE TONIC!

A Nervine and Blood- Invigorator.

KING B BITTERS,

THE GREAT VEGETABLE LIVER REMEDY.

HALL BROTHERS,

Laboratory, 324 Clay St., San Francisco.

Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE,
636 Clay St. Tuesday Evening, Nov. 2, 1886.

WHEAT. No. 1, ... 87½@87½c
Barley, feed ... 55c
Barley, Brewing, wholesale ... 60c
Oats ... 1.40@1.45
Bran ... 17@17½c
Middlings ... 19@20c
Hay ... 10@12
Straw ... 30c
Potatoes ... 1.00@1.10
Onions ... 1.50@1.60
Eggs ... 25@30c
Butter ... 25@30c
Cheese ... 12@13c
Honey ... 5@6c
Beans ... 3c
Hides ... 1c
Tallow ... 2c
Wool ... 10@14c
Beeswax ... 25c
Beef ... 2@3c
Mutton ... 3c
Pork ... 3c
Veal ... 3c
Poultry ... 12@15c
Geese ... 1.00@1.25
Ducks ... 1.00@1.25
Turkeys ... 15@18c
Chickens ... 1.00@1.25
Pigeons ... 1.00@1.25
Apples ... 1.00@1.50
Pears ... 1.00@1.50
Quinces ... 1.00@1.50
Grapes ... 1.00@1.50
Oranges ... 1.00@1.50
Lemons ... 1.00@1.50
Limes ... 1.00@1.50
Pineapples ... 1.00@1.50
Bananas ... 1.00@1.50
Figs ... 1.00@1.50
Dates ... 1.00@1.50
Nuts ... 1.00@1.50
Raisins ... 1.00@1.50
Prunes ... 1.00@1.50
Peaches ... 1.00@1.50
Apricots ... 1.00@1.50
Plums ... 1.00@1.50
Cherries ... 1.00@1.50
Strawberries ... 1.00@1.50
Blackberries ... 1.00@1.50
Raspberries ... 1.00@1.50
Gooseberries ... 1.00@1.50
Currants ... 1.00@1.50
Olives ... 1.00@1.50
Olive Oil ... 1.00@1.50
Wine ... 1.00@1.50
Brandy ... 1.00@1.50
Whisky ... 1.00@1.50
Gin ... 1.00@1.50
Rum ... 1.00@1.50
Beer ... 1.00@1.50
Ale ... 1.00@1.50
Porter ... 1.00@1.50
Cider ... 1.00@1.50
Vinegar ... 1.00@1.50
Mustard ... 1.00@1.50
Pepper ... 1.00@1.50
Salt ... 1.00@1.50
Sugar ... 1.00@1.50
Tea ... 1.00@1.50
Coffee ... 1.00@1.50
Chocolate ... 1.00@1.50
Cocoa ... 1.00@1.50
Milk ... 1.00@1.50
Cream ... 1.00@1.50
Butter ... 1.00@1.50
Cheese ... 1.00@1.50
Eggs ... 1.00@1.50
Poultry ... 1.00@1.50
Game ... 1.00@1.50
Fish ... 1.00@1.50
Oysters ... 1.00@1.50
Clams ... 1.00@1.50
Mussels ... 1.00@1.50
Crabs ... 1.00@1.50
Shrimps ... 1.00@1.50
Lobsters ... 1.00@1.50
Crayfish ... 1.00@1.50
Frogs ... 1.00@1.50
Turtle ... 1.00@1.50
Snails ... 1.00@1.50
Worms ... 1.00@1.50
Insects ... 1.00@1.50
Reptiles ... 1.00@1.50
Birds ... 1.00@1.50
Beasts ... 1.00@1.50
Men ... 1.00@1.50
Women ... 1.00@1.50
Children ... 1.00@1.50
Babies ... 1.00@1.50
Angels ... 1.00@1.50
Saints ... 1.00@1.50
Martyrs ... 1.00@1.50
Confessors ... 1.00@1.50
Virgins ... 1.00@1.50
Widows ... 1.00@1.50
Orphans ... 1.00@1.50
Priests ... 1.00@1.50
Bishops ... 1.00@1.50
Popes ... 1.00@1.50
Angels ... 1.00@1.50
Saints ... 1.00@1.50
Martyrs ... 1.00@1.50
Confessors ... 1.00@1.50
Virgins ... 1.00@1.50
Widows ... 1.00@1.50
Orphans ... 1.00@1.50
Priests ... 1.00@1.50
Bishops ... 1.00@1.50
Popes ... 1.00@1.50

MARRIED.

DIED.

THE RENTON,
719 Bush Street.
First Class Private Family Hotel
Sunny Rooms. Central and Healthful Location.
MRS. A. C. THIESSELL,
(Formerly of Tremont House, Market St.)
Proprietress.

DECKER BROS., MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS & PIANOS, FISCHER, HENR BROS.
PIANOS SOLD FOR $10 IN STALLMENTS. KOHLER & CHANDLER
The Golden Palace of Tea and Grocery Stores
11 Ninth St. and 925 and 929 Second
CHAS. MONTGOMERY & CO., Proprietors.

GOOD HEALTH BETTER THAN GOLD.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA
TRY IT. TRY IT.
Made By H. B. SLAVEN,
For Sale by all Druggists.

BOOTS AND SHOES!
MOORE & MURPHY,
Ladies' and Gent's BOOTS AND SHOES.
Remember the Number:
138 SIXTH STREET. 138
SYLVESTER & SUBLETT,
DENTISTS,
Fulcher Extraction
With Vitalized Air.
46 SIXTH ST., COR. MISSION,
Rooms 15, 16 and 17.
OFFICE HOURS: 8 A. M. TO 8 P. M.

STACK & LACOMBE,
Practical Hatters,
639 MARKET STREET,
(Near Palace Hotel) San Francisco.

JAS. R. KELLY & CO
IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF PAINTS, OILS and GLASS
221 and 223 Market Street
(Just Below Beale—the New Block.)

PACIFIC Business College, 320 POST ST. SAN FRANCISCO.
Life Scholarships $75
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

JOHN GUERIN,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
Wood and Coal,
412 O'FARRELL ST.,
Bet. Taylor and Jones ... San Francisco.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA
Cures all Diseases originating from a disordered state of the BLOOD or LIVER. Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Boils, Blotches, Pimples, Scrofula, Tumors, Salt Rheum and Mercurial Taint result, yield to its purifying properties. It renews the Blood pure, the Liver and Kidneys healthy and the Complexion bright and clear.
R. H. GATES & CO. PROPRIETORS,
617 Sansome St. San Francisco.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.
PIANOS.
The Improved Method of Stringing, introduced by this firm, is the most important improvement in the construction of the pianoforte since its first invention. Illustrated catalogues free.
ORGAN & PIANO
154 Tremont St., Boston. 149 Wabash Ave., Chicago. 46 E. 14th St., Union Sq., N. Y.

THE CATHOLIC Mutual Benefit ASSOCIATION
—OF THE—
Archdiocese of San Francisco, Pacific Coast.
OFFICE, Room 48, Phelan Building, SAN FRANCISCO.
OFFICE HOURS: 10 to 12 M., 2 to 4 P.M., 7.30 to 9 P.M.
Regular Meetings of the Board, 1st Day Evening in Each Month.
NOTICE. Catholics ought to be members of this Association, because it is a Catholic institution, and because it is the only Catholic institution in which Catholics can insure their lives. Its rates are low, and its management is economical and safe. Its Constitution and Rules are approved by the Archbishop of San Francisco, and its Policies are guaranteed by the Trustees and the Reverend Clergy. The Trustees are Catholic Gentlemen of the highest standing. There is a French benefit society large enough to take in all the Catholics of San Francisco, but our Association is for Catholics. For any and always every Catholic should be a member of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association. Its Constitution and Rules are approved by the Archbishop of San Francisco and the Reverend Clergy. Its Trustees are Catholic Gentlemen of the highest standing. Its rates are low. Its management is economical and safe. Its Policies are guaranteed by the Trustees and the Reverend Clergy

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

OH LADY, GAZE NOT SCORNFULLY.

AN IMITATION OF MOORE.

Oh! Lady, gaze not scornfully
On him who prostrate near thee lies,
For could the eyes which now are scowling
Be hidden 'neath thy brilliant eyes
They would at not chance see the wrongs I bear
The barrier which between us lies,
Like some fair seal that hungers for
A single glance of Paradise!

But let one kind forgiving glow
Light up thy fair, proud face once more,
And from thee shall I humbly go
And seek the path I trod before.
Farewell! Farewell! for aye to thee,
Thy adoration shall I change
Thy admiration seek and break my heart!
To hopeless Love and break my heart!

C. ANTHONY DUYER.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

SEE AND I.

We are sisters two; but she, the fairest was in form and face,
She could sway all minds and touch each hidden chord with magic grace,
Or her youth the Fairies blessed with all the gifts of fairyland;
For all Nature, lover's goddess, lavished on her, and grouped to kneel in tears.
Then came Love, to crown her life with lofty light through all its ways
On her path the Angel flame all kindrick the perfect day;
But she, smiling, bade him go to warmer planets
Saying, sweetest "Nay!"
While I stood dismayed and wondering, asked, "Oh, why not bid him stay?"
But she frowned, but cold frown replied, "Oh, Love, like wings will surely fly,
Which she spoke, I knew, she wanton, Love, was sent to Heaven
Then came Gold with words like seeds of fire to stir her for his sake—
She could dwell in palace fair, like queen upon a golden throne;
So she, smiling, bade him stay, and revelled in her golden dream,
And o'er her pathway flash the golden rays with scintillation beam;
Ah! Me well, the heart that told her given her the utmost one,
Tis a channel hoice of memories, from which she should dwelling flow,
Hence the brighter halls sodeets many a spenser pictured bow,
Could, but, alas, she'd down her own as her honored place.
Dim sake know! "dear sis, forgive! are bring her secret soul to take?
Who can tell there's some sun real the face beneath a golden mask
Who can know (we) by hands with labor brown, he's lily white;
Has his wealth, and I have children three, with toil tear-worn to night.
She is free as bird to wing her way all over the sea and earth,
But a prisoner, I, enchained by duty's fetters since my birth;
Of one delight of our lives so widely sundered
That I am as may pluck a star as hope her beside in reach.
As to-day, I read, she shaded with kings, the fairest lady there,
Hot rebellious thoughts my pulses filled when I our life compare
Ye critics give her all, and dole such meagre gifts to me
I have nothing—nothing, wailed my heart, a moment, mournfully
"Oh, my darling, home again! I love you—love you, my wife!"
"Oh, Mamie? Mamie, Dear!" Their voices fell as I, in rapture, heard
And I've spoken!—nothing—I'm dreaming! Pardon! pardon!
Thou, my shield thought,
I have of and she has nothing—save the shadows gold has bought.

M. L.

NEVER FORGET DEAR OLD ERIN.

Forget not, Irishmen, the land which sent Saint Patrick to you
Where green and fresh the shamrock springs
Forget not the apostle of Erin
Though fortune smile upon you here, where stress and thought are free.
Forget not those beyond the grave, by Shannon, Sligo, and Lee.
Though oceans roll between ye and the isle of emerald
Be ye mindful of her story, and the strife her children waged
Forget not Ireland's martyrs—every year of her sad history, and pain,
To win the rights our fathers held for Irishmen again.

Forget not, Irishmen, the names of those who in the past
Sworn hard to snap the chain of wrong which bound the old sire fast
"Hagwood, Tone, and Grattan, men whose worth no wealth could buy
And Emmet pure, who gave his life upon the gallows tree
And all the tried and enthroned, Hugh O'Neil and Owen Roe.
All names to which Irish hearts beat, and spoken freedom's glow.
Oh, you Irishmen hold fast to the land of Ireland's sons and brave,
Who suffering, daily chains or death the dear old isle to save.

Forget not, Irishmen, the cause for which thou hast been sent
Which sent in thousands o'er the wave our sires to die or rent
Forget not the O'Connell labored for, that Dare conceded and sway
The cause that Meagher pleaded for with Afterward fatey honour,
The cause for which, my thy martyrs fell, the while they prayed to God.
As you are winged, have here souls, to save the dear old sod.
The self-same cause that Parnell and his gallant band have borne
Through the lonesome and the shipwreck to the threshold of the heaven.
Yes, brethren, now—O God be thankful—a rest at last appears
In that island that lowered darkly o'er the land three by-gone years.
And for seven the seasons wide there comes the mother's voice,
"Come home, oh! my children! make thy mother's heart rejoice.
After all my care and toil for thee, all for the strife was force and strong,
And that land for me and mine with my breast has not been dry long.
I am plaintive, oh! my children, for a word of hope and cheer."
Like unto the mother's pleading, hark! my brothers, dear thou hear?

P. J. DILLON.

THE OLD CHURCH BELLS.

A stranger in a foreign shore,
Is sad and pensive, as the sea,
He thinks of home, and his heart grows more
Within his father's house to be.
And when he looks, from far away
Comes sound of bells from o'er the sea;
The old church bells that once to say
"Come home, dear child, we call to thee."

The church, the farmhouse and the mill,
And fancies upon the dashing rill
That through the meadow quietly glides,
Bright scenes of youth! they come today
With the old church bells that come to say,
"Come home, dear child, we call to thee."

The olden days, the dear old songs,
The happy time he used to know,
All to his mem'ry come in throngs
With blissful sense of long ago.
He hears again, though far away,
The church bells from o'er the sea,
The old church bells that seem to say
"Come home, dear child, we call to thee."

His mother's voice so sweet and clear
As when she used to sing to him
She charmed away his grief and fear
With sacred hymns and songs of love.
Oh yes! her song comes back to day
With church bells from o'er the sea,
The old church bells that seem to say
"Come home, dear child, we call to thee."

And so to his home the exiled
Will wanderer from the heavenly land;
Will hear the call of the church bells
Provided by the Shepherd's hand.
The chimes of heaven's bells to day,
Are gently wafted o'er the sea,
In tones of music come they say
"Come home, dear child, we call to thee."
"Now pealing loud,
Now tremblingly,
"Come home dear child, we call to thee,
"We call to thee."

Literary Miscellany.

The Lost Pearl.

A Beautiful Catholic Story in Two Chapters

CHAPTER I.

My father was a gentleman of ample fortune, all of which was invested in various banks and railways in different mines and speculations. Although his income was a considerable one, he had no one but myself to spend it upon.

My mother died when I was a little boy of five years old, and I was sent to boarding school and then to college, where I had from time shall I humbly go.

"Well, Ned, we parted some months ago when I due; but, remember, it will be useless without talent and education.

So I made the best of my time, and from college I returned home years that gave my father pleasure. When I was sixteen he took me to Europe. We were two years in France and one in Germany, and while there my father died. He was in a quiet little cemetery just outside Berlin.

His death was a sorrow I cannot explain in words. I had not realized before how entirely I depended upon him. Standing by his death-bed, I felt myself isolated and alone. The only one who loved me, the only one I loved, lay there cold and silent. In the first smart of my pain it seemed to me that my life ended with my father.

Before any one had time to reply, two little girls entered the room, followed by a tall lady, who, I thought, was their governess.

"Miss Alton," said Mr Marche, "you are rather behind time this morning. Punctuality is a virtue that should be deeply impressed on a governess."

The lady addressed blushed, but to whom "Probably the members of this house hold had long discovered that silence was the most efficacious weapon to be used in rating his platitudes.

The blush drew my attention to Miss Alton. I wish I had the skill of an artist that I might paint that fair face, so modest and yet so full of womanly dignity. A young face, too, framed in golden brown hair that crowned a noble head. The brow white and broad, the eyes dark and shadowed, the lips sweet and firm—young, yet with an indescribable look of endurance. It was as though a cloud of sorrow had fallen over the brightness of her youth, and veiled it.

Mrs. Marche introduced me to her little daughters, Lisa and Jessie, then to their governess. I cannot tell how it was, but I felt a sudden thrill as I was shaking that I could recover my lost fortune, wondering if anything that money could purchase would ever bring smiles to that beautiful face.

My illness began that day. In the morning, my pupil studied with me for some hours. During the afternoon, I went to the library, answered different letters, attended to the books, and did any writing Mr Marche wanted.

At five I went into the school room to join Lisa's lessons to the little girls, and that was the happiest hour in the day. Miss Alton was very shy and reserved at first, never raising her eyes when I addressed her or repying except in monosyllables. Miss Alton and I dined with the family, and the evening was spent in the drawing room. Mr Marche generally challenged me to a game of chess. Miss Alton sometimes played and sang, sometimes read aloud, sometimes rose to the lady of the house, with a smile, without sufficient energy to read for herself.

But the great holiday of all was when Mr. and Mrs. Marche went out to dine. Then we spent a happy evening alone. Those pleasant hours return to me as some of the brightest I have ever known.

Miss Alton was very shy with me at first, but by many little acts of kindness, by many gentle attentions, I broke down the barrier of reserve. Her story was even more simple and more sad than my own. Her father was the last in the week of a large shipping firm in England to Antwerp. Her mother was wealthy, and her father was with him. He died three years after. The good Sisters of Charity were to whom she was at school completed her education, and then found for her this situation with the Marches. This little story she told me one evening when we sat in the library.

"Then you, I suppose, are alone in the world," I said, when she had given them a simple detail.

A blush that seemed to burn her fair face stained her cheeks. She made no reply.

"You smile, I repeated, "and so am I.

Again she made no remark, but the shadow returned to those clear eyes, and for the rest of that evening Frances Alton said little.

Even as I grew to love her more, I became more and more sure that she had some secret in her life that she was hiding from me. Her sadness was too deep for a shadow to those clear, truthful eyes, was not all caused by grief at her mother's loss; in the sorrow that weighed down Frances Alton there seemed to me no hope. Was bright May morning, I rose early and went out in to the woods. There I gathered a bouquet of lilacs, fair violets. Taking them into the house, I met Miss Alton in the hall, and offered them to her.

I have seen a sunbeam break through the mist, brightening and warming everything around it. Just so did the smile sp in her face change her. For one moment it was a beautiful, radiant young girl, happiness shining in her eyes and playing around her lips. Then as I felt, and she was blushed again.

Still, she took my violets, and that encouraged me. Little by little, I won her confidence and liking. At last, when two months had gone by, I went into the school room, she would smile and look as though the burden she carried was less.

One little circumstance struck me very much. I have forgotten to mention that Mr. Marche, although a Protestant himself, had married a Catholic. With liberality that does him credit, he had consented that his children should be brought up in the Catholic faith. To do him justice, he was always singularly attached to the Church, although he was from it. Priests were cordially welcomed and hospitably entertained at his house. He gave largely to Catholic charities, and encouraged Catholic literature.

"Frances, I have forgotten to mention that I would remark in a patronizing tone, "she is a catholic; there is neither shame nor dissimilar in her fold."

A quantity of rare and beautiful Catholic engravings were sent to Mrs. Marche. They lay upon the table in the library, awaiting her decision for frames. In the library were two large bay-windows shaded by drapery curtains of some rich material. I was sitting there one afternoon, reading some subject upon which Mr. Marche wrote a pamphlet; the sunshine had faded, and I was not visible to any one entering the room.

Miss Alton came in, and going to the window, selected the volume of Wordsworth I had come in search. Passing by the table, the engravings upon it drew her attention. There was one most exquisitely and pathetically beautiful of the Mater Dolorosa. Miss Alton bent over it for some minutes, gazing intently upon the beautiful, sorrowful face. Then her eyes filled with tears.

"Mother," I heard her say, "your heart was pierced with seven swords; mine half breaks with one. Help me to bear it!"

Then she left the room.

Ah, then, my suspicions were correct. I heard it from her own lips at last. What was the sword that rankled in her heart!

I asked myself that question a hundred times; and each time in vain. I only cared to know so that I might help her. For during one years close observation of Frances Alton, I had learned the lesson that she was the noblest, truest woman in the world. I said that if she should ever be my wife, my life would indeed be crowned and blest.

Perhaps she guessed my secret. I said not, not taking or dating to tell her of my hopes until I saw some prospect of being some chance of winning fame and gold for myself and this, noble girl I hoped to make my wife.

After all, I believe outward circumstances do not influence one's happiness as much as people think. If there be plenty of sunshine within, if the heart be light, the disposition cheerful and contented, ones surroundings are not so much a matter of consequence.

I was happy where I was. I knew that I could to remember that my pupil all me turned, and that, while I lived, I must work hard for my daily bread.

Every day I liked Frances Alton more and more; every day I were more plainly and more sorrowfully that I loved her, that I loved her youth, and relied her bright beauty. I never dared to tell her that, for I was suddenly into the school room, and found her stringed the string, (alas, her face hurried to an open book that lay on the table. No one knew of my love, and then I saw she had been weeping bitterly.

It was the Bible that lay open there, at the story of the Prodigal Son. I could not endure to see the tears at the secret which lay like a funeral pall over the life of the sad, sorrowful girl.

Mrs. Marche liked Miss Alton, as did every one who knew her, and she came to consult. She trusted her.

"Miss Alton," said Mr Marche, "I are rather behind time this morning. Punctuality is a virtue that should be deeply impressed on a governess."

The lady addressed blushed, but to whom "Probably the members of this house hold had long discovered that silence was the most efficacious weapon to be used in rating his platitudes.

The blush drew my attention to Miss Alton. I wish I had the skill of an artist that I might paint that fair face, so modest and yet so full of womanly dignity. A young face, too, framed in golden brown hair that crowned a noble head. The brow white and broad, the eyes dark and shadowed, the lips sweet and firm—young, yet with an indescribable look of endurance. It was as though a cloud of sorrow had fallen over the brightness of her youth, and veiled it.

Mrs. Marche introduced me to her little daughters, Lisa and Jessie, then to their governess. I cannot tell how it was, but I felt a sudden thrill as I was shaking that I could recover my lost fortune, wondering if anything that money could purchase would ever bring smiles to that beautiful face.

My illness began that day. In the morning, my pupil studied with me for some hours. During the afternoon, I went to the library, answered different letters, attended to the books, and did any writing Mr Marche wanted.

At five I went into the school room to join Lisa's lessons to the little girls, and that was the happiest hour in the day. Miss Alton was very shy and reserved at first, never raising her eyes when I addressed her or repying except in monosyllables. Miss Alton and I dined with the family, and the evening was spent in the drawing room. Mr Marche generally challenged me to a game of chess. Miss Alton sometimes played and sang, sometimes read aloud, sometimes rose to the lady of the house, with a smile, without sufficient energy to read for herself.

But the great holiday of all was when Mr. and Mrs. Marche went out to dine. Then we spent a happy evening alone. Those pleasant hours return to me as some of the brightest I have ever known.

"Lona," said my uncle one morning, "I have been attending to your affairs of which you know little or nothing. Your mother's banks and railways in different mines and speculations. Although his income was a considerable one, he had no one but myself to spend it upon.

My mother died when I was a little boy of five years old, and I was sent to boarding school and then to college, where I had from time shall I humbly go.

"Well, Ned, we parted some months ago when I due; but, remember, it will be useless without talent and education.

So I made the best of my time, and from college I returned home years that gave my father pleasure. When I was sixteen he took me to Europe. We were two years in France and one in Germany, and while there my father died. He was in a quiet little cemetery just outside Berlin.

His death was a sorrow I cannot explain in words. I had not realized before how entirely I depended upon him. Standing by his death-bed, I felt myself isolated and alone. The only one who loved me, the only one I loved, lay there cold and silent. In the first smart of my pain it seemed to me that my life ended with my father.

"Here, sir," said my uncle one morning, "our business is completed at last. You will be a millionaire yet, Louis, thanks to your father's good sense in making me your guardian."

For some months all went on gaily. The first dividend paid by the "Nassau" was such as to make my uncle's name ring with joy.

Then—but why write so backward a story!—the shares suddenly fell until they became a mere drug in the market.

All that money had gone, all, the fairy castles, the dreams of wealth and the Holy Land! Farewell to literary ease and home elegance! I had a few dollars in my purse, and when they were spent, I, Louis Dean, lately the possessor of many thousands, was penniless.

My uncle's house was sold, and everything he had in the world in it. There was no resource for me but to look out for a situation, and I'd I began to do so.

I wrote to an old friend of my father's, Mr. Marche, and asked him if he knew of anything that would suit me. I awaited his answer in suspense that it sickens me to think of. I advertised and answered advertisements; but all in vain. I had but a few shillings left when Mr. Marche's letter came.

It was kind, all things considered. He condoled me on my loss of fortune, and offered me a position in his own house. He wanted some one to act as his private secretary, to take charge of his library, to interpret his and teach his children French, Latin—a multiplicity of business; but he offered what seemed to me a munificent salary. If I consented, duties were waiting for me, and I was to go at once.

Gladly enough I wrote to accept the offered invitation, and a few days found me waiting for Mr. Marche in his library.

I ought not to have been disappointed I had always known him for a period, he served man. He did not sleep my hand, as I thought he would, and bid me welcome for my dead father's sake. He made me a ceremonious bow, asked if I had dined, ordered some wine for me, and then began to speak of my duties. Once he called me "Louis," then corrected himself and said, "Mr. Dean." I felt at once into my place, and spoke as he would speak to a stranger.

And he, my father's friend, never once mentioned my father's name.

The little boy Lionel, my pupil that was to be, was sent for, a nice, quiet, intelligent boy, who cared enough up to use and stock heads.

"I shall trust to his good, Mr. Dean," he said, "and not give you much trouble."

And that was my reception at Mr. Marche's.

I wished myself of my employer's per company, and went to my room. After all, I had much to be grateful for. A setting-room, with plenty of books and good pictures, a bed-room, replete with every comfort, had been prepared for me. It was possible to be very happy, even though I had lost my fortune, and was now a tutor.

When the breakfast bell rang, I descended, prepared for my first lesson. Lionel was a fair-haired boy, with a pleasant face.

"Lionel, I hope you will be a good boy," I said, as I shook hands with him.

"Yes, sir," he replied, in a tone of perfect indifference, and I felt that I should say little to him.

Mrs. Marche received me kindly. I hardly know how to describe her. She had once been beautiful, but gave one the impression of a woman from whom life had long passed, but long been crushed. Patience and resignation were in every line of the tired face.

My pupil Lionel took his seat next to me. Three other covers were laid. I wondered where they were for, knowing Mr. Marche had but two daughters.

"Where is Miss Alton?" asked he, presently. "The second bell has rung, I believe?"

Before any one had time to reply, two little girls entered the room, followed by a tall lady, who, I thought, was their governess.

"Miss Alton," said Mr Marche, "you are rather behind time this morning. Punctuality is a virtue that should be deeply impressed on a governess."

The lady addressed blushed, but to whom "Probably the members of this house hold had long discovered that silence was the most efficacious weapon to be used in rating his platitudes.

The blush drew my attention to Miss Alton. I wish I had the skill of an artist that I might paint that fair face, so modest and yet so full of womanly dignity. A young face, too, framed in golden brown hair that crowned a noble head. The brow white and broad, the eyes dark and shadowed, the lips sweet and firm—young, yet with an indescribable look of endurance. It was as though a cloud of sorrow had fallen over the brightness of her youth, and veiled it.

Mrs. Marche introduced me to her little daughters, Lisa and Jessie, then to their governess. I cannot tell how it was, but I felt a sudden thrill as I was shaking that I could recover my lost fortune, wondering if anything that money could purchase would ever bring smiles to that beautiful face.

My illness began that day. In the morning, my pupil studied with me for some hours. During the afternoon, I went to the library, answered different letters, attended to the books, and did any writing Mr Marche wanted.

At five I went into the school room to join Lisa's lessons to the little girls, and that was the happiest hour in the day. Miss Alton was very shy and reserved at first, never raising her eyes when I addressed her or repying except in monosyllables. Miss Alton and I dined with the family, and the evening was spent in the drawing room. Mr Marche generally challenged me to a game of chess. Miss Alton sometimes played and sang, sometimes read aloud, sometimes rose to the lady of the house, with a smile, without sufficient energy to read for herself.

But the great holiday of all was when Mr. and Mrs. Marche went out to dine. Then we spent a happy evening alone. Those pleasant hours return to me as some of the brightest I have ever known.

"Lona," said my uncle one morning, "I have been attending to your affairs of which you know little or nothing. Your mother's banks and railways in different mines and speculations. Although his income was a considerable one, he had no one but myself to spend it upon.

My mother died when I was a little boy of five years old, and I was sent to boarding school and then to college, where I had from time shall I humbly go.

"Well, Ned, we parted some months ago when I due; but, remember, it will be useless without talent and education.

So I made the best of my time, and from college I returned home years that gave my father pleasure. When I was sixteen he took me to Europe. We were two years in France and one in Germany, and while there my father died. He was in a quiet little cemetery just outside Berlin.

His death was a sorrow I cannot explain in words. I had not realized before how entirely I depended upon him. Standing by his death-bed, I felt myself isolated and alone. The only one who loved me, the only one I loved, lay there cold and silent. In the first smart of my pain it seemed to me that my life ended with my father.

"Here, sir," said my uncle one morning, "our business is completed at last. You will be a millionaire yet, Louis, thanks to your father's good sense in making me your guardian."

For some months all went on gaily. The first dividend paid by the "Nassau" was such as to make my uncle's name ring with joy.

Then—but why write so backward a story!—the shares suddenly fell until they became a mere drug in the market.

All that money had gone, all, the fairy castles, the dreams of wealth and the Holy Land! Farewell to literary ease and home elegance! I had a few dollars in my purse, and when they were spent, I, Louis Dean, lately the possessor of many thousands, was penniless.

My uncle's house was sold, and everything he had in the world in it. There was no resource for me but to look out for a situation, and I'd I began to do so.

I wrote to an old friend of my father's, Mr. Marche, and asked him if he knew of anything that would suit me. I awaited his answer in suspense that it sickens me to think of. I advertised and answered advertisements; but all in vain. I had but a few shillings left when Mr. Marche's letter came.

It was kind, all things considered. He condoled me on my loss of fortune, and offered me a position in his own house. He wanted some one to act as his private secretary, to take charge of his library, to interpret his and teach his children French, Latin—a multiplicity of business; but he offered what seemed to me a munificent salary. If I consented, duties were waiting for me, and I was to go at once.

Gladly enough I wrote to accept the offered invitation, and a few days found me waiting for Mr. Marche in his library.

I ought not to have been disappointed I had always known him for a period, he served man. He did not sleep my hand, as I thought he would, and bid me welcome for my dead father's sake. He made me a ceremonious bow, asked if I had dined, ordered some wine for me, and then began to speak of my duties. Once he called me "Louis," then corrected himself and said, "Mr. Dean." I felt at once into my place, and spoke as he would speak to a stranger.

A TOUCHING STORY.

One of the Little Happinesses Contributing Our Faith in Human Nature.

Uncle his wife a tearful peal by

"My love, my only one! The time will soon be here when I shall be no a person to take your place and feel and say as my love. Then we shall have no more of these meetings.

"And you will be true to me?"

"I always am," they responded.

"You did not forget to put that photo you had especially taken for me in my pocket?" inquired the wife.

"I dear, no. Are you sure you will look at it sometimes, love?"

"You wicked doubter. You know that I should be wretched without at least such a semblance of my pet to look at daily and nightly.

Upon the end of chatting over his good and the treachery of one in whom he had so much unlimited confidence.

In brief, she, his only love, his pet, his wife, had secretly planned to make him "wretched." She had taken that photo-graph from his pocketbook, and was gloating over his misery when he should discover that only memory remained to him for the time being of his darling's face.

The dear fellow, how he will scold me for this trick, I'm afraid he will not send him the photograph in the first letter I write to him.

Then supposing her conscience, she sat down to her desk to write.

It came from Chicago.

"Dear Mrs. Gotchkin, it began, "here O. K. this c. K." Have been worrying with the trade all day, and a tough time I've had of it. Weary and haggard I have retired to my room, sent out the golden-hair to bed, and have taken up my pen to write only, and taken from my satchel your photo-graph, which I shall kiss it when I have said my evening prayers. I will send your photo back in my own solace until I hold you, my sweet confidence.

Then far she had read, then she tapped over on the floor.

Her husband who she found there is at hand to say, but a great determination rose with her, and she began the only one to be her latest and sought a telegraph office.

Her husband was not reading the papers abroad that evening, and when he got to his hotel at midnight his servant announced received a note sent by a telegram from his "only love."

It was short and to the point, but under the circumstances one could not expect an author to be lengthy in his epistolary style.

"Meet me at Chicago, Wednesday, 10 o'clock. Wednesday, 10 o'clock. Wednesday, 10 o'clock.

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY YEARS OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1886.

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR.

By reading the announcement of the forthcoming CHRISTMAS MONITOR which appears on the eighth page, our regular and occasional contributors will learn what desirable premiums we offer for all classes of Christmas Sketches, so those who have a talent for writing can direct their efforts with a view to securing one of these premiums. We promise will do well to set to work at once in order to win some of them.

We desire to develop and encourage as far as possible the talent of Catholic writers, hence we hope many of our veteran contributors, as well as a large number of Catholic graduates and pupils of Catholic institutions, will help to make the forthcoming CHRISTMAS MONITOR a representative issue of Catholic talent.

Full particulars concerning contributions will be found on the eighth page.

Editorial Notes.

— The death is announced in our European exchanges of the eminent convert from Anglicanism, the Hon. and Right Rev. Mgr. Talbot, which took place on the 15th ult. in Paris.

— It is announced in the London papers that Mr. Ross and Mr. Pouch have been received into the Church at Bishop's House, Salford. Mr. Ross was the founder of an Anglican society called the Brotherhood of the Common Life, and Mr. Pouch was one of the members.

— A telegram of the 3rd inst., brings the joyful news that Mr. Section has been declared elected to Parliament for the Wexford Division of Belfast, the petition of Mr. Harlett, the Conservative candidate, to have the seat vacated on the ground of bribery, having been dismissed. The petitioner was condemned to pay the costs of the proceeding.

— It seems we inadvertantly did an injustice to America's most distinguished Catholic historian in our article on the demise of Rev. Gregory Mengarini, S. J. The error arose from the fact that the Smithsonian Institution having published other Dictionaries of Indian languages, we did not think that any private citizen had the courage to undertake such an unappreciated task as that of preserving the languages of the Indian tribes of America. Mr. Shea has added another leaf to the laurel wreath of literary excellence which already encircles his brow by his unaided efforts in this direction, and our greatest regret is that he did not find a few rich philanthropists to help him on to success in his useful studies.

— Dr. M. C. O'Toole, State President of the Irish National League, has issued a circular to all the friends of Ireland throughout the State, calling on them to send in contributions to the Land Evection Fund called for in order to help the tenant-farmers of Ireland in their latest struggle with landlord tyranny. As intimated by Mr. T. P. O'Conner, in a telegram published elsewhere, the present winter is likely to be the crucial period of Ireland's political fight, and no true patriot will hesitate when he finds that the cause of Home Rule depends upon presenting a united front to Ireland's ancient enemy.

— Early next month there will be hold in this city a Conference of all the charitable organizations existing on this coast, with the view of organizing a "Pacific Coast Annual Conference of Charities" for the purpose of diffusing knowledge relative to benevolent, charitable, prison and reformatory work of every description. The Conference will meet on December 7th at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, and will continue in session four days. Representatives will be present from all the different sects and philantrophic organizations. Rev. George Montgomery will also be a delegate, and Messrs. J. J. Dixon and John M. Burnett will represent the St. Vincent de Paul Society.

— Catholics who desire to infuse their minds with the delightful aroma of religious reading, will learn with pleasure that Messrs. Benziger Bros., are now issuing the "Centenary Edition" of the works of St. Alphonsus de Liguori, such volumes being complete in itself and costing only $1 25. Two volumes have already been issued, viz: "Preparation for Death" and "The Great Means of Salvation and of Perfection." To those Catholics who know the intrinsic value of these devotional works it is only necessary to mention the fact of their publication in order to secure purchasers for them, but the dollar-hunting worldlings of the day have "no use" for such soul-mortifying works as these, hence we speak only to those who know how to profit by the wisdom of one of the great Doctors of the Church. These volumes are edited by Rev. Eugene Grimm, C. SS. R.

— The most important news from Ireland this week is contained in a dispatch from T. P. O'Connor who says that stirring times are ahead. Every day the tide of resistance to eviction rises higher. Such is the force of the movement that experienced observers are convinced that evictions will be practically impossible in a few weeks. All classes of tenants are united as one man. There is still a general disposition to avoid violence unless it comes from the enemies. The situation the Government has to confront in Ireland is such that, with the exception of one or two counties, the government of Ireland is practically in accordance with the National League law. The exceptions are the districts where the Nationalist element is always backward owing to the indulgence of the landlords who are wiser than the majority of their class. All advices from across the channel concur that the spirit of the people is splendid, and that the rent-paying classes all over the country are awake to feel that the hour for a decisive blow against landlordism is at hand.

The Contemplative Orders in the Church.

There are some ill instructed Catholics who take the Protestant view of the contemplative Orders in the Church, and who, in their thoughtlessness or want of knowledge—can see no earthly use for Priests or Sisters who, in the language of the world—"do nothing but pray." For the benefit of such unthinking censurers of one of the great features of the Catholic Church, it is well to remind them that Prayer which they so flippantly allude to is one of the highest and holiest acts by which man can offer for all classes of Christian Literature, those who have a talent for writing apply their to work at once in order to win some of them.

We desire to develop and encourage as far as possible the talent of Catholic writers, hence we hope many of our veteran contributors, as well as a large number of Catholic graduates and pupils of Catholic institutions, will help to make the forthcoming CHRISTMAS MONITOR a representative issue of Catholic talent.

Full particulars concerning contributions will be found on the eighth page.

Editorial Notes.

— The death is announced in our European exchanges of the eminent convert from Anglicanism, the Hon. and Right Rev. Mgr. Talbot, which took place on the 15th ult. in Paris.

— It is announced in the London papers that Mr. Ross and Mr. Pouch have been received into the Church at Bishop's House, Salford. Mr. Ross was the founder of an Anglican society called the Brotherhood of the Common Life, and Mr. Pouch was one of the members.

— A telegram of the 3rd inst., brings the joyful news that Mr. Section has been declared elected to Parliament for the Wexford Division of Belfast, the petition of Mr. Harlett, the Conservative candidate, to have the seat vacated on the ground of bribery, having been dismissed. The petitioner was condemned to pay the costs of the proceeding.

— It seems we inadvertantly did an injustice to America's most distinguished Catholic historian in our article on the demise of Rev. Gregory Mengarini, S. J. The error arose from the fact that the Smithsonian Institution having published other Dictionaries of Indian languages, we did not think that any private citizen had the courage to undertake such an unappreciated task as that of preserving the languages of the Indian tribes of America. Mr. Shea has added another leaf to the laurel wreath of literary excellence which already encircles his brow by his unaided efforts in this direction, and our greatest regret is that he did not find a few rich philanthropists to help him on to success in his useful studies.

— Dr. M. C. O'Toole, State President of the Irish National League, has issued a circular to all the friends of Ireland throughout the State, calling on them to send in contributions to the Land Eviction Fund called for in order to help the tenant-farmers of Ireland in their latest struggle with landlord tyranny. As intimated by Mr. T. P. O'Conner, in a telegram published elsewhere, the present winter is likely to be the crucial period of Ireland's political fight, and no true patriot will hesitate when he finds that the cause of Home Rule depends upon presenting a united front to Ireland's ancient enemy.

— Early next month there will be hold in this city a Conference of all the charitable organizations existing on this coast, with the view of organizing a "Pacific Coast Annual Conference of Charities" for the purpose of diffusing knowledge relative to benevolent, charitable, prison and reformatory work of every description. The Conference will meet on December 7th at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, and will continue in session four days. Representatives will be present from all the different sects and philantrophic organizations. Rev. George Montgomery will also be a delegate, and Messrs. J. J. Dixon and John M. Burnett will represent the St. Vincent de Paul Society.

— Catholics who desire to infuse their minds with the delightful aroma of religious reading, will learn with pleasure that Messrs. Benziger Bros., are now issuing the "Centenary Edition" of the works of St. Alphonsus de Liguori, such volumes being complete in itself and costing only $1 25. Two volumes have already been issued, viz: "Preparation for Death" and "The Great Means of Salvation and of Perfection." To those Catholics who know the intrinsic value of these devotional works it is only necessary to mention the fact of their publication in order to secure purchasers for them, but the dollar-hunting worldlings of the day have "no use" for such soul-mortifying works as these, hence we speak only to those who know how to profit by the wisdom of one of the great Doctors of the Church. These volumes are edited by Rev. Eugene Grimm, C. SS. R.

— The most important news from Ireland this week is contained in a dispatch from T. P. O'Connor who says that stirring times are ahead. Every day the tide of resistance to eviction rises higher. Such is the force of the movement that experienced observers are convinced that evictions will be practically impossible in a few weeks. All classes of tenants are united as one man. There is still a general disposition to avoid violence unless it comes from the enemies. The situation the Government has to confront in Ireland is such that, with the exception of one or two counties, the government of Ireland is practically in accordance with the National League law. The exceptions are the districts where the Nationalist element is always backward owing to the indulgence of the landlords who are wiser than the majority of their class. All advices from across the channel concur that the spirit of the people is splendid, and that the rent-paying classes all over the country are awake to feel that the hour for a decisive blow against landlordism is at hand.

Dr. Stebbins on Buddhism.

What a local paper calls "an interesting discourse on Buddhism," was delivered by Dr. Stebbins recently in this city. The discourse, however, is only "interesting" from the fact that the speaker knew little or nothing about the subject of his lecture, save what he gleaned second-hand from some tourists who wrote their impressions of Buddhism while in the East, hence to make a impression the world in forty days.

Among other groundless assertions made by Dr. Stebbins on this "interesting" occasion, we quote the following:

"There are many points of resemblance, said Dr. Stebbins, "between Buddhism and Christianity. The resemblance between Buddhism and Christianity has given rise to a notion in India which may disintegrate Buddhism. In some ways Buddhism has been superior to Christianity, since it has had no persecution, and since in it there is no religious bigotry. It is a religion of reason and humanity appealing to the heart and to the intelligence. Buddhism never persecutes. It is the religion of humanity.

Let us trace the resemblance between Christianity and Buddhism. Let us take for our guides those who have considerably more of the history of Buddhism than Stebbins. We are told in one of the Buddhist Sacred Books entitled Fingar Pitaka, of a conversation between the Buddha and a Brahman, wherein the Buddha is represented as saying:

"I do not say my son is the heavenly world, as the Brahmans say, but I say that the Buddhists of the Brahma world, are among gods or men whom I will now prepare to see in heaven (Trois from my Fingar, Pancyka S. B. E. Vol. XIII).

These words certainly mean a denial of the existence of a God, as elsewhere we read:

"Without a cause, and unknown, is the lifed mortals in this world." (Sacy Nipada Sacrifice, S. B. E. Vol. X part 2, page 120).

There also a dogmatic denial of God. All agree that the Buddhist conception has system without one introducing, in any way, the idea of God. We read in the Buddhist books quoted above the "godless but austere creed of Buddhism." Professor Monier Williams tells us:

"The Buddhists recognized no Supreme Deity, no Creator, no Governor of the universe, no Providence, no Future Life, no Heaven, no Hell, no Eternity, no Immortality, no Spirit, no Soul, no Free Will, no Free Agency, no Free Will, no Free Agency, no Free Will, no Free Agency

Farm and Home.

It Pays to be a Woman.

A correspondent who evidently wishes she was a man, writes to the Woman's Journal to ask if it pays to be a woman. I should like to know why not. If it pays to be petted and shielded if you behave yourself; if it pays to be worked for and treated and poor pussed; if it pays to be pretty and graceful and charming; if it pays to be loved and honored and respected; if it pays to make somebody glad they was born and happy to live for your sake; if it pays to be the greatest power for good or evil that this world knows; if it pays to be the instrument that wrought of all God gives things—a baby; if it pays to be a mother whose children, grown to manhood, rise up and call her blessed; if it pays to be a wife dearer to a good man than his honor or his life; if it pays to have the blessings of the poor, the sick, the friendless or the helpless; if any of these things pay, think it pays to be a woman.

The Force of Habit.

Away out West three was once a horse that used to pull around a sweep which lifted up dirt from the depths of the earth. He was kept at the business for nearly twenty years, until he became old, blind, and too stiff in his joints to be of further use. So he was turned into a pasture, or left to crop the grass without anyone to disturb or bother him. But the funny thing about the old horse was that, every morning, after grazing awhile, he would start on a frisky prance round and round in a circle, just as he had been accustomed to do so many years. He would keep it up for hours, and people often stopped to look and wonder what had got into the head of the venerable animal to make him walk around in such a solemn way when there was no need of it. It was the force of habit. And the person who forms bad or good habits in his youth, will be led by them when he becomes old, and will be miserable or happy accordingly.

Ice.

The drinking of iced liquids in considerable quantity is highly injurious, and in some cases their use has been attended with inflammation of the stomach and bowels, and even sudden death—not always accounted for by the person being at the time in a heat, ice, or iced water, a remedy digestion, chills the body, and often produces most dangerous congestions. On the other hand, ice, or iced water, applied in inflammations, croup, &c., has been productive of the best effects; it diminishes the quantity of blood in the vessels, and carries off the excess of heat. A piece of ice laid on the wrist will, in many cases, stop bleeding of the nose. If milk or butter be cooled with ice it must be used at once, otherwise it will taint.

Lemonade.

Lemons are one of the most useful fruits in our domestic economy. The juice of half a lemon in a glass of water, without sugar, will frequently cure a sick headache. If the hands be stained, there is nothing that will remove the stain better than a lemon or a lemon and salt. After the juice has been squeezed from the lemon the rind can be used for this purpose. Lemon juice is also a very good remedy for rheumatism and the so-called biliousness of Spring. In blackberry season the juice should be taken before breakfast. The pulp may also be eaten, avoiding every particle of skin. Lemon juice and sugar, mixed very thick, is useful to relieve coughs and sore throats. It must be very acid as well as sweet. As a drink, lemonade is not only a luxury, but exceedingly wholesome. It is a good temperance drink. Hot lemonade in winter will break up a cold if taken at the start. Cool lemonade in Summer will refresh one who is tired and thirsty. As a harvest drink it has no equal. Tears is no danger in taking too much, and it never produces drunkenness or disease.—Herald of Health.

Some Telling Facts.

M. W. Williams vouches for the following facts and figures, which will set at rest the charges made by the outside world that Fresno is given to exaggerating the productiveness of her soil and the acreage of vine products: I, A Grower of Central Colony sold to one of the wineries in the locality the product of seven hundred Zinfandel vines, five years old. Planted eight feet apart, this is twenty vines once on acre. The first crop has been delivered, and weighed out at the winery 34 640 pounds, or seventeen and a quarter tons in round numbers. This is the first crop. The second crop is coming on and will turn out at least two tons to the acre of good wine grapes. These grapes at ruling market prices represent at least $200 per acre—an amount which we think ought to satisfy the blood-sucker that thinks deserts and sandbanks are pretty good things to own.—Fresno Expositor.

A Raisin Vineyard in Yolo.

This morning a Democrat representative paid a visit to the vineyard owned by Mrs Briggs, situated some two miles south of Woodland. This vineyard is one of the oldest, largest and best in the State, and covers an area of 100 acres. It is mostly planted to Muscat raisin grapes, but about 80 or 90 tons of table grapes are shipped annually. At present the fruit crop is being picked and dried, about 100 Chinese pickers and from 15 to 20 white men being employed. The second crop will be ready for picking in about a week. A new dryhouse, 120 x60 feet, two stories high, with new machinery and all the latest improvements, is being built. It will be capable of drying about 50 tons of grapes at a time, on the first floor, the upper floor to be used for a packing room. The crop is said this season to be larger than any they have had before, the grapes being large and the bunches full. The vines are literally covered with them. A box of Muscats, weighing nearly 20 pounds, was given us as a sample and it constituted a little less than one-fourth of the first crop of one vine, the second crop of which will be nearly as large. Among the bunches was a large cluster, which weighed nearly seven pounds. On account of the richness, size and general excellence of the table and raisin grapes, Mrs Briggs will not have any trouble in disposing of the crop of 20,000 to 30,000 boxes to an adventurer.

This whole vineyard is watered on the subirrigation plan, and has been watered but once this year. As a whole, it is a model young vineyard, and one of the best places of property in the county.—Woodland Democrat.

—A citizen of Yates, N. Y., has invented a machine for picking raspberries. It consists of a long tray made of cloth affixed to a light frame. This tray is carried from bush to bush very easily, and with a large hook in one hand the operator draws the bush over the tray while with the other hand he strikes the bush lightly with a padded bat. It has been proven that for fifteen dollars, as many berries can be picked as cost heretofore sixty dollars. In other words, one person with this tray can gather sixty quarts per hour, or six hundred quarts in ten hours.—Buffalo Express.

—Pier's Remedy for Catarrh is agreeable to use. It is not a liquid or a snuff. 50c.

Family Fun.

A Pig in a Carpet-Bag.

Since people have got to carrying dogs, bundles, sheets of coals, loaded market baskets, and such articles in omnibuses, it presumes no regular patron of any route would be much surprised to hear of a pig being transported in a carpet bag, and that carpet-bag hoisted into an omnibus beside. A pretty strong proof that such a thing could be done was witnessed in an omnibus lately.

The day was rainy, and anybody out of doors is bad humor, of course—particular if one is whole morning engaged in opening doors for hail an hour, rush out into the rain and mud, and run the risk of their life to get a fare, and are told by twelve inside that it's "full full." As a general thing, persons thus blindfold cyphers their way back to the pavement the best way they can, and wait for another chance; but there are those who will not stand it, and force their way into the vehicle, no matter how many object.

One of these was!! be-ruffled persons paid liberally for his boorishness, as the story will show. An omnibus filled with the compliment of twelve, was hailed by a big man, in a wet shaggy coat, and carrying a large carpet-bag. The driver stopped of course. Whoever heard of a driver fancying his fare full?

"All full!"

"Go on, driver!"

"There's no room here, sir!"

And a dozen other exclamations, came from the inside; but the driver sat still on his box, and his dripping passenger pulled away at the door, which a man was holding to by a strap. The outsider was too strong for the insider, however, and pulling the door open, jammed in, and passed roughly along, over boots and gaiters, to the fourth seat. He then let down his carpet bag upon the feet of a lady passenger, and crowded about one-third of his dogs person upon the bit of spare space on the opposite seat, and "faced the audience.

"A pretty time to keep a man standing out in the rain and mud—wasn't it?" exclaimed the angry intruder.

The ladies looked at each other, and smiled, while the men laughed outright.

"Maybe I've been soaked oftener than people some times in my life," said the now enraged stranger, "even if they didn't have paunched omnibuses, and painted people to in one."

The drew a depressing silence from the inside, while the gentleman looked as if they wouldn't mind pitching the fellow out.

"Where?" came from the bag-end.

"Hush! what's that?" asked a little man with his head turned worse.

"A pig in a carpet-bag!" shouted another.

"Where—ook—ook—where?" from the carpet-bag.

"Throw it out!" cried the man with the thin voice.

"There ain't any pig there!" roared the shaggy coat. "There's my cow, and she'll be alive!"

"Where?"

"There ain't!" from a dark looking man. "Fetch him out with his live pork!"

"Let 'em try it!" roared the shaggy. "Who's a going to do it?"

"It's—ook—ook—where?"

"Gentlemen, we can't stand this any longer! Go out with your hog, you brute!" ordered the little man, assuming numerous chins.

"Pouch! horrid smell! Tastes like dish-water. Whatever is it!" "Dish-water, your Excellency!"

A Narrow Escape.

Harrison Sunder had been up before a committee of members of the African Methodist church to which he belonged on the charge of appropriating loose fowls from smoke-houses. As there was not enough evidence to convict he was acquitted, principally on his own testimony. After the investigation was over Harrison met the preacher who presided, and remarked:

"I say, Pahson, it's mighty lucky fob me dat I got spotted on dat wheah."

"Why, Harrison?"

"Dood I was, sure. But it's a powful good thing fob me I wasn't anything said about bacon, though."

Rasius Didni Catch On.

Editor daily paper—So you would like a job on the paper, Rastus? Rastus—Yes, sah. I kecker lots dat I wud make er good journalist wif a little apprentace. Editor—Quite likely. Well, Rastus, we'll give you a trial. You can carry that box of coal to the sidewalk up to the extra story, then wash down the windows, and scrub the floor, and clean the sidewalk, and—

Rastus—I say, boss, I reckon I'll try as git er job in a weekly paper fust. Gittin' on a paper every day aint too much job a strain on er pun who has nobbut had no intermittent apprentace. 'Deed it is.

Dead or Alive: The Same.

Mr Jobbins' mother-in-law had died and in her will had almost entire ly left the Jobbins family out in the cold. Mr Jobbins was very naturally opposed to such treatment, and forthwith consulted a lawyer.

"Haven't we some claims on her estate? he asked after stating the case.

"Absolutely not," replied the lawyer "Can't we get out there then?

"What do you mean?

"Well, how are we going to do it?

"There is only one way that I can see.

"What's that?

"Break the lady's will, of course."

Jobbins shook his head.

"Aint there no other way?" he asked.

"Not that I am aware of."

"We might as well give it up then as bad."

"Why so?" Wills have been broken time and again.

"Maybe they have, but not my mother in law's. That woman lived with me for one years, and nobody ever broke it while she was alive, and I tell you I aint prepared not to want to tackle it even after she is dead. Good bye, send around your bill.

He Was Very Tired.

"Does mon, and you're very hungry. You look as if dey'd gone to not gritic root since last week.

"I'm tired."

Tired ma'am! I'm afraid to met for fear of getting paralyzed. I don't care for that, though; it's these city sidewalks that send me. I've got a starving family at the other end of town. If you'd give me some money to ride, ma'am, I can fly down and die with them.

"How much do you want?"

"Only twenty five cents, ma'am."

Voice of husband, from inside, who had been reading "The Friar's Dream:

"Mary!

"Yes, John.

"Give him no quarter, but let him walk the plank."

Neighborly Correspondence.

Mr. Thompson presents his compliments to Mr Simpson, and begs to request that he will stop his pigs from trespassing on his grounds."

Mr Simpson presents his compliments to Mr Thompson, and begs to suggest that, in the future, he should not spell pigs with two pens."

Mr Thompson presents to Mr. Simpson, and will feel obliged if he will add the letter "h" to the last word in the note just received, so as to represent Mr. Simpson and lady."

Mr Simpson returns Mr. Thompson's note unopened, the impertinence it contains being quite beyond his comprehension.

Aun't Betsy's Changed Taste.

Aunt Betsy was heard to say she could never bear rye in anything. She could never see rye flour, sweet rye cake, nor rye porridge, but now that they had got to making rye into whiskey "she thought she could worry a little of it down."

Wendell's Drink Wine.

During a camp-meeting out at Big Horn a number of ministers and deacons were invited to a banquet given by Colonel Meekly. The host, remembering Winter Jasmine's failure, asked if the wine whether there was a lag in the conversation. The wine, being native, was drank freely, somewhat to the disgust of the hostess, who is a Prohibitionist. Among the guests was an old Baptist preacher. Mrs. Meekly had expected to see him drink deeply having heard so much of the habits of the old Baptist clergy, but she was agreeably disappointed when the old fellow declined to participate. After dinner, while a number of guests were in parlor, Mrs Meekly said:

"I am half inclined to join Mr. Hobson's church.

"Why," some one asked.

"Because he does not believe in drinking wine in the Sacrament."

Just then the old Baptist entered the room. "Here's the text to me, Mr. Hobson," and Mrs. Meekly.

"No, I've changed my per. I left my coat in here so I thought that while then other fellows was drinkin' that I'd want I'd git my bottle an' take a mouth ful liker. Hats the is. Wall, here's tar yer.

A Sure Cure.

Old Mrs. Bently—I say, John, that this new faith cure has been the means of saving a great many people.

Old Mr. Bently—Sh I've heard.

Old Mrs. Bently—Well, the first time you pass a drug store, John, I wish you'd stop and get a bottle of it.

A Base Plot.

The other day as two wall known citizens were standing together in the corridor of the Post Office one happened to notice that a postal card held in the fingers of the other was addressed to the holder.

"Why, how does this come?" was asked.

"Do you write letters to yourself?"

"Of course I do not."

"That's funny"

"Well, not so very. Not the other side."

He held it up and the other read:

Hopkins Hawes—There will be a meeting of the I O O R B., No. 587, at the hall on the evening of October 10 to transact special business. Members not present will be fined $15.

J. Casey, Secy.

"Yes, but I don't exactly catch on," remarked the other.

"Oh, you don't. Well, I got the cards printed myself. The society is all a myth. When I want to get out of an evening I direct one of these cards to myself. When I reach home my wife hands it to me with sigh. I offer to stay at home and stand the fine of $15, but she says have it that way. That's all, my friend—except that the same scheme, is worked by hundreds of others, and our poor, deluded wives haven't tumbled to the racket yet.

MISCELLANEOUS.

To a small cupful of MOLASSES or strained Honey add 2 teaspoonfuls of PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER and take of a 1/4 teaspoonful of the mixture & you WILL CURE your Cough or Cold. Pain Killer also cures Sore Throat and Diphtheria.

MATTEI'S SCROFOLOSO
Is the Most Wonderful Remedy Ever Discovered.
It is a tonic, and blood purifier, far superior to all other preparations, and is the only preparation of the kind that is strongly recommended by physicians. It is a powerful alterative, and is the only preparation of the kind that can be taken by children with safety. It is the only preparation of the kind that is sold on its merits, and not by the gift of a watch or other article of value. It is the only preparation of the kind that is sold at a reasonable price, viz: $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. It is the only preparation of the kind that is sold by all druggists. It is the only preparation of the kind that is sold by all druggists. It is the only preparation of the kind that is sold by all druggists

VIRGINIA CITY FAIR.

A Magnificent Demonstration by a Munificent People.

VIRGINIA CITY, NEV., Nov. 3, 1886.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—The numerous lovers of the fair sex, enterprise and patriotic Catholic Monitor which has never yet faltered in its unflinching support of the fair sex, will be pleased to learn that the fair sex, in return, pleasure the fair sex, in return, pleasure the fair sex, in return, pleasure

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE GIFT OF THE MAGI.

A LEGEND OF SAINT ANDREW.

Mid the legends quaint and olden,
Which the bards of Erin tell
Of our country's early glory,
There are none I love so well
As the tales of Saint Columkill
Round her life, whose love we share,
Yet not her name in reverence hallowed,
Bridget, goddess of Kildare.

Let, where she dwelt and sainted,
She with her prose lingers trod,
Here but a humble lay—a song
Echoed to the praise of God.

Fair as the morning, when the dew-drops
Fed meadows's latest flower,
Nurtured by her own carefulness,
Blossomed in beauty where she came.

Strange as a child of the desert wand'ring
Heard the magic of her easy,
Watched with the wise and wondered
At the Alian steps to peace!
And the secret of the present,
Yielded harvests full and fair—
Hope grew the land and pleasant
Youth thy smile, Saint of Kildare!

Yet, she gave Faith, fervid, glowing,
Charity, expansive as a desert,
And in answer—unflinching
She bestowed the gift of song.
Thus they fall where from God's chalice
Poured the brightest wine of Spring;
Once she sought the lofty palace
Where dwelt Ulisch's mighty king.

In the hall on warriors feasting
Stirred the deep calm of the day,
As the wall the harps were heaving
And the minstrels were away;
For the search for the Immortals
Followed in the merry chase,
Where by crystal lake and Cotlain
Spell-bit Fort stands in the face.

But a minstrel, warm and heroic,
Met the Lady Albina there,
Haughty lord and haughty servant,
Stately dame and maiden fair,
Listened Fortune with sweetest greeting,
Heartbeat word or look of joy,
Of the pleasure of the evening
Know no shade of earth's alloy.

As the moments fled, lingering
Prayer—aped to the heavenly sphere,
Said the Lady: "This a lot of singing
And the harp's notes I would hear,
Turn the minstrel's Father Father
Bowing, answered: "Fain would we Hear the music, were would rather,
With sweet strains of minstrelsy.

But not ours the reference treasure
Of the minister's royal skill,
Though we long with fond pleasure
Thy loved melodies to hear;
Yet, if thou with thine—lay sister,
Lo! that blessing will impart
Thou to wake with thy sad fingers
Longest in the hinnse heart."

Smiling graciously she listened
To the pleaders standing there—
Sons and sire, where sunlight glistened
On their clustering raven hair;
And she lovely maiden's hands clutched,
Wean left—as the coarse thrung
Waves of melody were distilled,
Cardic, clear, sublime, strong.

Hope had the lamp she responded
With such thrilling strains before,
Though the lay hall they sounded
Till the echoes came once more.
From the chase the king returning,
Heard the glorious anthems free,
Now with pause and hushing breathing,
Melting now with sorrow's sighs.

Turning to his host, with pleasure,
"Fergus!" cried he, "who are these,
Making such a rich measure,
Chanting such pure melodies?"
Then the host: "I know not, sorely,
Master minstrels they must be,
Never hang out—very poorly,
Glowing thoughts of minstrelsy."

Some a hundred—close-pressed hum
With "A answer, O my King!"
As he counters haste to greet him
And they name the bards who sing,
Some sire and inter-freedom,
Warriors off in conflict fried,
They, who, better than all others
Summed with his the battle's tide.

O the questions, he had asked
Free and far the answers evince,
And the rights of hundreds shielded
Smack in joy the assenting chord;
And the hundred hearts—the minstrel
Fire and the hundred hands
Blended now in chorus, singing
Praise the spirit to unbind.

Then they told that Bridget's blessing
On the warriors' fingers fell,
Giving them the power of music,
Giving wealth with their possessing,
Music's spell that dwell forever
In each new minstrel's breast,
And but death had power to sever
From the hards Bridget's blessed.

MAGDALA A. FITZGERALD.

Mossy Woodland, Md.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

KILLYLEAGH CASTLE, COUNTY DOWN, IRELAND.

Proud castle of the waters that blow my native shore,
In memory's eye I see thee now as in the days of yore;
Thy battlelled towers and forests high stand stately in their pride,
The noble home of chivalry where gallant men have dwelt,
Twas there the fearless Rowan, amid thy stately halls,
Flung proud defiance to the foe, defied Cromwell has hate,
As from the neighboring hills they buried their iron rals,
And stirred with all a demon's power thy rugged walls to quake;
Behind thine ancient oak rampartic frish hearts And well they proved the boasts—death to many a Saxon slave,
Thy walls echoed to the war-cry of Erin's gallant band
Yet from their sacred blood the true men and stemmed the tide,
Or dying, entered the Sacred hold for their country, laws and pride
Many a gallant crown brown and many a wife cry that
Have sighed among thy blushing flowers and through thy halls have passed,
Yet still you stand, proud castle, as heirloom to Erin's land
A noble monument of fame to Erin's patriot band
Who fought for freedom's noble cause and their land's rights
And down dark Clonwell from their hills to rescue again or more.
Often have I wandered among the stately bow ers,
And plucked the ivy from thy walls and marked thy flowing towers;
But now by Fake's stern finger I may never see thee more,
Thy ivy shall entwine thy walls and thy flowers shall adorn the ves,
Yet my memory wanders back again and proudly dwells on thee.

FRANCIS QUINN.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MY LOVE.

My love is such a beauty,
I carefully admire,
No devotee of Fashion,
Of repartee and wit;
Nor pleasure seeker is she,
Woom sedatition attend
All round the shining circuit
Where wealth and beauty wend.

The glitter lures of those pleasures
Are strangers to her feet,
Moments unwarm
Her pleasure rest to greet
Remarked by a person
Of Upper's longest fire,
Or prose of every hand,
And smile that all desire.

Yet, though prose so lovely
In feature, form or face,
To me, my love is lovely
In purity and grace;
Her soul is free from light
Did whose for me alone,
Her love is Heaven's winner,
I love the very tone.

Let blue, who will, take beauty,
Take Fashion, wit, or grace,
But give to me my lovely
Who makes the home her place,
A home lovely and happy
Where King's—is my own,
Where my love is joy and
My heart for ever thine.

M. L.

Literary Miscellany.

The Lost Pearl.

A Beautiful Catholic story in Two Chapters.

CHAPTER II.

One morning we breakfasted alone with Mrs. Marche. The mail was in, and there were several letters for Mr. Marche, one for his wife, one for Miss Alison, and many for me. The one for Miss Alison attracted my attention. The envelope was large and very dirty, the hand strong, bold and masculine. I could not see the postmark. When I gave that letter into her hand her face grew deadly pale. For one full moment I feared she would fall. She looked as though strength and life were both leaving her. Her lips turned white and quivered like the lips of a grieving child. She put the letter out of sight, evidently not daring to read it in the presence of others.

What would I not have given for power to comfort her, to have spoken such words as would have brought warmth to the chilled heart! But I could not. I saw that she took no food, that her hands trembled, that she was weak and faint, as one suffering from a violent blow.

No one else remarked it. Mrs. Marche, in her kind, gentle, dreamy way, made one or two remarks, never heeding the changed voice to which the poor child replied.

I was sitt wrapped, when the hour for lunch arrived, to find that Miss Alison was not well, and was in her own room.

The next morning was Tuesday. I shall ever remember that day. We were all assembled at breakfast. When it was over, Miss Alison (I overheard her) asked Mrs. Marche if she could spare her for a few hours, as she wished particularly to go into the City that morning.

As Miss Alison was leaving the hall, Mr. Marche came in.

"A, Miss Alison," said he, graciously, "I understand that you are going to the City. May I ask you to do a little commission for me there?"

She bowed assent.

"I will not detain you two minutes," he continued. "I have the little parcel quite ready."

In less than two minutes he returned.

"Now, Miss Alison, the parcel is here," he said, "and ask him to attend to this little matter for me."

As Mr. Marche spoke, he opened the little box. There lay resting in a beautiful pearl. It was set in gold as a star, and rays of gold were set between the leaves, and the golden rays was very much bent.

"It is but a trifling matter, said Mr. Marche, shoving in the injured ray, "I might perhaps straighten it myself; but I am afraid of breaking it. The ornament is one I value very much. Will you tell Lawson I will look to it the moment I should not like it intrusted to careless messengers."

Miss Alison took the box from his hands. She had with her a good sized purse. This she opened and placed the little parcel safely within it. Mr. Marche said I would be the do so.

"It will be safe there," she said with a smile, as she carefully put the purse in the pocket of her dress.

It was four in the afternoon when Frances Alison returned. At her request it was unusual into the school-room, she was in her accustomed place, looking, I thought, more better.

Mr. Marche came into the school-room while I was there. He wanted his other daughter to ride out with him for an hour.

"Ah, Miss Alison," he said, "are have you been—recovered.

Mr. Lawson himself was from home," she replied; "but I gave the parcel to the shopman, who said that the moment his master returned he would give it to him. He would not open it himself."

Even as she spoke there was a loud peal at the hall bell.

Some few minutes afterwards a servant entered, saying that Mr. Lawson begged to see Mr. Marche at once on most important business.

"I am going out!" he said, half impatiently. "What is it? I have no time to see anyone now. Just ask Mrs. Marche to see Mr. Lawson for me.—Now, Jessie, are you ready?"

"Yes, mamma, papa," cried the child, "let me finish this."

Mr. Marche waited perhaps two minutes, then Jessie cried out again, "I have finished, papa; now for a ride—no more books until tomorrow!"

The words suddenly died from her lips for Mrs. Marche, with a white, frightened face, and Mr. Lawson, the jeweller both entered the school room together.

"Jessie," said her mother, "take your sister, and go to my room; your pups will not go out this afternoon."

The children, with astonished faces, left the room. I was about to follow them, when Mrs. Marche said, "Stay here, if you please, Mr. Dean. You may be wanted."

She closed the door carefully, while we three looked at her in sheer wonder.

"Now," continued the lady, turning to Mr. Lawson, "tell you your errand to Mrs. Marche the strange story you have told me!"

"I am sure, I am very sorry—it is an unpleasant business," said the man, confusedly; "but the fact is this, sir. It appears that a young lady called at my place this morning with a small parcel containing a jewel that wanted repairing. It was a pearl, she said, set as a star, and one of the rays required attention. My man opened lately put the parcel in the safe, and, or, my return gave it to me. I opened it, but to my surprise the little case was quite empty—there was nothing in it."

"Empty!" cried Mr. Marche; "it is impossible!—You, Mr. Dean, saw me put the pearl in it!"

"I have brought the case," said Mr. Lawson; "it was wrapped in this piece of white paper, but, as you see, it is quite empty."

"Then some one must have taken it," said Mr. Marche, and his voice grew gravely round to where Miss Alison was standing.

"Ah, dear sister, that I should see such a look on the face I bear best! It was ghastly white, with fear and horror in the mouth and eyes. She trembled violently. Death itself is not so dreadful as the fear in her face.

"Miss Alison," said Mr. Marche, sternly, "do you know anything of this?"

The quivering lips tried vainly to speak; but the words died from them.

"Do you know anything of this jewel? continued he; "it is lost somewhere in the outer your care. It was in the case when you left the house, and the jewel is not reached the shop. Do you know anything of it?"

There was a painful silence that lasted some minutes. She stood, white and still as a marble statue, and no word came from her closed lips.

"Perhaps," suggested Mrs. Marche, "your man is not very honest, Mr. Lawson. It seems to me utterly impossible that Miss Alison should know anything of the matter."

"Fortunately for him," the man replied, "my wife was in the shop when the parcel was delivered. She saw him put it in the safe at once, and he gave her the keys in the same minute. They never were out of her possession until my return, so that I am convinced of his perfect innocence. He has a young family, and a sick wife. A suspicion such as this would ruin him. Still if you are in any suspicion—"

"No, no," cried Lionel, low voice, "the man knows nothing. I'll Catholic Progress in England.

A STEADY AND HEALTHY GROWTH.

GREAT HOPES FOR THE FUTURE.

Historical Discourse by Cardinal Manning.

At the opening of the Church of the Holy of Grace, Church, Chancery, was lately read by the Cardinal Archbishop, Cardinal Manning. This sermon is a great one, and it is a sign of the vital and rise growth of the Catholic Church in this land. Thirty years ago a simple, and seemly, and proper sermon would have been in place. I remember it well, and I remember that it was without fire and without force. It was faithful within its reach. Year by year the Church has grown, and the church has become necessary, and with a wonderful growth, year by year has been seemly and beautiful. Thirty years ago, I remember, I remained, you perhaps, and I, and other, but to-day, I remind you that such a work cannot be employed with such a hyperbolic. I only wonder that I have the replied so coolly.

"Well, I wonder, to myself. I said.

"Now I cannot be sold, but there may be some, I said, "who have thought that this man is a great prophet. Perhaps there are some who have thought that Mary is not the daughter, or, as all events, Mr. Marche's own daughter. Perhaps there are some who have thought that the affinity Grace is to Mary has been so close, and so intimate, now that he has been lost, and so intimate now that he has been found, that the affinity Grace is to Mary has lost, of course she is gone, and that the affinity Grace is to Mary

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1886.

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR.

By availing the announcement of the forthcoming CHRISTMAS MONITOR which appears on this eighth page, we regular and occasional subscribers will issue what desirable premiums we offer for all classes of Christmas literature, and those who have a facility for writing upon Catholic themes will do well to set to work at once in order to win some of them.

We desire to develop and encourage as far as possible the talent of Catholic writers, hence we hope many of our veteran contributors, as well as a large number of Catholic graduates and pupils of Catholic institutions, will take to heart the forthcoming CHRISTMAS MONITOR e represents the loss of Catholic talent.

Full particulars concerning contributions will be found on the eighth page.

Editorial Notes.

— The President has proclaimed the 25th inst as Thanksgiving Day.

— Michael Davitt lectured before an immense audience in Detroit, Michigan, last night. He goes from there to Canada, and then his will return to this coast and resign himself to a life of imprisonment in the cells of Cupid.

— Acting upon a proposal made by Dr von Schlosser, the Vatican is said to be again considering the expediency of appointing a Nuncio of the first rank at Berlin.

— Archbishop Riordan has ordered a collection to be taken up on next Sunday in all the churches throughout the Archdiocese, for the Holy Father. Every Catholic knows the importance of contributing to this fund to replenish the charitable treasury of the Church.

— The Salvation Army in Portland, Or., held services in the jail there on a recent Sunday, and the leader told such a startling story of his wickedness before he joined the Army, that, after the performance was over, one of the convicts said: "The lamp can now be extinguished; the vilest sinner has returned."

— Rt. Rev. Bishop Ireland truly says: "That party should deserve and have sympathy more than any other, that will enact and promote morality. If our country is to be safe morality must be the corner stone of our politics." We wish some California Diogenes would inform the anxious public in what spiritual hemisphere our State morality has taken up its abode!

— It was necessary on a recent occasion for Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, to make an oath before a revenue officer in that city, and the official presented his Grace with a Protestant bible whereon to be sworn. But the Archbishop indignantly refused to touch the incomplete, corrupt and impious imitation of the Sacred Scriptures, so the officials had to procure a Douay edition of God's Word before the Archbishop could be sworn.

— The late synod of Cincinnati decreed that within one year after the feast of the Epiphany next, a parochial school is to be attached to every parish church unless, for good cause, permission be obtained from the Ordinary to defer the establishment of such schools. Parents are required to send their children to Catholic schools or colleges, and the permission of the Ordinary alone can exempt from such obligation.

—Our excellent contemporary Adam, of Memphis, Tenn., does not believe the rumor that Michael Davitt is about to be married, and adds that "Davitt is too sensible." The spirit which moves Adam to talk thus is an insult to all the Eves in the country, and if our esteemed contemporary is not careful he will become the late sauce of all the beautiful unmarried ladies throughout the land.

—Out of evil sometimes comes good, and if the earthquake shocks in Charleston did nothing else, they evoked this beautiful sentiment from the bright mind of Bishop Northrop. "Let us show our calamity will be rich in good, and not the loss, in bringing the sunny parts of our country again to love and sympathy, as they stand with generous hands around this historic city—this cradle of secession, restored by the charitable offerings of those against whom our hatels were uplifted in this same generation."

— Delegates from various Catholic Associations in the Archdiocese of Boston, representing over 4,000 Catholic young men, recently organized themselves into an Archdiocesan Union, with the definite and praiseworthy object of erecting a grand Central Union Building on a plan resembling that of the Young Men's Christian Association. Can not our Catholic young men in San Francisco make a move in this direction? There is much wealth among them, the way is clear for such an enterprise, and if they only manifest the will they can accomplish this much desired object.

— THE TRUE RESERVOIR AND ITS DRAINAGE.' is the title of a new controversial work written by Rev. Nicholas Dean, A. M., Professor of Philosophy in Boston College, and published by Messrs Norman & Co., Boston. The work is a very full and clear statement of the doctrines of the Church, showing they to be way conflict with the literature of reason, and the author in his preface asserts the fact that religion is a duty and a necessity for all men. It is now excellent book to place in the hands of non-Catholics who pass enough about their souls to care for and save them through the grace of faith in the only Church Christ left for the spiritual guidance of the sinful human race.

— As fully one half of the American people belong to no Christian denomination, the Methodist synods of Montreal and Toronto recently unanimously resolved that ministers should be devised to remedy this gross defect which divorces the public educational system from religious training and teaching. At present conventions of Protestant ministers in Minneapolis, it was declared that "our public schools are a fruitful source of infidelity, and that they are an evil. What sight could this sweeping condemnation have not uttered if it had contrasted from a Catholic source. Yet there are people who ignorantly imagine that the Catholic Church is the enemy of education! Bosom sin will not permit his innocent and virtuous children to frequent schools wherein children learn than first lessons in sin.

One of the most important discussions recently delivered concerning the crusade of persecution which the Italian infidels and Freemasons contemplate carrying against the Church, is printed in our first page this week. Not in it in Italy does that the evil designs of the Godless crusaders that will be carried out. In France, South America and even in this land of boasted liberty of conscience, Catholics may expect the sword of bigotry being gradually drawn from its scabbard and preparations being made for persecuting citizens of Catholic faith. The elements thus organized in opposition to the Church of God are hence to pend, and we caution our readers to be carefully on the watch as the occasions arise. It is our duty to "watch and pray" that we may preserve our religious and civil rights against the attack of which our sons would sooner begin to hold than serve in prayer.

— A proposition was recently discussed in England regarding the advisability of presenting Pope Leo with a testimonial. Mr Gladstone with a national testimonial to be subscribed by his friends and political supporters throughout Great Britain and Ireland. But in reply to a letter from a prominent Liberal who proposed the matter to him, Mr. Gladstone says: "I do not doubt and will regret the presentation of any national testimonial, even if the desire spring from a feeling widely spread—which feeling I do not think exists."

— A despatch from New Orleans announces the death of Father Antoine Jaudon, S. J., aged seventy-five. His death resulted from falling down stairs at the Jesuit College ten days previously and fracturing his thigh. Father Jaudon entered the Jesuit Order when thirty-five years of age, after having passed through many vicissitudes, the most tragic of which were encountered as a soldier in the French army. He served six years in Algeria, and was a participant in many a conflict with the fierce Arabs of the desert. Returning to Lyons, his native city, he devoted himself to classical studies, for which he has always shown himself exceedingly apt, and soon was made President of the Lyceum. He became a Jesuit in 1844, and three years later went to New Orleans with fourteen others to establish a Jesuit mission, of which he was Superior for many years.

Murder Most Foul!

Among the sins that cry to Heaven for vengeance, Wilful Murder stands foremost in the list, and this city was last week the theatre of an cold-blooded, causeless and foul murder as every disgraced the blood red page of even inhuman brutality.

An innocent child—scarcely fourteen years old—whose reputation is vouched for by Priests, Sisters, her relatives, Teachers and companions—was murdered by a fellow school, accompanied by one of her school-mates, when a young headless called her on one side, spoke a few words to her, and then shot her to death! This occurred at four o'clock in the afternoon, in one of the most thickly populous of the city. The murderer found who butchered to death the only child of a widowed mother, is the type of a class of the worst class of hoodlums that infest this city, young men who have lived idleness, and whose only occupation is to lead lustful looks at any girl, married or unmarried, who may come within range of their demoralized vision. Such lists often escape, and care not, also made they gain upon unprotected females, they care not what lives they wreck or what hearts they broken—long as they can find amusement in gratifying their hellish passions.

These vicious vagrants are the pariahs of society, they care about every home which female virtue is sanctified, and such as they even the youngest hands in the land hold back. The streets of our city are filled with these human leeches of female virtue, and an example should be made of some of the gutter wretches, or the breed of human pariahs will run the pace and impudence of half the house in San Francisco.

Like the murderer in the present case, and Mitch, who was shot recently, many of the most offensive scoundrels of this class are young fows who seem to think it becomes to run the happiness of Christian homes in the street, in the cars, in places of amusement, or wherever they congregate they can cavtal looks upon virtuous Christian women, when they find them unescorted by male relatives and no man near to avenge the insult.

When before pass along the streets those leering libels upon manhood stand in the entrance to gigue shops and at street corners ready for the purpose of bringing the blush of indignant shame to the cheeks of outraged virtuous females. Others of the same tribe of good-for-nothing ghouls stand on the sidewalk of the Catholic churches in order to gratify their sinister setting sense of consciousness by directly staring in the face of every female returning from the performance of her devotion to Almighty God.

It is long, we ask the authorities of this city, is society to be continued in this rapidly increasing hotbed of human scoundrels? Is there no law by which the defenceless daughters, sisters, wives and mothers of citizens can be protected from these pestiferous female? If there is such a law the judge, the press should call for its rigid enforcement before the community is driven to desperate measures. If such a law does not exist, then we call upon the municipal officers to join such a remonstrance as will compel the passing of the police's deserving legislators.

The "Signs of the Times" on "American Romanism."

One of the greatest stumbling blocks to the way of non-Catholics who have any desire to see the true light of faith is the sincere ignorance of the whole Catholic Church in enlighten themselves matters pertaining to the Catholic Church. Men write criticisms upon Catholic doctrine and Catholic customs, who have no more knowledge concerning the subject matter of their bigoty, ungenerous criticism than we Esquimaux has of the generation of electricity. Some leaders of their blinded followers are so conscious of the same Catholic press in California as appears in our sanctum, and the bubbleblasher of the Signs of the Times is a fair sample of the whole brotherhood of bigots who blunder through ignorance and who falsely through fanatic zeal.

The Papers recently designated by the Pope to be united after Low Mass, offered the writer in question a sublime opportunity of making a laughingstock of himself and he achieved a magnificent success to the attempt. This is the first occasion which the false Signs of the Times has not amiable to the Pope, and the unfortunate man has not yet learned that the improved Christianity which characterizes the pontiff regards of its secular editorial chief.

Gratitude, our refuge and our strength, exalt Christ's Vicar on earth, the people who are to thee and through the intercession of the glorious and immaculate Virgin Mary, Mother of God, of Joseph, her Spouse, and of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, and all the saints, in thy mercy and Christian fear the prayers which thou hast poured forth for the success of thy mission and for freedom and exaltation of Holy Mother the Church, through Christ our Lord, Amen.

This text of the Prayer is not precisely correct, but with all its inaccuracies it is sufficient to show the shallowness of the objections raised against it by the raised voice whose religious views are both vague and vagrant. Commenting on this prayer the Sign of the Times says:

The reader will notice that in this prayer Christ is not altogether ignored. After "exalt Christ our Lord" comes the supplication to Mary, Joseph, Peter and Paul, and as the saints, they are permitted to share with a prior zone to the name of Christ. It requires no great stretch of the imagination that some Catholics the name of Christ is not considered to be "above every name."

It is simplicity strange that the blindness of bigotry darkens the intellect of so shallow a critic of the Catholic Church. The above prayer opens with a sublime declaration of Almighty God's supreme Omnipotence and power, and an avowal that to Him alone all are cry for mercy. What higher tribute could Catholics pay—what stronger acknowledgement of God's omnipotence could they make than to confess a prayer with those declaratory words of their faith? O God, our refuge and our strength, gratefully lift upon Thy people who cry to Thee! Yet the S. of the T. sneers at Christ and derived readers that "it requires great discernment to see that among Catholics the name of Christ is not considered to be 'above every name.'"

If the pseudo-moralist Jupiter Tonans of the S. of the T. will send over to the Mission office we will present his money to get with a child's Catechism of Christian Doctrine from which he may procure a ray of Divine truth to penetrate the opaque atmosphere of his mental cavern, and then we will pay the cost of the fifty-second edition of the Catholic Church in that there is no other name under heaven given to men, whereby they can be saved, except through that of Christ! With Him is all Power all Mercy, all Justice. He is the Mediator which His Immaculate Mother in Heavenly Mother, and the saints are our brothers and sisters in Christ, who are our pleaders and advocates, to whomsoever with God's permission we choose to ask our prayers to raise our eyes toward the throne of the Most High God.

The spirit of Christianity, which assumes—does not suit the Scribes and Pharisees of the Protestant sects whereon there are men who consider themselves wiser than Christ Wisdom itself, and far more perfect than the holiest saint in heaven. Such sectarians self's religion have no use for Christ, and they have no use for the Catholic, to intercede for them with the great Judge Jehovah. These Protestant pseudo-Christians have no use for an angel saint, they depend upon their own worldly wisdom to carry them onto a region of bliss where angels have no entrance, or least, intellectual doubt or a dispute with the entire! Self-sacred sectarianism, therefore, is diametrically opposed to the doctrine taught by our Divine Redeemer, who He said—"Unless I say to you, unless you be converted, and become as little children, you shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

True perfected Catholics like "little children" are innocent of heart, pure of soul, trusting in the Father's Power and Mercy, and in the Mother's influence to shield them from His wrath and to procure their petitions for His blessing. Children of the type presented by our Blessed Saviour are not filled with self-pride, self esteem and a self sufficiency of grace to meet heaven, they are not ashamed about their "Heavenly" neighbor's hospitality and cordiality about their cots, nor are they so trusted in themselves that they imagine they can get through life without a Father's supervision and a Mother's tender care. If there are any who think so set otherwise they are merely children of a larger growth, and manhood begins upon the loss of some blindness Lucifer is so to prove to the world that "everything is not gold that looks fair."

The name of Christ, therefore, is above every other name in the Catholic Church, and with all dignity as about to the S. of the T. assume the Bay "And you forget it.

The second part of the prayer asks that which the S. of the T. blunders about at the Lill-sing.

Let Mary, Mother, the Archangel, defend us in the battle, lest we perish in the last judgment, nor let us be overcome in the day of battle. For the Hosts of Prince of the heavenly host, by the Power of God, cast into hell Satan and the other evil spirits who wander through the world making souls perish.

To people of ordinary intelligence this appears to plain, simple, forcible and appropriate. But the extraordinary mind of the critic of the S. of the T. can see no reason why the spirits should be engaged in hell. He's sadly appropriate; therefore in the present instance expressed is the well known sentiment of David Garrick:

A fellow feeling makes one wondrous kind!

Evil spirits are the soul of sectarianism, hence while we may speak in the same language we are hardly consists the S. of the T. Ex standing by its best friends, when it expresses the regret that any hell could depose it of their useful presence in the Protestant world! Behold, the Prince of Devils would call a convention of his subjects on earth, and lose a total of his dominions to the S. of the T. for its tending influence to his Satanic Majesty's rebellious as a factor in the formation and fulsiness of sectarian error!

Among the other evil spirits who are thus dreadfully concerned lest they say the S. of the T. of "the church" regards all sects as equal, who reject her dogmas and ceremonies.

Little did the demon-defending literary scribe, who upon this sentence cut of his wicked mouthpiece, imagine when he wrote it that he was paying a high tribute to the Catholic Church! The passenger was intended to hurt, but it is a compliment to the Church which evokes its highest earthly intellectual strain.

So the Church regards all sects equal, who reject her dogmas and ceremonies. There was not time, but it was not in the right of the Church to make good use imagines that "evil spirits should not be thrown down into hell." The dilly-dally bigots imagining the dogma of the sympathy, the harmony, or the Unity of God's head in He molded the magnificent edifice of faith, the adoration of the Trinity, the adoration of the Blessed Virgin, the first bearing friends of the ordinal or the conferring graces of the sacraments.

Among the broken, blighted and blasted branches of the pseudo-Christian Protestantism we can recognize the "branch" of Unitarianism, the Latter Day Saints, the "branch" of religious Liberalism, the Edens "branch" of Pagan and Pantheistic, the Pagan branch "branch" of Humanitarianism, the Fetish Pagan branch "branch" of Seventh Day Adventists, and the Mormon branch "branch" of Polygamy, which, if they are not cut off from the tree, the adversary of souls will have to pay the penalty of hell fire.

So far as religious Christian dogmas concerned it brings us to a conclusion. The Catholic Church need only open the public or other bodies or dismissed from the company, prejudiced from the sacred lips of our Blessed Redeemer, and very soon that popular "branch" of Unitarianism, the Latter Day Saints, the "branch" of religious Liberalism, the Edens "branch" of Pagan and Pantheistic, the Pagan branch "branch" of Humanitarianism, the Fetish Pagan branch "branch" of Seventh Day Adventists, which around the decaying trunk has become tainted the pestiferous poisonous of Infidelity! The "branches" of such a tree may bear between Infidelity and Hell fire, but this sum made another of God has a wonderous sick could find no place in the Church of Christ, where, as Mr. Ingersoll, it is beautifully expresses it:

"Come, and pine, and fall and languishing pulse Make up the Church of Christ, and the sound Shade above shade, a lovely theatre Of stateliness and of joy."

Hence, the S. of T. is the Catholic Church, which has very good reason to call "Holy Mother."

The Church number counted Jupiter Tonans of the S. of the T. will send over to the Mission office we will present his money to get with a child's Catechism of Christian Doctrine from which he may procure a ray of Divine truth to penetrate the opaque atmosphere of his mental cavern, and then we will pay the cost of the fifty-second edition of the Catholic Church in that there is no other name under heaven given to men, whereby they can be saved, except through that of Christ! With Him is all Power all Mercy, all Justice. He is the Mediator which His Immaculate Mother in Heavenly Mother, and the saints are our brothers and sisters in Christ, who are our pleaders and advocates, to whomsoever with God's permission we choose to ask our prayers to raise our eyes toward the throne of the Most High God.

The Malignant Character of Mob Law.

Every the last week the [illegible] of the Mob Law in [illegible] Chicago, [illegible] Chicago, [illegible] Chicago,

Farm and Home.

All-Purpose Animals.

An animal that will yield a profitable amount of milk and will also put on fat readily is desired by the general farmer; but the specialist—the beef grower or the dairyman—desires an animal specially qualified for his purpose. Such animals there are, constituting the Jersey, Polled Angus, and other breeds. While the Holstein-Freeman excels as a milk giver, it is also an all purpose breed. There is just as great a demand for a special beef or dairy breed as for an all purpose one, and those breeders of special breeds who claim for their animals superiority should be the representatives of the breeds. The beef grower wants an animal that will give no more milk than is absolutely necessary to support its young; for an animal cannot convert food into both milk and beef, and the more milk it yields the less flesh it can put on. It follows that an animal can excel for both milk and beef. The Holstein-Freeman may put on as much flesh as the Shorthorn, but while doing so it cannot yield much milk. If it gives more milk than the Jersey, produces as much butter, and at the same time puts on flesh in considerable quantity, it is because it eats more food. From the same amount of food it cannot make more butter than the Jersey, or more beef than the Shorthorn, for it devotes more food to the formation of flesh and bone than the Jersey and more to the formation of milk than the Shorthorn. No animal can be a good special animal and also a good all purpose animal. There is a distinct want for each—a distinct place for each—and to seek to make one fill both places is as useless as to flap it from its own place to fill the other is unerring.

Watermelons and Onions.

F. L. Byers, of Scott Parks, has sold $110 worth of watermelons from half an acre of ground this season, and has plenty more left. One vine of a variety produced by himself, which he proposes to list on the scroll of fame as Byers' Hybrid, contained but five melons, but their aggregate weight when ripened will amount 250 pounds. Three of them have already passed through the hands of the weigher, and registered respectively 96, 69 and 52 pounds. A half acre in onions will yield about $200 worth of that vegetable, and from the five-acre lot Mr. Byers expects, and reasonably, to realize $1250 on sets for this season's sale. This is skillful farming, certainly.—Fredonia Democrat.

Large Shipment of Quinces.

Robert Hows of Eden Dale, Sonoma valley, who has one of the largest quince orchards in the State, if not in the world, made a shipment of two carloads of 500 boxes each of the fruit to New York and St. Louis one day last week. This was another shipment was made, one carload going to Denver and the other to Chicago. Had we direct shipping facilities east Mr. Hows says he would be enabled to ship a dozen carloads every season where he now ships four. A saving of $50 on each car load would be effected by an uninterrupted Eastern connection and heavy shipments of other fruits could also be made, which the growers now of handling two or three times now make impossible. In view of these facts our farmers should give every encouragement in their power to any railroad project that will remove the shipping disadvantage which they now labor under.—Sonoma Index Tribune.

Healthy Occupations.

The first place among healthy occupations is held by ministers of religion, the death rate of these class being 506. Next we have gardeners and nursery men, who stand at 499; farmers and grazers, 621; agricultural laborers, 701; schoolmasters, 718, the other teachers which follow closely on these being grocers, coal merchants, paper manufacturers, lace and hosiery manufacturers, wheel wrights, ship builders and coal mines. The figure of mortality for all these trades is under 775. On the other side, that of the unhealthy occupations, the first place is held by the trades which are concerned in the manufacture and distribution of intoxicating drink, which, as is well known, entail many temptations to use it to excess. The light of unhealthy occupations is headed by the class of men and hotel servants, whose figures amount to 1,907, being nearly double that of the medicinal profession. The highest place next to them are held by the general laborers in London and by seamen, mongers, hawkers, and street sellers, the former class with 2 020, and the latter with 1,876. It is probable that both are largely made up of broken men, the wrecks of other trades. Inn-keepers, publicans, spirit, wine and beer-dealers follow, with a figure of 1,891 and brewers with 1,361. In support of the belief that these high rates of mortality are wholly due to the alcoholic excess, Dr. Ogle has compared with these the mortality assigned to diseases of the liver, the organ through which alcohol chiefly declares itself, and has obtained results which are entirely in harmony with those of the trade returns. Next to the trades concerned with alcohol, the highest rates are furnished by occupations which involve the breathing of dust—other than coal dust—and especially of a sharp and gritty character, or largely composed of animal matter; and, those in which there is exposure to lead poisoning as with plumbers, painters and blankets. The earthenware manufacture, who are much exposed to mineral dust have a figure of 1,742, Stonehaven, who work upon a leaden cushion, reach 1,667, and plumbers and painters who are also exposed to lead, reach 1 060.—Chamber's Journal.

Profit in Poultry.

M. T. Moorehead writes from Richland county, O., "For the past two years I have devoted a large part of time to raising and selling for poultry. If you think my experience worth publishing, I would be pleased to have you do so. In the first place, I bought my hens from parties that I have raised only the very best varieties, and then I made arrangements with them to buy all my young fowls when they months old at $1 each. The first year I bought only twenty hens, and from them I raised 300 chicks. I paid $50 for the twenty birds and sold the 300 to parties that I bought the first from at $1 each. This year I have raised 376 fowls, for which I got $756. This, I think, is doing very well, considering such hard times. The main thing is first to select good varieties, and then you can get good prices for your fowls."

S. W. Gaskill of Pennsylvania says, from the point of view taken by a breeder and fancier:

"After a careful estimate, based on a record kept for one year, I find the average cost of keeping fowls (and by 'keeping' I mean feeding, and that in a liberal quantity) to be $1 90 per head, when corn is worth 65 cents per bushel, wheat $1 and oats $20 per ton. Now the average number of eggs from each hen of the flock for one year was as follows: Brown Leghorns, 136 eggs; Langshans, 150 eggs; Wyandottes, 150 eggs; Light Brahmas, 120 eggs, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 eggs. At 20 cents per dozen the net profit on each hen would be: Leghorns, $1 50; Langshans, $1 50; Wyandottes, $1 50; Light Brahmas, $1 30, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 cents. This is without counting anything as realized from the droppings, which are quite an item in a year, as I find ready sale for all I have at $1 per barrel. Neither have I counted anything for poultry sold for market purposes, which is no small item, and which will net a fine profit if rightly attended to."

Sonoma Index Tribune.

Family Fun.

ENGLISH AS SHE IS WROTE.

How a German Professor "Eclipsed" Some Very Strange Words.

Professor William Dysdale writes to the New York Times amusingly about some of the particular pronouncements of our lexicographers.

The principal of a very good school in New Jersey and I were talking about history the other day. I happened to mention Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic."

"Oh, yes, the Rise of the Dutch Republic," said he pronouncing the word Rise, as I have spelled it, Rise.

"No, I don't," said I, "Rise anything of the kind."

"But that word is Rise not Rise, when used as a noun," said he.

I was incredulous, and we took down a copy of Webster, which was then in my hand. Sure enough, Webster gave it Rise, for the noun, to distinguish it from Rise, the verb. The principal was right. According to Webster I must say "The rise of the Dutch Republic."

"Now what do you think about it?" asked the principal.

"I think that Webster is a donkey," I replied, and though this opinion was quite private one I see no reason to change it now. How many times readers would have the sublime cheek to say that there "has been a great Rise in the price of corn!" The head of Doctor Mabie shows how said the phrase—Prussia, and the date—1854.

"Then how would you pronounce S q u o i r l o r?" the principal asked.

"Why squirl of course," I told him.

"You're wrong again," said he. "The pronounciation is Sque-lor" (squay lor).

We looked that up, and it was according to Webster. More Prussian English! Let me give you a sample. "The laugh before their Rise in life, lived in Cherry street in Jersey Squyrlor." That English might do in Berlin, it won't pass in New York.

Now for one sample of Prussian English spelling. I read in the Times yesterday that a child had been kidnapped. Abel I thought what new crime is this, to kidnap? I looked in Webster and found that he gave his weight (10 or 15 pounds) authority for "Kidnaped." Here is the hand of the Prussian again. "Kid" is good enough English for child, and a not sure as it is not supposed. "Nab" or "nap" is also good English for catching, taking hold of. So when you kidnap you literally nab a kid. The past tense of nab according to Webster is nabbed. The past tense of nap is napped. I respectfully submit that the past tense of kidnapped, our friend in Berlin to the contrary notwithstanding.

Petraicum V. Nashy on Socialism.

I hate a capitalist, no matter how he comes one. I hate the monopolized, growsin retch wich will work ten or more hours a day, deprive hiself av beer, and turnbacker, and oatsie, and bilyards, and horracin, and ach, sarse pasy by pasy til he has gooud enough out of the world to set a shop, or his own, and to employ other men to slave for him, and kiss go on akumulatin till he owns things. Such men are monopolist, and the enemies of labor and grinders.

I hold that the possession of a ten dollar bill makes a monopolist, and if such should be crushed. Ee haven ee cnot be a man without a man a monopolist, his monopolism increases just in proportion to the ten dollar he kills. The one corner of a factory is a sinnin in the house of the poor, and ee for the man who hides a railroad, he is

"Ee is somter ee orch hidgee sons,
That to be hanged too good is too mean."

My hatred of railroad managers is intense. It commenced with the first man I saw dropped off the board fence to throw rocks for not payin fare, and has increased with every reputashun av the offenoe, which generally happens every time I want to go anywhere. I hobe the railroads monopolist.

A grindin monopolist is eay men wich has saved anything. Wharever a man loses sav anything, he becomes a capitalist, and ee capitalists are dangerous to labor, he hobe ee hadn't ought to distrie it upon ee to be a reality with them wich never saved nothing.

The mechanic' or workingman wich saves ees ee own house or a farm becomes a capitalist, and consequently a grindin monopolist, and ee ecomudations are dangerous to labor, wat ha ben that he hon divided and divided among us wich hean't anything "Property is crime."

I ain't jist shure that I ha got the socialistic doctrine down fine enuff, but I think these definishuns will do, especialy when you heel ons under a red flag to lavers av humanity! such is shat hold of state hear.

Not Drowned.

He did not look like a joker. One to look at him would have said he had not lost in thought that he did not care whether the sun set at noon or at 10 o'clock. He entered the ladies' waiting room at Cheung Cross Station, walked up to a wooden and gritty character, or largely composed of animal matter; and, those in which there is exposure to lead poisoning as with plumbers, painters and blankets. The earthenware manufacture, who are much exposed to mineral dust have a figure of 1,742, Stonehaven, who work upon a leaden cushion, reach 1,667, and plumbers and painters who are also exposed to lead, reach 1 060.—Chamber's Journal.

Profit in Poultry.

M. T. Moorehead writes from Richland county, O., "For the past two years I have devoted a large part of time to raising and selling for poultry. If you think my experience worth publishing, I would be pleased to have you do so. In the first place, I bought my hens from parties that I have raised only the very best varieties, and then I made arrangements with them to buy all my young fowls when they months old at $1 each. The first year I bought only twenty hens, and from them I raised 300 chicks. I paid $50 for the twenty birds and sold the 300 to parties that I bought the first from at $1 each. This year I have raised 376 fowls, for which I got $756. This, I think, is doing very well, considering such hard times. The main thing is first to select good varieties, and then you can get good prices for your fowls."

S. W. Gaskill of Pennsylvania says, from the point of view taken by a breeder and fancier:

"After a careful estimate, based on a record kept for one year, I find the average cost of keeping fowls (and by 'keeping' I mean feeding, and that in a liberal quantity) to be $1 90 per head, when corn is worth 65 cents per bushel, wheat $1 and oats $20 per ton. Now the average number of eggs from each hen of the flock for one year was as follows: Brown Leghorns, 136 eggs; Langshans, 150 eggs; Wyandottes, 150 eggs; Light Brahmas, 120 eggs, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 eggs. At 20 cents per dozen the net profit on each hen would be: Leghorns, $1 50; Langshans, $1 50; Wyandottes, $1 50; Light Brahmas, $1 30, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 cents. This is without counting anything as realized from the droppings, which are quite an item in a year, as I find ready sale for all I have at $1 per barrel. Neither have I counted anything for poultry sold for market purposes, which is no small item, and which will net a fine profit if rightly attended to."

Sonoma Index Tribune.

Healthy Occupations.

The first place among healthy occupations is held by ministers of religion, the death rate of these class being 506. Next we have gardeners and nursery men, who stand at 499; farmers and graziers, 621; agricultural laborers, 701; schoolmasters, 718, the other trades which follow closely on these being grocers, coal merchants, paper manufacturers, lace and hosiery manufacturers, wheel wrights, ship builders and coal mines. The figure of mortality for all these trades is under 775. On the other side, that of the unhealthy occupations, the first place is held by the trades which are concerned in the manufacture and distribution of intoxicating drink, which, as is well known, entail many temptations to use it to excess. The light of unhealthy occupations is headed by the class of men and hotel servants, whose figures amount to 1,907, being nearly double that of the medicinal profession. The highest place next to them are held by the general laborers in London and by seamen, mongers, hawkers, and street sellers, the former class with 2 020, and the latter with 1,876. It is probable that both are largely made up of broken men, the wrecks of other trades. Inn-keepers, publicans, spirit, wine and beer-dealers follow, with a figure of 1,891 and brewers with 1,361. In support of the belief that these high rates of mortality are wholly due to the alcoholic excess, Dr. Ogle has compared with these the mortality assigned to diseases of the liver, the organ through which alcohol chiefly declares itself, and has obtained results which are entirely in harmony with those of the trade returns. Next to the trades concerned with alcohol, the highest rates are furnished by occupations which involve the breathing of dust—other than coal dust—and especially of a sharp and gritty character, or largely composed of animal matter; and, those in which there is exposure to lead poisoning as with plumbers, painters and blankets. The earthenware manufacture, who are much exposed to mineral dust have a figure of 1,742, Stonehaven, who work upon a leaden cushion, reach 1,667, and plumbers and painters who are also exposed to lead, reach 1 060.—Chamber's Journal.

Profit in Poultry.

M. T. Moorehead writes from Richland county, O., "For the past two years I have devoted a large part of time to raising and selling for poultry. If you think my experience worth publishing, I would be pleased to have you do so. In the first place, I bought my hens from parties that I have raised only the very best varieties, and then I made arrangements with them to buy all my young fowls when they months old at $1 each. The first year I bought only twenty hens, and from them I raised 300 chicks. I paid $50 for the twenty birds and sold the 300 to parties that I bought the first from at $1 each. This year I have raised 376 fowls, for which I got $756. This, I think, is doing very well, considering such hard times. The main thing is first to select good varieties, and then you can get good prices for your fowls."

S. W. Gaskill of Pennsylvania says, from the point of view taken by a breeder and fancier:

"After a careful estimate, based on a record kept for one year, I find the average cost of keeping fowls (and by 'keeping' I mean feeding, and that in a liberal quantity) to be $1 90 per head, when corn is worth 65 cents per bushel, wheat $1 and oats $20 per ton. Now the average number of eggs from each hen of the flock for one year was as follows: Brown Leghorns, 136 eggs; Langshans, 150 eggs; Wyandottes, 150 eggs; Light Brahmas, 120 eggs, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 eggs. At 20 cents per dozen the net profit on each hen would be: Leghorns, $1 50; Langshans, $1 50; Wyandottes, $1 50; Light Brahmas, $1 30, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 cents. This is without counting anything as realized from the droppings, which are quite an item in a year, as I find ready sale for all I have at $1 per barrel. Neither have I counted anything for poultry sold for market purposes, which is no small item, and which will net a fine profit if rightly attended to."

Sonoma Index Tribune.

Healthy Occupations.

The first place among healthy occupations is held by ministers of religion, the death rate of these class being 506. Next we have gardeners and nursery men, who stand at 499; farmers and graziers, 621; agricultural laborers, 701; schoolmasters, 718, the other trades which follow closely on these being grocers, coal merchants, paper manufacturers, lace and hosiery manufacturers, wheel wrights, ship builders and coal mines. The figure of mortality for all these trades is under 775. On the other side, that of the unhealthy occupations, the first place is held by the trades which are concerned in the manufacture and distribution of intoxicating drink, which, as is well known, entail many temptations to use it to excess. The light of unhealthy occupations is headed by the class of men and hotel servants, whose figures amount to 1,907, being nearly double that of the medicinal profession. The highest place next to them are held by the general laborers in London and by seamen, mongers, hawkers, and street sellers, the former class with 2 020, and the latter with 1,876. It is probable that both are largely made up of broken men, the wrecks of other trades. Inn-keepers, publicans, spirit, wine and beer-dealers follow, with a figure of 1,891 and brewers with 1,361. In support of the belief that these high rates of mortality are wholly due to the alcoholic excess, Dr. Ogle has compared with these the mortality assigned to diseases of the liver, the organ through which alcohol chiefly declares itself, and has obtained results which are entirely in harmony with those of the trade returns. Next to the trades concerned with alcohol, the highest rates are furnished by occupations which involve the breathing of dust—other than coal dust—and especially of a sharp and gritty character, or largely composed of animal matter; and, those in which there is exposure to lead poisoning as with plumbers, painters and blankets. The earthenware manufacture, who are much exposed to mineral dust have a figure of 1,742, Stonehaven, who work upon a leaden cushion, reach 1,667, and plumbers and painters who are also exposed to lead, reach 1 060.—Chamber's Journal.

Profit in Poultry.

M. T. Moorehead writes from Richland county, O., "For the past two years I have devoted a large part of time to raising and selling for poultry. If you think my experience worth publishing, I would be pleased to have you do so. In the first place, I bought my hens from parties that I have raised only the very best varieties, and then I made arrangements with them to buy all my young fowls when they months old at $1 each. The first year I bought only twenty hens, and from them I raised 300 chicks. I paid $50 for the twenty birds and sold the 300 to parties that I bought the first from at $1 each. This year I have raised 376 fowls, for which I got $756. This, I think, is doing very well, considering such hard times. The main thing is first to select good varieties, and then you can get good prices for your fowls."

S. W. Gaskill of Pennsylvania says, from the point of view taken by a breeder and fancier:

"After a careful estimate, based on a record kept for one year, I find the average cost of keeping fowls (and by 'keeping' I mean feeding, and that in a liberal quantity) to be $1 90 per head, when corn is worth 65 cents per bushel, wheat $1 and oats $20 per ton. Now the average number of eggs from each hen of the flock for one year was as follows: Brown Leghorns, 136 eggs; Langshans, 150 eggs; Wyandottes, 150 eggs; Light Brahmas, 120 eggs, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 eggs. At 20 cents per dozen the net profit on each hen would be: Leghorns, $1 50; Langshans, $1 50; Wyandottes, $1 50; Light Brahmas, $1 30, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 cents. This is without counting anything as realized from the droppings, which are quite an item in a year, as I find ready sale for all I have at $1 per barrel. Neither have I counted anything for poultry sold for market purposes, which is no small item, and which will net a fine profit if rightly attended to."

Sonoma Index Tribune.

THE COCAINE HABIT

The Wonderful Known-New Sensation of Power.

"Eureka! Eureka! Thou Sun!"

When cocaine was discovered the medical world exclaimed "thank heaven!" But useful as it is, it is also dangerous, especially when its use is perverted from the dexterous of pain by surgical operations to the stimulation and destruction of the human frame. At first effects are soothing and captivating, but the finally down in the most horrible slavery known to humanity.

J. L. Stephens, M. D., of Lebanon, O., was interviewed by our reporter understand the terrible habit, and in the conversation the doctor said: "The cocaine habit is increased times worse than the morphine and opium habits, and you would be astonished," he said, "if I let you know how frightfully the habit is increasing."

"What are its effects?"

"It is the most wonderful sensation ever known. It relies the liver and all other organs of the body, and makes them to do more the strongest constitution soon breaks."

"Do you know of Dr. Huderbuff's case down in Kentucky?"

"That leading physician who became victim of the cocaine habit? Yes, I think that Webster is a donkey," I replied, though this opinion was quite private one I see no reason to change it now. How many times readers would have the sublime cheek to say that there "has been a great Rise in the price of corn!" The head of Doctor Mabie shows how said the phrase—Prussia, and the date—1854.

"Then how would you pronounce S q u o i r l o r?" the principal asked.

"Why squirl of course," I told him.

"You're wrong again," said he. "The pronounciation is Sque-lor" (squay lor).

We looked that up, and it was according to Webster. More Prussian English! Let me give you a sample. "The laugh before their Rise in life, lived in Cherry street in Jersey Squyrlor." That English might do in Berlin, it won't pass in New York.

Now for one sample of Prussian English spelling. I read in the Times yesterday that a child had been kidnapped. Abel I thought what new crime is this, to kidnap? I looked in Webster and found that he gave his weight (10 or 15 pounds) authority for "Kidnaped." Here is the hand of the Prussian again. "Kid" is good enough English for child, and a not sure as it is not supposed. "Nab" or "nap" is also good English for catching, taking hold of. So when you kidnap you literally nab a kid. The past tense of nab according to Webster is nabbed. The past tense of nap is napped. I respectfully submit that the past tense of kidnapped, our friend in Berlin to the contrary notwithstanding.

Petraicum V. Nashy on Socialism.

I hate a capitalist, no matter how he comes one. I hate the monopolized, growsin retch wich will work ten or more hours a day, deprive hiself av beer, and turnbacker, and oatsie, and bilyards, and horracin, and ach, sarse pasy by pasy til he has gooud enough out of the world to set a shop, or his own, and to employ other men to slave for him, and kiss go on akumulatin till he owns things. Such men are monopolist, and the enemies of labor and grinders.

I hold that the possession of a ten dollar bill makes a monopolist, and if such should be crushed. Ee haven ee cnot be a man without a man a monopolist, his monopolism increases just in proportion to the ten dollar he kills. The one corner of a factory is a sinnin in the house of the poor, and ee for the man who hides a railroad, he is

"Ee is somter ee orch hidgee sons,
That to be hanged too good is too mean."

My hatred of railroad managers is intense. It commenced with the first man I saw dropped off the board fence to throw rocks for not payin fare, and has increased with every reputashun av the offenoe, which generally happens every time I want to go anywhere. I hobe the railroads monopolist.

A grindin monopolist is eay men wich has saved anything. Wharever a men loses sav anything, he becomes a capitalist, and ee capitalists are dangerous to labor, he hobe ee hadn't ought to distrie it upon ee to be a reality with them wich never saved nothing.

The mechanic' or workingman wich saves ees ee own a house or a farm becomes a capitalist, and consequently a grindin monopolist, and ee ecomudations are dangerous to labor, wat ha ben that he hon divided and divided among us wich hean't anything "Property is crime."

I ain't jist shure that I ha got the socialistic doctrine down fine enuff, but I think these definishuns will do, especialy when you heel ons under a red flag to lavers av humanity! such is shat hold of state hear.

Not Drowned.

He did not look like a joker. One to look at him would have said he had not lost in thought that he did not care whether the sun set at noon or at 10 o'clock. He entered the ladies' waiting room at Cheung Cross Station, walked up to a wooden and gritty character, or largely composed of animal matter; and, those in which there is exposure to lead poisoning as with plumbers, painters and blankets. The earthenware manufacture, who are much exposed to mineral dust have a figure of 1,742, Stonehaven, who work upon a leaden cushion, reach 1,667, and plumbers and painters who are also exposed to lead, reach 1 060.—Chamber's Journal.

Profit in Poultry.

M. T. Moorehead writes from Richland county, O., "For the past two years I have devoted a large part of time to raising and selling for poultry. If you think my experience worth publishing, I would be pleased to have you do so. In the first place, I bought my hens from parties that I have raised only the very best varieties, and then I made arrangements with them to buy all my young fowls when they months old at $1 each. The first year I bought only twenty hens, and from them I raised 300 chicks. I paid $50 for the twenty birds and sold the 300 to parties that I bought the first from at $1 each. This year I have raised 376 fowls, for which I got $756. This, I think, is doing very well, considering such hard times. The main thing is first to select good varieties, and then you can get good prices for your fowls."

S. W. Gaskill of Pennsylvania says, from the point of view taken by a breeder and fancier:

"After a careful estimate, based on a record kept for one year, I find the average cost of keeping fowls (and by 'keeping' I mean feeding, and that in a liberal quantity) to be $1 90 per head, when corn is worth 65 cents per bushel, wheat $1 and oats $20 per ton. Now the average number of eggs from each hen of the flock for one year was as follows: Brown Leghorns, 136 eggs; Langshans, 150 eggs; Wyandottes, 150 eggs; Light Brahmas, 120 eggs, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 eggs. At 20 cents per dozen the net profit on each hen would be: Leghorns, $1 50; Langshans, $1 50; Wyandottes, $1 50; Light Brahmas, $1 30, and Plymouth Rocks, 90 cents. This is without counting anything as realized from the droppings, which are quite an item in a year, as I find ready sale for all I have at $1 per barrel. Neither have I counted anything for poultry sold for market purposes, which is no small item, and which will net a fine profit if rightly attended to."

Sonoma Index Tribune.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HOOPER'S SOUTH END Grain Warehouse, First-Class Fire-Proof Brick-Buildings. CAPACITY 10,000 TONS. TOWNSEND ST. San Francisco.

GEORGE B. LEMMAN, Prop. Goods taken from the dock and from the cars. Advances and Insurance effected at lowest rates. Telephone No. 287.

JOS. A. DONOHOE, San Francisco. KOOSER & HALL, New York. DONOHOE, KELLY & CO. SAN FRANCISCO. EUGENE, KELLY & CO. NEW YORK. BANKERS. EXCHANGES ON NEW YORK, LONDON, AND IRELAND (Stubbs). Payable at all the Branches Ash ro Fraser Dominion Town in each.

SITUATION WANTED. BY A CATHOLIC LADY LATELY FROM THE EAST. Will do any thing in her power to oblige. Best of references. Address, "Lady," Office of this paper.

An Extraordinary Razor HAS BEEN INVENTED BY THE QUEEN AND THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY. IT WILL NEVER GRATE, CUT, OR SCRATCH THE SKIN, AND LEAVES THE FACE AS SMOOTH AS VELVET. SEE THE GENUINE ARTICLE AT THE GREAT ESTABLISHMENT OF NATHAN JOSEPH, 1 Montgomery Block, Cor. Montgomery and Sansome Sts., Second floor, Room 15. Entrance on Sansome street. Open from 9 to 5. Sundays, 10 to 12. NATHAN JOSEPH.

The Queen Ove Company is the original Queen Ove, and was called TEAZLE and THEN CANNING KNEES. THEY ARE EASILY RECOGNIZED BY THE FACT THAT THEY ARE ALL OF A SIZE. Ask for Queen Ove and take no other.

WARD & CO.'S Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE. 608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F. Telephone No. 767. ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Cooks, Waiters, Waitresses, Chambermaids, Bands, Barbers, Laundresses, and Matrons (Supplies Hotels and Institutions). Also, Farmers, Farm Laborers and Domestics. Ward's Building, Sansome street, below Clay.

WESTERN HOTEL, 212-14 Broadway Street. JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor (Late Sonoma Hotel.)

RAZORS! FOR $1,000 I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE OF 1 kind in the next time than any man in THE WORLD. My own make guaranteed. Razor $2 50. My Dandy Razor warranted not to rub the flesh while shaving. 2 50. Good English Razors. 1 00. Best English Razors. 1 50. Best C. O. D. in my city. M. PRICE 410 Kearny Street. Grinding and Repairing.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU, 968 and 970 Folsom St., San Francisco. —WHOLESALE— LIQUOR DEALER. Established 1876. We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods. Table Wines — 50c. 60c. 75c. and $1. Angelica Wine — $1, $1.50 and $1.50. Mount Vineyard—4y ts, 16 gals — $7. Old Port or Sherry, $5, $5.50 and $6. Kentucky Whiskey — $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4. Bourbon Whiskey, — $1.50, $1.75 and $2. Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. and upwards. Orders from country promptly attended to.

NEW MUSIC. J. FISCHER & BRO., New York. A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St., San Francisco. PACIFIC COAST AGENT. Music catalogues of Author's Compositions free on application. Waldteufel's Celebrated Waltzes, Schottisches, Polkas, Quadrilles, Lancers, Marches, etc., Complete, $1 00. Waltzes, Schottisches, Polkas, Quadrilles, Lancers, Marches, Solo or Duet, 50 cents. Sent free by mail on receipt of price. Liberal discount to the trade. Address, A. WALDTEUFEL, San Francisco, Cal.

A. GARNBACK. LAUNDRY. 200 Montgomery Avenue. ESTABLISHED 1875. Washing Promptly called for and delivered.

I CURE FITS! When I cure them I do not mean merely to stop them for a time, and then they return again, but I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of Fits, Epilepsy or Falling Sickness a life long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not sending to me for a cure. Give express and post office address. Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

RED CLOVER. Home Grown Alsike, Alfalfa, Timothy, Orchard Grass, Hungarian, Millet, Seed Wheat, Barley, Rye, Peas, Beans, Potatoes, Onion Sets, Garden Seeds, Fruit Trees, Vines, Plants, Etc. Home Grown Seed Potatoes a Specialty. Catalogue Free. Address, THE HOME SEED CO., Lock Box 41, Lincoln, Nebraska. Home Seed Almanac Free.

LEBENBAUM BROS. Fine Groceries, 215 SUTTER ST. Polk Street, Cor. California.

Our Prices are the Lowest in the Market. Full Weight and Best Quality Guaranteed.

HOLIDAY GOODS NOW ARRIVING

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE, Importers and Dealers in BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS. Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc. MANUFACTORY AND WAREHOUSE, Patent Machine Made Paper Bags. 519 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY, PRINCIPAL OFFICE, 648 MARKET STREET, BRANCH, 1196 MARKET ST. LAUNDRY, 1015 Pl. bet. Folsom and Howard S. F. Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JOHN GUERIN, DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF Wood and Coal, 412 O'FARRELL ST., Bet. Taylor and Jones ..... San Francisco. —AND— Wood and Coal Offices Free of Charge in all parts of the City on the Telephone. Orders given in the morning by Wood or Coal, Full weight and clean coal guaranteed.

JAS. R KELLY & CO IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF PAINTS, OILS and GLASS 221 and 223 Market Street. Near Sansome Street—the New Block.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS. Highest Honors at all times. Warerooms for Pianos, Organs, Sheet Music, Etc., 250 Post St., San Francisco. PIANOS. The Legendary Models of Steinway, Introduced and Popularized by Mason & Hamlin. Pianos for Cash or Easy Payments. Pianos to Rent. Tuning and Repairing. Pianos to Exchange. ORGANS & PIANO CO. 204 Tremont St., Boston. 149 Wabash Ave., Chicago. 46 E. 14th St., Union Sq., N. Y.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY. JOHN WIELAND - - - PROPRIETOR. BEGONIA STREET, NEAR PILGRIM, San Francisco. Amount of Beer sold in 1885 60000 barrels.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

KNABE PIANOS. Unqualifiedly and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World. A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 14 Dupont St., S. F. Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

ESTEY PIANOS. Formerly the Pat. Arion Piano. THE OLD FAVORITE! (Beware of Bogus Advertisements.) SENJ. CURTAZ & SON, 16, O'Farrell Street, San Francisco.

EDUCATIONAL.

Academy of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, WOODLAND, CAL. This Institution is Pleasantly Situated in the City of Woodland, Yolo County, Cal., and is conducted by the Sisters of the Holy Cross, formerly of Notre Dame, Ind., and by the Sisters of Mercy. The Course of Instruction includes all the branches of a Thorough Education, including Music, Drawing and Painting. Terms (including Board, Tuition in English, French and Spanish, Bed and Bedding, Washing and use of Library) $200 per annum. For Catalogue address the Mother Superior.

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE, SANTA CLARA, ... CALIFORNIA. Conducted by the Fathers of the Christian Schools. Offers Every Facility for Acquiring a Thorough Knowledge of the Latin, Greek, Spanish, French, German, Italian, Hebrew Languages, or Commercial. THOSE WHO COMPLETE THE CLASS of Rhetoric receive the degree of B. E. (Bachelor of Eloquence). The Commercial Course is Complete in all respects. Tuition, Board, Bed and Bedding for the complete course of Classes, $25 per month. Drawing, Music, Stationery, Washing and Medical Attendance are the only extras. Tuition in Commercial Course, $20 per month. Tuition in Preparatory Department, $15 per month. Tuition in Primary Department, $10 per month. Bed and Bedding, $5 per month. Board, $15 per month. Washing, $2 per month. Drawing, Music, Stationery, Washing and Medical Attendance are the only extras. Tuition in the Commercial Course is payable in advance. Tuition in the other departments is payable one-half in advance, the balance at the middle of the session. No deduction will be made for absence except in cases of long sickness. Pupils will be received at any time. Pupils will be charged from the time they enter to the end of the session. No deduction will be made for pupils who leave before the end of the session, except in cases of long sickness. Pupils who leave before the end of the session will be charged for the whole session. Pupils who are sent home for misconduct will be charged for the whole session. Pupils who are sent home for misconduct will be charged for the whole session. Pupils who are sent home for misconduct filled with sanctity, and if you will use your devotion to my Rosary, will take care that the affair on which your heart is so earnestly and properly set, shall turn out advantageously to you. Ecce Ancilla—"I am would saith," says St. Alphonsus, "the holy souls in Purgatory, let us endeavor to remember them all in our prayers to the Blessed Virgin, applying to them especially the Rosary which precedes for the great relief."

THE VALUE OF THE ROSARY AND HOW TO BE RECITED.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIFTH PAGE.)

He gives us a proof of the truth of his statement when he says that a soul from Purgatory appeared to St. Hermann and declared to him that one of the most powerful sorrows of relief for the souls in the Rosary which he recited for them, and that he soon as they arrive in Paradise, they begin to pray for him who has given them the powerful prayers. Blessed Alan Rupe Maes, writes Father Dumouchel, P. "there is no offerings more beneficial to the poor souls than souls than the Rosary of the Mother of God; on this point their very necessity obliges us unanimous.

Such, too, is the common sentiment of the faithful, who always employ the Rosary next to the Mass for the benefit of the souls in Purgatory. It is clear enough that blessings so bold will come upon us and all those for whom we pray, if we will only recite the Rosary, for with its many graces come to us and innumerable riches by the Mass, the Most Holy Mass. On the other hand, we should have great fear that we displease the Most Sacred Mother, if we fail to say our Rosaries with the proper devotion or if we are wanting in any respect to the fulfillment of an act of religion which is so dear by all in the Church as so sacred and important. St. Francis of Sales (Introduct. to a devout life, Part 2, chap. 1) plainly states the rule that should govern us in all our devotions, when he says: "Pray with your attention fixed, and with affections ended by the sense of the words; pray deliberately and from your heart; pray with confidence in your Father, and with feeling and affection in our infinitely more with and value than ever so great a Sovereign in his hands." We should be duly impressed by those words of Mischelis, II P. 1. 1. 1. that "our Rosary ravished with our devotion is more a thousand said in a hurry and without much thought. (Ave Ave Rosary). We should never forget these words that were addressed by the Blessed Virgin to the Blessed Alan, viz., that "we better pleased with five decades said with attention and devotion, than with fifteen in hasty and with inattention. (Historie of Mary Ful. part, 2, cap. 1) Let us remember that when the warning the Most Holy Mother of God gave to the same saint in regard to the recitation of the Ave Mary. The Most Holy Mother adds that "it is better to say patiently not to recite the Ave Mary, and especially the Rosary, than to the Lord is with Thee, in a hasty manner, but rather with the most earnest attention and the greatest recollection of spirit, for by those words add the Queen of Heaven, "I am reminded of all the graces and grandeurs that my Son designed to confer on me, and more especially of the Incarnation by experienced when I conceived Him by the power of the Holy Ghost, and when I brought Him forth." The Rosary, as we have often said, is the main staff of the spiritual life, the Ave Mary offered in it to the Mystical Rose, Mary Rose, is the most precious of all the spiritual gifts we can offer, it should be fresh, have a bright color and emit a delightful fragrance, as the rosarie wreaths of mystical flowers, offered to the Mother of God, should be possessed of the bright color of attention, and the sweet odor of piety, in order that they may not be rejected by the Blessed Flowers. (Gardener Cathog. 10 p. Rosary) It is related that which a certain Carthusian religious was reciting in a hasty and negligent manner the Rosary, he heard a voice saying to him "Why do you offer your prayers to be acceptable to Heaven, Heaven, be exalted not to offer her a hot and wilthered rose, but, do your very best to wreathe for her a crown of the most beautiful and fragrant rose, for, most assuredly, those you are now presenting to her have lost their fragrance and are without odor. (Tract. Addit sup 27). Wrested also that, when a certain hermit was praying for some people, the Blessed Virgin appeared to him and said to him: "The people for whom you are now have neglected their devotions to me, and they have fallen into sin, and I, in order to save them encourage their faith, are delighted, let them recite the Rosary, and they will be saved, and I will be their protector." (Dominic Rosary). The Most Sacred Mother of God clearly points out to the world of the text at the head of this article, who are her true servants, and who are those who pray with the proper disposition. But more especially does she distinguish the true son-client of His Rosary, who by prayer said with vigilance and attention, and daily at her gates and walks at the posts of her doors. Interpreters of the Holy Scriptures declare that the Wisdom in prayer consists in hoping for every from the special divine direction, all empiral and spiritual, and in the Rosary, with the Mother who is the Wisdom. The Rosary is the way to be our model in prayer. But we are well aware that the II p. Spirit of Christ, in order to reserve in her prayer proper vitiation, petitions her Spouse constantly for the graces to be a worthy manner, with attention and devotion; that she addresses her prayers to the Father for the greater glory of God and the sanctuary of souls, and that she lives in peace and consumes. Like the Church, our true Mother and Model, let us then recite our Rosary in a worthy manner, with attention, devotion, great charity, and, as far as we can in common.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

NEW VERSION OF THE STABAT MATER.

Mater Dolorosa stood
By that mournful tree of the pool,
Where on it hung her Son.
Pierced with grief, and bow'd down the heart,
Groaning and sad that piercing her heart.
Which grief and sorrow bore.
Oh! how mournful and distressed
Was that maiden mother blessed
Of adoration One.
With bitter grief bemoaned,
Poor mother she lamented
To see her Son dishonored.
What man could pity mother,
And unclean view Christ's mother suffering such scorn?
Who could see Christ's mother mill
Weeping for her precious child,
And not with pity mourn?
For the sins of his people
She saw Jesus in chagrin,
And with the scourges torn,
She beheld her offspring
Die forsaken—all forlorn—
While pleading to his soul.
Mother! heart of love divine,
Make me to feel that grief of thine,
With thee let me condole;
Make my heart with fervor glow,
Make me in Christ's favor grow,
Let me in Him live;
Holy mother, pierced with grief,
Deeply, deeply thine great—
Deeply, deeply thine.
Oh wounds that crucified,
Give me share in thy Son's pain,
Who, through your wounds, did design
So like I to die for me.
Let me weep with thine still more,
And the Crucified deplore
As long as I shall live;
Near the Cross and by thy side—
Willing would I there abide
A sharer in thy pain.
Virgin Queen of virgin brids,
Look not on me with disdain,
Let me weep with you in pain
Let me in Christ live with thine,
He death is mine and life is Christ,
And in His sweet wounds dwell
With His brides make my cove.
Let me with Christ die
Let me with Christ live
Let me with Christ live
Let me with Christ live

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE PILGRIMAGE.

FROM THE GERMAN OF HEINE.

I.

At the window stood the mother,
In his sick bed lay the son;
"Come! the procession's passing,
The pilgrims will be gone!"

"Oh! let me rest here, mother!
I cannot can hear or see;
I think of my pale, dead Gretchen,
And my heart is broken for me."

"Come! rise! we'll follow to Kevlaar,
Bring thy Book and rosary;
The Holy Mother then will heal
Thy soul heart's misery."

Brightly the morning glistens,
The choir the bells have taken,
And now the long procession
Winds by through half Cologne.

The mother follows the pilgrims,
But the son wakes exactly;
Ahead they sing in the chorus—
"Ever praised be Thou, Maria!"

II.

The Holy Virgin at Kevlaar
Wears now her best array,
Few many are the sick ones
Who ask her help to day.

From those that come beseeching
The Holy Mother sees,
And many waxen offerings
Before her shrine hang.

For he who a hand offers,
She will from his hand from pain;
And he who a wax foot offers,
His foot will be well again.

For many went thither on crutches,
Who now on the green sward bound;
And many gay, gay wax offerings
Who thus had no finger sound.

The mother took a wax light,
And modelled therefrom a heart;
"Take that to the Holy Mother,
And she will heal thy smart."

The son took, sighing, the wax heart,
Sighing, knelt at the inner theory;
The tears from his eyes were bursting,
As broke from his lips the prayer—

"Thou, Queen of all the Heavens!
Thou purest of all saints!
Thou Handmaid of the Father!
Thou art to my soul pleasant.

I lived content and happy
With mother, all alone;
Where many hundred churches are,
And chapels—in Cologne.

And near by in front Gretchen—
Now she lies dead—apart—
Maria, I bring thee a wax heart,
Heal, Thou, my aching heart.

Oh! heal my wounded spirit!
And then shall ever see,
Gratefully I will bless thee,
Star praised be thou—Maria."

III.

The sickly son and the mother,
In their little chamber stay,
There name the Holy Virgin,
And lightly is she gone.

She bent o'er the sleeping sick one,
And tenderly laid on his brow
On his aching heart—then vanished
Far into the spirit land.

The mother now all by her dreaming,
And would have him sleeping still;
She awoke from her restless slumber,
The dogs were barking shrill.

They lay outstretched before her
Her son—and he was dead!—
On his little cold chamber door was playing
The light of the morning, red.

Her hands, the mother folded,
Bowed her head, unconsciously,
Then kneeling, whispered softly—
"Ever praised be thou, Maria!"

LILLIE.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

IT MUST BE SO.

I sat in my chamber alone one night,
While the lamp was burning low,
And my bitter Fancy winged its flight
To a land of sorrow and woe.
There joined together I could plainly see
The troubles and sorrows that were born for me,
And only for me I know.
Then I looked at the Future's hopeful store,
There were ills behind and ills before,
And Maker my pathway seemed I trow;
Then I cried aloud in my anguish keen,
"Ah! God is merciful and cruelly mean!
And Fanaticism answered
"It must be so!"

Here the lamp burned brighter, and there its rays
All over and round the room gleam,
And the fire in the grate gave a cheerful blaze,
And my mind seemed to loose itself from gloom,
Methought, then, a voice whispered in my ear,
A voice full of comfort and wonderously clear,
"Oh! mortal, be not so,
For the heart that patiently suffers all strife
Will at surely enjoy every blessing of life,
And wiser and happier grow.
A God of Mercy will ask each fall,
A God of Justice looks over all—
And Reason answers!
"It must be so."

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

HOME AGAIN.

Though wearied yet with wand'ring and with toil,
Unfailing experience,
What joyous heavy emotions within the little breast,
When, coming from the strangers' land, he sees in his native shore
And sees the old familiar scenes—his childhood's haunts once more
And as he day when sunshine glide each Sowa-bounded lea
To call the wanderer swallows hark across the deep blue sea.
How fondly would my heart beat could I hope to see spirits
Where the mountain peaks that stand 'neath Wanford's pleasant scenes
What thought is foreign lands or dear its many friends of old,
Though hearts there be, that once was mine, whose love has now grown cold.
Yet still remain the dreams and vales that charmed my youthful eye
When my little feet that morning's light had filled the Eastern sky.
I hope to see every hilltop and in every pasture
The buttercup, the hyacinth, the fragrant heather bell
Impartially to rich and poor its soothing odor yields
And beautifies with pregnant tints old Wanford's sunny fields.
I know there still remains the school upon the village green
Where each with happy comrades in my childhood's days I'd been,
And the yew beside the Convent Church, upon whose limb was traced
Below the initials of Hannah's name, which has almost now crumbled
Forth's mountain tops are purpled yet at every sun's return
And sweetly does the Dog-rose rest each eve o'er Curly-tyrne
And while the twilight fingers, still are heard the notes of lays
The ring dove croons calm her note from Wood-craigen's shady grove.
And southward, too, the gloriously from the bosom of the sea,
The foam-washed rocks that spa protect the coast-bred fishers.
While rolling on with pleasant pleasure, unceasing night or day,
The foam capped waves their burden still in lonely Ramsey Bay
Shall I not see the patriotic grace, of whom our fathers tell—
Who would shed my heart's blood in the cause for which they fell?
How dear is every well known spot on mountain, ill, and plain,
And so with joyous heart I'd go to Ireland once again.

C. F. K.

—Last year in the city of Boston, there were, by official report, over 11,000 births. Of this number, over 7,000 were Catholic, as shown by the confidential register of baptisms. A steady annual growth of 7 to 11, independent of the yearly immigration, will, in the course of one generation, make Boston the most distinctly Catholic city in the world.

Literary Miscellany.

In a Tenement House.

WRITTEN FOR THE "CATHOLIC HOME ALMANAC," BY MARGARET COGAN.

It had been a dreary afternoon. The sky had been as chilly grey everywhere—not the fag, over the rivers, over the bridge, that it was a relief when night came in, and the gas lamps sprung out of the twilight, one by one, like new born stars.

Mrs. McGinley looked at her son anxiously. "The boy's quiet at the latter; and it would make both him and his sister the happiest people in the world this night, if you'd only say that you'd look after the boy a little. Susan would be a great help to me, too. Speak quick with her mother, and be cheerful as I do!" He looked away from her and made no reply. Her fingers trembled so much, that she had to set down her cup. "Now, it's little I ask—

John McGinley rose and walked to the window. The strains of music—or what may be called music for want of another name—came up from the flowery.

"If I'd good enough for me, it ought to be good enough for him. He said, speaking of the boy's sister. "You'll see whether I can do what I say, when I tell you what's on my mind. I'm going to be married."

Mrs. McGinley stood as if turned to stone. John hastily took his hat and left the room. The old woman threw herself on the floor at the foot of the crucifix nailed against the wall, and sobbed aloud.

Her son was lost to her, she thought. Like most men he would bring home to her some frivolous creature, fond of dress and careless of the old mother that had brought them. And the poor boy upstairs would have to work and get to learning and hear say a Mass for her soul. The poor boy! so good and so gentle. And then his sister! Susan would be nothing but a drudge, a young girls, some of whom feared neither God nor the devil. The old woman's grief became to heavy too bear; she took up her beads and forgot her sorrow in the seven dolors.

With a heavy heart she went about her preparations for the dinner which she had hitherto looked forward to with delight.

* * * * * * *

After late Mass on Christmas Day. Will and Susan had assembled at three Masses, they entered the McGinleys' rooms, which were clean as a new pin and decorated with evergreens.

Susan had a bright fresh color in her cheeks and her black green was relieved by a spring of holly without berries. She went into the kitchen at once to help Mrs. McGinley. Will with shining eyes and a white collar and new blue neck tie, seemed happy and expectant. Mrs. McGinley's heart sank. John and Will at once began an animated discussion.

"Little the poor boy knows what I am suffering," she said to herself.

Dinner was ready. The turkey smoked on the table, the mince pie gave out an appetizing odor from a smaller table. "I'm said grace.

"Before I help anybody," he said smiling, "I want to give you a surprise."

Mrs. McGinley rested herself in her chair, and tried to suppress a groan.

"I am going to be married—and, mother, you've got that's concerned to be my sister."

Susan looked down and blushed as he took her hand.

Mrs. McGinley looked at the three bright faces. Then she kissed them all and burst into happy tears.

She had her way; before she died she built at the foot of the altar, and received the Bread of Life from the priest when vocation she had died read.

BRAZIL'S AFFLICTION.

A Terrible Plague At Sites With Scirmarcity Appetite

In the colony of Lorenzo, Brazil, in the months of May and June, 1876, more suddenly appeared in enormous numbers. They invaded the rain fields in such large numbers that the corn seemed literally alive with them, destroying in a few days everything that was edible, and where, but a short time before, bushels of grain might have been harvested, not an ear remained to the cross producing by their nibbling and climbing was audible for a considerable distance. Not alone the corn fields had been devasted the potatoes most received their attention. Only the largest were eaten in the ground such as were transportable were carried away and hidden in hollow logs or other places for future use. Gourds and pumpkins, even the hardest were also not spared, and in short, everything food, such as clover, oats, barley, not a leaf was left standing, and in some cases even down and the inner parts eaten out.

The poor people in the struggle for existence of those long tailed invaders, lost ground in ing. In many of the dwellings hundreds were killed in single day. The cats could contribute but little aid in fighting such a plague, for not only were many of them rats so large that it would have been an unequal contest, but by their great number they drove the cats actually from the houses, not to return until the plague was passed. Nothing, except what was composed of iron, stone or glass, was spared from their destructiveness. Furniture, clothes, hats, to-ka—everything—bore the traces of their teeth. They gnawed the hoofs of the cows and horses in the stables, literally ate up fatted hogs, often fit away the hair of persons during the night. They penetrated all apartments and gnawed their way through boards and walls of houses. Brother there ding about grainers did not suffice, the sun would climb over each other and thus destroy the sun.

The foregoing account of one occurrence in Lorenzo will suffice to show to what extent the plague reached. The same province had suffered similarly in 1861 and 1862, and in all probability will again in 1869. Sunday plagues, though far less in extent, have occurred in Europe in which the field mice unaccountly appeared in greatly increased numbers. The may well think what would be the result were those little, almost insignificant creatures every where in such was to take the ascendency. When one considers that an average of every one in twenty-one acts from two to three years, and that those young because mature in a few months themselves, he will not be surprised to know that a single pair of common field mice in the course of single summer would increase to 25,000 redoubt. Could all the nonfiction which now keep them in check be removed every living thing on earth would be consumed in half a dozen years.

Irishmen's English.

Hur, wholly aside from politics, the ignorance of the Irish has been greatly exaggerated. The opinion was long so, yet I proved by Miss Edgeworth, and subsequently by Walter Scott, that the lower classes of the Irish speak decidedly better English than the same classes in England, and I am sure that to day one will hear vastly more good English in a given proportion, at least, much less bad grammar on the banks of the Shannon than on the upper Thames, and in the byways of Dublin than about Seven Dials, in London. Hy, to make a long thrust, the other day I spent eight hours rowing upon Lough Corrib, lunching on an old Irish castle, on Lough Mask, and sleeping at table d hote in the principal room of the hotel at Galway, opposite an American tourist and his wife. They both ate with their knives, which my boatman did not and in the courses of the dinner, made more mistakes in English language than my boatman had in the entire day. Later in the evening my companion was "beast drunk." My boatman was not. Why they were both acquaintances. Take of my co-entry, I hope. Jeffrey Correspondence Boston Globe.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS IN TURKEY

Singular Manner of Selecting Wives.

All weddings in Turkey, among Turks, whether in provinces or cities, are arranged by old matrons, and are completed without affairs. The bridegroom holds little several times, or three friends, and the prospective bride at her home with her friends, girls, of course. The night before the wedding the married women of her acquaintance visit and set the marriage on a corner with her, which consists you mean a corner with her, which consists you mean a corner with her, which consists you mean

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED FREE OF PURCHASE.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21 1866.

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR.

By reading the announcement of the forthcoming Christmas Monitor which appears in this eighth page, our regular and occasional contributors will learn what desirable premiums we offer for all classes of Christmas literature, and those who have a family for writing upon Catholic themes will do well to set to work at once in order to win some of them.

We desire to develop and encourage so far as possible the talent of Catholic writers, hence we hope many of our veteran contributors, and also a large number of Catholic graduates and pupils of Catholic institutions, will help to make the forthcoming "PRINTED MONITOR" a representative issue of Catholic talent.

Full particulars concerning contributions will be found on the eighth page.

Editorial Notes.

— Contributors who intend competing for the prize compositions prepared for publication in the Christmas MONITOR will please send in their contributions not later than Wednesday (the 1st prox.) or else they will be too late to contest for the prizes offered.

— "I consider," says Bishop Bagshawe, "political action to be among the highest of duties, since the interests of God and His Church, and of society, are more affected by politics than by anything else after the direct practice and teaching of religion itself."

— A Methodist minister, Rev J F Austin, of Knoxville, Tenn., lately went through the ceremony of baptizing a corpse, and exercises himself in the plea that the relatives of the dead person persuaded him to commit the profanation. Heretical hirelings will do anything for pay!

— A Chicago artist has undertaken the work of repairing the crowns stolen from the shrine of the Blessed Virgin at Notre Dame, Ind., lately, and recovered in a broken condition. Father Lefebvre is soliciting contributions to defray the expense of the restoration.

— The Colorado Catholic has entered on its second volume, and we are glad to learn from its columns that its prospects are bright. Under Father Carr's management the paper has greatly improved both in matter and mechanical arrangement. May it live to celebrate its golden jubilee.

— Another convertside of error has been converted into a tabernacle of God, the Redemptorists having bought the Universalist church on East Baltimore street, Baltimore, for $41,000 and will fit it up for use as a Catholic Church for a Bohemian congregation. It is a fine brick structure.

— Since the Archbishop of Dublin refused to be sworn on a Protestant Testament a general feeling has arisen amongst the Catholics of Ireland that they should imitate such great example. Even the judge in Fahey's grand jury trial, similarly refused, and the judge, a Mr. Henn, said he would punish him. The Catholic juryman was not frightened, and Mr. Henn sent for a Catholic Testament, and announced that he would allow all Catholics to be sworn on it in future. Archbishop Walsh's example has done good.

— The German journals announce that the Catholic Seminary of Cologne, closed during the Kulturkampf, was re-opened on October 15th, with twenty-two students, the representatives of the Catholic Theological Seminary of Bonn, with a faculty of six highly renowned Catholic professors of the Little Seminary of Brauneberg, diocese of Ermeland, which already numbers forty-two leaning students, whilst the other seminaries will soon follow their example, save that of Hildesheim, which will, for the present, concentrate its students at Fulda.

— Moniteur de Rome, in a series of articles upon the Pope's Encyclical to the Portuguese bishops, calls particular attention to the great importance attached by the Holy Father to the mission of the Catholic press. The Monitor holds up Catholic Germany as a model in this respect, and writes as follows: "In 1870 the German Catholic people had only one great organ, the Kolnische, Volksblatt, around which the whole Catholic army was grouped. Since then the Centre has accomplished miracles of patience and skill: every provincial town, even the smallest, has its paper. From the highest to the lowest walks of the social ladder a hierarchy of newspapers has been formed—scientific and literary papers, daily journals, weekly papers, political papers, popular papers. The press meets all needs. The farmer, the artisan, the savant, the politician, all find their place in this organization. Everybody reads in Germany, and as Catholics and Catholic papers, evince an active, lively and inexhaustible energy, the Centre has a solid basis in the country." The Moniteur goes on to point out that the German Catholics have accomplished all this although they were poor: "Bishops have taken pen in hand, as in days gone by the Crusaders their swords; priests have given their services free—one contributing a correspondence, another a leading article, another news, another miscellanea. This union of all forces has had the result that the Catholic press is not so widely diffused nor so cheap as any other country."

— By Decree of the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda, under date October 16th 1866, the Civil Prefecture of Ning-hai, in China, a detached Church from the Vicariate of Kan-hoei and united to that of South-western Mongolia, which is under the direction of the same Belgian missionaries—the Belgian missionaries of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. The region of Ouéi-ouen is now erected into a regular mission, to be under the administration of the new diocese of the Panjab, which will be entrusted to the spiritual care of the Society of St. Joseph of Mill Hill, from whose ranks the Bishop of Panjab and Calcutta also hailed. The Capuchin Fathers, hitherto serving that Vicariate, will gradually abandon the field of their labors, withdrawing to Adenand to Fatna, some unhappily, the present annual expense of Peters in Italy has so reduced their number as to compel them to relinquish many of their annual pensions.

— His Holiness Pope Leo XIII., has sent to the Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of Colombia, accredited to the Holy See, his desire to take part in the celebration of the fourth centenary of the discovery of the New World, which will be commemorated in 1892. The letter published for the occasion all the Vatican documents referring to the discovery of America by Columbus and the history of this country. The ten million Catholics of America should make that day memorable in the United States.

— Perhaps no living man for the last forty years has done more for the lion of souls than Ernest Renan, the apostate science belonged to the sacerdotal phalanx of the Seminary of St Sulpice. His blasphemous Vie de Jesus, followed by many other works of the same stamp, have no doubt shaken the faith of many weak souls incapable of discerning the subtle poison under the charm of style, but all, even the enthusiasts of his literary talent, have been shocked by his latest production, Antichrist de demeure, which may be ranked with the filthy modern literature opprobriously termed pornographic.

— The Principal of a public school at Selma, in this State, ran away with his assistant teacher last week. The "moral instructor" left a sick wife and children behind him, and took the criminals left behind him, and took the criminals left behind him, and took the criminals left

Farm and Home.

Hints to Housekeepers.

Persons purchasing flour should be particularly careful to get it in air-tight packages if possible. Flour is a great absorbent of gases and vapors, and when not in air-tight sacks or barrels will be permeated by deleterious odors and deteriorated to a certain extent, no matter how pure and sweet when leaving the mill. Especially is this the case in stores where there is an accumulation of goods and merchandise, such as coal oil, lime, grocemies, vegetables, etc., from which a vapor and smell arises which fill the room and are all absorbed by the flour, deteriorating the flavor and impairing its purity. Cotton sacks should be particularly avoided, inasmuch as they are porous, and therefore no protection against absorption. Sacks made of paper are air-tight, and therefore impenetrable by insects, gases and odors, retaining the flavor of the flour, keeping it sweet and pure, and therefore should be used exclusively for household purposes.

Milk as an Odor Absorbent.

Those dairymen who do not believe in the power of milk to rapidly absorb and become contaminated by surrounding noxious smells will do well to try the following sample test, the results of which will doubtless immediately convince the most skeptical: Take a wide bowl or saucer, place in the cow stable when you go to milk; pour into it a pint of fresh milk, set it on the floor or at the height of a milk stool, so as to expose it fully to the air of the stable and close to the cows. If the day is close and sultry and the milk is cold and the stable not cleaned out and aired, the result will be surprising. Take it to the house or anywhere away from the stable and try to drink it.

When to Eat Fruit.

The real place of fruit is at the beginning of a feast, and not at the end. A better plan still is to make a meal of bread and ripe fruit. The best meals to make thus are breakfast lunch or early tea. The bread should be brown and dry and the fruit ripe and raw. Dry brown bread cleans the tongue and brings out the flavor of the fruit. Butter on the bread would give the own favor, or even the salt in the butter would destroy the pure taste of the fruit. Again, the fruit should be raw if possible, of many delicious odors and delicate flavors are lost in the cooking.

Rules for Living Well.

If living well consists in living neither luxuriously nor expensively, the question is, how shall we live, and how may the men of moderate means take advantage of it? The question is not a difficult one to answer, and we will put that answer in the shape of a few short rules:

1. Buy with judgment.
2. Buy the best for the best is always the cheapest.
3. Let your economy regulate the quantity, not the quality.
4. Let your cook be a cook, and one that knows how to utilize what is now thrown to the dogs, or otherwise wasted.
5. Study simplicity in the manner of the dishes, and variety in the character of the meals.
6. Let the housewife be watchful enough to trace the leaks that are liable to spring in every larder.
7. Let the mistress be indeed the head of her own household and of her own kitchen.

Profit in Dairying.

Hartsman, who is running the Davis Burrin dairy ranch of 100 cows, has calls for his butter and ice cream from Benicia, where he is shipping it. There is the great, neat cheese here for a butter and cheese factory in the State, with the best assurance for good prices and a steady production the year around. The farmer should keep cows and teach his boys and girls to milk, so that the cream gatherer could drive around and get the cream, leaving the milk for the pigs, and at the end of the week send a check for the coin. A monthly income is what a family needs, and what they might have if they would keep some cows and encourage the establishment of a creamery in every town. Fruit, stock and the dairy will yet make Lonerne the queen of the San Joaquin valley. Wheat raising, if not followed as in the past, will impoverish and blast her prospects and bring ultimate failure upon the country.—Hanford Sentinel.

Condensed Milk for Farmers.

As exclusive, in speaking of canning milk, says a correspondent was visiting a farm when all the cows were dry, and yet the good housewife had rich cream for the coffee. Where did you get it? she asked, and the reply was: "Oh that is canned milk! We ascertained how it was done, and has done it for two seasons herself since, and she intends to do it again soon. It is the method, she says, that was employed: When the milk is brought in and strained, put it on to boil in a steamer or pail set in a kettle of boiling water. As soon as it reaches the boiling point and begins to bubble, pour into glass jars already prepared and heated and screw up immediately. Keep it where it will not freeze, and when it is needed it will be found ready for use. We are not prepared to vouch for the keeping qualities of milk under such circumstances, but still think it is worth a trial, provided it is always kept near the freezing point, or at least below forty-five degrees F. This is just about impossible in summer, but then in summer there is usually an abundant supply of milk, so that this pan and the necessity for its use both applied to the same season, which must be in cold weather, when cows are usually not going dry and fresh milk is in great demand. We would suggest a trial with a small quantity first, to see how it works.—California Farmer.

A San Joaquin County Vineyard.

J. Aldrich, whose wall managed farm is a few miles northeast of Woodbridge, on the river, reports that he has sold his twenty-acre grape crop on the vines for $600. Of the twenty acres all but two or three acres are young vines three or four years old. Not another section of the State can make a better showing than this. Here is a yield of $30 per acre on a three-year three or four year-old. Farmers have encouragement in this to be industrious in putting out a vineyard. Had Mr. Aldrich grown wheat on these twenty acres during the four years he has cultivated the vines, it is doubtful if he would in the four wheat crops, have found $10 profit. But last year Mr. Aldrich may reasonably expect a yield of $1,000 from his twenty acre vineyard; and the year after that, when the vines are five and six years old, he may confidently count on 100 tons of grapes, which, at $25 per ton, would be worth $2500, a yield of over $100 per acre. As to the quality of Mr. Aldrich's grapes, they are fully equal to anything that any other section of the State ever boasted of. Mr. Aldrich says his medium Muscatel was made as fine raisins as ever he saw manufactured.—Lodi Sentinel.

—Pier's Remedy for Catarrh is agreeable to use. It is not a liquid or a snuff.

Family Fun.

A Noble Arrangement.

"It's a solemn thing, young man," said the broken hearted father, "to come into the home of an old man and take away his only daughter, the light of his household, and the prop and solace of his declining age." "I know it, father, and I feel the sacredness of the trust. Consumption is not always of long duration."

"It does." "What will then?"

"Man—even of consumption are secular. The disease itself prevails

A NEW VIEW OF CONSUMPTION.

And One which Appeals to Common Sense Many Readers Have.

WITHOUT MEDICINE.

"Many persons die of Consumption who should live. Several years ago Clark of Watertown, N. Y., of Huey would go at night. He gave a new view of the disease. Consumption is not always of long duration.

"It does." "What will then?"

"Man—even of consumption are secular. The disease itself prevails

MISCELLANEOUS.

HOOPER'S SOUTH END Grain Warehouse,

First-Class Fire-Proof Brick-Building. CAPACITY 10,000 TONS.

TOWNSEND ST.,

Between First and Second, San Francisco.

GEORGE H. LEMMAN, Prop.

Grain taken from the deck and from the cars at the C. P. R. R. and S. P. R. R. free of charge. Storage at current rates.

Advances and Insurance effected at lowest rates.

Telephone No. 327.

JOS. A. DONOHOE, San Francisco. | EUGENE KELLY, New York

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO. SAN FRANCISCO

EUGENE, KELLY & CO. NEW YORK

BANKERS

EXCHANGE ON NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin).

Payable at all the Branches

AND IN FIRST DISTRICT TOWN IN SCOTLAND.

SITUATION WANTED.

BY A CATHOLIC LADY LATELY FROM THE ISLAND OF MAURITIUS, a good practical nurse and fine cooker of a stout, healthy, good-tempered disposition. Is willing to go to the country. Address M. M. Vincent Schmitt Wilson street near Taylor.

MARVELOUS PRICES!

BOOKS FOR MILLION

Complete Novels and Other Works by Famous Authors, Sent Postpaid for 10 Cents.

Good type upon good paper. Large Print. Handsome Illustrated Cover.

The Standard Letter Writer for Lovers and Friends. Contains over 300 pages. Price 10 cents.

Dialogues, Recitations and Readings. 400 pages. Price 10 cents.

The Standard Letter Writer for Business Men. Contains over 300 pages. Price 10 cents.

Dick Lorrimer, or Work and Wait. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Jack Gordon, Knight Errant. By Edward S. Ellis. Price 10 cents.

The Lovers of the Lake. By Sir E. Bulwer Lytton. Price 10 cents.

The Lady of Lyons, or Love and Pride. By Sir E. Bulwer Lytton. Price 10 cents.

The Rightfull Heir. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Lady Ethelyn. By Miss Mulock. Price 10 cents.

Ben Hur: A Tale of the Christ. By Lew Wallace. Price 10 cents.

The Wonder Book for Boys and Girls. By Nathaniel Hawthorne. Price 10 cents.

Tanglewood Tales for Boys and Girls. By Nathaniel Hawthorne. Price 10 cents.

Malaeska, the Indian Wife of the Hunter. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Mabel Vaughan. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

The Hidden Path. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Married in Haste. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Miriam. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Fairy Water. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Wife and Widow. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Fashion and Famine. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

The Rejected Wife. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

The Curse of Gold. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

The Lost Heiress. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Fairy Land. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

The Gipsy Queen. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Lucy Sanford. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

The Mystery of Life. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

The Heir of Vane. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Doubly False. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Wife and Mistress. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Mary Derwent. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Mildred Trevanion. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Mark Dale's Wife. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Shadows on the Snow. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Wife's Secret. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Mysterious Marriage. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Wounding the Wildwood. A true Tale of Adventure. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Fashion and Famine. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Price 10 cents.

Dalliding Plays for Practical Jokers. Price 10 cents.

Dialogues and Recitations for Temperance Reunions. Price 10 cents.

Dialogues and Recitations for Temperance Reunions. Price 10 cents.

Dialogues and Recitations for Temperance Reunions

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

His Life, Traits and Literary Genius.

LECTURE —DELIVERED BY—

JAMES D. PHELAN,

At Metropolitan Hall, on

Wednesday Evening, the 10th inst.

[The following synopsis of the Lecture delivered by Mr. James D. Phelan in this city on the anniversary of the birth of Oliver Goldsmith was in type last week but had to be held over in consequence of the crowded state of our columns

Mr. Phelan's address was well received and frequently applauded, a great many of his audience appearing a desire to have the MONITOR print his interesting discourse in our columns.

Ladies and Gentlemen: We have assembled together to night to celebrate the anniversary of a poet's birth. In other centuries you have paid homage to one who in peculiarly the poet of Ireland, but now you seek to honor a man, who through a Irish sensibility and sympathetic, yet so broad was his humanity and so universal his lore, he might well be described after his compeers-to-day, "a citizen of the world."

Still, to commune with such men as Burke and Sterne, and Sheridan and Moore, he has, whilst earlier Anglo literature, similar need particularly into literary renown of Ireland and contributed largely to give that country the same position in the modern world that was once held by Attica in the ancient, the home of wit and wisdom.

Let us not be backward in recognizing the masters of poetry, of music and of art, themselves the disciples of the beautiful and true; and as a consequence our own lives will become attuned to their measures and elevated to their plane.

It is not unfrequently said by the wise men of the East—"The saving remnant" of Mother Attaki—that the people west of the Rocky Mountains are more Philistine; men without culture neglectful of the greater interests of life, and wholly addicted to the acquisition of material things.

But what better refutation can we give them than that we are here tonight making our votive offerings at the shrine of genius, pouring in the midst of our hurried existence to pay a debt of gratitude to a simple poet.

America has given to the world many a sweet singer, many a poet of the first rank, and entombed and encouraged them, but there is none who can compare in every respect to Oliver Goldsmith.

Longfellow and Holmes, the one for elegant diction, the other for his sparkling wit, combined might give us such another poet, and how dearly would American cherish their new-born child?

Yet in England, the supposed cast of out literature, Goldsmith lived and died in a garret!

And Foster says triumphantly that "he struggled late fame without the aid of English institutions." Then let England to claim him after on the question of American Philistinism. Let English institutions only when she has acquired right. But Goldsmith needed not aid in the world. He did not defy it, he merely said it was hard. Poor, he refused assistance because he was proud. "Man" his sang, "wants but little here below," and that he always possessed.

The wholesome and pathos of his brief career, the flashes of wit, his compassionate with wife, his personal virtues, his pleasant vices, his amiable weakness, his honesty, his vanity, his dependence, have made him one of the most interesting and lovable of characters.

It was on this day about one hundred and sixty years ago that he was born in the village of Pallas, County Longford, Leinster, Ireland. His father was at the time a poor clergyman, "passing rich on £40 a year;" but even after having been offered a richer living he moved in Lissoy, in the County of Westmeath.

Here we might stop and read "The Deserted Village," for Lissoy is "Sweet Auburn, loveliest village of the plain," and the poem itself is a mere transcript from his youth, a picture of the village, of the father and of his schoolmaster, and the scenery that surrounds them "homes of innocence and ease." And what an sympathy charming work he has wrought; a tale of rural happiness and decadence!

First, his earliest recollections of the sports of childhood; the brook beneath that his mother, the site whose statesmen, the merry matches and the sweet music; the village comes passing office and luxury and "Trade's enfeeling train," which "Depeoples the land" and dispeoples the swain.

And now his poignant grief is expressed in words equal to Byron's best lamentations, pointing over the decadence of the Spanish Peninsula.

But Goldsmith resolves the very soil of pathos for even more than Byron, did he feel at had he allowed.

Goldsmith was no mere idealist; he took hold firmly of practical things, as prices refers in "The Vicar," and the destruction of the peasantry in this poem.

Old Dr. Johnson, his life long friend, whose heartsby we admire, never awoke our sympathy; he became to a cold and cynical. But poor Goldsmith, who looks to his poem as his child, "a manikin," and wraps over the sufferings of his creation, Johnson, who lived and died in London, was impatient, was cynical, was cold of the world, and would have scornfully spurned from his door the poor Irish poet, who, when he died in London, left behind him a debt of gratitude to his country, and a name that will ever be a source of pride to the

Poetry.

FROM THE LATIN OF

VENI SANCTE SPIRITUS.

O come Holy Spirit,
And send from above
A ray of Thy light,
Come, Father of the poor,
O come, gift-bestower,
The heart, light of hearts.
Most blessed consoler,
Your guest sweet indeed,
A comforter in sorrow,
In fatigue Thou art rest,
Refreshment in heat,
A solace in grief.
O Light the most Holy,
Replenish the depths
Of each faithful heart.
Thou art Divine wealth,
In man there is naught,
Naught harmless can be,
Wah these what is sullied,
Bathe what is dry,
Heal what is wounded
What is no pliable bend,
Revive what is chilled,
Set right what is wrong
Bedew on thy faithful
Confiding in Thee,
Bless gift sevan-fold
Award virtue's worth,
Give safety in death,
Give joy without end. Amen.

F. J. SULLIVAN, S.J.

TO ST. MICHAEL THE ARCHANGEL.

O, thou! who conquered God's first foe,
And hurled him to the depths of woe,
Arm, sword and shield, with buckler bright,
And fetters him to the blackest night.

Our Holy Father asks thine aid,
In every church his prayer is said;
Archangel Michael! Satan's foe,
Oh! hurl him to the depths below.

See! "leading whom he may devour,"
He roams the world, by night or hour;
Sheathing his fangs, he creeps, he crawls,
To lead poor souls souls away.

If willing sare to him they lend,
He paints their joys, to never end,
He tells not of the "gnashing teeth,
Nor of the "worm that knows not death.

The souls that saw from God's refrain,
He boldly fought to snap his chain,
His slights their shield, and shake their sign,
With hold of choicest wine.

Even to the "mountain's top" arise
His pleasure words and wrangling cries,
To shake loneliness fair and strong,
And open up the path of wrong.

As thou didst bargain for good in heaven,
And from on high the proud hath driven,
Keep far from us his hurtful bolt,
And drive him to the bottomless vault.

MAY JOHN F. MASTERS

DON IGNACIO LOYOLA'S VIGIL.

When at thy shrine, Most Holy Maid,
The Spanish knight his vigil kept,
And hard his helmet bow
Not that his feared war's clange prize,
Or that the battle-field for him
Had night to charms, I ween.

"Glory!" he cried, with thee I'v done;
Fame! thy bright theatre I miss,
To tread fresh pathways now,
To teach thy fearless Gospel
With thobbing heart, with feet unshod,
Hear and record my vow.

Yes, Thou shalt reign! Chained to Thy throne,
The wind of man Thy sway shall own,
And to the Conqueror bow.
Gaains his fyre to Thee shall lift
Hand, heart, and voice,
Friendly on Thee bestow.

Straight on the marble floor he knelt
And in his breast symbol felt
A vivid lightning glare
Forth to his task the giant sped;
Earth shook, Hell's breasts his tread,
And Idols were laid low.

India repaired half Europe's loss;
Of a new hemisphere his Cross
Shone in the sacra sky,
And the Name of Jesus
A bloodless victory!

FATHER PROUT.

Literary Miscellany.

Roselle's Prayer.

WRITTEN FOR THE "CATHOLIC HOME AL-MANAC," BY "CHRISTIAN REID.

Summer was making the land beautiful, and the sun was just beginning to glide down, sting, light, from behind the great ragged of rugged mountain peaks at the foot of what nestled a quiet little German village. The rays of lessing gold touched first the tops of the tall trees that were swaying gently in a soft breeze, then played about the tapering spire of the quaint old church standing in it's green God's acre, and finally crept downward until all the earth was bathed in a yellow radiance, and the waters of a narrow brook flowing at the lower end of the hamlet, sparkled like diamonds as they rippled and sound the sempty stones by which the village children generally crossed the shallow stream.

Many feet had passed over these stones, and across the rustic bridge stunded a few feet lower down, already this morning, young as the day was; and many were still passing—for it was Fair Day in—, a naugh boring town of some size, and the thinnest rants of all the country round were hurrying thither, making the sunlighted hills and green valleys bright with their pinnenesses costumes, and gay with laughter and song, as singly and in groups they trudged merrily along.

But, alas, for human life and human frailty! Side by side are often joyfulness and grief—pleasure and pain. On this sweet June morning, when all nature and mete and maintenance, seemed overflowing with his and joy, two very sad hearts were left behind in the silent deserted village. Standing at the roadside before the small plot of garden surrounding a low thatched cottage—the last house on the outskirts of the hamlet at the end—a young woman and her child, a little girl scarcely five years old, were watching with tear-dimmed eyes the rapidly receding figure of a man, with with light elastic tread, was mounting the steep hill on the other side of the brook. He was not alone, but had several companions; and the party, all in holiday attire and evidently bound for the fair, seemed in the highest spirits—shouting aloe, as they went, a popular drinking song; one voice carrying the air, and the others joining in and roaring forth the chorus, or, spurning from the ground, they knocked their heels together in flies of the sick of glasses.

"Father, father!" shrieked the child, in an accent of desperation, as the sounds of "Father, come back! Roselle want to go to the fair, too!"

"He can't hear thee, poor little one!" said the mother, almost with a sob. "Ah, Frank, Frank, how cruel thou—how cruel thou—"

"Won't he come back, mother! won't he come back?" cried the little girl. "He promised to take Roselle to the fair."

"Yes, he promised," answered her mother in a tone which would have seemed cruel to an older ear, "but I am afraid he has forgotten. Roselle will have to stay at home with mother to-day."

"But mother was going too," said the child.

"No, mother was not going," was the reply, uttered in a tone so sad, that the little girl, pressing her dimpled fingers upon her eyes to wipe away the tears that were ready to fall, looked up with mingled surprise and apprehension into the face above her.

That face expressed indignation, no less than sadness, as the new distant group of figures were outlined for an instant against the blue sky that made the background of the sharp crested hill they were ascending, a tale an echo of their boorhoolaim strain recalled against his shoulder, he pressed the last moment the last dark, caption form had disappeared.

The spruce, wandering sure of the child had the magnetic power which seized fast lock seldom or never fails to exert—that of attracting an answering regard. The young mother glanced down and her sunny tresses entwined. She forced a smile to her lips, and taking the little one's hand, led her through the half opened gate to the cottage—where, sitting down on the doorstep with the child standing at her knee, she began to smooth the soft hair that was falling gold in color, as she said soothingly

"Mother would be very lonesome without her little girl. Will Roselle sit long to stay at home with mother?"

"But I wanted to go to the fair" sobbed the child. "Father promised to take me to the fair. Won't he come back for me?"

"He will not come back."

"Why?" asked Roselle, with the persistence of a child.

"Because he loves him own pleasure better than——"

The speaker paused. "Better than anything else; far better than his wife and child," she was about to say hitterly—but checked herself and went on in a different tone, "better than he caught to, your Franz! And if he was so bad satisfy by bad men, he would not have gone off and left Roselle."

"Is father a bad man?" said Roselle, looking into her mother's face with that direct and close gaze which is sometimes very embarrassing to a grown person, when a child is seeking an incomprehensible question.

"No, no—he does not mean to be bad," was the reply. "Thou must not talk like that about father. He is thoughtless and pleasure-loving, and easily led astray"—she was speaking to herself now more than to the child—"but not bad; no, not bad, my Franz wanderer! Thou wilt come back to me, we must pray much. Surely the dear Lord will hear thee, and save him for thyself, ay, moreni one!"

Something in the tone and looks of the speaker made the child realize that her one disappointment in the matter of going to the fair was not what was troubling her mother most—and having a generous, self-abnegating nature, her generosity was forgotten at once in a desire to comfort her mother and "save" her father. "May I go to the church and pray for him now, mother" she asked eagerly

"Yes," answered her mother, after a moment's hesitation. "But don't stay long, darling."

Mindful of this injunction, Roselle did not linger on her way, but ran on fast through the now silent and empty village street, that was shine in the sunlit shade, and knelt in the church door. She sat down on the broad stone steps to rest, and untying the strings of her straw hat, laid it beside her—looking above and enjoying the freshness and beauty of the morning with a child's delight. But presently, remembering that she must not stay long, she started up and entered the deep arch of the open door.

There she paused a moment—standing with timid, almost awe-struck air on the threshold, across which a flood of golden sunlight fell. The world without was so green and bright, that the still, cool darkness of the church inside half frightened her at first—until her eye rested on the sanctuary lamp gleaming before the altar. Then she advanced softly and reverently, but without fright or hesitation.

Young as she was, she knew what Presence is guarded by that sanctuary of living light; and there came to her a sudden happy consciousness that she was alone with the dear Lord. Who, she had been taught, was present in this tabernacle—present as she had never felt Him to be in the crowded church, where there was always the chance of her attention being distracted by some one or other of her school companions. There was no body now to share with her the attention of the good God. Surely He would listen to her, she thought—surely He would grant her prayer! She knelt on the sanctuary step, looking up at the Tabernacle, her mind full of the strange thoughts children (who have—and remained such for a long time. The was not praying; she had forgotten herself, everything, in thinking of the Person Good within the closed door, on which her fascinated gaze was fixed. But at length some accidental sound from the outer world roused her—and with a sudden impulse, for it was not a thought—she pushed open the door of this sanctuary reality, and the next moment was standing at the foot of the altar, looking up eagerly, with an overpowering desire to draw near, very near, to this God Who was there. By an irresistible impulse, the same impulse which impels a child to fly to its mother's arms and cling close to her breast, the little one took off her hat, sparkled like diamonds as they rippled and sound the sempty stones by which the village children generally crossed the shallow stream.

Many feet had passed over these stones, and across the rustic bridge stunded a few feet lower down, already this morning, young as the day was; and many were still passing—for it was Fair Day in—, a naughboring town of some size, and the thinnest rants of all the country round were hurrying thither, making the sunlighted hills and green valleys bright with their pinnenesses costumes, and gay with laughter and song, as singly and in groups they trudged merrily along.

But, alas, for human life and human frailty! Side by side are often joyfulness and grief—pleasure and pain. On this sweet June morning, when all nature and mete and maintenance, seemed overflowing with his and joy, two very sad hearts were left behind in the silent deserted village. Standing at the roadside before the small plot of garden surrounding a low thatched cottage—the last house on the outskirts of the hamlet at the end—a young woman and her child, a little girl scarcely five years old, were watching with tear-dimmed eyes the rapidly receding figure of a man, with with light elastic tread, was mounting the steep hill on the other side of the brook. He was not alone, but had several companions; and the party, all in holiday attire and evidently bound for the fair, seemed in the highest spirits—shouting aloe, as they went, a popular drinking song; one voice carrying the air, and the others joining in and roaring forth the chorus, or, spurning from the ground, they knocked their heels together in flies of the sick of glasses.

"Father, father!" shrieked the child, in an accent of desperation, as the sounds of "Father, come back! Roselle want to go to the fair, too!"

"He can't hear thee, poor little one!" said the mother, almost with a sob. "Ah, Frank, Frank, how cruel thou—how cruel thou—"

"Won't he come back, mother! won't he come back?" cried the little girl. "He promised to take Roselle to the fair."

"Yes, he promised," answered her mother in a tone which would have seemed cruel to an older ear, "but I am afraid he has forgotten. Roselle will have to stay at home with mother to-day."

"But mother was going too," said the child.

"No, mother was not going," was the reply, uttered in a tone so sad, that the little girl, pressing her dimpled fingers upon her eyes to wipe away the tears that were ready to fall, looked up with mingled surprise and apprehension into the face above her.

That face expressed indignation, no less than sadness, as the new distant group of figures were outlined for an instant against the blue sky that made the background of the sharp crested hill they were ascending, a tale an echo of their boorhoolaim strain recalled against his shoulder, he pressed the last moment the last dark, caption form had disappeared.

The spruce, wandering sure of the child had the magnetic power which seized fast lock seldom or never fails to exert—that of attracting an answering regard. The young mother glanced down and her sunny tresses entwined. She forced a smile to her lips, and taking the little one's hand, led her through the half opened gate to the cottage—where, sitting down on the doorstep with the child standing at her knee, she began to smooth the soft hair that was falling gold in color, as she said soothingly

"Mother would be very lonesome without her little girl. Will Roselle sit long to stay at home with mother?"

"But I wanted to go to the fair" sobbed the child. "Father promised to take me to the fair. Won't he come back for me?"

"He will not come back."

"Why?" asked Roselle, with the persistence of a child.

"Because he loves him own pleasure better than——"

The speaker paused. "Better than anything else; far better than his wife and child," she was about to say bitterly—but checked herself and went on in a different tone, "better than he caught to, your Franz! And if he was so bad satisfy by bad men, he would not have gone off and left Roselle."

"Is father a bad man?" said Roselle, looking into her mother's face with that direct and close gaze which is sometimes very embarrassing to a grown person, when a child is seeking an incomprehensible question.

"No, no—he does not mean to be bad," was the reply. "Thou must not talk like that about father. He is thoughtless and pleasure-loving, and easily led astray"—she was speaking to herself now more than to the child—"but not bad; no, not bad, my Franz wanderer! Thou wilt come back to me, we must pray much. Surely the dear Lord will hear thee, and save him for thyself, ay, moreni one!"

Something in the tone and looks of the speaker made the child realize that her one disappointment in the matter of going to the fair was not what was troubling her mother most—and having a generous, self-abnegating nature, her generosity was forgotten at once in a desire to comfort her mother and "save" her father. "May I go to the church and pray for him now, mother" she asked eagerly

"Yes," answered her mother, after a moment's hesitation. "But don't stay long, darling."

Mindful of this injunction, Roselle did not linger on her way, but ran on fast through the now silent and empty village street, that was shine in the sunlit shade, and knelt in the church door. She sat down on the broad stone steps to rest, and untying the strings of her straw hat, laid it beside her—looking above and enjoying the freshness and beauty of the morning with a child's delight. But presently, remembering that she must not stay long, she started up and entered the deep arch of the open door.

There she paused a moment—standing with timid, almost awe-struck air on the threshold, across which a flood of golden sunlight fell. The world without was so green and bright, that the still, cool darkness of the church inside half frightened her at first—until her eye rested on the sanctuary lamp gleaming before the altar. Then she advanced softly and reverently, but without fright or hesitation.

Young as she was, she knew what Presence is guarded by that sanctuary of living light; and there came to her a sudden happy consciousness that she was alone with the dear Lord. Who, she had been taught, was present in this tabernacle—present as she had never felt Him to be in the crowded church, where there was always the chance of her attention being distracted by some one or other of her school companions. There was no body now to share with her the attention of the good God. Surely He would listen to her, she thought—surely He would grant her prayer! She knelt on the sanctuary step, looking up at the Tabernacle, her mind full of the strange thoughts children (who have—and remained such for a long time. The was not praying; she had forgotten herself, everything, in thinking of the Person God within the closed door, on which her fascinated gaze was fixed. But at length some accidental sound from the outer world roused her—and with a sudden impulse, for it was not a thought—she pushed open the door of this sanctuary reality, and the next moment was standing at the foot of the altar, looking up eagerly, with an overpowering desire to draw near, very near, to this God Who was there. By an irresistible impulse, the same impulse which impels a child to fly to its mother's arms and cling close to her breast, the little one took off her hat, sparkled like diamonds as they rippled and sound the sempty stones by which the village children generally crossed the shallow stream.

"O dear Lord," said the plaintive little voice in the words which had been taught her from infancy, "bless father, and keep him in health, and make him a good man! Dear Lord, this was her own addition to the prayer, "make him come home! Don't let him be a bad man."

Several times did Roselle repeat the last petition in tones of pleading earnestness; and again she knelt at the tabernacle door—putting her ear down to hear if the good God would answer her in words.

As she listened intently, a stifled exclamation startled her—and, looking around she saw her mother standing in the church door, pale, trembling, almost confounded by the sight before her. The next instant, the young mother, with quick but awe-stricken tread, hurried up the aisle, entered the sanctuary, and after a deep genuflection, picked up her Roselle's shoes and their footfalls—heard, and with another profound act of homage, the child still in her arms, hastily left the church.

Stumbling almost down the steps, so great was her agitation, she met the priest who was about to enter, and, in a few words, explained the cause of her evident alarm.

The father smiled kindly, as he said, "There is no ear without attention. There must not be this again, my little one," he added, laying his hand in benediction on the golden head, "but go in peace now, and may the merciful Lord grant thy prayer"

Several hours later Roselle was prattling, as she stood beside her mother, while the latter prepared their mid day meal, when suddenly she started up from a reverie of "Father, come back! Roselle want to go to the fair, too!"

"He can't hear thee, poor little one!" said the mother, almost with a sob. "Ah, Frank, Frank, how cruel thou—how cruel thou—"

"Won't he come back, mother! won't he come back?" cried the little girl. "He promised to take Roselle to the fair."

"Yes, he promised," answered her mother in a tone which would have seemed cruel to an older ear, "but I am afraid he has forgotten. Roselle will have to stay at home with mother to-day."

"But mother was going too," said the child.

"No, mother was not going," was the reply, uttered in a tone so sad, that the little girl, pressing her dimpled fingers upon her eyes to wipe away the tears that were ready to fall, looked up with mingled surprise and apprehension into the face above her.

That face expressed indignation, no less than sadness, as the new distant group of figures were outlined for an instant against the blue sky that made the background of the sharp crested hill they were ascending, a tale an echo of their boorhoolaim strain recalled against his shoulder, he pressed the last moment the last dark, caption form had disappeared.

The spruce, wandering sure of the child had the magnetic power which seized fast lock seldom or never fails to exert—that of attracting an answering regard. The young mother glanced down and her sunny tresses entwined. She forced a smile to her lips, and taking the little one's hand, led her through the half opened gate to the cottage—where, sitting down on the doorstep with the child standing at her knee, she began to smooth the soft hair that was falling gold in color, as she said soothingly

"Mother would be very lonesome without her little girl. Will Roselle sit long to stay at home with mother?"

"But I wanted to go to the fair" sobbed the child. "Father promised to take me to the fair. Won't he come back for me?"

"He will not come back."

"Why?" asked Roselle, with the persistence of a child.

"Because he loves him own pleasure better than——"

The speaker paused. "Better than anything else; far better than his wife and child," she was about to say bitterly—but checked herself and went on in a different tone, "better than he caught to, your Franz! And if he was so bad satisfy by bad men, he would not have gone off and left Roselle."

"Is father a bad man?" said Roselle, looking into her mother's face with that direct and close gaze which is sometimes very embarrassing to a grown person, when a child is seeking an incomprehensible question.

"No, no—he does not mean to be bad," was the reply. "Thou must not talk like that about father. He is thoughtless and pleasure-loving, and easily led astray"—she was speaking to herself now more than to the child—"but not bad; no, not bad, my Franz wanderer! Thou wilt come back to me, we must pray much. Surely the dear Lord will hear thee, and save him for thyself, ay, moreni one!"

Something in the tone and looks of the speaker made the child realize that her one disappointment in the matter of going to the fair was not what was troubling her mother most—and having a generous, self-abnegating nature, her generosity was forgotten at once in a desire to comfort her mother and "save" her father. "May I go to the church and pray for him now, mother" she asked eagerly

"Yes," answered her mother, after a moment's hesitation. "But don't stay long, darling."

Mindful of this injunction, Roselle did not linger on her way, but ran on fast through the now silent and empty village street, that was shine in the sunlit shade, and knelt in the church door. She sat down on the broad stone steps to rest, and untying the strings of her straw hat, laid it beside her—looking above and enjoying the freshness and beauty of the morning with a child's delight. But presently, remembering that she must not stay long, she started up and entered the deep arch of the open door.

There she paused a moment—standing with timid, almost awe-struck air on the threshold, across which a flood of golden sunlight fell. The world without was so green and bright, that the still, cool darkness of the church inside half frightened her at first—until her eye rested on the sanctuary lamp gleaming before the altar. Then she advanced softly and reverently, but without fright or hesitation.

Young as she was, she knew what Presence is guarded by that sanctuary of living light; and there came to her a sudden happy consciousness that she was alone with the dear Lord. Who, she had been taught, was present in this tabernacle—present as she had never felt Him to be in the crowded church, where there was always the chance of her attention being distracted by some one or other of her school companions. There was no body now to share with her the attention of the good God. Surely He would listen to her, she thought—surely He would grant her prayer! She knelt on the sanctuary step, looking up at the Tabernacle, her mind full of the strange thoughts children (who have—and remained such for a long time. The was not praying; she had forgotten herself, everything, in thinking of the Person God within the closed door, on which her fascinated gaze was fixed. But at length some accidental sound from the outer world roused her—and with a sudden impulse, for it was not a thought—she pushed open the door of this sanctuary reality, and the next moment was standing at the foot of the altar, looking up eagerly, with an overpowering desire to draw near, very near, to this God Who was there. By an irresistible impulse, the same impulse which impels a child to fly to its mother's arms and cling close to her breast, the little one took off her hat, sparkled like diamonds as they rippled and sound the sempty stones by which the village children generally crossed the shallow stream.

Many feet had passed over these stones, and across the rustic bridge stunded a few feet lower down, already this morning, young as the day was; and many were still passing—for it was Fair Day in—, a naughboring town of some size, and the thinnest rants of all the country round were hurrying thither, making the sunlighted hills and green valleys bright with their pinnenesses costumes, and gay with laughter and song, as singly and in groups they trudged merrily along.

But, alas, for human life and human frailty! Side by side are often joyfulness and grief—pleasure and pain. On this sweet June morning, when all nature and mete and maintenance, seemed overflowing with his and joy, two very sad hearts were left behind in the silent deserted village. Standing at the roadside before the small plot of garden surrounding a low thatched cottage—the last house on the outskirts of the hamlet at the end—a young woman and her child, a little girl scarcely five years old, were watching with tear-dimmed eyes the rapidly receding figure of a man, with with light elastic tread, was mounting the steep hill on the other side of the brook. He was not alone, but had several companions; and the party, all in holiday attire and evidently bound for the fair, seemed in the highest spirits—shouting aloe, as they went, a popular drinking song; one voice carrying the air, and the others joining in and roaring forth the chorus, or, spurning from the ground, they knocked their heels together in flies of the sick of glasses.

"Father, father!" shrieked the child, in an accent of desperation, as the sounds

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE ARCHDIOCESE

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1886.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

On and after Wednesday next, the offices and editorial rooms of the MONITOR will be at

536 KEARNY STREET,

(first-floor, west side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

PASTORAL LETTER

ON

MIXED MARRIAGES.

The following important Pastoral Letter was read in all the churches throughout the Diocese comprising the Province of California on last Sunday:

TO THE CATHOLICS OF THE PROVINCE OF SAN FRANCISCO:

Dearly Beloved—Appointed by the Vicar of Christ, as we are, to watch over your spiritual welfare—say, placed by the Holy Ghost, though most unworthy on our part, to govern you in religious matters, having, moreover, to give an account of your souls to the Divine Judge—we are constrained by a sense of duty and responsibility to address you some words of admonition. For, although we are aware that many among you are dutiful children of the Church, and delight in reviving and obeying its laily laws, there are others (lest we trust they are few) who imagine that the Church is too rigid, and that they are at liberty to dispense themselves from its rules—to obey or to disobey. But the Church, like Christ, is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; it is the same here as in other parts of the world; its sacred laws, enacted under the guidance of the Divine Spirit, are as binding here as in any other place.

Therefore, we deprecate the haste of those who, when about to marry, will not give timely notice to their Pastors, to wait for the due publication of the banns, we heartily deplore the bad dispositions of those who, under the guilt of mortal sin, receive the holy Sacrament of Matrimony without any religious preparation; and we sincerely regret the negligence of those who fail to obtain for themselves the treasure of the nuptial benediction as a pledge of the favor and protection of Heaven. But, above all, we condemn, as fraught with most disastrous consequences, the rashness of those who recklessly make matrimonial engagements without carefully examining whether in the persons of their choice are found the qualities required in good husbands or wives. Now, among the qualities which a Catholic should seek in a companion through life, the most important are, and, in fact, before bargaining or contemplating any mutual affection, the same indispensable treasure of the Catholic Faith.

Hence the Church abhors, and has ever abhorred mixed marriages; she does not allow them to be celebrated inside of her temples, nor with her sacred ceremonies, nor with the imparting of any blessing. And this attitude and these laws of the Church are founded on very obvious reasons. Reasoning aside those happy instances in which the non-Catholic party respects in the Catholic the right of the free exercise of religion and of the Catholic education of the offspring, and treating the question on its own merits, it is evident, in the first place, that the faith of the Catholic is usually liable to be weakened, if not seriously injured, by the absence of all faith or a different belief in the other party. In the second place, the want of the Catholic example, and frequently the actual non-Catholic, and sometimes anti-Catholic exertions, of one parent most naturally and necessarily damp, materially injure, or wholly paralyze the faith of the offspring. It also happens that before the children are sufficiently old to understand and practice their religion, the Catholic parent is carried away by death; and in this case it cannot reasonably be expected that the surviving parent, who does not value the Catholic faith for himself, will take much interest, or any interest at all, in securing it to the children. Would to heaven that such expressions did not correspond to the facts, and that we were never called on to mourn over the deplorable results which we have pointed out!

Hence, every Catholic young man and young woman should calmly and seriously reflect on all this before entertaining the thought even the possibility of such an engagement, and should also take counsel, in the time, of parents and respective Pastors. Instead of doing so, there are some Catholics who, despising the authority of the Church of Jesus Christ, and almost abjuring their faith, apply for the solemnization of their marriage to a civil officer or Protestant minister, not only exposing themselves thereby to make a contract which is of no force before God and consequently does not prevent their intercourse from being a lewd and criminal one, but also committing reality a sin of sacrilege particular, if the enormity of a sacrilegious communion received at the hands of a minister of a false sect. This language may appear strong, but we fear it is scarcely strong enough to awaken the indifferent Catholic to a sense of his duty—the only object we have in view.

We therefore certain: 1st, That the Pastor, unless authorized by the Ordinary, shall not assist, at the marriage of those who will not have applied to him at least three days previous to their marriage. 2nd, That none can be married without having furnished due vouchers for their freedom, and, when both parties are Catholics, without the due publication of the banns. 3rdly, That in no case whatever can a Catholic be married by any other person than a priest, without subjecting himself to excommunication; 4thly, That when the parties are entitled to a nuptial benediction, the Pastors shall see that the special Ritual for the benediction shall accompany or follow the celebration of the marriage—fifthly, That, as the Holy Sacrament, there must be a grave cause for a dispensation for a mixed marriage, and that the usual reasons must be made—otherwise it would be a grievous sin to dispense.

Finally, we direct that this circular be read from the Altar at high or last Mass and Vespers, on the first Sunday of Advent every year, in all the Churches of this Province.

Yours sincerely in Christ,

✠ PATRICK W. RIORDAN,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

✠ FRANCIS MORA,
Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles.

✠ PATRICK MANDIC,
Bishop of Sacramento.

— We have only room to tell every reader of the MONITOR to peruse with great attention the Pastoral Letter we publish this week from the Prelates of this Ecclesiastical Province, and also the important Pastoral of Archbishop Corrigan concerning vital questions which are at present prominent topics in every community.

Editorial Notes.

The subscriptions for the proposed St. Patrick's Church, in Rome, are coming up. The four Irish Archbishops have given £100 each, and many other Prelates also sent generously. The lady home in our Island land, one of them, a Dublin gentleman named Byrne, having subscribed £500. The noble gift of £500 also from the American Irish National League. Assuredly under all the friends of Ireland, in her fight for freedom, will rejoice to learn that at the Municipal elections held in Dublin last Monday, Sexton and Gill were elected members of the Council. In the Royal Exchange ward a National council, a Liberal Unionist. In the other wards there was no change. In Cork the Nationalists gained three seats, the Conservatives losing one and the Liberals two.

— "Home or Catholic Training" is the title of a new work recently edited by Miss Anna T. Sadlier and for sale by A. Waldteufel. The little volume comprises choice epigrams and gems of wisdom culled from eminent Catholic writers, and it will prove a very nice volume for all who love to have a handy book of reference wherein to find pertinent ideas to our daily intellectual or private competitions.

— We learn from the American Book maker that a number of American publishers, though they found that it pays to get their work done in Europe. The constant disentanglements with printers in regard to proofs cannot known there, and a book can be contracted for a year or two ahead and still both printer and publisher be satisfied. Not only in London, but in Berlin is this done. Workmen are thoroughly familiar with the customs of American offices, and types is cast of exactly the same faces that we use. A saving in price is effected, and the book is done as well as it would be here. When necessary, proofs are sent.

— Mr. J. J. Clancy, M. P., has arrived in London, and taken possession of his place in Parliament street, and from the tone of the work of the Irish Press Agency will be pushed with vigor. The office already shows signs of great industry. Thousands of pamphlets are issued daily to all parts of Great Britain, and the series of educational lectures throughout the provinces is now completely mapped out. A series of three lectures will be delivered in each town selected. The first two on "Irish History" and "Ireland before the Union" will be delivered by Englishmen, and the third, "Ireland as it is, by one other of the Irish members. Between now and Christmas a circuit of some fifty constituencies will be made.

— A city subscriber writes that she was informed by a neighboring Catholic lady that a recent Encyclical of the Holy Father forbids the use of keeping the Lord's Prayer, with the doxology, but has abolished within the last month. There is, however, no truth in this report. It is not likely any Pope would alter the constitution of a Jubilee to necessitate lay Catholics also in the same merits, it is evident, in the first place, that the faith of the Catholic is usually liable to be weakened, if not seriously injured, by the absence of all faith or a different belief in the other party. In the second place, the want of the Catholic example, and frequently the actual non-Catholic, and sometimes anti-Catholic exertions, of one parent most naturally and necessarily damp, materially injure, or wholly paralyze the faith of the offspring. It also happens that before the children are sufficiently old to understand and practice their religion, the Catholic parent is carried away by death; and in this case it cannot reasonably be expected that the surviving parent, who does not value the Catholic faith for himself, will take much interest, or any interest at all, in securing it to the children. Would to heaven that such expressions did not correspond to the facts, and that we were never called on to mourn over the deplorable results which we have pointed out!

Hence, every Catholic young man and young woman should calmly and seriously reflect on all this before entertaining the thought even the possibility of such an engagement, and should also take counsel, in the time, of parents and respective Pastors. Instead of doing so, there are some Catholics who, despising the authority of the Church of Jesus Christ, and almost abjuring their faith, apply for the solemnization of their marriage to a civil officer or Protestant minister, not only exposing themselves thereby to make a contract which is of no force before God and consequently does not prevent their intercourse from being a lewd and criminal one, but also committing reality a sin of sacrilege particular, if the enormity of a sacrilegious communion received at the hands of a minister of a false sect. This language may appear strong, but we fear it is scarcely strong enough to awaken the indifferent Catholic to a sense of his duty—the only object we have in view.

We therefore certain: 1st, That the Pastor, unless authorized by the Ordinary, shall not assist, at the marriage of those who will not have applied to him at least three days previous to their marriage. 2nd, That none can be married without having furnished due vouchers for their freedom, and, when both parties are Catholics, without the due publication of the banns. 3rdly, That in no case whatever can a Catholic be married by any other person than a priest, without subjecting himself to excommunication; 4thly, That when the parties are entitled to a nuptial benediction, the Pastors shall see that the special Ritual for that benediction shall accompany or follow the celebration of the marriage—fifthly, That, as the Holy Sacrament, there must be a grave cause for a dispensation for a mixed marriage, and that the usual reasons must be made—otherwise it would be a grievous sin to dispense.

Finally, we direct that this circular be read from the Altar at high or last Mass and Vespers, on the first Sunday of Advent every year, in all the Churches of this Province.

Yours sincerely in Christ,

✠ PATRICK W. RIORDAN,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

✠ FRANCIS MORA,
Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles.

✠ PATRICK MANDIC,
Bishop of Sacramento.

— We have only room to tell every reader of the MONITOR to peruse with great attention the Pastoral Letter we publish this week from the Prelates of this Ecclesiastical Province, and also the important Pastoral of Archbishop Corrigan concerning vital questions which are at present prominent topics in every community.

THE MONITOR.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1886.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

On and after Wednesday next, the offices and editorial rooms of the MONITOR will be at

536 KEARNY Street,

first-floor west side, between California and Sacramento Sts.

SEND IN YOUR SUBSCRIPTION.

The subscription booklet of the Monitor are balance every January, and as ten days enough for receipt of every subscriber, we request that all our subscribers will examine the printed address on their papers, and if the date thereon has expired, they will send before January 10th, the full amount due for their subscription. Any in arrears need remit only $3 in year; those who pay in advance, or whose subscription are charged $2.50. Bear this in mind, and save the trouble of dunning and be out of arrears. Address Editor Catholic Info.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Dec. 5—Second Sunday in Advent
" 6—Monday, St. Nicholas, Bp. and Conf.
" 7—Tuesday, St. Ambrose, Bp. and Doctor
" 8—Wednesday, Immaculate Conception
" 9—Thursday, Of the Feria
" 10—Friday, Of the Feria
" 11—Saturday, St. Damasus, Pope and Confessor

CONFIRMATION NEXT SUNDAY.

On next Sunday morning his Grace will confirm; he will administer the sacrament of Confirmation at Mass at 10 o'clock, and in the afternoon at Mass 3 o'clock.

THE NEW CATHEDRAL

Next Sunday will be the regular day for the regular collection in the churches for the cathedral. The weekly pay-roll is very large, and all collections are needed to help it along. Let every one do what he can, and be not ashamed to give his mite, though it be but a little. Let the collection be generous, and God will bless the giver.

BAZAAR AT NOTRE DAME CONVENT.

The bazaar and fair projected by the ladies of Notre Dame, for the benefit of their convent, promises to be a very attractive affair, and should receive the patronage and encouragement of the friends of the people, more especially of those who are interested in Catholic education. The ladies have spared no pains to make the fair a success, and the taste they displayed in the arrangement of the articles for which this fund was real and in the among the people

Farm and Home.

USEFUL DOMESTIC RECEIPTS.

PEAR PUDDING.—Dry a plot or quart of split peas thoroughly before the fire; then tie them up loosely in a cloth, put them into water, boil them a couple of hours or more, until quite tender; take them up, beat them well in a dish with a little salt, the yolks of an egg and a bit of butter. Make it quite smooth, tin it up again in a cloth, and boil it an hour longer. This is very good.

FIG PUDDING.—Three quarters of a pound of grated bread, half a pound of beef-lugs, six ounces of suet, six ounces of moist sugar, a teacup of milk, and a little nutmeg. The figs and suet must be chopped very fine. Mix the bread and suet first, then the figs, sugar and nutmeg, one egg beaten well, and, lastly the milk. Boil in a mold four hours. To be eaten with sweet sauce.

PEAS SOUP PUDDING.—Take a pint, or one pound and a half; two teaspoonsful of baking powder; half salt, four ounces of powdered ginger, half a drachm; water or milk one pint. Rub the baking powder in the flour; dissolve the ginger in the water and then add the milk. Pour this mixture gradually over the flour, and mix well together; divide the mass into three portions and boil and steam for two hours.

BARLEY PUDDING.—Take a quarter of a pound of Scotch or pearl barley. Wash and simmer it in a small quantity of water, and add milk and flavoring as for rice puddings. Heat up with sugar and nutmeg, and mix the milk and barley in the same way. It may be more or less rich of eggs, and with or without the addition of butter, cream or marrow. Put into a buttered dish, leaving room for six or eight ounces of currants and six ounces of candied peel, out up fine, with a few apples cut up in small pieces. An hour will bake it.

POTATO PUDDING.—Half a pound of potatoes in their skins. Put them into a saucepan with scarcely sufficient water to cover them. Directly the skins begin to break lift them from the fire, and as rapidly as possible pour off every drop of water. Then place a coarse towel over them, and return them to the fire again until they are thoroughly dried and quite dry. A little salt to favor should be added to the water before boiling. Skin and mash them with a little milk, pepper and salt; this will make a good pudding to bake under roast meat. With the addition of a bit of butter, an egg, milk, pepper and salt it makes an excellent batter for a meat pudding baked. Grease a baking dish; put a layer of meat, cut in bits, and seasoned with pepper, salt, a little allspice, either with or without chopped onions; a little gravy of roast meat is a great improvement; then put in another layer of potatoes. Put a buttered paper over the top to prevent it from being burned, and bake it from an hour to an hour and a half.

RICE DUMPLINGS.—Pick and wash pound of rice, and boil it gently in two quarts of water till it becomes dry—keeping the pot well covered, and not stirring it. Then take it off the fire, and spread it out to cool on the bottom of an inverted stave, loosening the grains lightly with a fork; that all the moisture may evaporate. Pare a dozen pippins, or some large, juicy apples, and scoop out the core; then fill up the cavity with marmalade, or with lemon and sugar. Cover every apple over with a thick coating of boiled rice. Tie up each in a separate cloth, and put them into a pot of cold water. They will require about an hour and a quarter after they begin to boil, perhaps longer.

How Butter is Spoiled.

H Talcott, one of the Dairy and Food Commissioners of Ohio, has been investigating the complaints of the bad butter coming from the farmers to market. In a recent circular he says: "Our Commission firmly believes that a large majority of the butter made by farmers is good butter, but is ruined when transferred to the dealer's hands, and it is done in this manner. It is received at country stores and placed in filthy, frowy, rancid boxes or pieces, and stored in cellars thoroughly impregnated with rancid odors of rotten potatoes, dead oil, fish brine, pork brine, and every other foul odor that comes from decayed vegetables kept for sale at such stores. Tainted butter will lose all its good flavor in a very few hours when put in any such place.

Not the least fatal step of the dealer is to take all varieties of colored butter and rework them together, mixing and crushing until he secures an even color. He then packs his mass of salve into tubs or firkins (for it is no longer butter, the graininess of butter are spoiled by this second and unnecessary working, and the result is simply grease). In this ruined condition it reaches the consumer through the city commission houses, and of course is pronounced unfit for table use, and possibly for cooking purposes. How can this be remedied? In two ways. The consumer must purchase direct from the farmer in suitable sized packages, so that no second working need be made, or the dealer must reform.

No dealer should buy butter of the farmer except it is put in convenient shipping packages when made, and in amounts of ten to fifty pounds each, according to size of dairy, to have it all times good, fresh, sweet butter, and no more roll butter should be received by them than the daily retail trade of the store demands. This is practical, and the entire mass of butter in the country can be brought to these terms. I have don't it, or caused it to be done in stores under my control.

"Next, no dealer should handle a pound of butter until he first secure a room to keep it separate from all other goods having any unpleasant odor. A cheap, ungrained, ordinary cellar is best, where the air is pure and well ventilated, but can be kept cool.

"Roll butter should be kept on earthen plates or metal plates, and those should be scalded and kept sweet and clean all the time. Any merchant who will handle butter in this manner need never lose one cent, nor will any oleaginous scent to reliable city dealers, as packed by the farmers, fail to bring the full fair market price. Now will consumers ever complain. The shade or color is not so material as to have good, fresh, sweet butter.

Don't Blind the Baby.

Has it ever occurred to those who purchase conchas for their babies, and who make it a point to select the brightest colors they can find for the screen that is interposed between the eyes of the child and the sun, that they are liable to irreparable injury to the vision of the little one? An infant generally lies on its back, its eyes, of course, upturned towards the bright covering above. Its gaze being the more intense the brilliant is the covering and the more direct the rays of the sun upon it. Nothing but injury can result from such thoughtless exposure. An ophthalmic surgeon says there cannot be a doubt as to the injurious effects of those bright ancestral shields upon the tender eyes of children. Parents who are wise will select the darker and denser shades, even though they may not be as handsome or showy in their eyes as some of those which are more fashionable.

California Olives.

John Garcia of San Wilkow Pass road, near Concord, has an olive tree twelve years old, of the little purple California variety of fruit, that will bear at least 10 gallons of berries. He says the trees should be planted at least twenty feet apart.

Family Fun.

Why He Wanted Her to Sing.

"Mary, suppose you sing something."

"Oh, it's so late, Charlie. I'm afraid it'll wake everyone."

"That's too bad"—exclaimed Charlie, with every appearance of distress.

"But why do you want me to sing, dear?" she tenderly inquired.

"Why, you see," he replied, "is fellow I was fool enough to have been waiting outside all evening for, and I thought you'd sing a little loud go easy."

Same to Her.

"Something to eat!" echoed the woman as she slammed the door on the dejected "poe, if you will earn it."

"I shall be glad to do so, ma'am."

"Well, there's the wood pile, and I'll bring out the saw and ax."

"Exactly, ma'am; but perhaps you'd prefer to hear me play something on the piano! Really, ma'am, while sawing wood does not disagree with me, the piano is more in my line."

"Oh, well, come in," she said, as she held the door wide open. "There's a very little difference that we won't stop to argue. There's the piano, and while you play I'll lave the girl set out the lunch now."

He Had Lived Too Late.

Coroner (holding inquest on body of a tramp who had died suddenly) to Witness—You say you saw the deceased die. Please relate the circumstances.

Witness—He came to McBlift's liquor store. A man came in and asked the price of a bottle of gin. "Dollar and a half," said McBlift. "My" said the man, "how times change. I can remember when gin was just one dollar a bottle." Just then the tramp entered the store. He walked toward the man who was talking. "I can remember," continued the man, "when you could buy the best gin in the market for twenty cents a gallon." The tramp stepped and started back as if he had been hit. "I have lived too late" he gasped on the floor.

Keep Her Down.

Wife—John, dear, shall we get a light or heavy tombstone to place on mother's grave?

Husband (with suspicious emphasis)—Heavy!

The Soulful Creatures.

Two of them met on the street.

"O, Nalin! I'm so glad to see you. What have you been doing all week?"

"I've been reading just the loveliest novel. It is too sweet for anything."

"O, do tell me about it.

"Why, there is a young girl, and a villain, who is just perfectly lovely, and the young girl is one of those creatures who are just too angelic for anything, and she says, 'Avaunt, villain, avaunt, tempt me not,' to the villain. But the villain, he does just the same. And that's as far as I've got."

DANGEROUS DRUGS:

How to Control Effectually All Such Horrible Habits.

Boston, U. S. Post Express.

A gentleman who has spent part of the summer abroad, said to our reporter, that the thing that impressed him most of all was the number of hobbies one encounters abroad and the little anxiety the people display in the product of hobbies. Mr. Stewart, for instance, found, "that this sort of craze without a day off, in Europe that would bereaved him of his reason."

Mr. H. H. Warner, who was present at the time, said: "Time is the first consideration with us. We have spent no more in advertising than we have had to spend."

"Then, I suppose you have been advertising very largely?"

"Not at all. We have always heretofore confined advertising during July, August and September, but this summer we have kept it running, day and night to supply the demand, which has been three times greater than ever before in our history at this season."

"How do you account for that?"

"The increase has come from the southern states, from Mexico and Canada, and from Europe that would bereavedness."

"Well, Mr. Warner, and the success of your remedy which seems to engage the attention of so many distinguished people. Why, I'd, scarcely, and need of an hobby, and I'd ride it to death. Warner's safe cure is what I'm now using, and I'm sure it is the best medicine I know of for all the many diseases designed to prevent them."

"Have you evidence of this?"

"Abundance! Only a week ago, Dr. J. L. Stephens, of Lebanon, Ohio, a practitioner of the old school, whose hobbies told me that a number of medicines he had used, and had been experimenting for years, testing and adapting all known remedies for the kidneys and liver, for years was in great agony. All authorities and physicians dosing those organs, and unto they can be restored to health the hobbies claimed for them. Among the investigators were such men as F. M. Hall, M. D., President of the State Board of Health of Iowa, and Alexander Neil, M. D., Professor of Surgery in the college of Physicians and Surgeons and president of the Academy of Medicine of Dubuque, who after laborious inquiry, reported that disease was no remedy known to science to be scientific inquiry equal to Warner's safe cure."

"Are many persons addicted to the use of such drugs?"

"There are forty millions of people in this country, and, I suppose, about half of them are many hundreds of thousands in this country who are victims of morphine, opium, quinine and cocaine. Don't think you can detect such habit about them—so many people are moving in serious circumstances. They have pains and symptoms of what they call malaria, and of indigestion, when in reality it is the demand in the system for those terrible drugs, a demand that is caused largely by poisonous prescriptions which contain so many dangerous drugs, and strong opiates, and, unless used for a short time, produce in the habitual lover by what Dr. Stephens says is the "Ruin of Ruin." Dr. Stephens also says that moderate opium and other drug eaters, if they sustain the habit, can do so, if they take Warner's remedy, can keep up these habits in moderation.

"Well! does not this discovery cheapen the cost of the remedy, and lessen the cures?"

"No, sir, for years I have tried to convince the public that nearly all the diseases of the same, arises originally from disorder of the kidneys or liver, and hence I have frequently declared that of our specific, some used, every ninety per cent. of the cures would disappear. The liver and kidneys, some to remove from the system the blood and become prepared and diseased."

"Were there any other medicines this publicly admit that these are morally like note as regards the liver and liver to those off the frightful effects of all deadly drugs? Are there one or three plants in an abundance of its power as great as and equal to, or more than Warner's safe cure?"

"The other day I was talking with Dr. Fowler, the eminent specialist of this city, who said that half the patients who came to him for treatment were affected by advanced kidney disease. Now many people wonder why so middle life their eyes sight becomes so poor. A thorough course of treatment with Warner's safe cure is what they need more than a pair of eye glasses. The kidney poison in the blood always attacks the weakest part, and the result will vary with the eyes with others the feet, with others the back, and in others the eyes, or because disorders follows and consequently tears them to pieces, and they lose the power of vision, and or become superior in other directions of the body. Which is why and gives his advice the vigor of youth and manhood."

"The intelligent physician knows that these complaints are but symptoms, they are not the disease and that the cause lies out of disease of the blood, the eyes are for the most part, not necessarily, but in the kidney poison in the blood and they are prevail and in pain spots in the kidneys."

It is not strange that the enthusiasm which Mr. Warner displays in his appreciation of his own remedy, which he stored from to be in the whole the fabric the world and live as much as should for some interests and that the entire world should pay tribute to its power. For as Mr. Warner says, the sales are constantly increasing, while the newspaper advertising constantly diminishing. The people speak for the extraordinary merits of his preparation.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PIKE'S Famous California Made

CARVERS

For Christmas Presents.

(Five years made and sold.)

From $7.50 to $16.00 Per Set.

Mr. Pike, Pioneer Cutler,

Polishing and Repairing 415 Kearny St.

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE,

608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.

Telephone No. 767.

(WRITE TO THEM FOR THEIR CIRCULAR NOTE.) Help, Farm Hands, Laborers, Teamsters, Dairymen, Gardeners, Boys, Mechanics, Miners, Butchers, Bakers, Waiters, Cooks, Housekeepers, Nurses, Seamstresses, Ladies' Nurses, Ladies' Maids, Governesses, Waitresses, Chambermaids, Laundresses, Dressmakers, Ladies' Help, Ladies' Companions, Ladies' Help, Ladies' Companions, Ladies' Help, Ladies' Companions

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM IRELAND.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

noted the proceedings of the meeting. Commissioners Maurice Healy, Hooper, Cox, and Shea spoke at a meeting at Killeagh. They all declared that the Government could not notify them, but their speeches were generally moderate and guarded.

The Metropolitan Police and the Present Situation.

NEW YORK, November 29.—T. P. O'Connor's cable spread to the Star from London says: The Tories are alarmed at the critical states of affairs in Ireland and the extraordinary growth of popular organization against unfair rents. Their press with one voice is calling on the Ministry to avoid coercion and step further prosecutions and other repressive measures for the sake of keeping the country quiet. The National leaders have received, whether the advice is heeded by the Ministry or not, to proceed with their plans for forcing the hands of the Government without further delay. The prosecution of John Dillon has caused considerable excitement. It has not yet been decided what course he will elect to follow after the decision, which is known beforehand. His conviction is looked for as a matter of course. Dillon may decide to get to prison immediately, in preference to giving bail, but it is hoped in some quarters that he will adopt the alternative course of giving bail and afterward repeating the offense with which he is charged and trying the issue in that form. From the Nationalist stand-point the situation is better now than at any time since Gladstone's defeat at the polls.

Great Meetings Held at Sligo.

NEW YORK, November 30.—The Tribune's Dublin cable special of November 29th tells how the Nationalists, by enormous strangers, managed to hold a dozen meetings in Sligo county on Sunday in spite of the horse, foot and cavalry concentrated in the county by the Government. Some of the meetings deserve to become historic. The Nationalists had hired a special train to run between Carrick and Sligo. But it was stopped at every station till it came to Ballymote, where a large body of police were drawn up on the platform. The Nationalists cunningly bought tickets for Sligo and when the train drew up made a break to board it. Seeing this the police jumped aboard sta- and distributed themselves through the carriages, when they were locked in by the guard, whereupon the Nationalists, at a signal from McCann, their leader, jumped from the train, which moved on with none but the police on board. The officers yelled frenetically to stop, but the engineer, obeying the orders of McCann, never halted until he landed them at Sligo. A great meeting was then held in Hallmore, and when it was all over the police were seen returning from Sligo on a special train. Meanwhile Dr. Tanner, M. P., in Sligo, finding the attention of the police and military attracted to the outskirts, managed to hold a meeting in the center of the town, and when this was interrupted he led the police a dance across the hills and down to the shores of Lough Gill, where he entered a boat and was pulled a few foot from shore. From that platform, safe from reach of the police, he addressed the enthusiastic crowds that followed him.

What John Dillon Said.

According to the Tribune a cable special from London Dublin said in a special Episcopal on Sunday: "The Government, I would appear, have made up their minds to try a little coercion again, but I am bound to say from what I see of it, that it is a very poor, shaky kind of concern. The charge against me amounts to this, that I had incited the tenantry of coercion landlords to combine against them and refuse as they can without repressive measures and keep matters quiet at almost any cost.

OTHER SUSPENSIONS HAMILTON

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—The Tribune London special says General Buller has been appointed provisional successor to Sir Redmond Hamilton in Dublin after all, notwithstanding was will be made of his discretionary powers to please the landlords and the Tories, whose views are expressed by the Tuesday morning, when it says: "Unless the appointment is permanent one, it would be open to grave objections on several grounds—his military occupation, want of official Irish experience, etc., but when Dublin Government here and get the men they want they must do what they can with the men they have.

California's Catholic Missionaries.

HISTORICAL TRUTHS WORTH REMEMBERING

PIONEERS OF THE CROSS AND CIVILIZATION.

Men of whom all Catholics may be Proud.

The following article is from the pen of a Monitor contributor from whom we hope to have many more interesting historical sketches:

Animated with the zeal and charity of her divine founder, and ever mindful of her heavenly mission, the Catholic Church has, in every age, sent forth her missionaries to teach, to succor, and to convert the benighted savage. Far in advance of their secular brethren, surpassing in their zeal for the salvation of souls the reckless daring of the warrior pacing for temporal glory, they have planted the banner of the Redeemer and the widow of our Peaks, and sanctified the most desolate regions by their labors and with their blood. Whether amid the snows of Canada, on the burning plains of South America, toiling on the banks of the Mississippi, or undaunted by the pestilence of Mexico, their heroism has displayed itself; but nowhere have they shown more conclusive proofs of their self-sacrificing than among the hills and valleys of California.

THE MISSIONARIES OF THE STATE

have been the pioneers of civilization. Scarcely was it known that a new land had been explored, that there were yet more souls to be saved, then those daring now left their sweet convents and pushed into the wilderness. Members of the various orders had labored long on the peninsula, but it was not till 1769 that the first mission was established within the present limits of the State. The task of reclaiming and converting the wandering Indian was intrusted to Father Junipero Serra, and under his guidance the glorious emblems of man's salvation was reared in Alta California. But it was not the lead as we now see it that witnessed the harbor exertions of the sainty Franciscan and his devoted companions. Unbroken by continued toil, apparently untiring and unprofitable, was the soil upon which they erected the rude cross that looked down on a vast expanse populated only by pagan savages.

The mission prospered but the success of their pious labors did not satisfy the zeal of the missionaries, and in less than a year, the Indian converts, with tears and lamentations, gathered from the little band of heroes one half of whom, building their well to the Christian natives and pushing onward, founded the mission at Monterey in 1770.

HERE, ON THE SEA, OF NOVEMBER, 1770, the cross was first erected, and the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass offered up. Here, in the midst of the Indian converts, the Catholic Church was ornamented by the pious and fervent Franciscan, Father Junipero Serra, who, in the year of his death, 1784, was the author of 6,000 Christian Indians, and the founder of nine missions. Of this number, one, the mission of San Carlos, is the resting place of the remains of the venerable Father Junipero Serra, who died in the 70th year of his age.

Gaspar de Portola.

The first Governor of California, Gaspar de Portola, was a man of great piety and zeal for the salvation of souls. He was the first to hoist the banner of the Redeemer and the widow of our Peaks, and sanctified the most desolate regions by their labors and with their blood. Whether amid the snows of Canada, on the burning plains of South America, toiling on the banks of the Mississippi, or undaunted by the pestilence of Mexico, their heroism has displayed itself; but nowhere have they shown more conclusive proofs of their self-sacrificing than among the hills and valleys of California.

Fathers Serra and Lasuen.

Father Junipero Serra, and under his guidance the glorious emblem

Poetry.

LIFE AND DEATH.

I passed through a forest of trees,
And lo! the woodman was there—
Swinging his axe in the morning breeze,
And falling on each tree, fair.
And near by song or he wrought,
And the work rang clear and bright
"As the tree falls, so the tree falls,
"So it lie, lie, lie."

I passed through a forest of man,
And lo! the Woodman was there—
The Woodman, Death, with his weapon keen
Falling a life most fair,
And now he sang as he wrought,
And his song mated up to the day
"As a man lives, so a man dies,
"So shall he die, die, die."

O! tale of the falling tree!
O! song of the flying blade!
That was the mood he brought to me,
With blue or bitterness—life,
As the tree of the forest falls
So shall it fall and lie;
And the art or good of this life of mine
Must seal my fate when I die!

ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

REVERIE.

How sweet, how peaceful, is the cloistered life,
Far from the World, its struggles and its strife!
No pulse beats fierce, no cold lips glow or pale
Disturb the raptures in this lonely retreat;
There all is bright and no foul passions lurk
That sacred taint, for God is here the theme.

LISA ALLEN-ST.

LOVE AT THE TOMB.

Beneath the shade of a charred old,
Midst rain of rose and dewous fall,
I stood alone, in the sunset gold,
And listened for voices there.
And lo! from the tomb, in the dusky gloom,
A whisper came to my ear,
But the only process I falling at rest,
And the pulse of money, I hear.

Voices! torn from the lifeless sea,
Voices! borne from the golden shore,
Voices, sweet, that are lost to me
Not lost, but gone before!

A wandering embrace kissed the last
Of a mother's voice, in an infant ear,
And a garden of lilies, passing sweet,
Grew out of the tears she wept
A little one out of the flowing of life,
A letter of roses kind it to stem—
O child in life! if I but can learn
Do they long, as we long for them!

Time here they bread my boon one day,
They that love's dove sat closed the gate;
Our Summer was over, the year turned gray
At the chill of the hand of fate.
Ah! now in a garden of rose and yew
Where the sun shines and the birds the hymn,
And here will follow the faithful few,
And here I shall rest with him!

HELP YOUR MOTHER.

The girl of the period seeks to be cold
That she mistress, or her mother grows old,
And needs kindly offices day after day,
To fighten her curse and to weaken life's way.

Sweeter far than piano or organ's sweet note,
Are the sounds from the kitchen that cheerfully float
The rattle of dishes keeps time with a song,
While the daughter is helping her mother along.

Oh, remember, my girl, there is refined or true
As the mother whose love is now shielding you;
No friend, however faithful, can fill mother's place
When the shade of the earth shall cover her face.

Then hasten her toilsome way with a will, sighing hard,
Till the clouds of her life with rainbows are spanned;
And then all your pleasures will have added zest,
And remembrance of yesterday gives you sweeter rest.

Oh, the heartless of youth are so cruel, many fold
By considerate care of the feeble and old;
And though forgiven, may sometimes be roughened and bruised
Yet the girl who helps ma has a beautiful hand.

And beautiful eyes are the ones that look love
At the mother, so faithful all other above,
And the lips that are sweetest of love are most meet
To be called beyond others such beautiful feet.

LIKE HIS MOTHER USED TO MAKE.

"I was born in Indiany," says a stranger laid and slim,
"Yes, sir, my lad," he says, stoopin' over him with a lantern, "tell us all about it.
What did you come to Chicago for? Why didn't you ship in a sailin' vessel if you wanted to get home to see your mother?"

"Oh, my lad," says the youngster, with the tears in his eyes, so he sat up alongside of us, "I didn't do that, I didn't have no boss too late, and she's no in the poorhouse. You see, I was away from my home two years ago, and went to see, because I was the oldest of three, and she wasn't able to feed us all. I've sent her a little money since then, and I've had letters from her, but I've never seen her. The day before yesterday I got a letter agin' that your boy, that's my poor little sister, sir, was dead. It had taken all her money to bury her, and the rearrears not will be done in a month. It is not paid she will be put out. I have saved £15, and I want to give it to her and my own hands. Fresh now I had sent it to her; but, maybe, I can just go home from Londonderry, if he takes me on the steamer."

"Dashed if the mate's eyes weren't dim, and I couldn't see very clearly myself when the youngster stopped talkin'.

"Hold up your head, my lad," says the boats, "and I'll say a word or two to the skipper."

"He went out of the fo'c'sttle, and I followed him close enough to hear the boy's story told agaiun.

"The skipper thought about it for a few seconds. Then he spoke, and we bob'd up by his voice if his voice then had a little harshest fire was on him.

"'I don't see,' he said, 'what I have to do with all this. I don't want any more hands, and I won't have any more. There was one stand another passenger. You say the youngster has £15. Well, he can pay part of his fare, at least, and I will give him a extra berth and set him adrift at London-derry. Go and get the money from him.'

"But the mate's face showed plainly enough that the trous should go on him first. The skipper saw it, and calling to me, he held me to answer the lad and bring him out of the fo'c'sttle.

"When he was on the main deck the skipper said to him:

"'Youngster, the mate tells me that you have £15 about you?'

"'You sir,' says the boy.

"'Hand it over,' says the skipper shortly.

"The boy turned white, but he pulled a little purse-bag from his bosom, and gave it to the skipper, who counted fifteen sovereigns out of it.

"'Now, this, he says, 'won't half pay your passage to Londonderry, but I don't do hard on you. You can go, sir, and the mate will give you a berth.'

"The youngster walked aft without a word, and from that minute until the vessel was off the coast of Ireland he hardly spoke at all; and some of the passengers, who didn't know his story, said he was sure home to die, he drooped and looked so pale and weak.

"It was an awful night that was off the shore of Londonderry; a dead lee shore it was then, and the steamer, with a leaky shaft, drifted hard on to it. We could hear the waves break, roar on, and we had seen by the light that we should have been making for.

"Mr. Reynolds, said the skipper to the mate, as they stood together on the bridge, 'I will be on the beach in half an hour.'

"'Shouldn't we, sir,' says the mate, stiffly. He had not liked the skipper since the boy's money was taken from him in the Bay of Bengal.

"The water was far too deep to let go an anchor, even if one could have held, which it couldn't in that gale. Enough had sail had been set to keep the steamer from broachin'-to, but all hands saw that, as things were gone, she should soon be on the rocks.

"Suddenly the skipper started as some one touched him on the shoulder. The youngster was standin' beside him.

"'I was born on that coast, sir, he said, speakin' very slow, and I know every rock on it. I know, beaches, a channel on the other side of the rocks. If you wanted to put home to see your mother.'

"'Oh, my lad,' says the youngster, with the tears in his eyes, so he sat up alongside of us, 'you bet, yes, I do. I should have been too late, and she's no in the poorhouse. You see, I was away from my home two years ago, and went to see, because I was the oldest of three, and she wasn't able to feed us all. I've sent her a little money since then, and I've had letters from her, but I've never seen her. The day before yesterday I got a letter agin' that your boy, that's my poor little sister, sir, was dead. It had taken all her money to bury her, and the rearrears not will be done in a month. It is not paid she will be put out. I have saved £15, and I want to give it to her and my own hands. Fresh now I had sent it to her; but, maybe, I can just go home from Londonderry, if he takes me on the steamer.'

"'Dashed if the mate's eyes weren't dim, and I couldn't see very clearly myself when the youngster stopped talkin'.

"'Hold up your head, my lad,' says the boats, 'and I'll say a word or two to the skipper.'

"He went out of the fo'c'sttle, and I followed him close enough to hear the boy's story told agaiun.

"The skipper thought about it for a few seconds. Then he spoke, and we bob'd up by his voice if his voice then had a little harshest fire was on him.

"'I don't see,' he said, 'what I have to do with all this. I don't want any more hands, and I won't have any more. There was one stand another passenger. You say the youngster has £15. Well, he can pay part of his fare, at least, and I will give him a extra berth and set him adrift at London-derry. Go and get the money from him.'

"But the mate's face showed plainly enough that the trous should go on him first. The skipper saw it, and calling to me, he held me to answer the lad and bring him out of the fo'c'sttle.

"When he was on the main deck the skipper said to him:

"'Youngster, the mate tells me that you have £15 about you?'

"'You sir,' says the boy.

"'Hand it over,' says the skipper shortly.

"The boy turned white, but he pulled a little purse-bag from his bosom, and gave it to the skipper, who counted fifteen sovereigns out of it.

"'Now, this, he says, 'won't half pay your passage to Londonderry, but I don't do hard on you. You can go, sir, and the mate will give you a berth.'

"The youngster walked aft without a word, and from that minute until the vessel was off the coast of Ireland he hardly spoke at all; and some of the passengers, who didn't know his story, said he was sure home to die, he drooped and looked so pale and weak.

"It was an awful night that was off the shore of Londonderry; a dead lee shore it was then, and the steamer, with a leaky shaft, drifted hard on to it. We could hear the waves break, roar on, and we had seen by the light that we should have been making for.

"'Mr. Reynolds,' said the skipper to the mate, as they stood together on the bridge, 'I will be on the beach in half an hour.'

"'Shouldn't we, sir,' says the mate, stiffly. He had not liked the skipper since the boy's money was taken from him in the Bay of Bengal.

"The water was far too deep to let go an anchor, even if one could have held, which it couldn't in that gale. Enough had sail had been set to keep the steamer from broachin'-to, but all hands saw that, as things were gone, she should soon be on the rocks.

"Suddenly the skipper started as some one touched him on the shoulder. The youngster was standin' beside him.

"'I was born on that coast, sir, he said, speakin' very slow, and I know every rock on it. I know, beaches, a channel on the other side of the rocks. If you wanted to put home to see your mother.'

"'Oh, my lad,' says the youngster, with the tears in his eyes, so he sat up alongside of us, 'you bet, yes, I do. I should have been too late, and she's no in the poorhouse. You see, I was away from my home two years ago, and went to see, because I was the oldest of three, and she wasn't able to feed us all. I've sent her a little money since then, and I've had letters from her, but I've never seen her. The day before yesterday I got a letter agin' that your boy, that's my poor little sister, sir, was dead. It had taken all her money to bury her, and the rearrears not will be done in a month. It is not paid she will be put out. I have saved £15, and I want to give it to her and my own hands. Fresh now I had sent it to her; but, maybe, I can just go home from Londonderry, if he takes me on the steamer.'

"'Dashed if the mate's eyes weren't dim, and I couldn't see very clearly myself when the youngster stopped talkin'.

"'Hold up your head, my lad,' says the boats, 'and I'll say a word or two to the skipper.'

"'He went out of the fo'c'sttle, and I followed him close enough to hear the boy's story told agaiun.

"'The skipper thought about it for a few seconds. Then he spoke, and we bob'd up by his voice if his voice then had a little harshest fire was on him.

"'I don't see,' he said, 'what I have to do with all this. I don't want any more hands, and I won't have any more. There was one stand another passenger. You say the youngster has £15. Well, he can pay part of his fare, at least, and I will give him a extra berth and set him adrift at London-derry. Go and get the money from him.'

"But the mate's face showed plainly enough that the trous should go on him first. The skipper saw it, and calling to me, he held me to answer the lad and bring him out of the fo'c'sttle.

"When he was on the main deck the skipper said to him:

"'Youngster, the mate tells me that you have £15 about you?'

"'You sir,' says the boy.

"'Hand it over,' says the skipper shortly.

"The boy turned white, but he pulled a little purse-bag from his bosom, and gave it to the skipper, who counted fifteen sovereigns out of it.

"'Now, this, he says, 'won't half pay your passage to Londonderry, but I don't do hard on you. You can go, sir, and the mate will give you a berth.'

"The youngster walked aft without a word, and from that minute until the vessel was off the coast of Ireland he hardly spoke at all; and some of the passengers, who didn't know his story, said he was sure home to die, he drooped and looked so pale and weak.

"It was an awful night that was off the shore of Londonderry; a dead lee shore it was then, and the steamer, with a leaky shaft, drifted hard on to it. We could hear the waves break, roar on, and we had seen by the light that we should have been making for.

"'Mr. Reynolds,' said the skipper to the mate, as they stood together on the bridge, 'I will be on the beach in half an hour.'

"'Shouldn't we, sir,' says the mate, stiffly. He had not liked the skipper since the boy's money was taken from him in the Bay of Bengal.

"The water was far too deep to let go an anchor, even if one could have held, which it couldn't in that gale. Enough had sail had been set to keep the steamer from broachin'-to, but all hands saw that, as things were gone, she should soon be on the rocks.

"Suddenly the skipper started as some one touched him on the shoulder. The youngster was standin' beside him.

"'I was born on that coast, sir, he said, speakin' very slow, and I know every rock on it. I know, beaches, a channel on the

Literary Miscellany.

How the Ship was Saved.

The fog was heavy on the Hebrides that season—it was in the latter part of June, and we expected to be in England by Christmas at the latest, if we reached Tiree, and the old boatsman found time that Sunday morning to drop his shuttle to the end of his lassyard, and step into the galley to warm his hands for a few minutes, and lift his pipe with a red coal, and turning to the man by every passenger, said:

"You was sayin' last night, sir, that you hadn't got so faith in steamships. Well, no more have I, generally speakin'; but I was ran foul of once that wasn't so bad as the rest. It's ragin ten years ago, when I was a quarter master in a steamer the Zebra—plim at her wharf in Calcutta, and loadin' up for Glasgow. The Hooghly was crowded with sailin vessels that couldn't get away, and most of their men had deserted, and shipped in steamers, that was gone through the Suez Canal, that had just opened. They all wanted to get home quick, you see, and by the mate's reckonin' there was not to make a four months' route around the Cape.

"The steamers had all the men they wanted, and a night more offers from good, able-bodied seamen than they could take. The Zebra was to touch at Londonderry on her way home, and the night, that we was loose at Calcutta, with the pilot on board, and dropped down the river with the tide, the skipper was grumblin' like a bear, because, notwithstanding of money, he had shipped five men more than he wanted. Three of them were Irishmen, and, like the rest of the crew, they had got advance notes for a month's pay, and cashed them; so, to say the truth, he was afraid they'd take French leaves at Londonderry.

"The pilot had gone over the side the watch half asleep, so, all the officer was down to the bottom of his bunk, the wind out toward the Indian Ocean, when there was a cry forward, and the boatswain ran aft to where the skipper was standin' on the poop. He was draggin' a youngster, about 15 years old, by the collar of the jacket out Simeon was over, the year turned gray At the chill of the hand of fate.

"'I have found him out of the fore hatch, your honor, he says. 'I heard him scratchin' around, and I raised the hatch, and there he was.

"'I was tryin' to get out, sir,' said the lad, very bold and polite, 'I supposes I'm a stowaway, but I'm a sailor, and a strike to work. I sailed for a fortnight aboard the Zebra, and couldn't get it; so when they thought I was gone, where is the danger I slipped in the foreholds. I'm bound to Magherafelt, Londonderry, where my mother lives. I can't out any pay, but if you'll let me work my passage you won't be sorry for it.'

"Our skipper was a terrible rough man. He was a great oath, and turnin to me he said:

"'Quartermaster, put the young imp in irons for to night. I'll see what it's best to do with him in the morrin'. If he doesn't be overboard, I'm sure the Glasgow he'll land it and not Londonderry.'

"I was very fore to the poor lad, but I had to obey orders, and the irons went soon on his wrists and ankles in the fo'c'sttle. He was terribly upset, and when I was on the watch that night I went to him, and tried to cheer him up.

"'It was gettin' on for four bells when the mate said he'd like to see the boy and he want with me into the fo'c'sttle.

"'Now, my lad,' he says, stoopin' over him with a lantern, 'tell us all about it. What did you come away for? Why didn't you ship in a sailin' vessel if you wanted to get home to see your mother?'

"'Oh, my lad,' says the youngster, with the tears in his eyes, so he sat up alongside of us, 'you bet, yes, I do. I should have been too late, and she's no in the poorhouse. You see, I was away from my home two years ago, and went to see, because I was the oldest of three, and she wasn't able to feed us all. I've sent her a little money since then, and I've had letters from her, but I've never seen her. The day before yesterday I got a letter agin' that your boy, that's my poor little sister, sir, was dead. It had taken all her money to bury her, and the rearrears not will be done in a month. It is not paid she will be put out. I have saved £15, and I want to give it to her and my own hands. Fresh now I had sent it to her; but, maybe, I can just go home from Londonderry, if he takes me on the steamer.'

"'Dashed if the mate's eyes weren't dim, and I couldn't see very clearly myself when the youngster stopped talkin'.

"'Hold up your head, my lad,' says the boats, 'and I'll say a word or two to the skipper.'

"'He went out of the fo'c'sttle, and I followed him close enough to hear the boy's story told agaiun.

"'The skipper thought about it for a few seconds. Then he spoke, and we bob'd up by his voice if his voice then had a little harshest fire was on him.

"'I don't see,' he said, 'what I have to do with all this. I don't want any more hands, and I won't have any more. There was one stand another passenger. You say the youngster has £15. Well, he can pay part of his fare, at least, and I will give him a extra berth and set him adrift at London-derry. Go and get the money from him.'

"But the mate's face showed plainly enough that the trous should go on him first. The skipper saw it, and calling to me, he held me to answer the lad and bring him out of the fo'c'sttle.

"When he was on the main deck the skipper said to him:

"'Youngster, the mate tells me that you have £15 about you?'

"'You sir,' says the boy.

"'Hand it over,' says the skipper shortly.

"The boy turned white, but he pulled a little purse-bag from his bosom, and gave it to the skipper, who counted fifteen sovereigns out of it.

"'Now, this, he says, 'won't half pay your passage to Londonderry, but I don't do hard on you. You can go, sir, and the mate will give you a berth.'

"The youngster walked aft without a word, and from that minute until the vessel was off the coast of Ireland he hardly spoke at all; and some of the passengers, who didn't know his story, said he was sure home to die, he drooped and looked so pale and weak.

"It was an awful night that was off the shore of Londonderry; a dead lee shore it was then, and the steamer, with a leaky shaft, drifted hard on to it. We could hear the waves break, roar on, and we had seen by the light that we should have been making for.

"'Mr. Reynolds,' said the skipper to the mate, as they stood together on the bridge, 'I will be on the beach in half an hour.'

"'Shouldn't we, sir,' says the mate, stiffly. He had not liked the skipper since the boy's money was taken from him in the Bay of Bengal.

"The water was far too deep to let go an anchor, even if one could have held, which it couldn't in that gale. Enough had sail had been set to keep the steamer from broachin'-to, but all hands saw that, as things were gone, she should soon be on the rocks.

"Suddenly the skipper started as some one touched him on the shoulder. The youngster was standin' beside him.

"'I was born on that coast, sir, he said, speakin' very slow, and I know every rock on it. I know, beaches, a channel on the

A SAD STORY.

But One That Is by No Means the Sole One of its Kind.

In the town of Knockdrop, in the county of Limerick, lived a farmer Batty, one of the richest and most prosperous farmers in that section of the country, says a writer in a New York paper last week. He was known as a gentleman farmer, and lived in a style of ease and comfort that his neighbors envied and admired. His house was a three-story brick building, extravagantly furnished and provided with everything that could make it enjoyable. In this house there lived with him his wife and only child, a young girl of about 18 years of age. Annie Batty, for such was her name, had just returned from the Convent of Bruff, in the county of Limerick, with her mind liberally furnished with intellectual endowments, and a form as symmetrical as that of a statue. Her head, with its clear cut features, large black eyes, and cheeks that were tinged with the ruddy glow of health, and when, in addition to all these qualities, it was generally known that she was to receive a wedding gift of £5000, it can be readily perceived that she would be a very good investment for any enterprising young man. Among the young men who called to see her parents, and their only pleasure consisted in making her happy. She rejected one after another, all the eligible suitors that presented themselves, and finally began to be regarded by most people as somewhat too hard to please. The gossips, however, were sadly long deceived in disappointment, and the marriage of Miss Batty was more than once days wonder in the little town of Knockdrop. In the aforesaid town lived a young man by the name of Walker, who was the son of one of the working class, but who were regarded as respect, respectable people. Patrick possessed great personal beauty, a splendid athletic form, and was more extolled than is generally allotted to the average individual. This was the young man on whom Annie Kirby now looked with most favor. It did not however meet with the approval of the father in no uncertain tones, his one only consulted the happiness of his daughter, he certainly gave his consent to it, and Anna Kirby and Patrick Kirby were ostensibly made man and wife in the little church at Knockdrop. A new household was formed, and it was soon seen that a one started in the wholesale grocery business, death and desolation. Lady the great American nation.

Ladies and gentlemen are travelling in the shadow of death.

It takes life to love Lydia's. They infuse wild report.

Lydia's Pink Pills for Pale People are a medicine already known to all.

What is Lydia's Pink Pills?

It will make the weak in the body clean and the sick well.

Lydia's Pink Pills are a medicine for all the ills of women.

Drifter from Her Majesty's Opera Company.

Miss Lucy Wilde, Miss Wilde, Miss Wilde, Miss Wilde, Miss Wilde.

Incidentally, Drifter proved to be the most popular of the Opera Company. Miss Lucy Wilde, Miss Wilde, Miss Wilde, Miss Wilde, Miss Wilde.

Miss Wilde's Drifter was a great success. Miss

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF ARCHDIOCESE.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1886.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

On and after this issue, the several offices and editorial rooms of the MONITOR will be at 536 KEARNY STREET, (first-floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

Editorial Notes.

— Cardinal Haynald has instituted a subscription at Vienna for erecting the remains of the late Abbé Liszt to the vault of the Franciscan Friars at Pesth.

— A message of sympathy with Mr. Parnell in his political labors is being signed at Chatsworth. It has already received some 3000 signatures.

— A marriage is about to take place between Mdlle Marie de MacMahon, only daughter of the Marshal, and Count de Pimenon, son of the Marquis de Pimenon, a former Equerry in Waiting to the Empress Eugenie.

— It is stated that the nuns of the Presentation Order at Mitchelstown, Cork, have offered their estates for sale to the tenants under Lord Ashbourne's Act, at a seventeen and a half years' purchase, based on the valuation.

— It is rumored in the West that Rev. Father Panning, of Hills, Bureau county, Ill., is to be the first Bishop of Lincoln, Nebraska. He was a classmate of Archbishop Heiskel, of this Diocese, and Bishop Spalding, of Peoria, at Louvain.

— We already anticipate the great pleasure which our readers will experience when they receive the forthcoming CHRISTMAS MONITOR which will be issued on Wednesday next. For the table of contents we refer our readers to the eighth page, where find a variety of titles which will contribute to make the best and brightest Christmas paper issued by the Catholic press of America. We thank our numerous contributors in advance for the taste and talent they have displayed in the several departments to which they have contributed, and we hope that the literary bread thus cast upon the waters of the press will return in the form of Catholic literature may bring blessings a hundred fold upon each of them.

— The Nationalists have put forward Mr. Thomas Barry, of Kilkavillen, and Mr. John Mandeville, chairman of the Mitchelstown Board of Guardians, as suitable candidates for the Parliamentary vacancy in Northeast Cork, subject to Mr. Parnell's sanction.

— In a letter to Bishop Reynolds, of Adelaide, South, Australia, His Eminence the Cardinal Manning says: "You will be glad to know that Ireland, in some form, will before long administer its own local affairs. I hope I may live to see it." Every friend of Ireland will heartily respond "Amen!" to the great Cardinal's prayer.

— The next Consistory of Cardinals in Rome which was to have taken place this month, has been postponed until January, so that the Cardinal Archbishops of Quebec and Baltimore may be able to attend. At this Consistory Cardinals Gibbons and Taschereau will receive their "red hats" from the hands of His Holiness himself, and the last ceremony attending their elevation to the Cardinalate will be ended.

— Pope Leo XIII. has charged Father Grisar of the University of Innsbruck, to write a history of Rome, chiefly with the object of confuting various assertions contained in the history of Gregorovius, with regard to the influence the temporal power exercised in the Middle Ages. All the literary treasures contained in the Vatican Library have been put at the disposal of the learned professor.

— The rapid increase in the value of land in the West may be illustrated by the fact that Creighton Catholic University of Omaha, Nebraska, has sold its property in Park place, adjacent to the Sacred Heart Academy for a consideration of $35,000. The rapid growth of the city may be judged from the fact that this property, when bought about six years ago by Rev. R. A. Shaffel, then President of the College, cost about $1,200.

— Some idea of the depopulation caused in Ireland by bad laws and British injustice, may be gleaned from the fact that in the year 1804, when the recently-deceased Bishop Delaney of Cork was born in Bandon, it was a prosperous city of 15,000 inhabitants, who were industriously employed, prosperous and happy. Now Bandon has hardly 5,000 inhabitants, and half people and property are going to decay together.

— A cablegram from Ireland conveys the pleasing intelligence that Timothy D. Sullivan has been and unanimously elected Lord Mayor of Dublin. O'Keefe, a solicitor, has been elected Mayor of Limerick. Both Sullivan and the mover of these resolutions have refused any honors which may be offered by the Queen during the Jubilee year. John Dillon heads the list of candidates for the office of High Sheriff of Dublin. Alderman Richard Power has been re-elected Mayor of Waterford.

— We are glad to learn from our Irish exchanges that preparations have commenced in different parts of Ireland to have representatives selected to come to Dublin at the unveiling of the statue of the distinguished Dr. Cahill, the fearless champion at home and abroad, of the religious and rights of the Irish people. We have no doubt that due honor will be done to the memory of that learned ecclesiastic gifted with the rare talent of combining the scientific whether, true patriot and brilliant orator of whom Ireland may well be proud.

A very important Papal document has recently been added to the Papers Ecclesiastical Corps in Rome. His Holiness has formed a Commission consisting of Cardinals Parocchi, Schiaffino, Simeoni, Laurenzi and Franchi, for the purpose of studying all questions relating to the Italian policy. This Commission is to make a daily report to the Cardinal Secretary of State on all current matters, and to address a special report to the Pope himself should any very important question arise. Most eyes will be fixed upon the point of returning to China.

— Talking from Ireland to the New York Herald, Mr James O'Kelly makes the pertinent remark: "Within a few weeks we shall be in the midst of conflict, for the Nationalist battle-cry will be: 'This sinner landlordism must die, while the landlords will try with bayonet and bullet to collect their rackrents. On this occasion the Irish tenants will have behind them the sympathy and help of half the English people, and there is little cause to doubt that when the struggle closes Irish landlordism will have come to an end. The next three days will shape the event."

— The negroes of Georgia are not satisfied with having Justice Bradley's anti-propose to put her eyes out altogether. The other day the son of a colored woman was before the Police Court for some trifling offence—probably hunting in the wrong place Thanksgiving chicken. The old lady, in a home-rules mood, addressed a quantity of conjure jargon about the culprit. The judge adjourned the court to put his minister, usually remarking as he did so: "Tobe, tobe, tobe—"

— A gentleman who has recently visited Germany says that the majority of the Berlin workmen are open socialists, but only a small majority are organized socialists; while a smaller but interesting fraction, though they aim at social reforms, are distinctly anti-socialists. Germany to-day has 11,000,000 workingmen, women and children drawing stinting or longing to improve their not other blissful conditions. Of this enormous mass hardly 200,000 are organized. Barely half of these are or were affiliated with socialist societies. Bismarck takes a lively interest in German socialism, but he rules them with a rod of iron.

— Michael Davitt seems to be impressed with the hopeful idea that Ireland's freedom is nearer consummation than most people imagine. Speaking at Columbus, ultimately, he said: "Mark my words, the next election will see Ireland free. Previous to the election, Lord Randolph Churchill intimated that the first movement of a Tory government would be the introduction of a measure to suppress the Irish organization. There has been no such measure, and he has also weakened in other directions. Churchill claims that the Irish landlord is reducing rent. That is true, and he had to do it. Churchill proposed county boards as a relief, but I tell you the Irish people will never accept, nor will they be satisfied with anything short of the restoration of an Irish Parliament.

— Commenting on the folly which some blustering Britishers designed recently in New York harbor, the London Universe says: "Some congenital idiots in New York are thinking of erecting a statue of Queen Victoria bigger than Bartholdi's figure of Liberty on a commanding position at the entrance to Manhattan. We hope this folly will not be attempted for three reasons. Firstly, it would be an insult to American; secondly, it would be a provocation to fanatics to cover the counterfeit presentment of a respectable mother with rotten eggs; lastly, it would be a vulgar to the canons of the aesthetic, and would accordingly give a fit of indigestion to Oscar Wilde and his disciples. Magnitude is not art, or a huge barn of a railway station, or a colossal floating musical hall like the Great Eastern would count for more than one of our beautiful ancient round towers or a statue by John Hogan or John Foley."

— Sometimes against the Chicago Daily Tribune published a history of land purchases given by Congress during the thirty years ending in 1880, to railway corporations, amounting to 155,000,000 acres, it appears that 240,000 square miles or 154,067,553 acres were so given—an area more than double that of the whole kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland—and some say as follows: "The story of the dissipation of one great national inheritance—the way by Congress, wasted by the Land Office, stolen by thieves—a land monopoly worse than that of England begotten in America. English monopoly is in fetters. American monopoly is in corporations, and corporations are the only aristocrats that have no souls and never die. There is a great deal of truth in this, but let us not forget that in some cases, railways could not have been built when the land grants, and that those railways, built before the lands were granted, have increased the value of which corporations have profited by. Land grants have been unmerited, and have been well worth to the whole country the aid given to the companies."

— Speaking of that fund of side literary filth which is flooding the land in the shape of dime novels and disguised sensational novels, Bishop Simmons says: "It is superfluous to endorse the harm that is daily done by the issue of these productions and what a fearful power of misleading and misguiding it diffuses in society, particularly in the hearts and minds of the young. Let parents frequently and earnestly admonish the faithful, and more especially parents not to keep in their homes books, papers or pictures which may weaken religion or good morals, and constantly to watch, lest their children or servants become contaminated by the reading of evil literature. The unsuppressed the day often produce misrepresentations and calumnies against the Church, and every Catholic who should, at home and abroad, of the religious and rights of the Irish people. We have no doubt that this hint will be done to the memory of that learned ecclesiastic gifted

The Glory of Mary Girdles the Earth!

From the Church celebrates throughout the whole Christian world the memorable feast of the Immaculate Conception, and thousands of the beautiful dioces of magnificent cathedrals as well as under the humble roof of the meanest chapel, men of all nations and people of all conditions will give praise and glory to God for having given their Son and such a Mother.

Almighty God is the author of all that is bright and beautiful, charming and superlative in the universe.

But the creation of the Blessed Virgin is the masterpiece of the Most High. In her Almighty God has manifested His power and delight as well as His most sublime wisdom.

Nature, with all its charms, is profusely abundant, its amazing contributions to man's physical wants, can contribute but little towards that perfection which alone is necessary for every mortal who would know God in a spiritual sense, and this Heaven's apostolic standpoint as well as deity. Here for the abundant bounties which Heaven has scattered over the earth for man's subsistence and benefit. When we see a fragile plaintive star vacillate or rather assume elongation, yet all the constellations with which God has planted the heavens are seen in perfect repose with the ordinal beauty with which He adorned the ever famous fair Mother of Heavens.

Nature is the angels, the saints, and all the heavenly choirs, but Mary is the language of the Church of God, the Queen of Heaven. The world admires the beauty of the Rhine, the Rhone, the Danube, the Mississippi, the Nile, the Ganges, the Tiber, the Seine, the Thames, but the Church calls Mary by the endearing title of "the Gate of Heaven." No nation, clime or nothing in earth like has ever made Mary as a mother and daughter. She is the "Bridge of Sighs," the "Health of the Weak," "Comfortress of the Afflicted," the "Ark of Refuge," and the Sea wherein repose our cares and with God.

What is real, what is constant, what to love, with an ever actual, only to the Sacred Heart, we should have for God Himself. Of Mary the Immaculate we can be confident declared—to be full of Grace.

Oh the Sinfulness of Protestant logic! when it can be logically the Blessed Virgin What a species of lunacy! why more so than conduct be which pretends to profess great love for the Son, whilst it harbors a secret hatred for the immaculate Mother Who bore Him? Has increase we would be less the man who, and he revered Jesus Washington, who spoke so disparagingly of that noble patriot a comparable mother, he much more should we not condemn those our Christian sentiments which sectarian alliance when they prompt us to deny the ever glorious and Immaculate Virgin who gave to the world a Redeemer Who was God and Man, Virgin by the lapsing of honor. It is the bread which marks the soul of sectarianism and which prevents it from the Blessed Virgin more late the Mother of God! Simply because she receives with glory from the Lord God Almighty. We rarely hear or Catholic remisters speak of Our Guardian or St. Anne, the father and mother of the Blessed Virgin, because they have little or no mention about them, but from the fact mentioned many a non-Catholic is forth, their seem to exhibit an implicit belief of the grandeur of Virgin, the Infant of Mothers, the mother of Martyrs and the only creature of God who was preserved as the innocent and immortal dignity of human "the Blessed" of the Lord.

Man's natural inclination might turn from a worldly point of view—that has no—but the sensual, exemplary and God-exalted character as the Mother of the Most High presents to human understanding. But our Divine Saviour says: "As the world hateth Me so shall it hate you," and the world's hatred of the Immaculate Mother towards the Blessed Virgin arises from that leaven of Lucifer which leavens the whole mass of humanity. Yet, we can not but admire a lover of our Blessed Redeemer to pay profane himself—nor love Mary—the Mother of Jesus. His Mother, God will accept no man's faith who refuses to Him with a divided love—a heart in which Mary is subordinated or, and where both are battling for supremacy. Yet we must love even "our neighbor as our selves" in order to gain heaven, what hope of salvation can Mary give us? Let the protestant preachers and Pharisaical persons who cringe in speech and sentiment nothing but secret fear of the grandeur which is the Author of all good.

The joy which the feast of the Immaculate Conception brings to every Catholic heart today, will be measurably enhanced by the knowledge that the Papal document issued by the Immaculate Conception has been translated into the most prominent living languages. This wonderful work was published and carried out to successful completion by the eminent Jesuit Father Le Lubbe-Sow, Professor of Scripture in the Seminary of St Sulpice in Paris and the accomplished Father Chaumonot, who exhibited at the latter French Exhibition, than ever.

Every veritable Catholic heart of fear those who speak every kind of language, in the world prostrate themselves in the presence of those sweet Mary and Jesus, their vows with the Choirs of Angels and Saints in passing, glorifying and praying well-blessed have to that Mother, as we must to her Divine Son in heaven and glory.

We sincerely wish that a few of our rich Catholics would follow the noble and memorable example left them by Nathaniel Ridley Cable, a member of Congress, who died in Washington, D. C., in 1882, and who gave him all he was worth. We hope therefore, that some of our local Congressmen will follow the example of Mr. Cable, and bequeath their wealth to the Catholic Bishop of their respective dioceses, to be used for the benefit of the Church and the Catholic people.

Ireland Under the Tory Lash.

Calumnious from Ireland is the sad tidings that Canon Scanlan is subjected upon his return to the people of his native parish to the unique distinction of being the first to be arrested under the Coercion Act. Ireland's sons and daughters, can have assumed Thirty times is nearly in many cases has the foul spirit of Orangeism been so marked in order to crush out the aspirations for liberty in the hearts of the Irish people. Irish people, but such cases are the exceptions and not the rule. Ireland's sons and daughters are true to the principles of religious liberty as exemplified by Brian Boroihme and Owen Roe, from the earliest traditions. And so will they be in the future, if they are allowed to do so

Family Fun.

Ready Retorts.

It is not given to everyone, perhaps fortunately for the general peace, to be as ready at retort, for example, as to the critic to whom the following incident is addressed by an artist.

"Didn't you think it is about time I exhibited something?"

"Yes, a little talent, for instance," was the reply.

To a grocer who had retired from business a friend said:

"My dear fellow, you are looking thin; idleness does not agree with you."

"Well, my," instantly replied the grocer, "I don't weigh as much as I did."

Equally pertinent was the answer given by a great musical composer to a remark. When a youth he was a clerk to a very rich but exceedingly common place—in fact stupid employer. One day an acquaintance commiserated the clerk upon on his position, saying:

"What a pity it is you are not the master, and he your clerk."

"Oh, my friend," returned the youth, "do not say that. If he were my clerk, what on earth could I do with him?"

"Did you get her photo when you were away? said one freshmen to another.

"Well—ah—the fact is," returned his companion, "she gave me her negative."

"How did you learn that graceful attitude?" said a gentleman to an intoxicated fellow leaning in a sociable fashion against a post.

"I have been practicing at a glass," was the reply.

Why Doesn't He.

Arabella—Here he is, just where he's been for six weeks; why doesn't he speak? I'm sure I encourage him enough.

George—Here she is, as usual, wearing a costume which cost more than I can make in six weeks. How can I ask her to marry me, as it would be impossible for me to support her in the extravagant style in which she now lives!

He Couldn't Have Done It.

At one time the Hon. Charles Thompson, the celebrated statementing barrister, had for a client a man who was accused of selling liquor unlawfully. The prisoner was of an appearance best described as alcoholic, and he was night have served as a beacon on Eddystone Ledge on the darkest night. The testimony was taken, and the case went on until Mr. Thompson rose to make his plea.

"Y-your Honor," he began, "I look at the j-j-jury. Gentlemen of the j-jury I look at the Honor. Y-your Honor, I look at the p-p-prisoner. P-p-prisoner, look at his Honor. G-gentlemen of the j-jury, look at the p-p-prisoner. Did-does he look as if he'd s-s-sell p-p-p-pint of liquor to anybody?

The argument was irresistible. The none of the accused outweighed all other testimony, and Mr. Thompson triumphantly won his case.

The Naughty Wife.

In one of the cities that lie over against Boston there lives a family whose masculine head is a man who has won considerable wealth from humble beginnings not unlike those of Commodore Vanderbilt, with the difference that while he, like Vanderbilt, began as a boatman, he has expanded into the banking business instead of into the railroad business. Ever since he became a banker his excellent wife has been smitten with the great importance of her husband's new occupation, and has advertised it on every possible occasion. The horse-car conductors on the line which runs into her city all know her, and smile when she enters the car and gravitatly utters her command:

"Conductor, let me off at my husband's bank!"

One day lately a tramptish-looking old fellow with a red nose got on the car just as the banker's wife delivered her usual order to the conductor. The old man watched her performance curiously, and then arose, pulled himself together, and called out with an magnificent air that was inimitable:

"Conductor, let me off at my old woman's peanut stand!"

A rear vent through the ear, and "my husband's bank" has been alluded to more than ever since that time.

A Warning to Smokers.

A member of the Texas Legislature engaged the services of a colored man named Jack. It was not long before the legislator had occasion to remark:

"Jack, it's very singular that I miss so many of my cigars."

"Kursel, yer reckerlects dat I tole yer when yer fust hired me dat I smoked, and yer said I mosn't smoke in de house."

"But, great Cæsar! you didn't suppose I gave you permission to smoke up my cigars?"

"Whose cigars did you reckon I'd smoke? Didn't 'spose, did yer, dat I ast permission to smoke my own cigars?"

He Wept Scalding Tears.

Arabel Blank is Philadelphia born, and has been educated in a very near relative for young ladies.

Last week Arabel's dear papa took her to Cape May point and while there he pointed out to her a flock of birds on the beach.

"There," said the old gentleman, as the flock rose in the air, "look at those birds, Arabel. They are curlews."

"Oh," cooed the maiden, opening her big, innocent blue eyes, "how lovely how splendid! Just to think, pa! It was only yesterday that I was reading that dear delightful poem of Mr. Crap's which begins: "The curlew tolls the knell of parting day." Only imagine those tiny creatures, pa, tolling a great bell. How very strange!"

Then the old gentleman sat down on the damp, damp sand and wept scalding tears and hooted until the people thought he had the cholera.

The Latest Proverb.

"Never put off till to-morrow what you can get your mother to do to-day," a lazy fashionable young lady was heard to say recently.

What He Worked at During Summer.

"Say, Mister, don't yer want a boy?"

"Are you out of work?"

"Yes."

"What did you do during the summer?"

"I stuck fine cotton fly-paper in druggists' windows; but I didn't cover now."

Adventures of a Connecticut Parson.

An Essex clergyman recently attempted to enter his house late at night, having arrived home from New York unexpectedly by boat, without the knowledge of his family. A barrel under the parlor window offered him an easy mode of entrance, and he sprang upon it. His feet had hardly touched the bond before it caved in, and he found himself plunged in a bath of soft soap. To extricate himself from his unpleasant predicament he was obliged to call for assistance, but before it was rendered he had a narrow escape from being shot for a burglar by a neighbor.

Farm and Home.

PACIFIC COAST CROPS.

Synopsis of Reports to the Department of Agriculture.

WASHINGTON, November 20.—The April crop report issued this month contains the following report from its agent in California as to the condition of the crops in that State. The conditions for the growth of corn have been favorable this season and a fair crop was made, with the quality a full average. Grapes are a fair average crop throughout the State as compared with a full crop. They have been favored with fine weather and the quality is very good. A few sections were visited by a light frost early in October, but no serious damage was done. Apples are not an average crop. Some damage was done in some sections by the codlin moth and stringent measures are needed for its extermination. Pears are a fair crop. They also were considerably damaged by the codlin moth. County correspondents in California, Oregon and Washington Territory report as follows: Sonoma County—Corn, average yield. Apples—Very light crop, early in October, but no serious damage was done. Pears—Fair crop. Grapes—Average crop. Yamhill—Average crop. Washington Territory reports as follows: Skamania—The yellow dent corn "Pride of the North," received from the department was planted the 21 of June, and grew rapidly and formed five large ears and matured before the frost set in this fall. Garfield—Very little corn is raised, but it is of fine quality. Stake—A good crop of Rutons have been planted in the following counties: Asotin—Badly damaged by the codlin moth. Contra Costa—Injured by the codlin moth. San Mateo—Good on the coast, but in the valleys damaged by the codlin moth. El Dorado—The fruit was badly worm-eaten and fell off before ripe.

Of the subject of sorghum a correspondent in Shasasta county, W. F., says: "Seed sent by the department was planted on June 2nd, and it grew finely and matured, so we shall succeed in saving seed if nothing another year."

Hops in this spoken of by the county correspondents in California, Oregon and Washington Territory. California—San Luis Obispo—The crop is much larger than usual, and the quality is above the average. Placer—There was a good crop, owing to the late rains in the spring, and it was cured and housed in fine condition. Fresno—The crop was of average quality, mainly aphids, and yielded from four to eight tons per acre in from three to five cuttings. Green tea yielded from one to two and one-half tons per acre. Humboldt—There was a better crop than was expected, but it was of fair quality. Alpine—The crop was damaged by too much rain in July. Butte—Good yield. Contra Costa—There was an unusual quantity secured and in good condition by answering inferior patches of grain into hay. Kern—Alfalfa is the principal crop for hay.

Oregon—Columbia—The crop was somewhat affected by drought. Linn—There was a poor crop, owing to drought. Tamhill—Only half a crop, owing to drought.

Washington Territory—Garfield—Very little time hay is raised, where and hops are cut for hay. Wahkiakum—Good crop. Stage—Short crop, owing to drought.

A Terrible Punishment.

There is no keener pain known in life than that caused the parental heart by the misdeeds and crimes of bad sons and ill-doing daughters. The daily records of police courts show an appalling increase in juvenile crimes, and in many cases the culprits are not the children of poverty, but the sons and daughters of parents who are influential with the world and "fashionable society," as the call it. Mere children are brought to the theatres and sent to dancing school, and yet their parents wonder at their straying from the paths of virtue. These little creatures become "young ladies and gentlemen" sooner than readers and writers, and are accomplished in all the practices and usages of "polite and respectable society." They know the latest style of dress or the newest act of a dress coat. They can go through the most intricate figure of the latest dance, but ask them to recite the Apostles's Creed, or to name an Act of Faith, and they are astonished. It is true that they are sent to church on Sundays and holidays, but only to hurry comply with the obligation of hearing Mass. Parents have a terrible responsibility. In the words of the patriot-prelate, Archbishop Croke, "there are three things in parentage which parents are bound to give their children—good example, wholesome chastisement and correction when they need it, and sound, suitable instruction in religious and secular matters," and if they do not discharge their duty they must not complain if a terrible punishment is their lot.

How Children Grow Good.

Good children are the greatest blessing which parents can have in this life, but they cannot hope to have them good unless they have them instructed in true goodness. The first and highest aim of Catholic parochial schools is to teach children true goodness. It would appear surprising that river the Church of God declares Catholic children must attend Catholic schools, Catholic parents would refuse to obey the commandment. Yet it is a fact that Old Hickory has given Commandments to be kept and people refuse to keep them.

A benefit of Catholic parochial schools which cannot be overlooked is that pupils are obliged to go to confession and receive Holy Communion once a month. It may be said that parents who send their children to non Catholic schools can send their children to receive these sacraments monthly, but the fact is they do not do so.

If parents were to turn their children out into the cold of winter without furnishing them with proper clothing, the world would determine them as monsters of cruelty; but parents send their children out into the storm of life with their souls bare and naked of every virtue—without a vestige of Christian instruction to protect them, and in this world never notice the injustice.

Remarkable Recovery of Treasure.

The English divers and Capt. R. F. Stevens, Lloyd's surveyor, have returned from Grand Cenary after raising a sum of no less than £200,000. This amount was lying buried 153 feet deep about a mile from the southern-most limit of the island. It went down about two years ago in the steamer Alphonse XII. The steamer had on board £600,000 worth of Spanish dollars on their way to Cuba. They were 20 gold pieces, and were specially made for the trip, being the only 20 pieces bearing the year 1869. The insurance on the money was effected at Lloyd's, and was paid to the insurers after the vessel foundered. After a lapse of over a year Olymer Stevens and three English divers were sent out to try and recover the sunken treasure. They succeeded in bringing up nine boxes containing specie of the value of £10,000 each, but the tenth box could not be found, and the divers had to come away without it.

SCIENTIFIC TRUTH

Regarding the Functions of an Important Organ.

Of Which the Public Knows But Little—Worthy Careful Consideration

To the Editor of the Scientific American:

Will you please give the opinion to the public the facts we have learned during the past years concerning diseases of the human kidneys and the organs which discharge their functions, and which are now conducting a popular paper and are publishing a scientific journal, it seems to me is an modest Journal of Medicine, and should shield the home for circumstances.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

Proprietors of "Warner's Safe Cure."

That we have emphasized clearly explain the relation to kidneys relation to the general health, and how much is from, and upon them, we propose now to approximately speaking, to take one from the human body, place in the washbowl before us, and examine it for the kidneys in health.

You will imagine that we have before us a body shaped like a twin, wrapped and clothing, about four inches in length, and in this little mass of one which are two glands, or kidneys. If we weigh the adult kidney we find it weighs, four ounces, in the female. A small organ! Small in size, but great in work. The adult average size contains about ten cups. It weighs about four ounces, or pints. Though this seems enormous as compared with the kidneys, which are as often as the heart, making a complete circuit of the entire mass of human blood they separate the waste material, and pass it off in the form of urine. Sleeping or waking, incessant action, hard work and no rest. Such is the glamour, removing impurities from which the blood is made, and which, if left in, would be poison, or about forty ounces of urine in a day, or half a barrel each year. Is it a wonder that the kidneys can last any length of time? Nature's prodigious strength, treated and neglected, as it is, is wonderful.

We now this delicate organ open length, and we with our knife and will roughly describe its interior.

We find it to be of a reddish-brown color, soft and easily torn, filled with hundreds of little tubes, short and thread-like, starting from the arteries, forming a little ball about an inch from the outside, covering of a variety of consistencies, which, for ease of reference, we shall, roughly speaking, a week, which is the time we have taken to make the further undergo purification before it passes down into the urinary, and so on to the outside of the body.

The little tubes are the filters which do their work automatically, and right here we have the secret of the kidney disease.

Using the vast amount of work which they are obliged to, from the slightest irregularity in our habits, from cold, from high living, from stimulants or a change of climate, and one other cause which never ever day, they become somewhat weakened in their power for.

What is the result? Congestion or congestion of the current of blood in the small blood vessels surrounding them, which, if not relieved, these delicate membranes are irritated, inflammation sets in, they lose their power to secrete, which results in the pelvis or cause the tubes to get fearfully out of order, and terrible to describe here. The tubes are so delicate, so easily disturbed, so easily injured, upon the blood vessels, pressing upon the blood vessels, which is entering the kidneys to be filtered, and consequently no filtration is purified, for it cannot take any other place.

Now and think of it for a moment, the vast work of a pint of blood, the vital necessity, of having the kidneys in health, and the fact that when they are diseased or obstructed, no matter how healthy the rest of the blood and organs disease. It would be just as reasonable to expect, if a pail full of water set across Broadway and countless thousands of people should go from morning to get pail-full of water, and no pipe from the reservoir, and no supply from conduit, and the supply which should be there, as for one drop of the blood to escape pollution when compelled to pass through diseased kidneys.

Now, what is the result? When the blood takes up and deposits this impurity, it must go somewhere else organ, into every inch of muscle, tissue, fluid and bone, from the top of your head to your toes. And when we from hereditary influence or exposure, or any of the causes which make another, accumulate in the system in the form of uric acid, and consumption in weak lungs, dyspepsia, when there is a torpid liver, stomach, nervousness, insanity, paralysis, heart disease, and a host of other nervous diseases. The heart must soon feel the effects of the impure blood, and the blood to keep it righteous. It increases its stroke in number and force to compensate for the natural at nature's warning. The heart is overworked, the impure blood through theirs, palpitation, causing pain, sleeping, cross, out of breath feeling, unnatural as the heart pulsation, the heart soon soon falter, becoming weaker and weaker until one day it suddenly stops, and death from apparent "heart disease" is the result.

But the medical profession, learned and educated, call those diseases by high sounding names, treat them alone, and wonder why their patients are so many, those death to the effected parts, constantly in fatal results. Suppose from these apparently, troubles kidneys which herein are shown, and which should have been cured first, but this is not all the kidneys have to do, for you must remember that each drop of blood must pass through them, or consequent every twenty-four hours to purify the waste of the body which is constantly going on, a waste equal to the weight of the body. This too, the kidneys have to separate from the blood and all other diseases depending matter.

But you say, "My kidneys are all right, I have no pain in the back." Mistaken man! People die of kidney disease who had a disease that they never felt, and yet they have no pain, or only a dull, dull ache.

Why? Because the disease begins, as we have shown, in the interior of the kidneys, where there are few nerves to give to many the sensation of pain. Why this is so we may never know.

When you consider their great work, the delicacy of their structure, the ease with which they are deranged, can you believe, even at the ill health of our men and women? Health and long life cannot be enjoyed when the kidneys are deranged or impaired. No wonder man writes "my life is degenerating." Don't you see the great, the extreme importance of keeping this machinery in working order? Could the finest engine do work if the vital part of this work, without attention from the engineer? Don't you see how dangerous this hidden disease is? It is lurking about us constantly, without giving any indication of its presence.

The so-called physicians cannot detect it at times, for the fallacy there is not to be examined by any means which we have at our command. Under an analysis of the water, chemically and microscopically, reveals nothing definite in many cases, even when the kidneys are fully broken down.

Then look out for them, as disease, so fatal, so insidious, so fatal in 90 per cent, so slowly in other death examinations, has its origin in the breaking down of these secreting tubes in the interior of the kidneys.

As you value health, as you desire a healthy life free from sickness and suffering, give these organs some attention. Keep them in good condition, and they will do as nature does, all disease.

Warner's Safe Cure, as it becomes more and more known for its wonderful cures and its power over the kidneys, has done and is doing more to increase the average duration of life than all the physicians and medicines known. Warner's Safe Cure is a true specific and agreeable tonic.

Take it when you are a little and never a month go by if your head ill, without taking a few bottles as a preventive, that this disease may be kept in proper order, for blood pure, that health and long life may be your blessing.

H. H. WARNER & CO.

A Child's Manners at the Table.

Nothing attracts attention so much as a child's behaviour. And good manners are easily cultivated at bed-time, if parents will only begin right. Especially annoying to a child's bad manners at the table. An ill-bred child is a nuisance to all around. "There is no excuse for it. It is the parent's fault every time. Children will behave as well and pleasant manner if they are taught. Do not let the little darling must be pleased, to order that his mother may come to the table, let him have a nourishing meal of cold under his plate and eat, and be furnished with a napkin large bib beneath. Every child should be taught to eat, but be allowed to understand from the beginning that bad manners will not be tolerated. Let the other room with the parlor and kitchen, and let the child understand when meals are present to be attended. An occasional lapse of this kind will effectually produce a superior, obedient child. Children are taught generally for his turn to be served and helping, and they do not forget for time-to-come. If a mother wants to destroy her independence for her child, let her, as a child, and spoiled her society, 'Johnny dear, do eat, do tell me what you want.' Johnny He has us in the society, knows all the ways of the world, and is a slave to his appetite. The children must be taught to be polite and firmly instead of laughing at or encouraging their bad habits. Let the mother's pleasant, nice mannered child of him a source of pleasure.

If the Chinese nation were to pass before an observer in long, long, the green man would never cease, for a few generations would be coming in the stage and at the proscenium moved.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WESTERN HOTEL,
212-14 Broadway Street.
JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor
(Late Brown's Hotel)

An Extraordinary Razor
THE BEST SELLER IN THE QUEENSWARE line for years. Cheap and handsome. Sample dozen, $1.50. Sent free on receipt of price. Agents wanted. Address NILES & CO., Box 1, Boston, Mass.

WARD & CO.'S
Male and Female
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE,
606 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.
Telephone No. 741.
ALWAYS TO HIRE—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL & Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Herdsmen, Gardeners, Grooms, Coachmen, Waiters, Porters, Bakers, Cooks, Laundresses, Nurses, Ladies' Help, without any charge. Employers supplied at short notice. Telephone Call 606 Clay street.

CATHOLIC CHURCH MUSIC
A NEW and MOST VALUABLE Catalogue of
CATHOLIC CHURCH MUSIC
Now Ready.
It embraces over 500 Masses, Vespers, Hymns, Benedictions, Motets, etc., arranged for the Entire Church Year, with Latin and English Text, for Mixed Voices, Male Voices, Female Voices, Unison and Easy Masses, Gregorian Masses, Plain Chant, Gregorian Tones, Responses, Tones for Lamentations, Passion Music, Music for Holy Week, Easter, Ascension, Corpus Christi, Sacred Music for Choir and Organ, Organ Accompaniments, Organ Preludes, Interludes, Postludes, etc., etc., etc. Catalogue free on application.
ADDRESS
J. FISCHER & BRO.,
MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
No. 7 Bible House, cor. Astor Place, NEW YORK
A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St., San Francisco.

HOOPER'S SOUTH END Grain Warehouse,
2 First-Class Fire-Proof Brick-Building.
CAPACITY 16,000 TONS.
TOWNSEND ST.,
Railway Fifth and Townsend, San Francisco.
GEORGE H. LEMMAN, Prop.
Grain taken from the dock and from the cars of the C. P. R. R. and S. P. R. R. free of charge. Storage at current rates.
Advances and Insurance, effected at lowest rates.
Telephone No. 257.

JOS. A. DONOHOE, San Francisco. | EUGENE KELLY, New York
DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO,
EUGENE, KELLY & CO.
NEW YORK,
BANKERS
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Limited),
Payable at all the Branches
ALSO, IN EVERY DESIRABLE TOWN IN EUROPE.

RED CLOVER.

Secures Clover Seed, Pure Alsike and Alfalfa Seed, Pure Timothy Seed, Pure Hungarian Millet Seed, Pure Orchard Grass Seed, Pure Blue Grass Seed, Pure Red Top Seed, Pure Seed Oats, Pure Seed Barley, Pure Seed Wheat, Pure Seed Rye, Pure Seed Peas, Pure Seed Beans, Pure Seed Corn, Pure Seed Potatoes, Pure Seed Onions, Pure Seed Turnips, Pure Seed Carrots, Pure Seed Beets, Pure Seed Cabbage, Pure Seed Lettuce, Pure Seed Radishes, Pure Seed Cucumbers, Pure Seed Melons, Pure Seed Squashes, Pure Seed Pumpkins, Pure Seed Tomatoes, Pure Seed Parsnips, Pure Seed Celery, Pure Seed Cauliflower, Pure Seed Sweet Corn, Pure Seed Vegetable Plants, Pure Seed Flower Plants, Pure Seed Flowers, Pure Seed Garden Implements, Pure Seed Garden Tools, Pure Seed Garden Requisites, Pure Seed Garden Supplies, Pure Seed Garden Sundries, Pure Seed Garden Specialties, Pure Seed Garden Novelties, Pure Seed Garden Curiosities, Pure Seed Garden Wonders, Pure Seed Garden Marvels, Pure Seed Garden Miracles, Pure Seed Garden Mysteries, Pure Seed Garden Secrets, Pure Seed Garden Secrets Revealed, Pure Seed Garden Secrets Revealed Free, Pure Seed Garden Secrets Revealed Free to Everybody, Pure Seed Garden Secrets Revealed Free to Everybody Who Writes for Them, Pure Seed Garden Secrets Revealed Free to Everybody Who Writes for Them Mentioning This Paper.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRICE'S Famous California-Made
CANDIES
For Christmas Presents.
From $7.50 to $15.00 Per Box
M. PRICE, Pioneer Cutler,
615 Kearny St.

BUTTERICK'S PATTERNS.
Winter Styles.
H. A. DEMING, 124 Post Street, S. F.

MUNN & CO. PATENTS
ESTABLISHED 1846. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.
After Obtaining Patents the Scientific American is Sent Free for Six Months.
A LARGE ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER of 16 pages, containing the Patent Laws of all countries, Decisions of Courts, Patents Granted, Decisions Relating to Patents, Mechanical Movements, Science, Mechanics, Chemistry, Electricity, Mining, Agriculture, Manufactures, Design, Trade Marks, Labels, Copyrights, Patents Pending, Patents Expired, Patents Reissued, Patents Extended, Patents Assigned, Patents Reissued, Patents Extended, Patents Assigned, Patents Reissued, Patents Extended, Patents Assigned

POWER OF RELIGION AND PATRIOTISM.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

ing a political speech in the guise of a pastoral address to his clergy assembled in his cathedral, no more than I should be prepared to follow the example of that other eminent dignitary of the same church who, regardless of the feelings of, at all events, some individual members, whether lay or clerical, of his flock, embodied a declaration of his own political views in the form of a prayer to the Almighty, which he publicly intoned for use in the churches of his diocese. No. Fabius are very well in their place, but a church, whether catholic or protestant, is not the place for them; and I trust that the day is far distant when an at all events shall be found thus acting, regardless of the impropriety of such a lowering of the pulpit to the altar to the level of a political platform (cheers).

FAITH AND FATHERLAND.

But here in this hall, and especially on this day, this feast of our sainted Archbishop, I should find it hard indeed to conceive of any address that I would regard as more thoroughly in place than yours (loud cheers) Your very presence here is a public and an emphatic expression of that combined sentiment of Irish faith and Irish nationality which, thank God, is as vigorous and as active amongst us now as it has ever been at any period in the history of the past. That we have to-day to give thanks for this is—let us make acknowledgment of it—in no small degree due to the watchful prayers and intercession for us of St. Laurence, our special patron, and of the other sainted patrons of the Irish Church.

IRELAND AND ROME.

It is owing also to the constant unswerving fidality of your attachment to the centre of Catholic unity, the holy See of Rome (cheers). That fidelity you have preserved without a rupture or a flaw, despite the efforts of those enemies of our nation, if not of our faith, who have not scrupled, sometimes by bold unblushing statements, sometimes by the cunning of a crafty insinuation, to sow in your minds the seeds of suspicion, and thus of loss of confidence in the Holy See. In speaking to you thus I have especially in mind a speech or statement which I have recently met with in a newspaper. It was delivered not many days ago by

A CERTAIN PROMINENT ENGLISH NOBLEMAN,

ONE OF OUR OWN FAITH.

In it he managed to convey, though he did not dare openly to assert, that the influence of the Holy See could now be secured for the advancement of English interests in Ireland (cries of Never). I am glad to hear that confident cry, for, believe me, it can never be; that it is to say, it can never be secured for any effort to crush out a movement such as that of which the organization from which this address has been presented is here the local representative. I mean, of course, the constitutional effort in which you are engaged for the restoration of your native legislature (loud cheers). The nobleman to whom I thus refer seems to have surprised to his honour that the feeling of the Holy See is adverse to this national movement, and that the influence, if not the authority, of the Sovereign Pontiff may soon be exercised, at the suggestion of an English Ministry, to withdraw from all further expression of sympathy with that movement myself and other prominent ecclesiastics whom it is unnecessary for me to name. Now, of course, to contradict such ridiculous fictions. But it is, I think, of some importance that they should not be allowed to pass altogether without notice. And so I have thought it well to refer to the matter here to-day (cheers). I have brought here with me a copy of a Roman periodical, the Moniteur de Rome, which reached me from Rome this morning, and I have brought it that I may read for you a short article in reference to the present position of the Home Rule cause. It may be well to say to you that although it would be an exaggeration to speak of this paper as being exactly the "organ" of the Sovereign Pontiff, it is well known throughout Europe that the tone it is likely to be put forward in it of which His Holiness disapproves. Now this article which I am about to quote has reference to the present convention of the English Liberal party at Leeds—the convention that was presided over by the Marquis of Hartington, Mr. John Morley (loud cheers). What, then, does this article say? I will read it for you.

THE HOLY SEE CANNOT CONSIDERINGLY

"As was positively announced (it says) in the public telegrams, the conference of the English Liberals has adopted a resolution pledging the Liberal party to maintain without flinching the principle of Home Rule for Ireland—to maintain that principle without flinching until the question is finally settled" (renewed cheers).

And

"We congratulate the English Liberals on their fidelity to the programme of liberty and of restoration. Only, if the inability of the new Government to find a satisfactory solution of the problem, the triumph of Home Rule is assured. The people of Ireland have only to bide their time and to persevere in their present peaceful attitude of which even their political opponents themselves are in constrained to speak with respect.

(Loud and prolonged cheering). May I not answer for you that you will loyally fulfil what is thus expected of you? (Hear, hear, cheering). Fulfilling it, that is to say, maintaining your present attitude, and not allowing yourselves to be driven one inch from your present line, you will severely remain for yourselves that sympathy which you now hold in such abundant measure, the sympathy of Europe as well as of America, the sympathy especially of Catholic nations of the world—a sympathy which assuredly cannot be regarded as thrown away when it is thus given to a people who, when forming to themselves their ideals of the purest type of Irish patriotism, have selected one from the lines of Archbishops of this See, and in doing so have selected out of all the prelates whose names are recorded in our annals, the one who is held in such honor here to-day, St. Laurence O'Toole, the patriot Archbishop—(cheers)—the only one in all that long succession of whom the Church has raised to the honors of her altars—the only one in all that long succession of Irish saints, and the first and only canonized Archbishop of Dublin (loud and prolonged cheering.)

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

To Our Late Brother James W. Donlan. Who Died December 3rd, 1886.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Young Men's Catholic Mutual Aid Association, at their regular meeting:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in His infinite wisdom, to take from us our late fellow member, Brother James W. Donlan, we humbly bow to His divine will;

WHEREAS, In Brother James W. Donlan we denote a kind and loving husband, a good and faithful son and a true and faithful friend who have sailed away to heavenly happiness. Therefore be it

Resolved, By the Young Men's Catholic Mutual Aid Association, that we deeply feel and deplore the loss of our worthy Brother, whose good example through life was an incitement to his fellow-men, and in whose past life we recognize a faithful member, a model of a true Catholic and an exemplary citizen.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved wife and orphan children, and more than that the great men upon them and on by his loss is brightly relieved by the hope that he is upon the reward of his well-spent life.

Resolved, That a copy of these Resolutions be presented to his wife and family of the deceased, and be published in the MONITOR and Western Call, and be placed on the minutes of this meeting.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—On November 12th, about six miles from Ballymena, the house of Mr. Thos. Hall, a respectable and industrious farmer, residing in Ballypamaly, within view of Lough Neagh, took fire in the night time, when the inmates of the building, numbering eleven altogether, were fast asleep. Three persons were burned to death, whose names are Martha Hall, aged 60 years; Margaret Hall, aged 4 years, and Martha Hall, aged 2 years. The surviving members of the family are Thomas Hall, senr., with his father, James Hall, husband of the deceased Martha Hall, senr., and his son, James Hall, jr., now suffering from extensive burns. Two other sons, Henry and Robert Hall, saved themselves by jumping from a second story out of the burning house in the midst of the flames, through a pane of glass, and Mr. Blair himself sustained severe injuries by forcing through a bedroom window, which he had to burn some of the family. The house was left in ruins, and everything in the nature of furniture and wearing apparel has been reduced to ashes. The surviving inmates were taken to the house of Mr. Mulvenah contiguous, and every care and attention lavished upon them.

Carlow.—The difference that has for a considerable time existed between Mr. J. W. Smith-Barry and his tenants in the Coughtrigue district, has, it is gratifying to be notified, been amicably settled. The cause of the matter in dispute arose in the year 1879. From the beginning they seem to have taken up that what appeared to every one else to be a perfectly reasonable consideration of their lessee for a reduction in their rents, was a mere piece of Quixotic Land Leagueism. The unfortunate victims were sent for trial, and the case was thrown out, after a long and costly litigation, the production of original decrees for possession. The result of it was to the gain of the landlord, and of those who should have been in the dock as a prominent step to six months in Kilmainham, which would be much too mild a punishment for the Northern rackrenter. But it is stated on reliable authority that Captain Hill can now claim the kind ownership to act as bailiff and Emergency man, and that in this capacity he has been, and is, most successful. The case of the matter in a nutshell was, by the tenants, that then what appeared to every one else to be a reasonable reduction in their rents, was in reality, considering the circumstances of the times, a moderate reduction in their rents.

Cork.—The popular member for South Cork, Dr. Kenny, M. P., resided, on his return home from his constituents in Skibbereen, on Nov. 6th. The interior town was on the Saturday evening decorated with evergreens, flags and banners, leading appropriate mottoes, the principal streets were crowded with triumphal arches. There was a tremendous gathering at the railway station to meet the doctor, it being his first visit to Skibbereen since his election as member for South Cork. The very warm and patriotic address was presented to the doctor, and he replied in terms of the utmost fervor. Amongst the Commissioners on behalf of the National Land League, on Nov. 7th, were Messrs. Jas. Carbery, Jas. Deasen; Ray, J. Kenney, and Jas. Cronin, and Rev. T. Collins, P.P., the chairman of the Skibbereen parish priests was present. After the celebration of High Mass on the morning was concluded with, at which his Grace the Most Rev. Dr. McCarthy, presided. The following is the result of the polling: Dogmatics, Rev. Dr. McCarthy, V. G.; Sermons, Rev. Jas. Murphy; Rev. Dr. O'Brien, P.P.; Bachelors: Impure, Rev. Henry O'Neill, Ballydehob; Lawful, Rev. Jas. Murphy, Ballydehob.

Fermanagh.—The Earl of Enniskillen died on Nov. 12 at his residence, Florence Court, in his 80th year of his age. The deceased, William Willoughby Cole, was the third Earl, the title having been created in 1789. He was Grand Master of the Fermanagh Militia and Lieutenant-Colonel of the County for which he sat as M. P. from 1831 to 1841, when he succeeded to the peerage on his father Willoughby and Lady Charlotte Paget.

Galway.—A beautiful gift has been recited to the new cemetery, Tuam, by the Archbishop, to the memory of the late Dr. T. J. Bulwer, a young physician, who, born in the town, had endeared himself by his skill, and by his unassuming and kind manner, to all who knew him. The gift was made suddenly closed by a force caught in the doors, and he died in a few days his father, an eminent physician, was born to the same grave. The deceased, William Willoughby Cole, was the third son, the title having been created in 1789. He was Colonel of the Fermanagh Militia and Lieutenant-Colonel of the County for which he sat as M. P. from 1831 to 1841, when he succeeded to the peerage on his father Willoughby and Lady Charlotte Paget.

Galway.—A beautiful gift has been recited to the new cemetery, Tuam, by the Archbishop, to the memory of the late Dr. T. J. Bulwer, a young physician, who, born in the town, had endeared himself by his skill, and by his unassuming and kind manner, to all who knew him. The gift was made suddenly closed by a force caught in the doors, and he died in a few days his father, an eminent physician, was born to the same grave. The deceased, William Willoughby Cole, was the third son, the title having been created in 1789. He was Colonel of the Fermanagh Militia and Lieutenant-Colonel of the County for which he sat as M. P. from 1831 to 1841, when he succeeded to the peerage on his father Willoughby and Lady Charlotte Paget.

Kerry.—The Presentation Convent at Mitchelstown, county Cork, have erected their station for sale to tenants under Lord Cloncurry's Act at seventeen and a half years' purchase, which, we understand, have decided to take the receipts in a few days.

Another happy engagement of the cordial understanding between the National Leagues and the artisans, in Cork City, is furnished by the last meeting of the Hardwaremen's National Longers at which the whole body of the Hardwaremen mechanics expressed their adhesion to the League in an address teaming over with good sense and large-hearted National sympathies.

The Countess of Aberdeen has written to Messrs. Dwyer, Great George's street, Cork, for samples of their celebrated Irish lace and crochet work. Their well known Irish lace and crochet work. Their will be a fancy fair at Kilchrohane, and the Countess, who will have a stall there, is anxious to exhibit some specimens of the Irish fabrics.

Dublin.—The blessing and opening of the new buildings in connection with St. Joseph's Asylum for the Blind, Dublin, on Nov. 2, was an interesting event from more than one point of view. The Archbishop of Dublin, assisted by a large number of priests, performed the religious ceremony. The institution at present contains over 80 blind males, who, besides being boarded and lodged, receive an Irish doctrine, are taught to read, write, and some industry by which they may be able to earn a living. There are now upwards of 30 in the care of a community of Christian Brothers.

The following gentlemen have been "called" to the Bar—Mr. Charles Dillon, second son of Lucan Dillon, of Spiddal House, Dublin, and Mr. Francis Farly Barlow, younger son of Mr. Frederick Archer Barlow, North Great George's street, Dublin, solicitor.

On Nov. 11, the festival of St. Laurence O'Toole, the last Irish canonized Saint, was specially observed in Dublin, and in the parish church in Castle-place, Dublin, which takes its name from the Saint, the anniversary of his hundred years ago. His Grace the Archbishop, presided on the occasion, and the sermon was a vehement pleading the principle for Home Rule for Ireland—to maintain that principle without flinching until the question is finally settled" (renewed cheers).

And

"We congratulate the English Liberals on their fidelity to the programme of liberty and of restoration. Only, if the inability of the new Government to find a satisfactory solution of the problem, the triumph of Home Rule is assured. The people of Ireland have only to bide their time and to persevere in their present peaceful attitude of which even their political opponents themselves are constrained to speak with respect.

(Loud and prolonged cheering). May I not answer for you that you will loyally fulfil what is thus expected of you? (Hear, hear, cheering). Fulfilling it, that is to say, maintaining your present attitude, and not allowing yourselves to be driven one inch from your present line, you will severely remain for yourselves that sympathy which you now hold in such abundant measure, the sympathy of Europe as well as of America, the sympathy especially of Catholic nations of the world—a sympathy which assuredly cannot be regarded as thrown away when it is thus given to a people who, when forming to themselves their ideals of the purest type of Irish patriotism, have selected one from the lines of Archbishops of this See, and in doing so have selected out of all the prelates whose names are recorded in our annals, the one who is held in such honor here to-day, St. Laurence O'Toole, the patriot Archbishop—(cheers)—the only one in all that long succession of whom the Church has raised to the honors of her altars—the only one in all that long succession of Irish saints, and the first and only canonized Archbishop of Dublin (loud and prolonged cheering.)

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

To Our Late Brother James W. Donlan. Who Died December 3rd, 1886.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Young Men's Catholic Mutual Aid Association, at their regular meeting:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in His infinite wisdom, to take from us our late fellow member, Brother James W. Donlan, we humbly bow to His divine will;

WHEREAS, In Brother James W. Donlan we denote a kind and loving husband, a good and faithful son and a true and faithful friend who have sailed away to heavenly happiness. Therefore be it

Resolved, By the Young Men's Catholic Mutual Aid Association, that we deeply feel and deplore the loss of our worthy Brother, whose good example through life was an incitement to his fellow-men, and in whose past life we recognize a faithful member, a model of a true Catholic and an exemplary citizen.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved wife and orphan children, and more than that the great men upon them and on by his loss is brightly relieved by the hope that he is upon the reward of his well-spent life.

Resolved, That a copy of these Resolutions be presented to his wife and family of the deceased, and be published in the MONITOR and Western Call, and be placed on the minutes of this meeting.

California's Catholic Literary Triumph!!

THE

GRAND OLD MONITOR'S CHRISTMAS CONTENTS!!

THE "CHRISTMAS" MONITOR

WILL BE ISSUED ON

WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 15th Inst.

—AND WILL CONSIST OF—

TWELVE PAGES

OF BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED

Pure and Edifying Catholic and Miscellaneous Reading.

BUY IT. READ IT. SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

AWARD OF PRIZES!

—WE HAVE AWARDED—

THE FOLLOWING PREMIUMS

To Successful Writers of Original

CHRISTMAS STORIES, CHRISTMAS POEMS,

And Other Literary Matter for

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR!

NAMES OF SUCCESSFUL CONTRIBUTORS:

ORIGINAL PRIZE AND SELECTED STORIES.

A Failed Foe. FIRST PRIZE STORY contributed by "HUMPHREY." This story is founded on historical occurrences which took place in Ireland, and is redolent of the Catholic courage and virtue of the people of that ancient and honorable race.

Margaret's Triumph. SECOND PRIZE STORY contributed by "M. M." This is a lovely story of Domestic life, full of interesting dialogue and absorbing incidents which will charm all who read it.

Tom's Christmas Jewels. THIRD PRIZE STORY, contributed by J. M. Dwyer. This is a lovely Catholic story founded on incidents connected with the disturbances in Land Leagueism in Ireland.

A Christmas Revenge. FOURTH PRIZE STORY contributed by "THE INDEXER." This story is founded on historical occurrences which took place in Ireland, and is redolent of the Catholic courage and virtue of the people of that ancient and honorable race.

A Faithful Shepherd and Other Stories. FIFTH PRIZE STORY from YOUNG FOLKS DEPARTMENT, contributed by MAY HOLLOWAY. This story is founded on historical occurrences which took place in Ireland, and is redolent of the Catholic courage and virtue of the people of that ancient and honorable race.

A Fortunate Christmas. SIXTH PRIZE STORY FROM YOUNG FOLKS DEPARTMENT, contributed by HORACE DUNN. This story traces the rise and progress of a Catholic youth who, by his honesty and industry, and by his determination to succeed, rises from a position of menial servitude to a position of trust and responsibility.

The Christmas Dream. SEVENTH PRIZE STORY. This story narrates how a happy Christmas came to an humble home. It is a beautiful story written by a Dublin journalist who is well known in Ireland.

Two Brothers' Christmas Eve. A true story told by the lighted a Mission Camp Fire. Written by Rob Roy. The scene is laid in the Australian Bush, amongst the Mountains and the moral of the story will stilly all who peruse it.

What Christmas Means. A beautiful Christmas Story. Written by Mrs. Spinola (author of Fact). Written by Martin A. Hennessy. This is a story of trial, suffering and triumph, woven together with the web of sadness and rejoicing—it will charm all who read it.

Carmello's Christmas Gift and What Came of It. Written by Grace Edward Jr. A delightful Christmas story of Faith Hope and Charity, and told in such a lovely simple style as to win the attention of all who peruse it.

Denis Connolly's Confession. Written by Patrick T. Minerve. This story is a simple recital of the adventures which befell a starving man on a stormy Christmas Eve, and how he got rich by overcoming temptation.

Santa Claus and Snooks. A lovely little story with a great big moral in it which will be read with pleasure by young and old alike. Written by Mary Dwyer.

Mary Carrolhan's Fortune. A delightful Christmas story of love, labor, lady-bugs and hairpins. Written by a new contributor who can put the interest of a three volume novel into a three column story.

The Christmas Midnight Mass; or, How a Hardworking Blacksmith Spent a Sacred Night. A nice story in which a beautiful moral is inculcated.

ORIGINAL PRIZE AND SELECTED POEMS.

A Christmas Dream. FIRST PRIZE POEM for contributions of one hundred lines. Written by "ARDATH."

A Christmas Reverie. SECOND PRIZE POEM for contributions of one hundred lines. Written by "AN OLD BOOK."

The Star of Bethlehem. THIRD PRIZE POEM of more than 100 lines. Written by "MARY QUEEN."

A Christmas Thought. FIRST PRIZE POEM of 50 lines. Written by Miss Mary Dwyer.

The Dear Old Soul. SECOND PRIZE POEM. Written by Thomas Dunn.

A Christmas Greeting. Written by Thomas Dunn. Irish Christmas Days Long Ago. Written by Honor Dunn. A Happy Little Helper. A lovely Poem appropriate for Christmas. A Christmas Present. A sweet Poem written by W. J. B. A Mother's Memories. A sweet Poem. Written by Mrs. M. L. Hayes. The Value of Money. A lovely Poem. The present prettily illustrated. Holy Joyful Christmas. An appropriate Poem of Christmas tide. Written by Hugh Mullaly. A Christmas Dream. A beautiful Poem. Written by Hugh Mullaly. A Visit from St. Nicholas. A familiar Poem, very of Christmas customs and at the recital of which old children and young alike will be merry.

PRIZE ESSAYS AND SELECTIONS.

The Feast of Christmas. FIRST PRIZE ESSAY. Contributed by "M. K." Christmas Religious and Social. SECOND PRIZE ESSAY. Contributed by Wm. H. FALLOWS.

PRIZE LISTS OF ORIGINAL MYSTICS.

First Prize for best set of Mystical Verse awarded to "Hon. Dr." Second Prize of Mystical Verse awarded to "Hon. Dr." Third Prize for the best list of Mystical Verse awarded to "Hon. Dr." Fourth Prize for the best list of Mystical Verse awarded to "Hon. Dr." Fifth Prize for the best list of Mystical Verse awarded to "Hon. Dr." Other Lists will be published in their order of merit, and prizes will be awarded for suitable lists.

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR

WILL CONTAIN

15 STORIES, 15 POEMS, 2 ESSAYS,

FIVE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Original Mystics, Family Fun, Farm and Home

ALL THE WEEK'S NEWS,

Religious, Secular, Foreign and Domestic, together with Several Columns of Miscellaneous Matter,

THUS FORMING A LITERARY FEAST OF

Seventy Columns of Christmas Reading

FOR ONE DIME.

SEND COPIES TO YOUR EASTERN AND EUROPEAN FRIENDS.

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR mailed to any address in the United States or Europe on receipt of TEN CENTS in coin or postage-stamps.

DR. LANE'S WINE TONIC!

A Nervine and Blood Invigorator.

KING B BITTERS,

THE GREAT VEGETABLE LIVER REMEDY.

HALL BROTHERS,

Laboratory, 324 Clay St., San Francisco.

CANDLES FOR CHRISTMAS.

GOLDBERG, BOWEN & CO.

THE LEADING GROCERS,

428, 430 and 432 PINE STREET,

Have just imported a FRESH Stock of PURE BEES WAX HAND-MADE CANDLES for Christmas and the Holydays, to which they call the special attention of the Rev. Clergy and others who desire to procure ALTAR CANDLES that are PURER, CLEANER, and CHEAPER than any others in the Market. Send for our Price List.

Market Report.

CATARRH POSITIVELY CURED

WilSon's Vapolizing Inhaler!

KNABE PIANOFORTES.

Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.

THE ONLY COMPLETE, CORRECT AND AUTHORIZED EDITION.

SADLIERS' Catholic Directory, Almanac and Ordo for 1887

Fifty-Sixth Annual Publication.

PRICE.

D. & J. SADLIER & CO.,

PUBLISHERS.

31 and 33 Barclay St., New York.

Typo Writer Ribbons

RE-INKED

PATENTS

H. N. COOK,

Leather Belting & Hose

HAS REMOVED TO 32 FREMONT ST.

TO MUSIC PROFESSORS.

PACIFIC BANK

Commercial Bank.

Capital $1000000.00

Surplus $500,000.00

San Francisco, Cal.

July 1st, 1886.

DECKER BROS. MANON & HAMLIN IVERS & POND. FISCHER. BEHR BROS.

PIANOS

SOLD FOR

$10

INSTALLMENTS.

PACIFIC Business College.

320 POST ST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Life Scholarships

THE MONITOR.

A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.

DEVOTED TO THE PROTECTION AND DEFENSE OF CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES

Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO., Office—536 Kearny St., San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

For Year in Advance (if not in advance) $1.50
For Year in Advance (if not in advance) 1.50
Six Months (if paid in advance) 1.00
Three Months (if paid in advance) 50
Three Months (if not paid in advance) 75
Per Month (if not paid in advance) 25
Delivered to any of the Jersey Districts (if not paid in advance) 50

All arrears at our publishers, remittances, checks, and postal notes to

J. Mahoney, Editorial Manager.

Monitor Office, Box 2183 P. O., San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second Class Matter.

The Monitor.

For Thy Sake we are ashamed to say the Truth. Strive for Justice for Thy Sake, and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Isaiah lv. 1) is now in its thirteen year of publication, and its extensive circulation has caused it to be a valuable medium for advertisements. Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

THE MONITOR

TO CORRESPONDENTS

Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday each week.

No communication will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.

Communications will be published in the issue next following receipt, and on receipt of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of unused articles.

All communications and correspondence, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

VOL. XXX. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1886. NO. 11.

A Failed Foe

FIRST PRIZE STORY.

WRITTEN FOR THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR BY "HUMPHREY."

CHAPTER I.

It was in the reign of the English Richard, Richard of the iron hand and the iron mien, that Sir George Barlow landed on the Irish shore. Sent by his royal master and the kind purpose of enforcing the civil ascendancy of the Saxon, a chief of the martial race, to subdue the fierce and fearless Celt, he was, in the land upon which he was landing, as much the chief and lord of the country as Richard himself was in England. Fierce and fearless as the Celt was, he was no match for the Saxon. The Saxon was a chief of the Saxon race, and the Saxon was the master race. Sir George was a chief of the Saxon race, and he was the master of the Celt. Sir George was a chief of the Saxon race, and he was the master of the Celt. Sir George was a chief of the Saxon race, and he was the master of the Celt

Poetry.

A CHRISTMAN DREAM.

FIRST PRIZE LONG POEM.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY "CELESTINE"

Very well do I remember,
One sweet Christmas long ago
When the gentle winds sighed around blowing
And the ground was white with snow;
When the merry bells were ringing,
Free from care or and from pain
And old time had left no wrinkles
On my brow, nor frosted my hair.

Each and every heart was welcome,
But the one I held most dear
Will the lovely Christmas festival,
With its blessings and good cheer;
And I always grew impatient
At that time was drawing nigh,
Yet I was, nevertheless, well satisfied,
And I would only sigh.

Well, this Christmas that I mention,
In the days long since gone by,
Has left a vivid picture
Standing yet before my eye,
In my heart a lovely image,
In my mind a thought of bliss
That comes when life is over,
When all earthly strife ws miss.

I was sitting at the window
Alone at eventide one hour,
Gazing intently and wondrous
Of the vast cathedral tower,
The snow was on the housetops,
No spot of green was there,
Upon the leaves below us,
Chill and frosty was the air.

I looked, and then I wondered,
The tower seemed drawing near,
Until it seemed to touch me,
My heart was filled with fear,
I tried to move, but could not,
I was fastened to the floor,
When looking my eyes seemed to see
While figures could go
From in and out that tower,
Angels fair they seemed to be,
I looked again and this time saw
A spirit stand by me.
"Fear not," he cried, "no hidden harm
Is there encamped in me,
But come this way my master,
And a wonderous sight thou'lt see."

This said, he placed around me
Two arms of snowy white,
And out we started swiftly
In the calm and frosty night.
Our hills and over valleys,
I too had wings to fly,
The earth was far beneath us
And our path was near the sky.

I paused and said "O Angel!
Do you see that deep dark wave?
It is the broad Atlantic
Give me not an ocean grave."
"Fear not, thou faithless doubter,
No harm shall come to you,
So do not speak aout you pass
Across those waters blue."

In about awe I wondered
"O! I wishes do we go,
Is this an angel or a fiend
A friend or fiter I?
But still I did not venture
To give utterance to my thought,
For whether fiend or angel
My battle must be fought.

So on we went a moment;
"Here," cried the spirit guide,
"Do earth's wealth well rest again;
But do not leave my side
We stopped on earth; I looked around,
"Twas not as now as I strange to me,
But the spirit took my hand

And led me to a wretched shed
And passed beside the door
He turned to me, and softly said:
"Look down upon the floor."
I looked and saw an Infant,
With a mother, tender and fair,
His tiny hands outstretching
As if imploring grace.

By His side there knelt a Lady
With hands upraised in prayer,
A vision of rare beauty,
With a cheek of bloom so pale,
On the other side I noticed
A man with bowed down head and form,
Shivering as the cruel sight wind
Crept into their shed.

Here and there were clustered shepherds
Big by noise of their praise,
Yet I listened in a rapture
To the beauty of their lays,
My pulse joined in the chorus
I turned surprised to hear,
But soft and sweet he answered:
"O ye our Saviour fear."

"Our Saviour!" "Yes," he answered,
"That Babe whom you now see
Has come to shed His heart's blood
Upon the Cross for thee.
The Babe of Bethlehem
So full of loving emotions with yours
You pray to be to Heaven,
And free sinners from slavery.

I sought to hand beside the Babe
And ask His Infant Love,
And as good friend detained me,
Saying: "Come we'll soon above
And see a heavenly Christmas
Where the Infant sin on you no
Is opened to heavenly joy
Now and forever more.

Upward we soared and upward,
Until I turned to see
The lonely earth vanished,
Not a glimpse of land or sea.
Nought but stars and space around us,
Not a sound of human strife,
And I wondered to see a world,
That I'd said farewell to life.

Then a glorious sight burst on me,
And a sound stole on my ear
As I gazed on the glorious scene
Rose my heart to hear.
Entranced I still went onward,
And I listened not a word,
Till a brighter, livelier radiance
Enchanted me around.

Then I saw a golden gateway,
Guarded by angels with spears,
Here and there and all around us
Were angels, thousands in sight,
And my angel guide now pointed
As if struggling with a thought,
Then he turned and said profoundly:
"Here's the spot which we have sought."

I gazed in silent wonder,
I knew he daughter from free from sin
And Christ on of the blessed,
Of whom I'd oft been told
But the pains commenced to open,
And I saw a golden stairs,
Guarded by a thousand angels,
Standing in a well formed line,

In that status the King of Heaven
Bid to welcome, business grant
As I looked I ventured,
"Twas the Infant's radiant face,
By His side there sat His Mother,
But her form was clothed in light,
That seemed to dim my vision
As she stood before my sight

Angels wondered hither, thither,
Hope I hand and praising God,
And the saints that seemed pleasure
Singing incense a man I always was
How I longed to join them singing
"Merry Christmas brother dear,
See what Saints Claus has brought me
Sun my interest daily here."

"What! You here, my little sister!"
But I looked around and saw
Those whom I'd been dilite,
And I knew we had
Then I looked out from the window,
And I saw the daylight beam,
Far, behold! my wonderous journey,
Had been made while in a dream.

A SPRAY OF HOLLY.

Breathe sweet but peace and joy to-day
In all the world above
For every one upon this earth
A message Christ, we come
Let Heaven's sunshine therefore smile
On every house and home
No matter if the sky be dark,
Faith can make it rather bright.

Holiday Presents.

A dozen pictures taken by Fagler. Send them to the dear ones at home. Have one enlarged and nicely colored—it will be an acceptable present. Fagler's gallery is the oldest and most complete in the city and produces the best photographs. Market and Ninth streets.

Margaret's Trial and Triumph.

SECOND PRIZE STORY.

Written for the Christmas Monitor by "M. M."

CHAPTER I

OUTWARD SHOWS AND INWARD SORROW

It was a bitter cold night in December, a night whose clear brightness made the stress cold and the dreariness of the dreary wind but more apparent. The moon cast up in her then half veiled under the fleecy drifting clouds, chilled the heart with her icy glitter ing smile; the wind moaning through the leaving trees and chasing scores down the drifting the winding aisles of the enveloping hills, and, sweeping through the valley, struck a respicuous, penetrating, and unabated. And I would only sigh.

Well, this Christmas that I mention,
In the days long since gone by,
Has left a vivid picture
Standing yet before my eye,
In my heart a lovely image,
In my mind a thought of bliss
That comes when life is over,
When all earthly strife ws miss.

I was sitting at the window
Alone at eventide one hour,
Gazing intently and wondrous
Of the vast cathedral tower,
The snow was on the housetops,
No spot of green was there,
Upon the leaves below us,
Chill and frosty was the air.

I looked, and then I wondered,
The tower seemed drawing near,
Until it seemed to touch me,
My heart was filled with fear,
I tried to move, but could not,
I was fastened to the floor,
When looking my eyes seemed to see
While figures could go

From in and out that tower,
Angels fair they seemed to be,
I looked again and this time saw
A spirit stand by me.
"Fear not," he cried, "no hidden harm
Is there encamped in me,
But come this way my master,
And a wonderous sight thou'lt see."

This said, he placed around me
Two arms of snowy white,
And out we started swiftly
In the calm and frosty night.
Our hills and over valleys,
I too had wings to fly,
The earth was far beneath us
And our path was near the sky.

I paused and said "O Angel!
Do you see that deep dark wave?
It is the broad Atlantic
Give me not an ocean grave."
"Fear not, thou faithless doubter,
No harm shall come to you,
So do not speak aout you pass
Across those waters blue."

In about awe I wondered
"O! I wishes do we go,
Is this an angel or a fiend
A friend or fiter I?
But still I did not venture
To give utterance to my thought,
For whether fiend or angel
My battle must be fought.

So on we went a moment;
"Here," cried the spirit guide,
"Do earth's wealth well rest again;
But do not leave my side
We stopped on earth; I looked around,
"Twas not as now as I strange to me,
But the spirit took my hand

And led me to a wretched shed
And passed beside the door
He turned to me, and softly said:
"Look down upon the floor."
I looked and saw an Infant,
With a mother, tender and fair,
His tiny hands outstretching
As if imploring grace.

By His side there knelt a Lady
With hands upraised in prayer,
A vision of rare beauty,
With a cheek of bloom so pale,
On the other side I noticed
A man with bowed down head and form,
Shivering as the cruel sight wind
Crept into their shed.

Here and there were clustered shepherds
Big by noise of their praise,
Yet I listened in a rapture
To the beauty of their lays,
My pulse joined in the chorus
I turned surprised to hear,
But soft and sweet he answered:
"O ye our Saviour fear."

"Our Saviour!" "Yes," he answered,
"That Babe whom you now see
Has come to shed His heart's blood
Upon the Cross for thee.
The Babe of Bethlehem
So full of loving emotions with yours
You pray to be to Heaven,
And free sinners from slavery.

I sought to hand beside the Babe
And ask His Infant Love,
And as good friend detained me,
Saying: "Come we'll soon above
And see a heavenly Christmas
Where the Infant sin on you no
Is opened to heavenly joy
Now and forever more.

Upward we soared and upward,
Until I turned to see
The lonely earth vanished,
Not a glimpse of land or sea.
Nought but stars and space around us,
Not a sound of human strife,
And I wondered to see a world,
That I'd said farewell to life.

Then a glorious sight burst on me,
And a sound stole on my ear
As I gazed on the glorious scene
Rose my heart to hear.
Entranced I still went onward,
And I listened not a word,
Till a brighter, livelier radiance
Enchanted me around.

Then I saw a golden gateway,
Guarded by angels with spears,
Here and there and all around us
Were angels, thousands in sight,
And my angel guide now pointed
As if struggling with a thought,
Then he turned and said profoundly:
"Here's the spot which we have sought."

I gazed in silent wonder,
I knew he daughter from free from sin
And Christ on of the blessed,
Of whom I'd oft been told
But the pains commenced to open,
And I saw a golden stairs,
Guarded by a thousand angels,
Standing in a well formed line,

In that status the King of Heaven
Bid to welcome, business grant
As I looked I ventured,
"Twas the Infant's radiant face,
By His side there sat His Mother,
But her form was clothed in light,
That seemed to dim my vision
As she stood before my sight

Angels wondered hither, thither,
Hope I hand and praising God,
And the saints that seemed pleasure
Singing incense a man I always was
How I longed to join them singing
"Merry Christmas brother dear,
See what Saints Claus has brought me
Sun my interest daily here."

"What! You here, my little sister!"
But I looked around and saw
Those whom I'd been dilite,
And I knew we had
Then I looked out from the window,
And I saw the daylight beam,
Far, behold! my wonderous journey,
Had been made while in a dream.

A SPRAY OF HOLLY.

Breathe sweet but peace and joy to-day
In all the world above
For every one upon this earth
A message Christ, we come
Let Heaven's sunshine therefore smile
On every house and home
No matter if the sky be dark,
Faith can make it rather bright.

Holiday Presents.

A dozen pictures taken by Fagler. Send them to the dear ones at home. Have one enlarged and nicely colored—it will be an acceptable present. Fagler's gallery is the oldest and most complete in the city and produces the best photographs. Market and Ninth streets.

CHAPTER II

THE FIRST FADE AWAY.

But at last Margaret was fairly out on an unknown track. She wrote some articles for a Magazine and sent them away in a fit of desperation; but no sooner were her treasures safely entrusted to the care of Uncle Sam, than she wished them back. Her cheek burned with blushes as she thought of her presumption and she suffered in advance the mortification of defeat; even the certainty of defeat would be better than the suspense she felt. But even waiting has an end, her manuscript was accepted. Trembling with joy she sought her parents and gave them the money she had just received, this revelation of the ambition of her child delighted them both, though in different ways, her mother was quite willing to accept money earned in such genteel employment; Rita might coin her brain into money if it did not prevent her entering the velvet-draped portals of society, but her father was relying on her money making powers, felt glad to know she had a congenial occupation.

And Margaret herself felt deeply thankful for the first glimpse of a rosy dawn which lay, pearl tinted, beyond the gloomy portals of a perfect day, but she was not so sanguine as to think that the sunshine would be unmixed with clouds. Her mother was she pecked by little trials, thorns which hidden by satin leaves, lost a back left scars on wounds behind. She sagely responded to the half invitation extended by the publisher of the Magazine, but the uncanny hint finding judiciously dealt out by the editor, increased her own lack of self confidence, and she became thoroughly disconcerted.

Visiting to her gloomy forebodings for the future, she never thought of flying to where true comfort lies—in the practice of her religion, for she had in her selfish dreaming, she had begun by neglecting the Angelus, spiritual reading, etc., those minute means grace, but which feed the life of love and faith.

Then gradually growing colder it was easy to find excuses for the omission of frequent Communion, and at the time any every opens months had elapsed since last her soul had been refreshed by the Bread of Life. Thus it was that poor, foolish Margaret found herself adrift on an open sea, without chart or compass, beneath her the tossing waves, above so which the dispersing shadows of the last gathering clouds, while from afar she heard the roll of the coming storm. Her cabin was a prison, the lonely island, her only refuge, the tempest raging without, struggling with the tempest within.

The wind had somewhat abated, but the sky was still mated crystal streaks of ivory and pearl, when Margaret stepped out of the house, and hastened toward the Lawton. She felt through flowery paths of fancy, where sweetest fragrance was wafted to them as they passed, and the balmy stillness of the air was only stirred by the thrilling music of the birds, the sighs, their back floated down a silvered stream, a stream whose lightly flutter motion of joy were caused by the gentle breeze of hope, from deep but crystal depths of love. Her slumbers did I say? Ay, even in waking hours were fettered by sweet visions. She thought that she relieved and admired, that another came for her, is always welcome but to Margaret, sunshine and peaceful living in an unassuming home, this kind edge came like a breath of life. She knew that all the happiness to be afforded by such a home would be hers, and although she would daily have admired poverty with Mr Lawson, and cheerfully given up the life of ease and comfort, and shared by all the comforts of refined wealth, still the joy she had will seemed very beautiful in its golden setting.

She dwelt with her parents for she wished to think of her future unbiassed by the comments of others. And she feared opposition because her mother would look on it as a brilliant match, and Lawson as a people accordingly, and he rather would not interfere with her happiness. One after noon she was wasting, or rather the hours on which she was sinking away so lonely, the sunshine and flowers had left her, she felt arrived as an answer behind which the story of her life was written, and the thoughts that would every now and then crossed her cheek with quick blushes, were the sweet, but sad, thoughts of one who corrupted by her sister Wilfred coming up. She had been alone to town, and had seen Lawson and Margaret's work, which was intended for herself, she said.

"Rita, who do you think I was today?" "Lawson, he was coming out of Lawson's Stationery Store. I guess he was buying Christmas presents."

"Nonsense, Molly, and Herbert, 'cheat don't keep Christmas or give presents.'"

"Oh, I think the Lawsons do, returned Molly, "they were confident of their present."

But in Margaret these words, "Christmas keep Christmas, fell like an icy pall treading on her warm life, and she stunned by the, that she repeated them over and over, as she realized their terrible meaning. Mr Lawson was a Hebrew, he rejected what her sacrifice, or might be, vital principles, and her heathenish thought, Margaret had forgotten it. Yes, in the fire and severer of her sorrow, she had forgotten that she strayed beyond this fleeting, passing life, and that with it, and the life of love and faith, the present with the great unknown eternity.

And if—remembering her Catholic education—we are surprised at the mid pain that she felt, we must bear in mind her current training, we answer like the Israelite people, she had murmured, fainted, and lagged and neglected to replenish it. She had neglected the religious duties and memory of the happy innocence of the Sacrament of Penance, and at the time any every opens months had elapsed since last her soul had been refreshed by the Bread of Life. Thus it was that poor, foolish Margaret found herself adrift on an open sea, without chart or compass, beneath her the tossing waves, above so which the dispersing shadows of the last gathering clouds, while from afar she heard the roll of the coming storm. Her cabin was a prison, the lonely island, her only refuge, the tempest raging without, struggling with the tempest within.

The wind had somewhat abated, but the sky was still mated crystal streaks of ivory and pearl, when Margaret stepped out of the house, and hastened toward the Lawton. She felt through flowery paths of fancy, where sweetest fragrance was wafted to them as they passed, and the balmy stillness of the air was only stirred by the thrilling music of the birds, the sighs, their back floated down a silvered stream, a stream whose lightly fluttering

THE MONITOR.

TWENTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1886.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

The offices of the MONITOR are now located at

536 KEARNY STREET,

(first-floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

CIRCULAR LETTER OF RIGHT REV. BISHOP MANOGUE.

TO THE PRIESTS AND PEOPLE OF THE DIOCESE OF SACRAMENTO.

Dearly Beloved Brethren:

We are now engaged in erecting a Cathedral for our Diocese. Grass Valley having fallen away in Catholic population and the present and prospective aspect of that place, as a center, being so discouraging, our beloved and venerated Supreme Pontiff, Leo XIII., has deigned to favorably consider our further condition and to extend to our diocese in a special manner his paternal protection. From the remarkable decrease of population in the mountain counties, the mining camps and towns, our diocese was on the verge of becoming a thing of [illegible] past. The father of the faithful has spoken to us all. He has graciously condescended to consider the extent of our miseries, and to raise up our tottering diocese to a noble and respectable standing. He has granted us Sacramento, the Capital of the State, for our new See and center, and within this year he has raised us up from a population of ten to a population of twenty-five thousand. This is a favor which both priests and people should soundly and gratefully acknowledge.

There is no community, town, city, corporation or government without a central place of action for the welfare and benefit of all concerned; and for the diocese, the Cathedral is that center. It is there the oils are consecrated for the consecration of bishops, the ordination of priests, the baptism of children incorporated into the mystic body of Christ, the consecration of altars for the adorable sacrifice, the final signing and anointing of the faithful who lock beyond the grave for a place of refreshment, light and peace. It is there the archives which concern all are kept and preserved.

Hence the Cathedral belongs to everyone in the diocese; to those in Siskiyou as to those of Sacramento; to the faithful in Esmeralda at a great distance, as well as to those in Yuba and Colusa near hand. All are, therefore, called upon to have an interest in the Cathedral as the Cathedral has an interest in the welfare of every Catholic child in the diocese. It is there the clean oblation will be daily offered for them all and especially for the emoluments and benefactors of this temple, a weekly Mass will be continually celebrated. "And then, O Lord I we beseech thee that thy eyes may be open upon this house night and day; upon the house of which thou hast said: 'My name shall be there;' that thou mayest hearken to the prayer, which thy servant prayeth in this place to thee. That thou mayest hearken to the supplications of thy servant and of thy people, whatsoever they shall pray for in this place, that thou mayest hear them in the place of thy dwelling in heaven and when thou hearest, pardon."

We beseech you all, then, both priests and people, to unite and show your interest, your zeal and action, your appreciation of this honor to our diocese, the noble temple of the living God.

To afford an opportunity to the faithful of the diocese, we hereby appoint Rev. J. J. Callan to visit and call upon all from Sutter to Siskiyou. We authorize him to announce from each church in every mission and parish outside Sacramento, this collection. We also look for and expect from each and all the rectors a hearty support by word, introduction and active co-operation, when Rev. Father Callan visits their respective places.

✠ P. MANOGUE,
Bishop of Sacramento.

Sacramento, December 13, 1886.

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR.

We present our readers with a paper this week which we think will not only give them pleasure and profit in its perusal, but which we shall also make them feel a laudable pride in supporting the press that defends their faith and also furnishes them every week with a very large amount of fresh useful and interesting reading matter.

All the original stories, poems, essays, mysties and other contributions which appear in the CHRISTMAS MONITOR are the production of California Catholics, and, in order to exhibit the fertility and versatility of Catholic literary talent in California, a few copies of the CHRISTMAS MONITOR should be sent by every subscriber on the coasts to their friends and relatives on the Atlantic States, Europe, Australia or other sections of the world.

It is no sport of boasting that leads us to say that no Catholic paper in America has a better staff of contributors than the MONITOR, and the contents of the present issue will convince any person of the truth of this statement. This fact is creditable to the Catholics of California, and so heartily thank all of those for this practical proof of their appreciation of the importance of contributing to the Catholic press, so as to make it a potent factor in spreading "glad tidings of great joy" in all that concerns our holy Faith.

Every subscriber to the MONITOR can help to extend its circulation very easily at this season of the year by showing their friends a copy of the paper and asking them to enclose their subscription with the New Year. Then send us a postal card with the names of the subscribers thus secured, as well as the name of the individual securing them, and, in return, we will send such successful solicitor a souvenir of the New Year that will be a household treasure, and a slight recompense for their kindness and trouble.

— Cardinals Gibbons and Taschereau will sail for Rome in few days to receive their insignia of office from the Pope.

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS.

Biographies of notable men in the world delight in depicting for their readers the birthplace of the celebrated men whose lives they narrate. The house where such celebrity was born, its situation and surroundings, its style of architecture and the very room wherein the principal character in the book first saw the light all are described with a minutiae that frequently borders on the ridiculous.

If it is necessary, therefore, that the world should know something concerning the birth and birthplace of its so-called "great men," how much more important and edifying to the Christian must it not be to learn—over and over again—the sweet and consoling lesson taught us by the birth of our Blessed Redeemer!

Let us therefore visit, during this holy season, the sacred spot in Bethlehem where we may see the very commencement of Christianity, and thus learn a few of the details of that birth of all births, so that we may give a higher and a better love to Him who humble Crib presents to us such a grand lesson of sublime humility every Christmas.

What a wonderful change took place in the world when the heavenly hosts of the first Christmas illumined the entire earth! The Prophecies fulfilled, the day of Hope proclaimed; the long-expected Messiah come at last; man's Redemption commenced, the first scene on the divine Drama of our Blessed Saviour's life on earth enacted, and the Son of God a citizen on earth!

Five days before the celebrated chorus of Heaven sang the joyous canticle which proclaimed

"Glory to God on the Highest,
And on Earth Peace to Men of Good Will,

the chaste St. Joseph and his Immaculate Spouse were peacefully living in their humble home in Nazareth. But Almighty God inspired the other Caesar Augustus to order a census of his subjects, as it became necessary for Mary and Joseph to travel to Bethlehem in order to be enrolled in the city from whence the race of David descended. And thus was fulfilled the prediction of Michea the prophet, when he said: "And thou, Bethlehem Ephrata, art a little one among the thousands of Juda, out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be the ruler in Israel, and his going forth is from the beginning, from the days of eternity."

For four days the Blessed Virgin and St. Joseph wended their way towards that city which was destined to be known throughout all ages as the Ursalo of Christianity. At length—travel-stained and footsore with their weary journey of ninety miles, they reached one of the inns at Bethlehem and asked for sustenance and shelter. But a cold refusal met the Mother of God and her holy Spouse. Again they pled along the rough stony and cold, and again they ask to be received as guests. But the crowds who had come to the city to be enrolled had already engaged all the accommodations, and Mary and Joseph could receive neither food nor shelter!

Here again we find the Sacred Word of God verified throughout in the beautiful expression of the Evangelist St. John, when he tells us that our Blessed Redeemer "came unto His own and His own received Him not."

Wearied, disappointed, cold and hungry, the weary Pilgrims journeyed on to the outskirts of Bethlehem where was located the stables for beasts, and they came to one of these environs out in the rock. There, as St. Alphonsus Liguori informs us, Mary said to Joseph: "There is no occasion to go any further; let us go into this cave and remain there." "What!" replied Joseph; "my spouse, dear thou not see that this cave is quite exposed; that it is cold and damp, and that water is running down on all sides? Dost thou not see that it is no lodging for men, but it is a shed for beasts? How can you stay here all night?" Then Mary answered: "It is nevertheless true that this stable is the regal palace in which the Eternal Son of God desires to be born on earth."

Continuing this most edifying narrative St. Alphonsus says: "No sooner had Mary entered into the cavern than she began immediately to pray; and the hour of her delivery being come, she, lowered her eyes out of reverence, spreading over her shoulders; and behold she sees a great light, she feels in her heart a heavenly joy! She casts down her eyes, and, I ask what does she see! She sees on the ground an infant, so tender and beautiful that to gift her with love, but to trembles, shrieks and stretches out his arms to show that he desires she should take him into her bosom. "I stretch forth my arms to seek the caresses of my mother," according to the revelation of St. Bridget. Mary calls Joseph: "Come, Joseph," she said; "come and see; for the Son of God is born here." Joseph comes; and when he sees Mary already born, he adores him in the midst of a torrent of sweet tears: "The old man entered, and, prostrating himself, wept for joy." Then the Blessed Virgin respectfully took her beloved Son in her arms, and placed him in her bosom. She tried to warm him by the heat of her cheeks and of her breath. "Dressing him in her cloaks and linens, she warmed him with all the joys and tenderness of a mother's love."

While this sublimely impressive scene was passing within the Grotto, the Hosts of the Eternal Father was gazing the Star of Bethlehem to its place in the heavens where—it was in guide to the Shepherds who watched their flocks by night to the birthplace of that Messiah prophesied by Jacob. And as the humble men cautiously approached, wondering concerning the extraordinary brightness of the wonderful star, a divine light stream passed thereunto in fine and mellow rays. They saw before them the form of the Arch angel Gabriel, who calmed their fear and stirred their courage by addressing them in the graceful language recorded in the gospel

"Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, that shall be to all the people

For this day is born to you a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord, in the City of David.

And this shall be a sign unto you: You shall find the infant wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger."

And the band of the Angel's message falls upon the ear of the night benighted Shepherds when they surrounded with the light of angels, of angels whose voices blending in heavenly harmony proclaimed the birth of Christ by the great glory of God in heaven and the greater peace of men on earth.

When the astonished Shepherds had recovered from the marvellous events which have taken place, they hastened to the place where enfolded with that sanctifying faith so dear to each one of the humble of heart. Without a moment's hesitation they resolved to go at once to the sacred spot designated by the Archangel—not merely to see if the Word of God was there, but in the full spirit of divinely given Faith to adore the new born Saviour.

We fully entered the rock-hewn abode of an unimportant kind, these first believers in the True God Incarnate prostrated themselves with joy and reverence before Him. They gave delectable thanks for teaching them to have faith in Jesus, and again and again they thanked God for the fulfilment of their sacrificial hearts for sending the Word made Flesh so that heaven might be opened to all the just.

Proud of the celestial propagandist which God had granted to the humble Shepherds, of being the first representatives of the latter family of the Redeemer, of being the first adore the Infant Saviour, they boldly proclaimed their faith to all the people they met during their return journey to where they left their flocks. And "the glad tidings of great joy thus proclaimed from the lips of humble angels and men, which unknown even six ages, has been annually echoed and re-echoed by the Holy Catholic Church throughout each year as it descended into the grave of the Dead."

Let the number of the Shepherds on the night of the first Christmas Eve be all generations of Catholics—an example of the living, practical faith they should have to adore the Infant Saviour, and to Hail with Mary the Virgin and adore Him at Christmas.

The Catholic Church is the Archangel of all ages. She it is who tells us to "Fear not; she it is who brings to all the faithful "tidings of great joy;" she it is who proclaims the consoling doctrine—"this day is born to you a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."

Outside the true Church of Christ there is no real religious meaning. Empty forms of religious opinion is not the Manger in which the Son of God repose. In the Catholic Church alone is the Infant Saviour adored, the Mother of God and St. Joseph venerated; To separate the Son from His Mother at the very moment of His birth, would satisfy the cold, cruel and unfeeling creed of the Calvinistic sects, but Christians has lost its heavenly life when Mary, the Mother and Joseph the Spouse, are excluded from the scene in the Stable of Bethlehem.

Let us Catholics, therefore, when Midnight Mass is celebrated, adore the Infant—as did the Shepherds of old—mantle them in their humility, their earnestness to seek Jesus Christ, and to find Him, and worship Him. Let us also be earnestness in proclaiming our holy Faith before all men as those whom the Shepherds proclaimed Heaven's Infant Saviour and Christ.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

His Eminence Cardinal Milloin, in the province of Rio, the usual presents, recently laid the foundation stone—the inscription is to the deaf and dumb at Wandali. The building will cost about £10,000.

A recent cablegram from Rome says that Cardinal Jacobini is again indisposed, but not seriously, being still able to transact State business. There is no foundation for the report that the Holy Father contemplates replacing him in the Post of Pontifical Secretary of State.

It is reported on apparently good authority—says the New York Freeman's Journal—that the so-called schoolmaster of the diocese of Albany, Ill., the Very Rev. J. J. Janssen, has been appointed, by the Holy Father, Bishop of the new Diocese of Belleville. Father Janssen has been administrator of the diocese of Alton for several years

Among the bequests of the late Dean Kenny, of the Archdiocese of Sydney, New South Wales, was a fund for supplying colonial students studying for the priesthood in Carlow College, All Hallows College, or St. Patrick's College, Sydney, with Dean's late residence as an annex to some foreign seminary.

A New York paper says that Michael Davitt's marriage to Miss Yore will take place during the coming holidays. That the couple will start East, Mr. Davitt returning in the sun, reaching New York on January 12th, as stated, that he will then be expected to lecture in Madison Square Garden. In connection with the marriage, Mr. Davitt will, on Christmas Eve, be ordained priest.

English people are rarely religious at a sentiment recently pronounced by an English bishop, who was sitting at a Mayor's feast. An old man sat next to him who exposed of studying a book. He was astonished to find it was the Bible. The Bishop said: "I am a Christian myself, and I am very ashamed to be so, for it is a strange thing for the old man that that book is hardly unknown to death.

Mr. Gladstone declares very emphatically against the Home Rule movement. He has not lectured a journal that he intends to stand by his programme for the coming session, which he will propose a measure to give to the Government a state in Irish policy in the debate upon the address, after which experts that the Home Rule will continue their allegiance to the Government. After such a fall will assure an effective settlement of the prevalent question.

The Very Rev. Robert Fulton S.J., Provincial of the New York and Maryland Provinces, has been selected by his Holiness the General of the Order to visit the Jesuit establishments in Ireland. He will leave Rome for Ireland on the 15th of January, studying the methods of the Irish Jesuits in seminaries, and during that time the Rev. Robert Fulton will act as Vice Provincial of the Order.

The Most Rev. Dr. Higgins, Bishop Kerry, in the course of an interview with the representative of the English paper and "the Irish National League deserved every encouraging and to lead them. Hoped to see a time when all the people of Ireland that without the League it would have been a bad day for the people. His Lordship concluded by a speech loyal and imperial man."

— A well-deserved tribute to the Bishop of Peoria appears in the Brooklyn Eagle when it says: "The West is going to take our sweetest poetry. There would much too long in the song of the Eastern land, but there is a conversation, a public of the schools, about it that makes it compare favorably with the first Christmas Eve. Our ground subdly of the Western empire. The American Muse has received her boulevard lots in the land of the setting sun.

— Last Monday alone we received orders by mail for over a hundred copies of the Christmas MONITOR, from persons in friends and relatives of our regular readers. And those in general from day to day, since we laid the first form of the paper, we have received the Christmas MONITOR to be sent to their acquaintances in all parts of the civilized world. Hence it is that we have enough to supply our copies for his or her friends and your order of your friend disappointed.

Mgr. Andrea Magliazzi, Private Chamberlain of his Holiness Leo XIII., died on Saturday, 20th of November, at Rome, his ordered with the consolations of religion and the benedictions of the Holy Father. Mgr. Magliazzi distinguished himself on great occasions by the eloquence of his addresses to the sovereign of the Catholics of the pen in Transcript, where he directed the night school and the Orphan Asylum, and established the Orphan Asylum of the Divine Pitti and Poor Relief. The deceased Prelate had reached the age of 72 years. R. I. P.

— W. W. Wigmore, the aged Washington millionaire, takes much interest in the Sisters of the Sacred Heart, who have a convent there. Recently he expressed a wish that the Sisters should open a school for poor children, and the Sisters complied. Mr. Wigmore now pays the tuition for such pupils as are unable to do so.

— Mr. Gladstone declares very emphatically against the Home Rule movement. He has not lectured a journal that he intends to stand by his programme for the coming session, which he will propose a measure to give to the Government a state in Irish policy in the debate upon the address, after which experts that the Home Rule will continue their allegiance to the Government. After such a fall will assure an effective settlement of the prevalent question.

The Very Rev. Robert Fulton S.J., Provincial of the New York and Maryland Provinces, has been selected by his Holiness the General of the Order to visit the Jesuit establishments in Ireland. He will leave Rome for Ireland on the 15th of January, studying the methods of the Irish Jesuits in seminaries, and during that time the Rev. Robert Fulton will act as Vice Provincial of the Order.

The Most Rev. Dr. Higgins, Bishop Kerry, in the course of an interview with the representative of the English paper and "the Irish National League deserved every encouraging and to lead them. Hoped to see a time when all the people of Ireland that without the League it would have been a bad day for the people. His Lordship concluded by a speech loyal and imperial man."

THE PLANT OF CHRISTMAS.

HOW THEY CAME, ALMOST, TO BLOSSOM FOR THE MONTH OF

The footsteps of the chronological year are the Feast of the Church. They mark events in the Divine and thirty years His Divine Spouse and Founder Jesus Christ spent in earth.

They bring vividly before us the scenes enacted upon earth, and, as we read the gospel, we can give a few hours to Him in time. In Bethlehem Heaven with His, we can hold a little Heaven. At that time, we have spent in the daily than Christmas, or what place better than Bethlehem? It was here that the Incarnation was consummated and the first step made in the Atonement.

It is true that the Son was begotten the Eternal Father in the year 1 eternity long before Creation but only in time was the Word—"the one flesh and it dwell among men." His was just the point of Creation, if as we will, not a part of the great whole.

In the fullness of time, a mass of nations nations had been committed and an infinite Justice was strictly satisfied. When was the glorious of a certain Christmas Eve.

Even With the Second Person in the Most Adorable Trinity, clothed Himself in the Eternal Father. He could not suffer a Creation, and so He made Creation a part of His nature, so that in Creation, and in Creation, and in Creation, and

Our Young Folks.

THE SHEPHERD OF SAN LUIS OBISPO.

First Prize Juvenile Story.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY MARY CLATCHEN.

Even as recent as a few years ago San Luis Obispo county was sparsely settled except about the old missions, and that grand domain with more acres than any other county in California was devoted chiefly to raising cattle and sheep. A shepherd might then tool his flocks about over the mountains miles distant and still be within the number of oriental months, being careful not to let his herds stray far away or be out of the corral at night, because of those pesky, the coyotes and wild cats, so destructive at that time to all ewes.

A shepherd once wandered far up into the mountains with his flock of a thousand or more sheep. Since seldom falls in the valleys in San Luis Obispo, yet it does fall to a considerable depth sometimes on the high or mountain side. But San Luis ranges, at a distance from the sea coast, among the crags and peaks of which the shepherd had wandered. And to be caught in a snow storm in those high mountains without any shelter and no equally as destructive as to let a flock of sheep be attacked alone with not any herder, as he would be powerless in the cold and darkness to protect them, even though the snow should melt in time to prevent the sheep from starving or perishing from cold, as it usually does.

A snowstorm began to gather one day while this herder was several miles away from his corral and camp. He could distinctly see the large snowflakes whirling in the air, and so cold that the heavens had grown dark and threatening. His sheep were gathered as speedily as the fleet and sagacious little shepherd dogs could gather them together and they started off down the mountain side as fast as they could go, but despite the lonelily below where the snow falls down in the valleys. The time was early Spring, and the season of dropping lambs now at hand, and the shepherd's flock being chiefly ewes, he was obliged to drive slowly while maintaining as high a rate of speed as practicable over the deep gulches, among cliffs high and steep, and narrow mountain passes. It had been a close shave for him, and he could reach camp or even get below the snow-belt that night before the snow had fallen to such a depth as to prevent further progress or consciousness of the darkness becoming more dense every moment. An old ewe that became exhausted began to fall behind and to bleat piteously. To slacken speed would be to increase the danger of losing the whole flock for a single sheep. But the plaintive cries and vain efforts of the old ewe to keep up with the rest, caused the shepherd to select one of his faithful shepherd dogs, as could well be spared to the main behind and bring along the sheep that could not keep pace with the rest of the flock.

As the shepherd continued on his course down the mountain with the rest of his flock, he heard the coyotes beginning their saturnalia of howling in the distance, and then he had but little doubt in his mind that the poor old ewe that had been left behind would furnish a helpless victim for their repast, although he knew well the small shepherd-dog would defend his charge as well as he could, and bring her down if possible safe to the corral in the valley below.

The shepherd reached his cabin in the valley that night, with the rest of the flock and corralled them. And then, fearing that his valuable dog might also fall a prey to the wild animals on the mountain ranges, he returned his steps to where he heard the old ewe and dog last, but he had scarcely made to attract a response from them, he received for answer only the howls of the hungry coyotes. Returning to his hut he slept until nearly daylight and then he resolved once more to search for the missing sheep and his faithful "collie".

The snowstorm had abated, but all traces of the animals he sought for had been covered deeply under the succeeding snowfall, and help the tracks of the coyotes that prowled about after the storm abated were visible. Conjecturing rightly that the scattered sheep could not have traveled far away from where he had sent her last, the shepherd determined upon a more minute search of the immediate vicinity, expecting at every turn to come upon the skeleton of the sheep and its faithful guardian, when to his joyous surprise he saw standing on the highest and most inaccessible peak in the vicinity, the dog and the sheep.

The first rays of the sun began to gild the giddy height where stood the dog, who watched one alone the old ewe, but also the beautiful little lambs, which had been driven snow on which they lay, all alive and well, and seeming perfectly contented. The sagacity of the dog taught him that the safety for his charge was aloft from the frequented haunts of carnivorous beasts offered by this glittering eminence above the wolf-beaten track.

Symbolic of the glorious old Catholic Church was that glittering emblem peak which stood as a veritable "City of Refuge" to the little lambs. Emblematic those of the purity and innocence of the gracious Redeemer, in honor of whose Birthday this story is contributed, in the hope that little children who peruse it will esteem cheerfully always to the guidance of the sagacity of their parents and pastor, to whose wisdom and affection, as natural and proper guides representing the good Shepherd, in the world of better tracks of sin and destruction for being to keep yourselves free from evil, as we know not if, and which invariably must lead to our temporal and eternal perdition—but for such assistance.

It only remains to tell with what enthusiastic delight the shepherd ascended the high steep bluff to where lay the innocent-looking little lambs and took them in his arms and started toward camp, followed by the mother sheep and the faithful shepherd-dog, refusing as he returned over the rough steep mountains on the beautiful lesson of faith he had received, and the providence of God over even the beasts of the field, in having placed in them the instinct to preserve themselves from dangers where escape had appeared hardly possible.

After all my readers may better imagine the enthusiasm of the shepherd than to attempt to give a description of it. Needless to add that he watched particularly the growth of those lambkins into rollicking lambs, then into demure old sheep, and that he never showed them but he thought of the profit they had been to him apart from their fleece. And the faithful "collie" found his reward in a sheltered nook and considerate treatment in his old days, when he would no longer brave the tempest or withstand the attacks of coyotes.

But as widely different from those as are the soul and life of human beings from the lives of animals, are the rewards of God's faithful Priests and the satisfied blissfulness of human creatures who have submitted cheerfully and with becoming gratitude to the teaching of Jesus Christ. His Holy Catholic Church, which truly stands as the snow-capped height to the overlying hills and valleys represented by the various sects which, at least, are but as the approaches to the pure atmosphere that surrounds her. Or, to to often happens, the non-Catholic sects are but landslides broken away from the high spots building down into the abysses, scarifying only her portions or lowlinesses where for rock-ribbed sides gleam above the floating clouds.

Shall we not then contribute each his humble mite to the commemoration of the anniversary of the birthed Him who left us this heritage, to which in the hour of dire affliction—every Catholic can return as to the "City of Refuge," both temporal and eternal.

A FORTUNATE CHRISTMAS.

Second Prize Juvenile Story.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY ROBERT E. JORAN

It was on Christmas Eve in the year 18 . . . , that a young man was walking down the great city of New York. It was about 7:30 o'clock in the evening, and the houses were brilliantly lighted, and the people were seen flocking around Christmas trees, which could be seen especially on 5th Avenue, in the homes of the rich.

But outside one of these homes, a tattered boy could be seen on his upstoop, trying to get a glance inside at the merriment, and wishing very much that he too, could be admitted. But he was poor and lived in Mott street, where "Santa Claus" hardly ever visits, or where a Christmas tree is rarely seen.

"I wish I could go in and warm myself," said Tommy Turner, outside the house, as he gave a trouble from cold. But one of the children inside saw him and threw an apple and shouted out loudly, for which Tommy was truly thankful and as he was eating them, the lady of the house came out and ordered the little "snapper" away from "Santa Claus" place and wondered to his own home.

His home, if home it might be called, was in a four-story house, occupied by tenants of the lowest degree.

The way there was through a door which creaked where moved, through a hallway which looked as though it was painted black from dirt and time, and thence to his rooms, which consisted of three, the kitchen, bedroom, and stoop-room.

When he opened the door his mother could be seen sewing by the light of a candle. His little sister ahead a baby was asleep on a mattress on the floor, covered with a ragged quilt.

"Where have you been, Tommy?" said his mother, as he came in.

"Only just taking a little walk," he said. "Have you any bread in the house?" asked Tom.

She answered him with a negative nod.

"I'll get a loaf of bread from the baker as I have a penny," and as he said this, he took his ragged cap and turned out of the door. He went along with his head down thinking, when he suddenly espied something half buried in the snow. "It is money, he exclaimed, and then he looked to see if anybody was looking, but nobody was in sight.

He went into a door way to examine it, and the first thing met his sight was "B. Dennis, 169 5th Avenue."

"I will bring it to house," he said, as he turned off. He soon reached his house and rapping the door-bell. A servant in livery answered the summons, and demanded what he wanted. He answered: "I want to see Mr. Dennis."

"What do you want to see him for?" the man asked gruffly.

"I've got something for him," said Tommy, timidly.

"Well, wait a minute, and I will tell him." Pretty soon a man with a good-natured look on his face came out and said: "Well, my little man, what can I do for you?"

"Please, sir, he then began and out came the pocket-book from under his coat.

"Let me see if I can name it," he said, as he tried in his inner pockets. "Why! so I have. What did you get it?"

"I found it on the Broadway, as I was going on an errand."

"What is your name, my boy, and where do you live?" asked Mr. Dennis, pacifically putting him on the hook.

"My name is Tommy Turner, and I live on Mott street," said Tommy, wonderingly.

"Have you eaten your supper?"

"No, sir."

"Well, come in and warm yourself and have something to eat."

Tommy followed him through a spacious hall, on carpets which sank at least an inch at every step. Soon he came to a large room in which a cheerful fire was burning brightly. Mr. Dennis tapped a bell and a servant came in, to whom he said, "Give this boy all he wants to eat, and pack up a basket of victuals for him. Tommy was ushered into the kitchen and the smell of the meat was so delicious, that he almost forgot himself, until reminded by the servant's gruff remark: "Here, sonny, eat till you get tired." Tommy did eat, and did not get tired as soon as he was expected to by the servant, who watched him eating with amazement. The servant turned away and muttered to himself: "I guess that little boy is hungry." Pretty soon he returned with a large basket which he filled with bread, meat, pies, cakes, a lot of tea, crackers, and many other delicacies. When he got through, Mr. Dennis appeared and asked, "Have you eaten enough?"

"Yes, sir," Tommy answered gaily, for his stomach was "fuller than it ever was before."

"Well, Tommy, I guess I will go home now, because my mother does not know where I am.

"All right, my boy," said Mr. Dennis, as he gave the boy a letter, "open this when you go home, and whenever you are in trouble, call on me and I will help you."

"I will, sir," said Tommy, gaily.

Mr. Dennis looked after him and said: "This boy will make his fortune some day, if I'm not mistaken."

Tommy soon reached his humble home. He opened the door and his mother exclaimed: "Where in the world did you get all those things that are under your arm, and where have you been?"

"Here now, mamma, is some bread, tea and crackers, and make poor Sis up to give them something to eat. I guess she must be hungry."

"Where did you get these?" asked Mrs. Turner, as she woke the little baby up to feed her. Tommy then related to her all about the pocket-book, but did not tell her about the letter Mr. Dennis gave him.

"He must be a kind man to give you all these things, but at least, he gave you all your supper."

"I had my supper at his house, and I im going out to see the windows in the Bowery."

He answered, as he quickly hurried out, leaving his mother in anxiety about his absence. Tommy went under a gas-light and opened the letter, when out dropped a paper. He picked it up and unfolded it hurriedly. "Oh! it is some money!" he will bring it immediately home and mother will be so much surprised. He said to himself as he hurried home and said to his mother: "Here mamma, is a Christmas present, I wish I could give you this much more, giving you his own family gives fifty dollar bill. After a moment's reflection, he said, "Mr. Dennis promised to help me when I m in trouble and I will go to him and tell him that he can get no work, so we can pay the rent, and get a supper."

"Well, then, Tommy, get up early and go to church first, and then call there, and you had better go to bed early as it the morning you will be more refreshed for the work."

"Yes, ma'am, and mamma I think Sis is getting a cold, because she has an awful cough that sounds painful. They had such a good night and went to sleep.

The next morning found Tommy up bright and early, building the fire, setting the table and sweeping the kitchen. Mrs. Turner got up with a sigh and said:

"Tommy, this is very rude; I wish you would get some cough medicine at the drug store on your way home from church."

"Wait until I make her a little warm tea and then I will go to church, he said.

He went into the kitchen, made the tea and some toast, and then with his mother's large, spare prayer-book in his hand, he left the house. The church was about five blocks from the house, on about twenty minutes walk. He hurried there, and being pretty early, he took a front seat in the gallery and prayed for his father, who was now dead nearly five years. He received a temperance on that Christmas so he did nearly every month. Church was over in an hour and he hurried to the drug store to get the medicine, and was to let his mother be ready for the next Mass. He got home soon and ate his sunny meal of tea, toast and cake, and then said, they remembered a very good one. Mrs. Turner went to church saying:

"It cough! I think I ought to go to church, and what I will get cold."

"All right, ma," said Tommy as he looked after her, thinking how she walked day by day to bring him up. She returned from church, and found Sis asleep in her cradle, and was now studying a grammar which he had to prepare from Miss Michaels, who lived in a brown stone front. Tommy left Mr. Dennis house, which he soon arrived at. He rang the bell and the same servant answered, and said, "Well, Tommy, what do you want?"

"Please, sir, I have a long talk with Mr. Dennis and asked him if he could get him some work as he needed money very much so."

"Why, I just advertised for a boy to deliver," he said, after a while, "I don't think you will do."

"Why, sir" asked Tommy, wondering.

"Why, you don't look robust."

"No, sir. But I only run hours every night, and I can work in the house of a lady whose name is Miss Michaels, and who wants to be a good teacher. "Can you do examples, and spell well, and write a good persuasive?"

"Miss Michaels judged he good in them. Here is a sample of my penmanship. I'll try to prove that, if you will let me signed his name in a neat manner.

"Well, I'll try you.

"All right, sir, said Tommy, happily, as he left the house and went to my office at this place on Broadway, and found Tommy a seat.

"All right, sir, said Tommy, happily, as he left the house and went to my office at this place on Broadway, and found Tommy a seat.

He reached his house, and opening the door, exclaimed joyously, "Mamma, I'm going to call at his office tomorrow, and maybe we can get enough money to move out of this place."

That day he spent his time in cleaning around, and doing many chores about the place. In the evening Tommy, his mother and his sister to supper, when there was some very merry making. When they got home, they went immediately to bed and slept very well. The next morning Tommy was up at five o'clock in the house, when he was asleep, the little girl was fast asleep. He soon left all useful. He then made up some coffee and Tommy set out for Mr. Dennis's office. He reached there in due time and found it a large mercantile establishment, with many busy clerks writing. He went up to one of them and asked:

"Is Mr. Dennis here?"

"No, but he will be in a few minutes, sit down and wait a while."

Tommy sat down and was soon absorbed watching the busy scene around him. But his reverie was soon broken by the appearance of Mr. Dennis himself, with the boy's letter.

"So you've here ahead of me I'm glad to see you. Come into my office, I want to talk to you." Tommy was shown into the office, where the gentleman said:

"Well, Tommy, I've got a place for you, if you think you can do the work."

"Yes, sir, I can do anything you want me to do."

"Well, I'm sorry I can't give you a place in my office, but I can give you a place in my house, if you think you can get on knew that Jack was well acquainted with the Channel, and went below to prepare Cleona for the bathing. Always birth, followed by a terrific crash resumed him to a sense of his danger. It took only a minute to sever the cable (had Jack been prisoner, and then, clutching Cleona in his strong arms, he rushed upon deck. Such, indeed, was evidently his intention, but the boat was endeavoring to cut loose the boat from the davits. No matter had she been lowered then she was as unused beside the wheel. The cool-headed sailor ran to the helm and seeing a bundle of strange cords, wound them around the body of Cleona O'Sullivan. Having secured them around her waist he adjured her to jump into the water along with Mackworthy. A leap from the bulwark and the waters closed around her final form; but to an instant Mackworth's helping hand was on her arm, which Jack seized with steely resolve. The sandy beach was reached in forty yards, and at equal distance brought ashore within the hospitable walls of the Bros. Mansion where they were royally received, and furnished with dry clothing.

A FOILED FOE.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

Those who had not yet set out for Mass Mount to attend at the Midnight Mass, hurried down to the beach, and were so turned leaning on a bitter at unconscious sans in whom they recognized Sir Charles Wilmes, the enemy and cruel persecutor of their race. Yet they treated him as good Catholics must always treat a persecutor, by returning good for evil.

Mackrich and Cleona remonstrated their presence to Father Eagan, and he had an additional motive for thanking God who had brought them in safety through such dangers. Half an hour's brisk riding brought them to Mass Mount where they were received only as those who are "lost and found" can be received, and where the whole congregation offered up a solemn thanksgiving to God for this miracle of mercy in restoring to them their lost and loved ones.

Most of the congregation remained in the chapel after the Midnight Mass and listened with pleasure and profit to the beautiful sermon preached by the celebrated and self-sacrificing Father Eagan, who explained to them the Gospel of the feast, which is indeed a Gospel of love. Adverting to their sufferings, he reminded them of the language of their Divine Master—"The disciple must not be above His Master," and "If you shall be despised and persecuted for My Name's sake. The Master suffered every species of insult and ignominy at the hands of His malicious persecutors, and died the ignominious death of the Cross, but rose triumphant from sin and hell. It was better to suffer with the Master in the true Faith and for His Name sake than to live in the luxury and licentiousness of their persecutors. But in your sufferings be cheerful and fear not for the Church of Christ. The power of Pagan Rome could not destroy it even in its infancy. In vain did Maximinian strive to stem the current of its power. Luther directed against her the passions of men and let loose in her path the demon of Discord, but when he thought her overwhelmed in the tomb which he had created, great was his chagrin and disappointment at beholding her emerge from the storm strengthened and invigorated by the blood of her heroes and her martyrs. The royal rage of Henry the VIII., and the cunning policy of Elizabeth have been directed against her in vain, for every tomb of our Holy Church is impregnated with the indestructible vitality of the divine promise.

Such were some of the leading thoughts of the sermon on that occasion, as preserved in the romantic vicinity of Mass Mount even also to memoriae that be never, as reported, said otherwise.

After a prolonged wangle with the Court and lawyers for the Crown, Hardy finally succeeded in secured the right to cross-examine the different witnesses, from whom the Government obtained the affidavits upon which the prosecution is largely relying for its testimony. The case was adjourned to give an opportunity for receiving the evidence of these witnesses.

The trial will be resumed on Monday next, when the witnesses for the defence will be called.

Dillon's Arrest a Help to the League.

Upper Canada, December 17.—Hon. Mr. Speaker of Parliament rules in the Parliament Buildings on December 12th as follows. The prosecution of Dillon, Sullivan and others for conspiracy, the plan of the Nationalist campaign necessary, has given it more impetus than would a hundred member meetings. Dillon lawyers, one of whom is Healy, have these objects in view first, to question the right of the Court of Queen's Bench to adjudicate at all in this prosecution, which has been instituted under an obsolete statute of Edward III. Second, to turn the tour counts, while the prosecution lasts, into a platform for the propagation of the doctrine for which Dillon is indicted, and third, to drag prosecutions, in order to make the prosecution more effectual and amass Dillon's fame all the country repeating his offence as long as possible.

MORE BRITISH INJUSTICE.

Dillon's Conviction a Foregone Conclusion.

New York, Dec. 11.—T. P. Gill's cable special to the Times from Ireland of Dec. 10th says: The Judges today decided to refuse to allow Dillon to examine witnesses in his defense. This is a sample of Castle justice, which Dillon showed his sense of by instructing his counsel forthwith to cease pleading, and he will benefit address the Court in protest against the action of the Judges. Dillon's counsel, Messrs. Healy, Gill, Wanted and A. Fitzgerald, Q.C., and subpoenaed a number of witnesses, which they intend to call in proof of the defense, but they will not be allowed to do so. The Judges have ruled that the Crown prosecution is not bound to prove the charge against Dillon, which has been laid in the indictment, and that it is competent for the Crown

MOLLY MURPHY'S ACT OF MERCY.

AN IRISH BALLAD OF REAL LIFE.

Molly Murphy, five and forty, lived along the Liffey's strand—
Lived by selling fish and cockles—and she sighed for Mooney's hand.
Mooney was a man of fortune, owned a pony and a cart,
And, oh, mavourneen! 'twas poured pour Molly Murphy's heart.

Molly's heart was very tender, though her hand was rough and red,
Scarred by fifty lines and creases in the toil for daily bread;
Molly's voice was far from dulcet, and her robe was somewhat loud,
Hoarse above the din of purchase in the little market crowd.

[illegible]

With a cowl behind her shoulders, sturdy Molly might be seen;
There is little good in grabbing, still I think that I may say,
Had the world or Molly Murphy truly been a useful day!

Mooney's mother lay in fever, Mooney's aid was stalwart down;
"This is taking," said the doctor, who had driven out from town,
"It may be their death be more than—" all the onlookers shrank in dread—
"Still, so there is none to nurse them—" "I will nurse them," Molly said.

"It may cost your life, good woman," said the doctor cold and dry,
"God is good!" was all she answered, purpose planted in her eye.
"Heavily spoken!" cried the dames, "But the man will soon grow wild;
After that—should he get through it—you must nurse him like a child."

Then he sought his car and left her where the son and mother lay,
One at each end of the cabin, as the daylight died away;
Hovering between life and death, Molly watched the waning light,
And she thought, "He'll rave to-morrow—he must have the priest to-night!"

But the man had all gone fishing out upon the evening tide,
And the hooded nuns of Donore and the women terrified.
Years before the full destruction devastated all their shore,
And the recollection filled their frightened hearts for evermore.

No, she must not nurse the neighbors; she herself will betas the priest,
Though he live far down the parish—two long Irish miles at least.
With a measured benediction on the little blanketed abode,
Molly hooped the door behind her and proceeded down the road.

When she reached and told the curate, suddenly she saw him stirred
Like a twig that sways and trembles exhaustedly in a strong wind.
"Father, dear, your child is anguish, 'you are young and far from strong!
I will run for Father Brady—it is not so very long."

"I will go," the young priest answered, death like pallor on his cheek;
"Oh, your mavourneen—no, scumlin—this is Father Brady's week!
He is old, his nerves are sturdy—as your own will be some day,
Pious God!" Molly exclaimed, half blind, as he hastened up her way.

In the solemn hours of morning, when the twilight was the red
Feels the awful sense of silence weigh upon his heart like lead,
Molly watched her fever patients and her heart went forth in prayer,
Grateful she had loosed the Father and had brought his blessing there.

All the days she long had cherished, often with a sense of shame,
For the rough and sturdy Mooney now she felt was free from blame.
Blessed love that finds occasion! Love unselfish, brave, serene,
Makes the proudest queen a woman—makes the humblest woman queen!

Mooney cured, and in all his raving told what Molly had not known—
Told the secret of his passion for the dark-haired Kate Malone;
Kate Malone was young and blooming, dowed with rich'ness fair and smart,
And poor Molly, as she listened, felt the words go through her heart.

Did she leave him? Friends, I fear me I have told my tale in vain;
If you question them of Molly—honest Molly, poor and plain,
Not she tended sun and smoke days and nights when both were ill!
Then, as first the doctor said it, proved them gently like a child.

And when Mooney's strength came to him and he mixed once more with life,
Gratitude within him prompted and he sought to make her wife.
"No," she said, "you love another; love is not for such as me;
Kate, no doubt, will make you happy—I would rather be free."

Kate Malone is Mrs. Mooney; children crowd her cottage door;
Molly Murphy rests in market as she did in days of yore.
While her back can bear a burthen Molly's street is pretty sure,
After that—well, there's the workhouse—truth's last tribute to the poor!

A JOYOUS CHRISTMAS.

FOURTH PRIZE STORY.

Written for the Monitor by "The Inquisitive Boy."

CHAPTER I.

MARY STAN'S SECRET.

"Now that Nettie's birthday comes next month, I think we had better give a party in honor of the event," said Mrs. Conway at the breakfast table one morning.

"By all means," replied Mr. Conway, "as that everything is on a grand scale, for I do dislike those mean birthday parties."

Being a worldly woman, Mrs. Conway needed no second admonition to shout having a grand party. Preparations were at once entered upon and everything seemed to announce a brilliant reception.

Mr. Conway had been a poor man in his day, but by his thrifty, frugal ways had secured the baksheesh of fortune, and when he retired from work was one of New York's oldest and most respected citizens. The story was also told, that when she married, but when her husband's speculations looked prosperous she positively moved heaven and earth from her poor friends and gave them to understand I lay claim to relationship between them. Three children blessed their union, and Nettie, the youngest, who was just approaching her eleventh birthday, was to celebrate the festival in the way we have mentioned. Only the wealthiest and most aristocratic children were to be present, and to them that needed it not was to be given everything that was sweet and delicious. They were to rent their proud little bodies on soft, easy chairs, and partake of the richest confectionery.

The day of the party came, and all, save one of the guests had arrived. The absent one was Nettie's best friend, so when her carriage stopped before the house, Nettie forgetting her dignity in honor of the day, ran out to meet her arrival. As the two were ascending the steps, Nettie's pallid face drew a frown of vexation, but, behold a little ragged child, who had evidently seen better days, stepped out of the shadow and said, "Please, sir, give me a nickle?"

"Why, Conway," was the reply, "Nettie Conway."

"Ho, ho," thought Mrs. Somers, "I wonder if she also remembers me."

After all the guests had been received by the host and hostess, a spirited dance commenced. In the midst of the dance, Mary found herself quite close to Mrs. Fothan, and asked eagerly to catch the sound of her voice. In a short time she heard her speaking, and was sorry that she could not hear what the child wanted, told her to come to her and she would see what could be done for her. Presently, a kind looking gentleman appeared and asked the little girl what the matter was. A very pathetic little tale followed. Her name was Mary Ryan and her parents were both dead. She had no friends and was obliged to roam the streets and beg for bread. The gentleman listened attentively to her story, and when she had finished, asked her if she knew who he was.

"No," replied the child, "but I think you must be some good man, because I see so many holy pictures on the walls."

"I am Father Donna," was the answer, "and as I know the Supervisor of the Sisters of Charity, I'll speak to her about you to-morrow. Would you like to live with the Sisters, my child?"

"Oh, yes," was the reply.

It was not long before Mary Ryan found herself sitting in the sparingly but neatly furnished parlor of the Sisters. Mary was highly delighted when the Sister signified her willingness to take her, at Father Donna's request.

It was no wonder, then, if Mary grew up in frolicsome and virtue, sheltered as she was by a house of prayer. It fills one with devotion to stay for a day beneath a religious home, and to listen and notice all that happens. The noisome buildings and the scarcely audible voices, with this great recollection which comes so naturally to the educated, dismay show the observer the great end for which they are uttering. When some leave the careful shelter of the convent they gradually break the restraints that have been placed around them and give themselves up to wicked or worldly ways. But this is not the fault of their trainers. When we consider the fact that there was a traitor among Christ's twelve chosen friends, it is not to be wondered at if in our day there is occasionally found a Judas among religiously trained people. But Mary proved true to her early teaching when she left her convent home. A position in a business house had been procured for her with a lair lady, who, by her pleasing manner, ability in work and kindness to everyone, Mary rose high in the estimation of her employers. At the end of two years she was placed in the highest position in the store, with a munificent salary. Everything seemed to announce a brilliant reception.

Mary had been a poor man in his day, but by his thrifty, frugal ways had secured the baksheesh of fortune, and when he retired from work was one of New York's oldest and most respected citizens. The story was also told, that when she married, but when her husband's speculations looked prosperous she positively moved heaven and earth from her poor friends and gave them to understand I lay claim to relationship between them. Three children blessed their union, and Nettie, the youngest, who was just approaching her eleventh birthday, was to celebrate the festival in the way we have mentioned. Only the wealthiest and most aristocratic children were to be present, and to them that needed it not was to be given everything that was sweet and delicious. They were to rent their proud little bodies on soft, easy chairs, and partake of the richest confectionery.

The day of the party came, and all, save one of the guests had arrived. The absent one was Nettie's best friend, so when her carriage stopped before the house, Nettie forgetting her dignity in honor of the day, ran out to meet her arrival. As the two were ascending the steps, Nettie's pallid face drew a frown of vexation, but, behold a little ragged child, who had evidently seen better days, stepped out of the shadow and said, "Please, sir, give me a nickle?"

"Why, Conway," was the reply, "Nettie Conway."

"Ho, ho," thought Mrs. Somers, "I wonder if she also remembers me."

After all the guests had been received by the host and hostess, a spirited dance commenced. In the midst of the dance, Mary found herself quite close to Mrs. Fothan, and asked eagerly to catch the sound of her voice. In a short time she heard her speaking, and was sorry that she could not hear what the child wanted, told her to come to her and she would see what could be done for her. Presently, a kind looking gentleman appeared and asked the little girl what the matter was. A very pathetic little tale followed. Her name was Mary Ryan and her parents were both dead. She had no friends and was obliged to roam the streets and beg for bread. The gentleman listened attentively to her story, and when she had finished, asked her if she knew who he was.

"No," replied the child, "but I think you must be some good man, because I see so many holy pictures on the walls."

"I am Father Donna," was the answer, "and as I know the Supervisor of the Sisters of Charity, I'll speak to her about you to-morrow. Would you like to live with the Sisters, my child?"

"Oh, yes," was the reply.

It was not long before Mary Ryan found herself sitting in the sparingly but neatly furnished parlor of the Sisters. Mary was highly delighted when the Sister signified her willingness to take her, at Father Donna's request.

It was no wonder, then, if Mary grew up in frolicsome and virtue, sheltered as she was by a house of prayer. It fills one with devotion to stay for a day beneath a religious home, and to listen and notice all that happens. The noisome buildings and the scarcely audible voices, with this great recollection which comes so naturally to the educated, dismay show the observer the great end for which they are uttering. When some leave the careful shelter of the convent they gradually break the restraints that have been placed around them and give themselves up to wicked or worldly ways.

CHAPTER II.

A NIGHT REVERY.

"I pen my word, Mary," exclaimed Paul Somers one night, "but Central Fayetteville seem unlike out of every court I visit, money and his left hand.

"Is it possible?" asked Mary "where when Providence caused his sweetest call in his way.

"I'm sure, now," and the happy father, "I'm sure of your forgiveness, but what calling wife—your mother?"

"I'll answer for her, replied Alphonsus, "by telling you that she will only be too willing to forget and forgive. So come with us and see her."

Holding to their earnest persuasion, Mr. Forbes went with his sons to see his wife. Her joy was so overpowering, he was glad for courage, and was about to turn away, when the first sweet word and he was quite with his father, while Alphonsus sent lately his mother's room, and very thoroughly yet hurriedly told her what occurred. There was no need of asking Mrs. Forbes to forgive her husband. For, forgetting the unfortunate condition he had left her in, she remembered only his return as she descended the steps to meet him.

"Oh, Conrad," she exclaimed, as she ran forward to them, "and so you've returned.

It was little to say but the tone of the voice and the expression of the face, conveyed volumes to the listening heart of the man who wandered home to be would be received. Language cannot express the sentiments of the two. One really penitent for the wrong he had done the other willing to pardon his error. Later on Mr and Mrs. Somers even called in and the truly penitent husband and father by his tears and looks, thanked them for their kindness more than all his words could have done.

"I hope, said Mrs. Somers, "that you don't mind leaving us. The boys must be gone from home and you and your husband can stay here.

"I cannot bear to leave you," replied Mrs. Forbes.

"If it pleases you to stay, Nettie," put in Mr. Forbes, "you can easily do. I can give much of my wealth to Mr Somers, and thus make a little recompense.

"I shall not accept your money," replied Mr Somers, somewhat indignant at the proposal.

After much talking it was at last decided that the parties should live in the same house. Two weeks later Ignatius and Alphonsus left home prepared to enter as priests in their different orders. Their fathers dismissed at the steps they had taken but finally relented when he saw how glad and happy his wife appeared. Shortly after his son's departure, Mrs. Forbes took sick and what the doctors could not rightly determine. Anxiety and sorrow were the main causes of the sickness, but the physicians could do no good but they must have thought. Her husband was her faithful attendant. All one and luxury were hers, and though she seemingly cared for the delicacies that were placed before her, still was delicious were presented for her every day. It was her fondness that Central Forbes learned his first lesson in religion. He had been very cold with the simplicity of the formalism, of his wife's mass, so different from the mass she was first married, when everything had to do the network and grandeur. Everything in her present believes was centralized in blue and white, and when he asked her the reason, she told him that blue was the colors of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and that everything should be consecrated to the life of Christ. His mother, and other lady friends, had taught him the meaning of the Forbes' lord her husband all about her religion, and often sitting in his lap, the earnest way of speaking. By degrees Mr. Forbes gave the nothingness of other religions, which have no foundation, alone whereon to rest their faith, and the beauty of the Catholic religion, which has for its foundation the Eternal Rock of Ages, and the Eternal Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Mr. Forbes was a man of high and noble character, and when he once saw the truth, he was not ashamed to acknowledge it. Yet he was not

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1886.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

The offices of the MONITOR are now located at

536 KEARNY STREET,

(first-floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

— A MERRY CHRISTMAS TO ALL OUR READERS!

— The British Parliament will meet on Thursday, January 13th.

— Mr. T. D. Sullivan, M. P., was on the 1st inst. re-elected Lord Mayor of Dublin.

— His Eminence Cardinal Newman is, it is said, engaged in writing his autobiography.

— Remember the poor of your parish when contributing your Christmas alms.

— A Holy Christmas makes a Happy New Year.

— A national demonstration in favor of Home Rule for Scotland will be held at Edinburgh on the 12th of January.

— Catholics who do not receive God into their hearts at Christmas cannot expect to find Him in their homes.

— One wing of St. Francis College and Monastery at Loretto, Pa., was burned last week. Loss $25,000.

— It is officially announced that the Rev. H. J. McManus, rector of St. John's Church, Baltimore, has been made a Monsignor by his Holiness Leo XIII.

— The Right Rev. Abbot Francis Pierron, aet. twenty-six Monks of the Trapping Order left Dynamitt recently by the steamship Tartar en route for Natal, where there is a Monastery of their Order.

— Amsterdam, which has about 80,000 Catholics, is about to have five new churches. It has recently founded a university, conducted by the Jesuits who are admitted as members of the learned societies of Holland.

— Rev. Peter Fitzpatrick, S. J., one of the pastors of St. Ignatius Church, Baltimore, died at Loyola College, on Dec. 19th, of paralysis of the heart, aged forty-eight. He was educated at Georgetown College, in Washington, and at Mount St. Mary's, Emmettsburg, Md.

— The Advent Pastoral Letter of Bishop Bagshawe, of the Diocese of Nottingham, England, is attracting attention. The Bishop in this denounces tithes for the support of the Established Church as an unjust Protestant tax, and recommends Catholics to resist payment.

— Cardinal Simor of Gran, the Primate of Hungary, who recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his priesthood amid much pomp, is the son of a shoemaker. He is the relative of the Hungarian Jesuit. From the hands of Cardinal Simor Franz Joseph received in 1867, the crown of St. Stephen.

— The secular press of Boston are discussing the feasibility of dividing the school fund so as to do justice to the Catholics and others who pay taxes, but cannot conscientiously partake of the benefit of it. They seem to admit the justice of the proposition, and are discussing the best means of carrying it out. The Boston Pilot says: "The question should be not fairly, liberally and without prejudice."

— His Grace Archbishop Walsh, in the course of a recent interview with a special correspondent, said he could not conceive why not of authority amply empowered by the primate of Ireland to unite in condemnation and anathema against those who prefer Catholics must abstain from meat on Fridays, while some non-Catholics eat meat for two or three days. Will Mr. Beecher please note, as any ecclesiastical canonists ever passed by Pope or Bishop of the Catholic Church upon non-Catholics who thus feast on Friday? Again, Catholics must confess their sins, which Protestants live and die without going through this trying ordeal. Does the Church crime these thinks? Yes, at all—the Infallible—in all charity, that every Christian acts in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience, and—outside those in her fold—she leaves all men free to construe the laws of God according to the light that is in them.

In the same sun, presumably does the Catholic Church look upon the marriage contract between Protestants of any kind, or non-Catholics of no belief. Their unions are legitimate, they are of binding force, and when Mr. Beecher puts on his Ecclesiastic Pantoufles and boards as a cardinal, he will know that Mr. Beecher's unions are illegitimate, and that the offspring of the new Native-American party can desire to organize, hence they issue and venture this Pastoral on Mixed Marriages so as to evoke a Satanic spirit of opposition to the Catholic Church, and thus rekindle political prejudices upon the waves of which pool of prejudice they have thus created. In order to accomplish this nefarious scheme they cover with the shine of calumny the fair fame of every married female by placing them in a position before the public which in-law, human or divine—never intended they should occupy, but such degradation of them is charged to every man—completely serves the purpose of these politicians who imagine that by hoeing the anti-Catholic rag over their fabrications, and by covering their falsehood with the American flag—which they hope will receive a portion of every Protestant's patriotism—they can induce a community to join with them in their proposed crusade against the Catholic Church.

But we can tell these foolish historical firebrands that they are wasting their spare time trying to deceive the public upon the attitude of the Catholic Church regarding non-Catholic marriage. Hence Mr. M. D. Berack and the bigots at the back of him who have belonged to the Bishops of this Province with all their blackguardism and billingsgate their bigoted hatred of the Catholic Church.

Impossible—we say—that any man, much less one Catholic unremitting, who has been long enough in the Catholic church, and the non-observance of which rule and regulation of the Church—not for the time being the acquaintance of the Bishops of this Province, or Bishop of the Catholic Church in California, who has been long enough in the Church to know that such a

MAURICE BRADY AND MABEL BROWN.

A Christmas Legend of Irish Love and Valor.

WRITTEN BY WILLIAM COLLINS.

"A Brown and merry Christmas to you, pretty Mabel Brown,
With your fair and wavy tresses on your shoulders flowing down;
But what can be the reason that you turn so sad away,
And frown so dark upon this blessed Christmas Day?"

This spoke young Maurice Brady to his sweetheart, Mabel Brown,
As, going to Mass, he met her that morn in Cahir town.
But by his gentle greeting the maiden turned aside,
And thus, in lowering anger, she scornfully replied:

"Shame on you, Maurice Brady, thus to insult by the way,
When many a gallant comrade is upon the hills to-day.
The man who loves not Ireland, scor wants to see her free,
Had better seek some English girl, nor speak to such as me."

Then scornfully she left him, and passed the chapel door.
He lingered at the iron gate long after Mass was over,
And she never looked upon him, but swept in silence by
With a proud and smiling bosom and defiance in her eye.

Long and deeply pondered Maurice, as through the little chapel,
And all day long his brow was sad, but not a word he said;
But that night, when all were sleeping, by the bright moon's pleasant glow,
With his rifle on his shoulder he marched to Aghrim.

In the glen the boys were mustered, and the pickets on the hill,
Night and day, were closely watching every pass by stream and rill;
And as Maurice glanced the river, that ran winding through the glen,
He was long and lonily greeted by a thousand stalwart men.

With their pikes and rifles ready, by the camp-fire's glowing light,
Sat that valiant band of brothers on that holy Christmas night;
And, as dawned the morning early, came the warning deep and low—
"The English troops are marching on the glen of Aghrim."

Closely hid among the brushes on the river's sloping banks,
Waiting for their leader's order stood the Irish rebel ranks;
Not a whispered word was spoken till the English gained the glen,
Then out from brake and thicket leaped the gallant Munstermen.

With a volley from their rifles and a ringing Irish cheer,
They rushed against the foeman with the fierceness of the deer,
And around the old flag rallied till the embowered, sinking low,
Saw the English fold and rested in the glen of Aghrim.

From the rifles of the rebels ran the red-coats, far and nigh,
And quickly followed Maurice with his comrades by his side;
They cheered them, and they chased them, till the evening sun went down,
And they piked the last red bandit in the streets of Cahir town.

As Maurice, with his rifle, stands upon the crowded street,
He looks up toward a window, and two loving glances meet,
For there stands pretty Mabel and a smile is in her eye,
And wire her head on Irish flag is waving proud and high.

Soon, before the open window did the Irish rebel stand,
And there, before his comrades all, she took him by the hand,
And while the rosy blushes on her bright face come and go,
With a proud and beating bosom she whispered soft and low:—

"You have helped to guard the banner that our fathers died to save
With fearless heart and daring, as befits the true and brave;
And before your gallant comrades, from my Irish heart I say:
That I'm proud to see you standing in the rebel ranks to-day.

"May you thus go on and conquer, till above our land we see
That banner, in its beauty, wave in triumph proud and free;
And when the war is over, if you come to Cahir town,
You will meet an Irish welcome from your sweetheart, Mabel Brown."

TOM BROOKS' CHRISTMAS EVE.

A True Story Told by the Light of a Miner's Camp-Fire.

BY ROB ROY.

I.

AT the head of a gulch the boys had constructed a "dobey" by setting up a few logs on the sides and the back; a chimney sent skiled in the latter, so that the south end was the only part built up. Timbers across the top, from side to side, thatched with turf, formed the roof, while the one door in the south was made by drawing hides over a rough frame. No house could be more ever more admired by its owner than was our dobey house by its builders. We had run it up after getting the shaft down at the new lode, where Colonel Brooks, who had started for Denver on the 13th, to be back with part of the iron work for the plant by the 24th, sent us mail and a lot of Christmas extras. Brooks was the boss, and deserved to be. The minute he a man, glorified the big lark "Old Tom" had striven, which each and every one of this and two other rich placer lodes. He was out rough in speech or manner, thought he had been minding since 54—over thirty years—and had several saves from having been over near the redskins, and one made by a Mexican's knife. He was six foot ten, square-shouldered, and broad-handed, and strong; but he had blue eyes and a tender heart. There was something about a lump you back in his life over which he still kept up a silence between, like, from the time though far distant cloud of sorrow, softened by a silver light of patience. We had tracing over in memory some picture of happiness, now faded and gone from him forever.

The Colonel's announcement of supper called the boys around the camp table. Each one relished some item in his letter or letters, and had enough of the news and Christmas attention to the news from every home. "John Lindsay sends his best wishes for the whole table," said McAlpine, who was the last to speak.

"And the boss told me to tell him for not forgetting old chums," responded Lile. "And look here, old man," he continued, placing his rough hand on Brooks's arm, "we want the match you mere man's time ago to night. What d'you say, boys,—aint it jollier the right time?"

"You must deal, you see," he added, after the chorus in approval of his modest request.

"All right, boys; I will bank for you, Lindsay, Lile, and Brooks, as he moved from the table.

But the game was skipped; the wagon had arrived. An hour later the boys were again around the fire, but not playing poker; one of the holiday extras—a keg of whiskey—was on the table, and every man with smoke, a wife, a little child in heaven, "asleep in Jesus," sat in a circle, and recalled old reminiscences by the light of the camp-fire.

"What was Lindsay's game?" asked Joe Hutchins, throwing in cards while cutting, having failed to catch a pair.

"Well, I don't know particulars, nor does any out here, but Brooks, but it was fighting—a straight from start to finish. I could tell that from my letter, I could tell that from Old Tom's eyes when he came back, after seeing it played. Lindsay's wife and little baby were stakes."

"Ah! a sort of dual game, then; won't he give it away?" asked Lake Harr, as he raked in a pot.

"No more than he will why he left old Sally a lawyer, in a very broken hand, and sailed a sloop for Indian bullets, 2,000 miles from home," answered Brooks, another of the players, and the oldest of our camp of tribulers.

"A Frisco mate told, out at the Emma, when I was digging there," said Jerry Bowles, looking up from his winning, "that Brooks had a home he would have bet on as being solid. But returning to it from a little trip, he found it all tumbled into ruin. He had it out with the man on the spot, and left him badly hurt. The home could be home to him no longer, so he just gave his payment and footed, and has never been back there since."

"Hellos!" came a call from toward the lode, two hundred yards from the dobey.

"Hellos!" was answered back by eleven voices, "It's Brooks!" "It's Old Tom!" "It's the boss!" was severally exclaimed.

A stepping whatever was in Tom, glorious man made for the door, from which all struck out in a run over the snow.

II.

Brooks was two hours ahead of the mean, while, were following up the mountain in the moonlight. While Chung, our Celestial cook, was preparing supper, the boys read letters from home, those who received any, and "most all did. That was always a good time for our camp—sacred four it seemed, somehow, when across the distances mothers and sisters, may be, were talking to us; and it being Christmas we made it a really joyous occasion, dressed and carried us over it in tender reflections of the old firesides and away a, bay, here one near the redskins, and one made by a Mexican's knife. He was six foot ten, square-shouldered, broad-handed, and strong; but he had blue eyes and a tender heart. There was something about a lump you back in his life over which he still kept up a silence between, like, from the time though far distant cloud of sorrow, softened by a silver light of patience. We had tracing over in memory some picture of happiness, now faded and gone from him forever.

The Colonel's announcement of supper called the boys around the camp table. Each one relished some item in his letter or letters, and had enough of the news and Christmas attention to the news from every home. "John Lindsay sends his best wishes for the whole table," said McAlpine, who was the last to speak.

"And the boss told me to tell him for not forgetting old chums," responded Lile. "And look here, old man," he continued, placing his rough hand on Brooks's arm, "we want the match you mere man's time ago to-night. What d'you say, boys,—aint it jollier the right time?"

"You must deal, you see," he added, after the chorus in approval of his modest request.

"All right, boys; I will bank for you, Lindsay, Lile, and Brooks, as he moved from the table.

But the game was skipped; the wagon had arrived. An hour later the boys were again around the fire, but not playing poker; one of the holiday extras—a keg of whiskey—was on the table, and every man with smoke, a wife, a little child in heaven, "asleep in Jesus," sat in a circle, and recalled old reminiscences by the light of the camp-fire.

"What was Lindsay's game?" asked Joe Hutchins, throwing in cards while cutting, having failed to catch a pair.

"Well, I don't know particulars, nor does any out here, but Brooks; but it was fighting—a straight from start to finish. I could tell that from my letter, I could tell that from Old Tom's eyes when he came back, after seeing it played. Lindsay's wife and little baby were stakes."

"Ah! a sort of dual game, then; won't he give it away?" asked Lake Harr, as he raked in a pot.

"No more than he will why he left old Sally a lawyer, in a very broken hand, and sailed a sloop for Indian bullets, 2,000 miles from home," answered Brooks, another of the players, and the oldest of our camp of tribulers.

"A Frisco mate told, out at the Emma, when I was digging there," said Jerry Bowles, looking up from his winning, "that Brooks had a home he would have bet on as being solid. But returning to it from a little trip, he found it all tumbled into ruin. He had it out with the man on the spot, and left him badly hurt. The home could be home to him no longer, so he just gave his payment and footed, and has never been back there since."

"Hellos!" came a call from toward the lode, two hundred yards from the dobey.

"Hellos!" was answered back by eleven voices, severally exclaimed, "It's Brooks!" "It's Old Tom!" "It's the boss!" was severally exclaimed.

A stepping whatever was in Tom, glorious man made for the door, from which all struck out in a run over the snow.

III.

Brooks was two hours ahead of the mean, while, were following up the mountain in the moonlight. While Chung, our Celestial cook, was preparing supper, we read letters from home, those who received any, and "most all did. That was always a good time for our camp—sacred four it seemed, somehow, when across the distances mothers and sisters, may be, were talking to us; and it being Christmas we made it a really joyous occasion, dressed and carried us over it in tender reflections of the old firesides and away a, bay, here one near the redskins, and one made by a Mexican's knife. He was six foot ten, square-shouldered, broad-handed, and strong; but he had blue eyes and a tender heart. There was something about a lump you back in his life over which he still kept up a silence between, like, from the time though far distant cloud of sorrow, softened by a silver light of patience. We had tracing over in memory some picture of happiness, now faded and gone from him forever.

The Colonel's announcement of supper called the boys around the camp table. Each one relished some item in his letter or letters, and had enough of the news and Christmas attention to the news from every home. "John Lindsay sends his best wishes for the whole table," said McAlpine, who was the last to speak.

"And the boss told me to tell him for not forgetting old chums," responded Lile. "And look here, old man," he continued, placing his rough hand on Brooks's arm, "we want the match you mere man's time ago to-night. What d'you say, boys,—aint it jollier the right time?"

"You must deal, you see," he added, after the chorus in approval of his modest request.

"All right, boys; I will bank for you, Lindsay, Lile, and Brooks, as he moved from the table.

But the game was skipped; the wagon had arrived. An hour later the boys were again around the fire, but not playing poker; one of the holiday extras—a keg of whiskey—was on the table, and every man with smoke, a wife, a little child in heaven, "asleep in Jesus," sat in a circle, and recalled old reminiscences by the light of the camp-fire.

"What was Lindsay's game?" asked Joe Hutchins, throwing in cards while cutting, having failed to catch a pair.

"Well, I don't know particulars, nor does any out here, but Brooks; but it was fighting—a straight from start to finish. I could tell that from my letter, I could tell that from Old Tom's eyes when he came back, after seeing it played. Lindsay's wife and little baby were stakes."

"Ah! a sort of dual game, then; won't he give it away?" asked Lake Harr, as he raked in a pot.

"No more than he will why he left old Sally a lawyer, in a very broken hand, and sailed a sloop for Indian bullets, 2,000 miles from home," answered Brooks, another of the players, and the oldest of our camp of tribulers.

"A Frisco mate told, out at the Emma, when I was digging there," said Jerry Bowles, looking up from his winning, "that Brooks had a home he would have bet on as being solid. But returning to it from a little trip, he found it all tumbled into ruin. He had it out with the man on the spot, and left him badly hurt. The home could be home to him no longer, so he just gave his payment and footed, and has never been back there since."

"Hellos!" came a call from toward the lode, two hundred yards from the dobey.

"Hellos!" was answered back by eleven voices, severally exclaimed, "It's Brooks!" "It's Old Tom!" "It's the boss!" was severally exclaimed.

A stepping whatever was in Tom, glorious man made for the door, from which all struck out in a run over the snow.

A HAPPY LITTLE HELPER.

Beautiful the children's faces;
Spite of all that mars and scars;
To my inmost heart appealing,
Calling forth love's tenderest feelings;
Sleeping all my soul with tears.

Eloquent the children's faces—
Poverty's lean look, which saith:
Save us! save us! woe surrounds us;
Little knowledge sore confounds us;
Life is but a lingering death!

Olive so light amid our darkness;
Let us know the good from ill;
Let us care for all our blindness;
Love us, lead us, show us kindness—
You can make us what you will.

We are willing; we are ready.
Every day we pray for God's work.
We have hearts that yearn towards duty,
We are willing to learn;
Souls that any brights can reach!

Raise us by your Christian knowledge,
Consecrate to man our powers!
Let us take our proper station,
We, the rising generation,
Let us stamp the age as ours!

We shall be what you will make us—
Make us wise and make us good!
Make us strong for time of trial,
Teach us temperance, self-denial,
Patience, kindness, fortitude!

Look into our childish faces—
See yo not our willing hearts!
Only love us—only lead us,
Only let us feel you care for us,
And we all will do our part.

We are thoughts—many thousands!
Every day we pass by world talk.
We have hearts that yearn towards duty,
We are willing to learn;
Combating for love and peace!

Raise us! try us! days slide onward,
They can never be same again!
Save us, save! from our sinning!
Save from ignorance and ruin,
Make us worthy to be men!

Send us to our weeping mothers
Angel-stamped in heart and brow!
We may be our fathers' comforters
We may be the mightiest preachers,
In the day that dawneth now!

Such the children's mute appealing
All my inmost soul was stirred,
Long I pondered, vainly striving
Wiles a way, like summer's gladness,
Said, "The children's prayer is heard.

MY CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

WRITTEN BY [illegible]

Look! your Christmas present! [illegible]
Your Pa's [illegible] a child's [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Which Santa Claus [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[

thoughts went back to that slender figure as he had first seen it, and vulnerable self-accusations tormented him. He had taken her from wealth and luxury, and could not even give her the bare necessaries of life. He knew now, since he had been so much at home, what all that stitching was for; and it stung him like a wasp to think she was working for him. As he pondered thus with his head in his hands, the sub-jest of his thoughts looked up at him quietly.

"The old story, Frank!"

"The old story," responded the doctor, gloomily. "How can it be otherwise when a man goes home from those little fingers to the bare in hardship and cold and hunger, Mary?"

"It does me good," said Mary, cheerily. "I never knew before how fast I could see my love flow swift."

"You never had occasion for it till I stopped in with my selfish love, and brought you to poverty. And yet I do love you, Mary—more, I think, than ever. You don't doubt that, do you?"

"Why should I doubt it? Frank, if you will talk of those things, I must talk, too; and, than, my fingers will be slower. What's the use of pondering so gloomily over the past? I know we were wrong, both of us; but we have done what we could to retrieve it, and I will not have you take more than your share of the blame. I know before what luxury and self-indulgence were. Now, I know more. I have seen trouble, and know what the lives of men down again in three minutes—a vision of whiteness and brightness.

"My dear," said her father, without noticing the drone, "you would never make a philosopher. You think of a thing and do it. How do you take those sudden resolves?"

"I don't know," laughed the resolute girl, standing before him with her pretty head posed this way and that, with the in-quiring look in her eyes still.

"Well, the Christmas Eve were on. John Bowden finished his article for the next number of the Fourmonthly Review—a paper on the wisdom of helping others in this present existence, not because we are all children of one Father on our way home, but because, in John Bowden's opinion, the only religion was devotion to Humanity, and the Fourmonthly Review was a leader of infidel thought that tried to degrade humanity of the hope of existence beyond this suffering world. As if any part of Humanity—world, or any nation's kindness, could make up for the ruin of man's consciousness of immortality and his faith in God!

Evening came, and at eleven that night the reckless lively girl was dressed in her cream color and red, and drive with her father to a dance in town. But while he was still dressing after dinner at the finishing of that twenty-minutes' nap, he felt with a sudden sense of sadness, that even dances, presents, loss of friends, and poverty could not fill up her heart. Yes, there was a want in her life, an unspeakable weariness that only the excitement of the passing hour could help her to endure. She might forget the sunshine in the dance tonight, but it would come to-morrow.

"Oh, I know what Philip," she thought, springing up from her bonnet-box, where she had been watching her father writing at the little table, under the white glow of the shaded lamp. "I know what I'll do! You won't mind my running away for half an hour, father, will you?"

"No, child! Now I wonder am I extracting too much from Schopenhauer?"

This question only concerned himself and his article, so Carmello went out of his room quietly with some beautiful thought in her mind—stolenly, gently as a spirit.

In the white-washed cottage "nigh the pump," the window was sinthered, the fire burned low, and Polly was drowsily nodding in her chair.

"Polly, Polly, wake up! Look at the stockings!"

Bale rubbed her eyes open, and wanted to go to sleep again.

"Look at the stockings!" cried Polly, pinking her sleepy eyes.

Bale opened her eyes and sat up. Then there was a shriek of joy. "The stockings is all full!"

They wanted to play with the toys there and then, but they might only look at them and then they were to go to sleep.

"We must all say a prayer tonight! for that good Miss Browden," said the mother and the children, had been so good to comfort to get Christmas feed, but it was something still more heartbing to get toys, be-cause Mr. Bale was so hard to please. Ah! that was love, surf love is wealth.

"Put your hands together before you go to sleep," she said to Bale and Polly.

"No, child! Now I wonder am I extracting too much from Schopenhauer?"

This question only concerned himself and his article, so Carmello went out of his room quietly with some beautiful thought in her mind—stolenly, gently as a spirit.

In the white-washed cottage "nigh the pump," the window was sinthered, the fire burned low, and Polly was drowsily nodding in her chair.

"Polly, Polly, wake up! Look at the stockings!"

Bale rubbed her eyes open, and wanted to go to sleep again.

"Look at the stockings!" cried Polly, pinking her sleepy eyes.

Bale opened her eyes and sat up. Then there was a shriek of joy. "The stockings is all full!"

They wanted to play with the toys there and then, but they might only look at them and then they were to go to sleep.

"We must all say a prayer tonight! for that good Miss Browden," said the mother and the children, had been so good to comfort to get Christmas feed, but it was something still more heartbing to get toys, because

Our Young Folks.

GOD'S PROVIDENCE FOR HIS POOR.

Third Prize Juvenile Story.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY MISS ESTIE J. COLLIGAN.

In a small village, at the foot of a wooded forest, stood the humble cottage of a poor widow. The Christmas season was then approaching, every one was thinking about the holidays, but what was it to her. Poverty and sickness, having entered her dwelling, she was compelled to send John, her only child, upon the broad ocean of life, to long for food, in order to revive her. One evening as he was going toward home, with the food he had collected for his mother and himself, he heard a mournful cry in the distance. He listened again and again. Adranning toward the place, he found it to be a little lamb that had evidently strayed away from the fold.

"You poor little thing," said John, "come, and I will bring you to my house, and taking it in his arms, he hurried through the forest to his little thatched dwelling.

"Oh! see, mother, said he, "see what I have found.

"Child," said the sick woman, "you forget that this lamb has an owner. You must go and give it back. It belongs to the Countess who lives in the castle yonder. We have nothing in this world, we have a gift peculiar than all the gifts on this earth. That gift by which which we can receive our Divine Saviour in Holy Communion.

"Nonsense," said a rough voice through the half-open window, "keep it, no one will know it."

"Ah!" said John, "there is an Eye that never sleeps, that sees everything we do."

"This man, as if meditating on the boy's words, said nothing. John took the lamb in his arms, and was about to start for the castle of the Countess. He was admitted into the drawing room, where the Countess made her appearance. After listening to John's story, she said:

"As the reward for your honesty in coming here so late, I will make you a present of that lamb."

The Countess being a widow also, took a great interest in the poor woman and her son, bringing them food, and John, milk for his lamb. She called at the cottage. Here a sad sight met her eyes. She saw asked the widow how she came to the village.

"My husband was compelled to enlist as a soldier during the war," said the sick woman. It was impossible for me to follow him with my little son, who could scarcely lisp his father's name. We parted with a thousand tears. Alas! It was the last time I ever saw him. From time to time he wrote to me that he was well; but on a sudden, I heard that he was severely injured and soon after died of his wounds. My grief was indescribable. Ah! He was good, kind and honorable. I know not where his grave lies, but I trust he rests in peace. My son and I were now reduced to poverty. I was forced to wander about, only having what I earned by the labor of my hands. After wandering a short distance, I came to this village. This cottage was unoccupied. The good family to whom it belonged, allowed me to enter. God has ever watched mercifully over me, and in ways and in all places, comforted and assisted me. I'm thankfully for all, even to this moment, that he has led me under this straw roof."

The Countess, ever ready to harbor the harborless, and comfort the sorrowful, listened to the widow's story, promised to send her a physician, and left—bidding them good night. Shortly after, by the advice of the physician, and the use of nourishing food the widow entirely recovered and was able to go about her household duties.

John's father had given him when a child, a red satin collar, embroidered in gold, with the initials "J. N. worked on it. The widow placed this around the lamb's neck, from which was suspended a rope by which they led their pet every day near the house. One evening as the widow and her son were partaking of some of the food sent by the Countess, they noticed a stranger enter the lamb, and looking very attentively at the collar, John went towards the man, as he was afraid he would carry away his pet. His features and clothing showed signs of poverty and age. He looked at John in astonishment, and said:

"I should be sorry to hurt your lamb; I was observing the initials on its collar, for I had one like it before I left home.

John now remembered about the collar, and brought the old man into his house. When the widow saw him she cried:

"O! husband! this my long lost husband!

She flew into his arms, trembling with joy. John was astonished at this unexpected and heavenly Providence. Mr. North, for that was his name, stood as if petrified. It was long before he could believe such unexpected happiness. He burst into tears. The happy widow now said to her son:

"O, John, this is your father, embrace him. John, who had hitherto stood immovable, now modestly approached the father clasped him in his arms. The joy of father, mother, and son, once more united, was indescribable. In absolute forgetfulness the Countess called at the cottage, as she had promised. Delighted to think that the widow recovered from her sickness, and surprised over the unexpected return of her husband, she very kindly received them into her castle. The little orphan had now become the home of the lamb.

Time crept by quickly; in a short time after, the Angel of Death entered the castle, and took the Countess from this earth. Mr. North, his wife, and son was named in her will as the heirs to her vast possessions. Mr. North lived comfortably before his mind the beautiful words of the Agnus Dei. With the lamb as a trade mark, he established one of the most flourishing wool markets in the country. After a short time, he gave to his parish church an altar worthy of mention as a sacrifice to God, who had bestowed on him, his wife and child so many graces and blessings

This story, my young readers, reminds you of the great feast of the Nativity, or the birth of Christ, in a word, the great feast of Christmas, which is fast approaching.

You remember how the Blessed Virgin was compelled to seek shelter in the stable, at Bethlehem, and after a life of poverty and suffering, she was made Queen of Heaven, by the events she received on the great feast of the Assumption. No matter in what state of life you may be, whether rich or poor, on land or sea, if you ever trust in Almighty God—like the widow and her son, and always bear in mind that the gift of Holy Communion is the most precious of all Christmas gifts, like the dove—Christ will never forsake you, and your Christmas will be a happy one, and your Christmas tree with its unstretched branches will be laden with the most precious gifts, by the outstretched hand of the world's Santa Claus, or our Divine Saviour. Ever keep before your mind the banner of Christianity, and the ever floating flag of Catholic Faith, so that when your earthly career is over, the hands of God or the Guardian Angel, will direct you through the narrow path that leads to the mansions of eternal bliss, where Christmas will not be in winter, but in the bright day of happiness, where you can see God face to face for all eternity. Pray with all your hearts, my little readers of the MONITOR, for the grace of final perseverance, in order that you may gain the reward of Heaven, through the merits of our Lord. Amen

UNITED ON CHRISTMAS EVE.

PRIZE STORY WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY "MAY."

CHAPTER I.

CHRISTMAS MEMORIES RECALLED.

The snow was softly falling on Christmas Eve. To Paul Poyer—thinking fondly on the window of a magnificent, beautifully decorated home—all was gladness. He was twenty years old, though one would scarcely believe it. Just four feet in height, rather plump, with babyish blue eyes, short brown hair, and was the very impersonification of grace.

Her face dimpled with unaccountable, irrepressible delight. Little she knew of the joy that night brought to many. She had never heard the "Gloria in Excelsis" float over bowed heads in Cathedral or chapel just at midnight. She had never seen the little Christ Child smiling sweetly from a bed of straw.

To her this Holy Christmas Eve meant a brilliant ball-room, splendid fricasseed lobster, and presents. Different from hers was this countenance of a young man leaning wearily from a luxurious easy chair. Memory was at work there.

Leaning her window, Tout Revier walked gracefully across the room, stooping lightly onto the arm of Paul Lamar's chair, and laid one hand caressingly on his head.

"There, Paul, what is it? Is the poor boy thinking of that long he lost last night. Had I not the loved you a hour billiard play, for at Mass Yet, I should never have made such a promise. But here is a rest—a rest for you." She bent forward and pressed her lips against his dark cheek. He looked up, eyes oddly. Why should the just forever remain blind! He just met the look of scorn in her, but Tout was already perched upon the piano stool.

"Come here, Paul. Let us try the chorus, "Peace on Earth" once more while we are alone." They sang a few measures when Tout's ringing laugh chimed with the music. "Now make your voice sobbing! Have you seen a ghost?"

"Yes, it was a ghost, for memory would show a farmer, more gallant fellow, and a sweeter, clearer voice mingling with his. Not in a gilded drawing room, but in a quiet old church.

"Some secret connected with this song! Do tell me all about it." She raised her eyes beseechingly to his, and standing on tiptoe, threw one arm around his neck. At a quick step they turned to see Victor Garebaldi frowning angrily. In an instant Tout placed both hands in his.

"Dear Vic! How handsome you look! If I did not know you so well, that expression would really frighten me. Now, like a dear fellow, please help discover the cause of Paul's recent ages ill.

"You were counting his heart beats, I presume.

"O! course. Though the sight of you is enough to terrify any one. O Gabriel, bring your angelic aid in soothing three angry boys."

"Angry! On such a night" Gabrile Rodwell murmured softly, as she gazed dreamily at the rapidly falling snow. You were thinking for your fame sake—that She pursued for something better and higher than her surroundings. Not guessing that the poem she sought, she found in the old grey church, half a block away. There and only there.

"Let us tell what we were such doing this time last year," she said, rousing near or to the others.

"This time last year, I was in this very same room, singing that very same song with a very different young gentleman, and if I remember rightly, Vic, you were acting in the very same manner which you are doing now."

"Yes, playing second fiddle to you in the very same manner that I expect to be next year," he exclaimed sorrily.

"Poor fellow!" a sigh high broke through the gloom, and a soft hand sank in a hand.

"Mr Lamar, it rest with you to recount something interesting."

"Nothing I could say would interest any one here, though it might amuse them," he said, coldly.

"O, Paul! don't! I am all curiosity. As for your being amusing—preposterous, to demand—What were you doing?"

"Hanging evergreens." The color deepened in his cheek.

"Who was helping you?

"Whom do you suppose?

"That dreamed you once told me of!"

"I was assisting Mrs. Arden." Hard and cold as he had become, he could not repress a half pitying, half scornful expression a pair of brown eyes would have held what that moment.

"O!"

"How dreamy you are, Gabrile, exclaimed impatiently. Drawing closer to the fire, she assumed unconscious of all else.

"Wish her picture only, and the lonely they answers.

Always sad and lonely, she kept her Christmas Eve.

"Won't you sing "In the gloaming, little darling?" Paul murmured.

"No, I don't care to. Vic, I must show you Tom's painting. He finished it to day." Sun fed him into the next room. Paul Lamar also left the house to wander aim-lessly through cold streets until midnight.

CHAPTER II.

CHRISTMAS CHIMES IN THE OLD CHURCH.

In a farm house far away among snow covered mountains, Rose Arden knelt before a large wood-fire popping corn over coals she had scraped onto the hearth. She laughed merrily at stories which she told to two chubby children by her side. In one end of the bare kitchen a poor woman was finishing the weeks baking. Throwing this about energetically as she sotto-voced:

"Hakie on Friday instead of Saturday. Nice work isn't it! Christmas never interfered with none o' my arrangements afore that young misses come here and made a mess of my kitchen. Rose Arden, you'd better be off home, or I'll be in a quiet old church.

"Some secret connected with this song! Do tell me all about it." She raised her eyes beseechingly to his, and standing on tiptoe, threw one arm around his neck. At a quick step they turned to see Victor Garebaldi frowning angrily. In an instant Tout placed both hands in his.

"Dear Vic! How handsome you look! If I did not know you so well, that expression would really frighten me. Now, like a dear fellow, please help discover the cause of Paul's recent ages ill.

"You were counting his heart beats, I presume.

"O! course. Though the sight of you is enough to terrify any one. O Gabrile bring your angelic aid in soothing three angry boys."

"Angry! On such a night" Gabrile Rodwell murmured softly, as she gazed dreamily at the rapidly falling snow. You were thinking for your fame sake—that She pursued for something better and higher than her surroundings. Not guessing that the poem she sought, she found in the old grey church, half a block away. There and only there.

"Let us tell what we were such doing this time last year," she said, rousing near or to the others.

"This time last year, I was in this very same room, singing that very same song with a very different young gentleman, and if I remember rightly, Vic, you were acting in the very same manner which you are doing now."

"Yes, playing second fiddle to you in the very same manner that I expect to be next year," he exclaimed sorrily.

"Poor fellow!" a sigh high broke through the gloom, and a soft hand sank in a hand.

"Mr Lamar, it rest with you to recount something interesting."

"Nothing I could say would interest any one here, though it might amuse them," he said, coldly.

"O, Paul! don't! I am all curiosity. As for your being amusing—preposterous, to demand—What were you doing?"

"Hanging evergreens." The color deepened in his cheek.

"Who was helping you?

"Whom do you suppose?

"That dreamed you once told me of!"

"I was assisting Mrs. Arden." Hard and cold as he had become, he could not repress a half pitying, half scornful expression a pair of brown eyes would have held at that moment.

"O!"

"How dreamy you are, Gabrile exclaimed impatiently. Drawing closer to the fire, she assumed unconscious of all else.

"Wish her picture only, and the lonely they answers.

Always sad and lonely, she kept her Christmas Eve.

"Won't you sing "In the gloaming, little darling?" Paul murmured softly

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Athlone.—The close relations of the Castle authorities to the Orange Grandjurors are fully exhibited in the beautiful and exemplary behaviour of such gentlemen in the delivery of the order. The Crown lawyers have made all possible arrangements for the convenience and expeditious delivery of the men who were "wiped on to rich by the Castle." The Orange boys in their loyal demonstration fell foul of the elementary prescriptions of law and order, and consequently were fine for equal Popish offences.

Dublin.—The Rev. Dr. Traynor, the parish priest of Ballybrack, Co. Dublin, died on Saturday ill of typhoid fever.

Mr. Mullen, M.P.—Congratulations—Mr. George V. Hart, J. L., and Mr. M. C. McInerney, B. L., have been appointed Crown prosecutors. Mr. McInerney is a Dublin resident.

Dublin.—Dr. Walsh, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, has been appointed by the Holy Father, Count of Rome, a good and faithful servant, and a prelate of the Holy Roman Court, the dignity of the treasurer of Dublin, vacant by the death of the Right Hon. Monsignor Farrell, P. P., Rockcorkle, Co. Cavan. Mr. Joseph P. Farrell, C.C., Blackrock, to be P. P. of Rockcorkle.

Dublin.—Mr. John F. Walshe, died on Nov. 27, at his residence 29 Lower Gardiner street, Dublin, at the comparatively early age of 34 years. Dr. Nix, I believe, for over thirty years physician to Mr. J. F. Walshe, Dispensary, and was at the time of his last illness consulting medical officer of the entire North Union. Deceased was a good and faithful Catholic and was brother of the Rev. P. J. Walshe, of Inangrove, who was for some time engaged in raising funds for the erection of the Catholic Church which adorns the village.

Galway.—The Very Rev. Patrick Lynskey has drawn up, on behalf of the parish priests of Galway, a memorial to the ecclesiastical superiors of Connemara, and it will be submitted to the Most Rev. Dr. Thomas Fahey, C.C., Clonfert, at an early date for approval. The report urges strongly on the Royal Commission the extreme necessity of constructing a railway through Connemara.

Sligo.—In no strange night was attempted in Ireland within living memory as that which was begotten in Portumna, on Nov. 26th. Mr. Frank Joyce, agent of the Marquis of Clanricarde has—Mr. Joyce, who is regarded by tenantry of his Woodford Monkey and Portumna properties to meet him on that day with a proposal to purchase, set in the estate office in consideration of them as of old. But he met no such offer as Mr. Joyce, in the old time, the green dawn of Saxon. Nor was the mind of the man's former serfs—serfs no longer—to be bought by pay him a week. The estate office was empty and as though it was plague stricken. The mere mention of the Woodford evictions was been in the minds of the tenants. There are about 700 of them, but none want near him. Not a solicitor was offered to him—no, nor even a bad farthing.

Kilkenny.—Sir Anthony Wolfe, D.L., Kilcooney House, Queen's County, has offered his tenantry 20 per cent reduction in their rents, and a number of them have accepted of the offer.

Kerry.—Mr. Clarke, C.C., Castleisland, has been elected to Ardfert parish, replacing Rev. P. Kennedy, P.P., Noll; Rev. Henry Lobe, C.C. late Ballybunion, is the parish of Cahirciveen; and Rev. P. Hall to be curate of Castleisland.

Cork.—On Nov. 19th, were borne to the burial place, at Old Kennare, the mortal remains of Mr. Basil J. Aldwell. His grave may now be said to be within the shadow of Ki-hoque where he was born, at that picturesque residence, now known as "The Falls," was then the residence of his father, the late Mr. Timothy Aldwell, and his family, many old and respected residents of the south side of Cork. He was a polish Irishman and was fully up to the national ideas of sentiment in Ireland, and patriotism and nationalism in Ireland. The Very Rev. Archdeacon O'Sullivan, P.P., Ballyvourney, officiated at the funeral. In his opinion, could social statistics be collected, the number of people from town and country at the funeral, testified to the popularity of the deceased, and to the respect in which himself and his family are held by the people of Kerry and surrounding parishes. Mr. Aldwell did not live to see the long prophesied three score and ten, so he died in what may comparatively be called the early age of 42 years.

Louth.—Lord Massereene, of Ordnt Temple Castle, Co. Louth, has recently registered his tenancy for a rent considerably reduced by his tenant, Mr. Alfred H. Wade, who has expended his capital in making it valuable to the tenant of the tenant. He refused to be bound by the terms of his agent, Mr. Wynne, whom he relieved of the duties of his position, and replaced him by Mr. Moore, Dalgan and Kilmainham.

Meath.—Rev. N. Moore, P. P., Ballinabrackey, died on Nov. 18. He was parish priest of the united parishes of Ballinabrackey and Castle Jordan for the last twenty years, and was pursue in the same parishes some time previously. He always took the deepest interest in political and temporal well-being of his flock. He was quite opposed at his funeral, when a vast congregation assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to his memory.

Monaghan.—On Nov 23d, the tenants on the Dawson estate, county Monaghan, attended at the office of Mr. Lyons, agent, to tender payment on the judicial rents. Mr. E. E. Duffie, agent and Crown Solicitor, presided over and adjourned. The tenants subscribed for Dillon and paid the full rent.

Sligo.—Mr. Gladstone, on Sep. 1st, 1886, addressed to Backsmith, on Nov. 1st, 1886, the receipt of letter from which the tenants from the parishes of Aghamore, Knockbaun, and Aiwaugh, signed by the Rev. Canon J. Waldron, P.P., Aiwaugh, and Rev. J. Scanlon, C.C., Backsmith, and others, to the effect. A deputation consisting of the tenants of the Marquis of Clanricarde, accompanied by 300 tenants, asking a reduction of 25 per cent on the rent rent now payable, and the tenants have decided to pay no more than the reduction was granted. The lands of Lord Dillon's estate in this neighborhood are very bad quality, and mostly tenanted by small farmers, who, when their rents in England or remit money from America.

Limerick.—Great business was done on Monday, on Nov. 29th, in the necessary work of preparing the population from the lawless and lawless tactics. At Murroe the job sorting of the people had been some time in preparation and fully held. In its circumstances it was worthy of the occasion. Mr. Dillon, M.P., was expected to be present and had been taken to organize. It was one of the best days of demonstration held for Mr. Morrow from all parts of the country. Limerick as well as from the city itself, the promoters of Murroe and Tipperary also sent their forces in large numbers. Mr. John Dillon, M.P., Harrington and Mr. John O'Connor, who were down to represent the Parliamentary Party, met with a reception worthy of their rank in the political world. The Rev. Father Ryan, P.P., of Murroe, presided, and in impressive language recounted the history of the Land Question, and previously introduced the Rev. Father Ryan, who in the course of his speech, the crowd, which had been very large, was seen to be swayed. The special object of the Murroe meeting was the commemoration of the memory of Patrick Lynch, who died six years back. Mr. Dillon expressed the sorrow of Mr. Lynch's demeanor of his own bitter, and beautiful him for the world as an active friend and a fearless backwoodsman. He made a utility appeal to the people to follow the example of Mr. Lynch and extend tenacity and ability. Mr. Harrington also did great service in the cause of the day by his speaking in support of the claims of Lord Clonbrock, tenantry to and their rights in the land. They hoped that the tenants would then be restored to their homesteads.

Roscommon.—Mr. Stafford, agent, attended at Hart's Royal Hotel, Athlone, on October 23d, to collect the rents on the Castlerea property of Mr. William Gray. The tenants demanded a reduction of 25 per cent, which was refused, 15 per cent being offered. The tenants declined to accept, and left in a body without paying any rent. Mr. Gray's agent, Mr. Stafford, 36 Upper Ormond quay, Ashtown, for the purpose of collecting the rents on the Castlerea property.

Sligo.—He granted a abatement of 20 per cent, which was accepted by the tenants, and the rents were paid.

Limerick.—Lord Monteagle, granted a reduction of 25 per cent to the tenants on his Tenny property, near Athlone.

Mr. Kilcoyne, M.P.—Dublin, attended at his estate, on November 22 for the purpose of receiving rents on Mr. Coughlan's property. The tenants asked for a reduction of 25. In the end the rents were reduced, and the tenants were paid.

Sligo.—The last of seven panel-pushing in Sligo ended, some belief, after all the various prosecutions, in the packing jury system. The last case was that of Mr. Joyce, the Castle Rackrent agent, who was prosecuted by persons interested in the Castle Rackrent estate. The tenants were all of the Protestant persuasion, and only 112 Catholics—majority of 8—were on the panel, 25 Arrson as the Catholics, and only 12 Catholics—majority of 1—were on the jury. The Crown prosecutor, Mr. Gibbon, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. Gibbon, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. Gibbon, Q.C., M.P., and

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

AN EVENING REVERY.

TO M. E.

I.

Fell a hush around the one evening,
As I stood by the deep ocean's side,
And watched the sunlit waters,
Now rise, now fall, with the tide.
I was thinking, idly musing,
My heart was happy and light,
I turned from the past with pleasure,
To dream of a Future all bright.

II.

Thus in the even of life, when hatitie
Is more than half over at last,
We forget, the heart-chil wounted,
Those hours of the sunny-lored Past;
And, thank God, the field is brightening,
In the rise of an autumn's sun,
We feel that all doubts and troubles
Are ease, through His mercy done.

III.

Yes, we turn from youth's old passions,
And laugh at our olden pains,
Would we live the years days over
For the sake of the old love again!
No! past is the trend of battle
Where wounds fall heavy and deep,
And the once precious, sacred treasures,
We care now so more to keep.

IV.

We are looking above the earthly,
To the far-off happy shore,
And hoping count Christ our Saviour
To delay our summons no more;
For we see o'er the dreamland mountain
Joining the free Old Land,
And the Future so long desired
Is hastening to make all bright.

ZARE.

THE BURIED MOTHER.

Out by the walls of a Danish town
The grass stood cold as the slight mane down;
The Angelus prayer had long been said,
And the bell told out the psalm for the dead.

It swung for a while from the darkening steeple,
"Out of the depths," said priest and people;
Through all the clamor turn and tower
The sorrow over that for the silent hours.

But a mother buried for half a year,
Wake with a crying in her ear;
She rose with the vapor still in her head
And stood in the shroud that wraps the dead.

She left the cold grave under the walls,
And took the street to her husband's halls;
She felt her long-dead bosom ache,
For her seven children were all awake;

And none had broken them bread that night,
Or poured them drink, or trimmed a light,
And none had laid them pillow or sheet;
The dust of the day was on their feet.

Two stoves for an empty cup, and one
Wee crying—that was her young at sun;
She washed and kissed them, and hushed their cries,
While tears pressed out of her long-dead eyes.

But their father, who lay on a lower floor,
Had heard her step in a corridor;
And he rose and came, and saw her stand
With the children clinging to either hand.

She said: "The crying smote my heart,
It broke my dreams of death apart;
"I was lain to sleep three score years, I filed,
But when have I slept when the child has cried?

"Take note, sw I pass to my many deeds;
I see children woke and had no bread.
"No few, no lamp; two were at strife;
One cried unnourished. Tell your wife."

ALICE MAYNELL.

THE LETTER IN THE CANDLE.

"Look, mother, there's a letter in the candle;
Don't you see!
Ah! I wonder if He's Pilatin sent the writin' home to me—
For he told me when we parted, ah! he hoisted eyes were dim,
How he'd longer for the moment that would bring me out to him!

II.

"Oh! it seems a bitter lifetime since that steamer sailed away,
For my heart was in his keeping, an' I dare not lift him stay
But I loved him all the better for his stern resolve an' brave,
An' my prayers have been his portion o'er the far Atlantic wave.

III.

"My heart is beating wildly and my head is aprilse light,
An' there's never a happier soliloo in the country side this night.
Shore I cannot can hope from crytn' with joy, an' with a smile an' a soft 'mavbrow!
"Want you make no a happy passion, eathers, by givin' this turn to me?

IV.

"Yes, mother, 'tis for letter; but shore you needn't fret,
For there's many a year before us, far away from the cold and wet;
Phelim, the darlin, loves me, and I love him lonelly, too,
But my heart is never so small, agrah, that it wouldn't have room for one!"

JOHN J. GOBBLY.

WHAT IS LIFE?

A little soft inside the bed,
A little face where eyes are opened;
A little fresh behind the door,
A little shoe upon the floor.

A little lad with hair brown hair,
A little blue-eyed face, and fair;
A little lass that looks to school,
A little pouch, slate, and rule.

A little bitterness, winsome maid,
A little hand within his held;
A little aching, sorrow fore,
A little old-time fashioned store.

A little family gathering round,
A little turf heaped, tear-dewed mound;
A little added to his cell,
A little rest from hardest toil,
A little silver in his hair,
A little steel and easy chair;
A little night of earth-ill gloom,
A little curtain to the tomb.

—If you want to send your friends a pleasant Holiday remember of Catholic literature Call. Hawks send them copies of the CHRISTMAS MONITOR.

—We Opium In Pain's Cure for Consumption. Cures where other remedies fail. 25 cents.

Literary Miscellany.

Paul Webber's Dream.

A CATHOLIC STORY WITH A MORAL.

(WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY J. M. DUFFY.)

Paul Webber was the only son of a widow, who was left at her husband's death in possession of sufficient means to proper comfort and economy, to maintain herself and her son Paul.

Paul, being their only child, he had been honored and petted until he was as willful and way-ward as spoiled children generally are. He had been carefully educated at the Christian Brothers' Institute, but after graduating and returning home, he quickly departed from the path of rectitude. Being self willed and rebellious, he eluded under the mild restraints imposed upon him by his kind mother; and, falling into bad company, he soon plunged into the most reckless dissipation. Drinking, gambling, swearing, fighting, and almost every other wicked habit, soon had a firm hold upon him, and he continually went on from bad to worse. His mother remonstrated with him in vain. In vain she brought him to go to Mass on Sundays, and attend to other religious duties. He would only answer her back roughly that he was his own master, that this was a free country, and he would do as he pleased. His poor mother was in despair. But what were her heartaches and grief to him? He was inoculated with drink, demoralized by gambling and other vices, and his finer feelings entirely deadened by selfishness and depravity. Many scenes at the saloons, as well as gambling debts, incurred by him, were paid by his mother, in order to avoid the shame of exposure. By the time he was twenty one all the means left by Paul's father were consumed, and Paul and his mother began to suffer the pangs of extreme poverty.

Then Paul grew violent, threatening, and insolently abusive toward his poor, distracted mother. Finally he stabbed a man, in a drunken row, and was arrested and put into prison. His mother was now in the utmost distress, and did not know what to do. She consulted with lawyers, and called upon her well-to-do friends for the loan of money enough to conduct the defence of her unfortunate son. But her friends were little concerned for the welfare of Paul Webber, whom everyone knew to be one of the worst young men in the whole country, fit only for the gallows.

As the time set for the trial approached, Mrs. Webber redoubled her efforts on behalf of Paul, but all in vain. She felt that she was at her wit's end; but what mother ever gave up her child in despair? She visited Paul in jail, and used all her mother's tender pleadings, and finally, in her distress, she became almost insane with grief. But the poor widow's heart was soon to be broken, and her grief was to be changed to joy, almost as soon as you left the care of the Christian Brothers. First, I discovered your name at the prison, and angel you to hasten to Paul, and instantly through the close rooms, then I whispered in your ear to post from them, and, finally, to drop them altogether. When once you had ceased to pity you were blind, unreasoning, and completely in my power.

"Now, Paul Webber, I have, through your own co-operation, won you over to eternal torments. Your pains and sufferings here scarcely commenced, either as to duration or violence. Behold you boiling, swelling, burning lake! I will plunge you head-downward into that terrible abyss.

"Oh, horror! But then I will be drowned—which will be a relief.

"Ha, ha!" laughed the Arch-Demon. "Not a ⚡ Do not imagine anything so mild as drowning. You will suffer all the pains and excruciating agony of drowning in boiling, melted sulphur and molten rocks. But you will not lose one single faculty, or feeling, or nerve. Instead of being deadened, or drowned, or fainted, your faculties will become more intensified, your nerves will grow more sensitive, your sight will grow unendurably strong—must as will penetrate all the world of horrors in Hell. your taste will become so acute that it will torture you with nausea! Instead of longings and thirst, and hunger, and you will taste only bitterness and gall; you will smell foul odors and stenches, and your hearing will grow sharper with the increasing discord, and confusion, and shrieks of agony, and howls of anguish and despair. Ha, ha—Hell! Hell! Hell! Know you not that I am Satan and reign here supreme? At Hell's gate you were forewarned by your Guardian Angel, and henceforth you are a subject of mine. Beware! lest I call upon the walls of Hell to fall in upon you and crush you! Down, down into the bottomless depths of the burning lake!"

And Paul was seized by satan, bound with heavy chains, and flung headlong down wards. Dizzy, weak, terrified, his brain in a feverish whirl, and a feeling of intolerable oppression weighing him down, Paul awoke in his prison cell!

It was, then, only a terrible dream after all. But how real! How truly had he suffered! Never yet greater than are you drained of it all human, earthly experience!

"Oh, God of goodness, I thank Thee for this! My mother! am out of Hell! I am still on earth among the living, and there is yet time to repent and avoid the terrors of Hell! Oh, God, be merciful to me, the vilest sinner on earth! Oh—mercy—mercy, mercy!"

Distressed with terror, Paul arose from his prison couch, with a cold, clammy sweat, and every limb, standing from every pore of his body. His limbs were stiff, and every joint cracked, and every muscle was full of pains and aches, but he heeded them not. He knelt beside his couch and prostrated himself in the most humble and supplant attitude. Then he prayed and begged, piteously begged, that Almighty God would pardon his sins and save him from Hell. He implored the intercession of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and of all the saints. Finally, that other great repentant of the Hail Mary gave him comfort and made him more tranquil, he continued to repeat it, upon his knees, throughout the remainder of the night. So fervently in earnest was he that nothing could interrupt or divert his attention; and the pill door was wide open and a fresh bright, cheerful, morning light shining on his face, before he left off praying. Then he retired to his couch:

"Hong on a prisoner at close quick! I will not remain in an another hour."

A priest was already at the door with Paul's mother; and the former was heard the penitent's confession, while Mrs. Webber, with a full heart, fervently thanked God that her son was saved, through the intercession of Mary, the Mother of God, who never was known to refuse the prayers of those who call upon her for help in their hour of distress.

The man stabbed by Paul, though dangerously wounded, was recovered, and signed his petition with many others for Paul's acquittal, which was presented on account of his severe repentance and reformation. There is no stricter Catholic anywhere than Paul Webber, and no happier woman than his mother. Whenever he is tempted to any of his former offences, Paul is instantly checked by remembering his remarkable dream.

Christmas Decorations.

The decking of churches, houses and shops with evergreens, springs from a period anterior to the Christian era. During the Saturnalia, the Romans used to ornament their temples and lofties with green boughs. When Christianity became the religion of Europe, in the fourth century, the custom was preserved, and was justified by the reason from the mystic, the strange of Isaiah lxxxlxxx in the say during Christ's birth, and the sacred wood whereon, was from the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles. The Druids in England used to turn their houses with mistletoe and other green branches to propitiate the wild spirits. Whenever Christianity went it found some so, also, and hence it is not strange that decorating with evergreens at Christmas was almost universal. A quaint old writer thus spiritualizes the practice: "So our churches and houses, decked with bays and rosemary, holly and ivy, and other plants which are always green, winter and summer, signify, and put in mind of Her Deity, that the Child born is an ever and full and sweet, all-green top like branches and flourishing, and fruitfulness.

The Value of the Money and How to be Rectied.

(CONCLUDED)

"Blessed is the man that hearth me, and that watcheth daily at my gates, and waiteth at the posts of my door" (Prov. VIII. 34).

There remains yet another recommendation which we must make to all Rosarians, and it is this, that they should never fail to pray for the Order through which the Blessed Virgin has made known the Rosary.

Our Lady herself, and the Apostle Paul addressed to the Thessalonians, to whom he had preached the Gospel, and in the name of the whole Dominican Order, so say to all the associates of the Rosary "Brethren, pray for us, that the word of God may run and may be glorified, even as among you, and that we may be delivered from troublesome and evil men' who pursute us—especially in these most unhappy times. (2 Thessal III 1-2).

In the fifth place, we might when occasion, to recite the Rosary in common. We are fully aware that private prayer is most acceptable to God, since Jesus Christ Himself has ordered it, assuring us, at the same time that it shall be will received by His Father; but it is also indubitable that, according to the teaching of the Fathers, Saints and Doctors, all other conditions being equal, prayer offered in common is far more acceptable to God and more meritorious, and obtains "God, says St Chrysostom, grants special attention to a multitude united in prayer, and He cannot refuse them anything" (Homil 2 de in Ps 41 and Canals) "It is impossible for God not to attend to the prayer of the multitude, exclaims St Ambrose (Lib de Pseudp) Hence the Church frequently assembles her children in her temples and in her graves so for prayer, the early Christians, too, had this habit, for it is written of them that "they were persevering in prayer and continued daily with one accord in the temple (Acts II 42, 46) Hence it is well-known that the great efficacy of common prayer does not arise simply from the fact that it is made by an immense number of the faithful, for it is well known that the prayer of a small number of persons when offered with fervor and for a reason or purpose has the same privilege as was stated by the Divine Master Himself when He says: "Again I say to you, that if two of you shall agree upon earth, concerning any thing whatever they shall ask, it shall be done for them by my Father who is in Heaven. (Matth XVIII 19). Interpreters explain these words in this manner. If two among you, united in soul, desire prayer, ask with faith, hope, humility and perseverance anything whatsoever, provided it may be proper, whether it be great or small, easy to be done or difficult, it shall be infallibly granted to you by my Father, but if it be not proper or conducive to your well being, then you certainly shall receive something, the reverse rather than or opposite to, what you asked of Him.

Now if this is true in regard to any prayer and in common, a special reason why we should recite the Rosary in common, the Roman Pontiffs, by reason of the great benefits conferred on the Church through the recitation of the Rosary in common, are bound for the purpose of increasing the number of ancestors by asking companions in prayer, and for the purpose of bringing about fraternal union and Christian charity of which the material Rosary is a symbol, have granted special indulgences to all who recite it together in many place and under all circumstances. It must be plain to all that the Holy Mother of God is thus those Rosary meetings. What could be more pleasing to a mother than to see her children gathered around her asking of with the heart sons being bestowed to all and highly endeavors to her own honor and glory? Most likely it was the Blessed Virgin herself who accompanied her Father that, like David, it might be entitled to his claim, a task that is heavy for one becomes light and pleasant when shared between two. Besides, it must doubtless be conducive, in order to carry out the a-b of the Most Blessed Virgin and of the Sovereign Pontiffs, to the greater glory of God and the greater advantage of their flocks, to introduce into their churches the public and solemn recitation of the Rosary at least during the celebration of one of the Masses, as is the practice in many places, and also to encourage the recitation of the word and example to assist at it. Let we all make it a rule to gather we can to some church where the Rosary is publicly recited, for besides the numerous indulgences we may gain by so doing, our individual imperfections and shortcomings as to our manner of reciting, it will be so far than wanting of the attention and piety of the more fervent, and the prayer will be more meritorious and fruitful.

As we have already said, let parents be careful never to fail to offer to the Queen of the Most Sacred Rosary their daily task, let them gather their children around them with them invoke in the domestic chapel of their house the all-powerful and of the incomparable Mary. We recommend to some holy practice to the directors of religious boarding schools and pious institutions. The Rosary thus recited indicates sweet redeem on the most living heart of Mary and compels her to grant to all who thus serve her the most signal favors and her own most tender affection. Let him who cannot recite the Rosary in common either in a chur is or at home, arrange with some one of his friends or acquaintances say it with him: in the way he perhaps would get the desire of his heart, namely, the salvation of his soul.

"I am the great Vengeance and the Avenger. Vengeance is mine and I will take it, and I will make my arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh, and I will take vengeance on my enemies, and I will reward them that hate me.

THE MONITOR.

PROPERTY OF THE ARCHBISHOP OF SAN FRANCISCO

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1886

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

The offices of the MONITOR are now located at

536 KEARNY STREET,

(Over Gray, east side.) between California and Sacramento Sts.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—The London Tablet has excommunicated Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, because he favors the fair rent movement. But then the Tablet's power is very impotent ever since Archbishop Croke pitched it out of his presbytery in Thurles.

—Father Clarke, S. J. editor of the London Month, has recently published two important articles on the Scapular in his valuable magazine, from which we will make copious extracts as soon as we can find room therefor in our columns.

—Careful estimates put this year's wine vintage in California at 19,500,000 gallons. About one-seventh of the crop has been made into brandy. The year's business shows an increase of 200,000 gallons over last year's export trade.

—The Very Rev. H. Kelley has been appointed Vicar-General of the Diocese of Savannah, and Rector of the Immaculate Conception Church, Atlanta. He is a brother of the Rev. A. M. Kelley, who represents the United States in the International Court at Cairo, Egypt.

—We take great pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to a very interesting letter from Ireland which contains news not received in this country through the ordinary channel of the cable. We hope to hear frequently from the same talented young journalist.

—The position: "Is Ireland a Nation?" is admirably and ably answered in the Overland Monthly for January, in an article of 20 pages length, which Hon. W. J. Corbet M. P. for Wicklow, has written specially for that magazine. Mr. Corbet presents the case of England's injustice towards Ireland very forcibly and he also introduces convincing evidence to show the justice of Ireland's claim for Home Rule.

—We ask the prayers of our readers for the speedy recovery or happy death of Jos. A. McMahon, editor of the New York Freeman's Journal, the Jupiter Tonans of the Catholic press of America, who is lying dangerously ill on St. Mary's Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y. Some time ago Mr. McMahon had a severe fall, which disabled his shoulder and gave him a bad shock. He was convalescing until the recent changeable weather brought on a partial relapse and made necessary his going to the hospital. Prayers have been asked for his speedy recovery.

—A cablegram from Paris to the New York Herald announces that Leo XIII. on receiving the Sacraments of the Catholic Church, having been reconciled to religion by Abbé Dervaux, a Bulgarian missionary in Tonquin, a statement which, the correspondent says, he believes will stand perfectly the test of examination, but which will be received with a grand fanfaade of hostility, unless as Bert was probably the most conspicuous French atheist of this generation.

—A recent telegram from Europe brings the joyful intelligence that the famous strike is to be put to the coming repeal of the May laws early in January. Prince Bismarck has charged Mgr. George Kopp, Bishop of Fulda, with the task of definitely laying down the method of reconciling the ministers of canon law with the maximum of State privilege in the nomination of Bishops, with some sort of State veto over the episcopal prelates. Bishop Kopp has recently been on a visit to Bismarck at Varzin, and will be the bearer of an autograph letter and all kinds of polite messages to Leo XIII. He will be chiefly aided by Cardinal Hergenrother, who is Defendor of the Congregation of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs.

—A cablegram from Rome states that the Holy Father—whilst receiving Christmas congratulations from the College of Cardinals—spoke at some length of the position of the Church in Italy. He protests against the anti Christian movement which is being carried on in that country, and said that the Holy See was now disgusted of the last remnants of its patrimony. The only liberty left to him was that held by the Roman Pontiffs in the earliest ages. The Italian Government, he declared, had assisted the laity in unduly interfering with the administration of the Church, had expelled religious bodies, and had bestowed an organized hostility against the Vatican. As the head of the Church, he must continue to protest against the position in which he is placed.

—The New York Herald cables from Rome that long and detailed reports have been received at the Vatican from Father McGlynn's ecclesiastical superiors concerning his action in the recent New York election. The whole case has been laid before the Pope, who has personally made the most thorough examination into all the facts. The Pope strongly disapproves of Father McGlynn's conduct, and has blamed him through the proper ecclesiastical channels. It is not true that Father McGlynn has been summoned officially to Rome, but it is the Pope's intention to do so in case the semi-official intermediate agents now acting in the matter, and who urge Father McGlynn to come to the Vatican to explain his conduct and defend himself, fail in their task. The authorities at the Vatican consider it of the greatest importance that there should be no scandal or sensational measures of any kind, and are very anxious that the matter should be quietly arranged with as little noise and publicity as possible. Owing to these views the Herald's correspondent adds—I am not at liberty to name the two exalted Prelates with whom I have conversed on the subject, and who received the assistance of what is above stated directly from the Pope's own lips.

False Statements Corrected.

An editorial in last Sunday's Chronicle attributes to the Catholic Church and Cardinal Manning certain sentiments which are calculated to mislead Catholics, hence we deem the matter of sufficient importance to correct the errors into which the writer in the Chronicle has fallen which he says:

It is not surprising, then, to find that the Catholic Church has taken explicit ground against only what it calls the exclusive tendencies of the type, but also against the labor movement, pure and simple, as represented in trades unions. The Pope has had his attention particularly attracted to the Knights of Labor by recent political and ecclesiastical events in America, and it is certainly not to be supposed that the American Bishops to lend him with data for the Holy own opinions regarding them. It is probable that when these are received he will pronounce himself in relation to them, perhaps but, which may be intended to have a decisive effect.

Canon Law XIII says: "Notables violate the law of property. The Church commands that the right of ownership is properly derived from nature itself be held intact and inviolate."

The Church is opposed to Socialism, but not to any "labor movement, pure and simple." The Pope never wrote any Encyclical of the kind described by the writer, nor will any Bull be issued as predicted.

Again, the writer places Cardinal Manning in a false position when he says this of him:

The effect of liberal political opinion on some of the prominent Catholic clergy in England and Ireland is quite surprising. Cardinal Manning, another of our Henry George's leaders, and other days was the strongest expression of the kind that has come from an eminent ecclesiastical authority. He was careful, however, to make a distinction between a single labor movement and socialism.

Cardinal Manning never mentioned any of Henry George's books. Here is all that eminent ecclesiastic ever said regarding George's writings, and no person can construe his sentiments as any endorsement whatever of George's theories upon any topic. In a recent letter to the editor of the Brooklyn Examiner, Cardinal Manning in alluding to a conversation he once had with Henry George in London—said:

"I have no distinct recollection (the mention of his book) but as it has been stated in Rome, I see that I gave an opinion in favor of his book, meaning his original work on "Progress and Poverty." I saw no unsound principles. I have to state that I have never read a word. I have however, read certain chapters in his later work "Social Problems," and in those chapters I did not see anything to censure or unsound."

We make these corrections in order that there may be no misunderstanding regarding the attitude of the Church or Cardinal Manning upon questions of vital importance to the public at large both in this country and in Europe.

Furthermore, the writer in the Chronicle is most egregiously mistaken when he says that the admonitions of Archbishop Corrigan on Socialism in his Pastoral Letter need not "be regarded as seriously bearing on any one." On the contrary, they are binding upon the conscience of every Catholic in the body of the faithful, we have thought it advisable, dear brethren and beloved children in Jesus Christ, to bring to your notice such portions of this legislation as it may be useful for you to know in order that, knowing the law, you may have all the more earnestly for its observance, and that the transgressors may be known, and the safety of the generality of the welfare of souls may be more abundantly and efficiently attained.

All Pastoral Letters are of binding force upon the Catholic faithful in each Diocese wherein they are issued, and this fact we hope the Chronicle will remember faithfully hereafter.

Priests for San Francisco.

On Saturday the 18th inst., Cardinal Gibbons performed the customary Christmas Ordination at St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore. Eight priests were ordained and a large number of candidates raised to Minor orders. Among the latter we notice the name of J. F. Ferguson, of this Archdiocese, who received the Tonsure. Messrs. M. Scanlan, D. M. Travers and P. E. Mulligan, also of San Francisco, received Minor orders. Messrs. J. P. Fallon, W. H. McKenna, E. J. Dunne, C. E. O'Neil, and J. W. Allen of this Archdiocese were ordained Sub-Deacons.

Gladstone the Coming Man.

Thomas Power O'Connor, in his cablegram to the New York Star, says that already many English journals predict that Gladstone will be in office again in a couple of months, and many cool-headed observers are of the same opinion. The present Government, at any rate, is doomed. Lord Hartington will not consent to join Salisbury in the formation of a coalition government, unless allowed to give several seats in the Cabinet to his most prominent follower, replacing men who are too fond of office to give up their positions without a struggle. The demoralization of the party would thus be intensified, and the split Liberal Party Randolph Churchill's desertion is widened. It is a question whether Lord Salisbury would not lose more from defections in his own party than he would gain from Union ists accessions if he should agree to lend Hartington's terms Lord Salisbury will probably, find himself obliged to present a show, yielding up the existing Cabinet at least as the cool and standing squarely on a Tory platform. The overthrow of such a government is merely a question of weeks and the chance of opportunity.

The Irish element in New South Wales have given practical evidence of its sympathy with the anti-eviction campaign at present being carried on in Ireland by the Nationalist party. At a meeting in Sydney on the 22nd inst., $6,000 was subscribed for the benefit of the evicted tenants in Ireland. The subscriptions included $500 from Cardinal Moran, Archbishop of Sydney, and $250 from Sir Alexander Stuart, Prime Minister of the colony. What on the Irish element in California doing for this Fund?

THE SISTERS OF LORETTO.

The most recent addition to the Religious Teaching Orders in this State, is the Sisters of Loretto, who have opened a boarding and day school for girls in Salinas, Monterey county, on the Decoro property recently owned by Bishop Wigger.

The Sisters of Loretto, known also as the Friends of Mary at the Foot of the Cross, were founded in Kentucky in 1812, by holy nuns, Rev. Charles Nerinckx and in the admirable life of that great Apostle of Catholicism in Kentucky, which Father Camillus P. Maes has furnished to the Catholics of America, we find a very interesting account of how this Order was formed, and from which we learn that the distinguished young lady who formed the corner-stone of this beautiful association of charity and mercy—Sudanna Wise Miss Mary Rhodes, whose love for God led her to prefer a Catholic school for girls in a poor dilapidated cabin, an abandoned residence, which had no floor save the bare ground, while rough boards formed a roof through which rain and snow poured down upon its slumbering occupants. But it was from such humble beginnings that Almighty God is pleased to create organizations which are destined to spread over the whole earth and to carry the knowledge of Him, His Church and His law to many generations for all time to come. Miss Rhodes had not been many months in the Hardin Creek hut ere she was joined by Miss Christina Stuart, another young lady who was drawn towards her companionship by the very holiness which she knew she enjoyed for the Catholic children who were encouraging to her.

Whilst working along in the designs of God teaching for many months, there came to the aid of the new little band of disciples themselves so as to reach that state of spiritual perfection which Almighty God requires of the Holy Ones He uses as instruments in places where even the observers would still be compelled to acknowledge that a moral power. They determined to withdraw themselves from all social enjoyment and to live entirely by themselves. This resolve was at once opposed by their relatives and friends as a "crazy notion," as "foolish whim," yet in a spiritual sense the action was the sublimity in consistency with the Divine Will acting upon the hearts of two of His children whose piety, charity and humility may yet gain for them the honors paid to the Blessed by His Church throughout the whole world.

The two young maidens where the world styled "foolish notions," were not many months in their new sphere until Miss Susan Hayden knocked at the door of Loretto humble habitation, asking for the privilege of sharing their pleasures and labors. It is needless to say that the new postulant was received with open arms, and the Divine Spirit gave her abundant evidence of the sublime spiritual privileges which the world so often ignores. Miss Hayden was the immediate cause of Nerinckx's purchase of the property and foundation of establishing a community. Father Nerinckx, was at once consulted, and he told them to persevere in their pious labor of love, he also entered three of the hosty Cross they would have to carry on their could sweet work a Christian crucifixion as a new Community of Sisters who were destined to save millions of immortal souls from the snares of Satan.

Father Nerinckx next sus Bishop Flaget he acquainted him with the designs of the pious young ladies in his parish, and the good Bishop at once drew up some rules for their guidance and gave the sick his paternal blessing. Then the infant community wanted a Superior, so the choice fell upon Mrs. Sanders and how notably it was that a holy virgin bearing the blessed name of Mary should be the first Mother of the Sisters of Loretto.

Miss Nellie Morgan, the only child of a widowed mother—was teaching a small school some little distance from where these wonderful Nuns were quietly and unostentatiously carrying out in a very humble way the great designs of an All-wise God. Divine Providence, almost, the also causes to let that she could be of service to the outgoing Sisters, so she continued one day to the Bishop and offered for a convent, and she, too, requested to be admitted. Of course, her offer was accepted, and when the Bishop visited her mother's consent—which was given—she went to the Convent of Loretto to pass herself, among others to Mrs. Susan Hayden, a sister of the founder—and she, too, thenceforth became her life to God in the cottage. Hyde!

Thus—and by one—God gathers in His holy lights—naked taken six.

As—drop by drop—from clouds ethereal

Form one river by streamlets fed.

The five virgins at once applied to Father Nerinckx for the privilege of clothing in Mother, and the simple manner in which that important office was filled is told so well by Father Maes that we will give it to our readers in his own language:

"They applied without delay to Father Nerinckx for the appointment of a Superior, whom they should look to as a mother, and to whom to go to their pains and consult among themselves. The deliberations did not last long. In their holy simplicity they had chosen their children on the day first, and the oldest voting first, they all agreed upon Nancy Rhodes, and immediately returned to the Director to inform him of their unanimous choice. He remarked "You have chosen the youngest one among you," but they replied unanimously "If she is the youngest, she is also the most virtuous."

Miss Nancy Rhodes, was first Superior, bought the small tract of land, on which the edifices were built, for $70, and gave her negro, who was sold for $300. Under Father Nerinckx's energetic management of affairs, the Sisters immediately set to work making the necessary improvements for the accommodation of their increasing number. They replaced and arranged the floors in the roof as well as they could, put beards across the upper beams to form a loft, or small attic, which was used as a dormitory, and they fixed up another part of the cabin for a kitchen, which was also their refectory, one table was made for all to eat from, and to a stump which had been left standing in the middle of the cabin for the Friars' benefit, probably for a similar use this was the Sister's table. Another for the people, composed of a long shelf, or two; pieces of puncheons with two rough legs under each end. They then ordered a long bench, made around the buildings, and created in it a small fabric, some sort of like a loft, covered with old boards, that served for a resting bench, and a similar one for a bed-room.

Scarcely had these improvements been made when a sixth young lady, Miss Sarah Ratcliffe, a native Kentucky Hayden, of Madison county, came to share their labors. This added to their most opportune. People in Hardin Creek were astonished at seeing their children share in the benefits of the Catholic education imparted to the Sisters. Thanks were applied to the Sisters; they were received as benefactors among them. Having obtained a favorable reply, they sent the good news to friends at a greater distance, who hastened to forward their girls to enjoy the same privilege. The slab table did very well for their meals, but when they sat down to study "Their knees were given to the high shelf, as we were unacquainted in Algebra." At night, they were spread on the floor, and in the morning were placed on one foot of the other in the most contented of just the room, and they remained as still night.

In view of the poverty which marked the origin and first years of the life of this order, how appropriate it was to baptize it with the appropriate title of "The Friends of Mary at the Foot of the Cross."

In the instructions for the guidance of their daily lives Father Nerinckx told the first Sisters that the great object of their thus little association was to "glorify God, the sanctification of their own souls and the salvation of their neighbors, by educating and instructing young girls in Christian principles, and that Almighty God is pleased to create organizations which are destined to spread over the whole earth and to carry the knowledge of Him, His Church and His law to many generations for all time to come." Miss Rhodes had not been many months in the Hardin Creek hut ere she was joined by Miss Christina Stuart, another young lady who was drawn towards her companionship by the very holiness which she knew she enjoyed for the Catholic children who were encouraging to her.

Whilst working along in the designs of God teaching for many months, there came to the aid of the new little band of disciples themselves so as to reach that state of spiritual perfection which Almighty God requires of the Holy Ones He uses as instruments in places where even the observers would still be compelled to acknowledge that a moral power. They determined to withdraw themselves from all social enjoyment and to live entirely by themselves. This resolve was at once opposed by their relatives and friends as a "crazy notion," as "foolish whim," yet in a spiritual sense the action was the sublimity in consistency with the Divine Will acting upon the hearts of two of His children whose piety, charity and humility may yet gain for them the honors paid to the Blessed by His Church throughout the whole world.

The two young maidens where the world styled "foolish notions," were not many months in their new sphere until Miss Susan Hayden knocked at the door of Loretto humble habitation, asking for the privilege of sharing their pleasures and labors. It is needless to say that the new postulant was received with open arms, and the Divine Spirit gave her abundant evidence of the sublime spiritual privileges which the world so often ignores. Miss Hayden was the immediate cause of Nerinckx's purchase of the property and foundation of establishing a community. Father Nerinckx, was at once consulted, and he told them to persevere in their pious labor of love, he also entered three of the hosty Cross they would have to carry on their could sweet work a Christian crucifixion as a new Community of Sisters who were destined to save millions of immortal souls from the snares of Satan.

Father Nerinckx next sus Bishop Flaget he acquainted him with the designs of the pious young ladies in his parish, and the good Bishop at once drew up some rules for their guidance and gave the sick his paternal blessing. Then the infant community wanted a Superior, so the choice fell upon Mrs. Sanders and how notably it was that a holy virgin bearing the blessed name of Mary should be the first Mother of the Sisters of Loretto.

Miss Nellie Morgan, the only child of a widowed mother—was teaching a small school some little distance from where these wonderful Nuns were quietly and unostentatiously carrying out in a very humble way the great designs of an All-wise God. Divine Providence, almost, the also causes to let that she could be of service to the outgoing Sisters, so she continued one day to the Bishop and offered for a convent, and she, too, requested to be admitted. Of course, her offer was accepted, and when the Bishop visited her mother's consent—which was given—she went to the Convent of Loretto to pass herself, among others to Mrs. Susan Hayden, a sister of the founder—and she, too, thenceforth became her life to God in the cottage. Hyde!

Thus—and by one—God gathers in His holy lights—naked taken six.

As—drop by drop—from clouds ethereal

Form one river by streamlets fed.

Fourth Anniversary of Bishop Wigger's Death.

The following interesting obituary notice coming from Fort Riley in different occasions appeared from a recent decision in Rome.

In Fresno there are two holidays of obligation, Christmas, the Nativity, the Assumption, and all Saints. In England there are eight. The Circumcision, the Epiphany, Corpus Christi, and SS. Peter and Paul in addition to the four observed in France. Ireland has four, which include the eight observed in England, and add thereto the Ascension and SS. Patrick's Day. In the United States we have the present, they have been considerable differences in the number of holidays of obligation. Some states or dioceses have dispensed, other, other, with such days and some joined down upon its slumbering minutes. But it is extra from such humble beginnings that Almighty God is pleased to create organizations which are destined to spread over the whole earth and to carry the knowledge of Him, His Church and His law to many generations for all time to come. Miss Rhodes had not been many months in the Hardin Creek hut ere she was joined by Miss Christina Stuart, another young lady who was drawn towards her companionship by the very holiness which she knew she enjoyed for the Catholic children who were encouraging to her.

Whilst working along in the designs of God teaching for many months, there came to the aid of the new little band of disciples themselves so as to reach that state of spiritual perfection which Almighty God requires of the Holy Ones He uses as instruments in places where even the observers would still be compelled to acknowledge that a moral power. They determined to withdraw themselves from all social enjoyment and to live entirely by themselves. This resolve was at once opposed by their relatives and friends as a "crazy notion," as "foolish whim," yet in a spiritual sense the action was the sublimity in consistency with the Divine Will acting upon the hearts of two of His children whose piety, charity and humility may yet gain for them the honors paid to the Blessed by His Church throughout the whole world.

The two young maidens where the world styled "foolish notions," were not many months in their new sphere until Miss Susan Hayden knocked at the door of Loretto humble habitation, asking for the privilege of sharing their pleasures and labors. It is needless to say that the new postulant was received with open arms, and the Divine Spirit gave her abundant evidence of the sublime spiritual privileges which the world so often ignores. Miss Hayden was the immediate cause of Nerinckx's purchase of the property and foundation of establishing a community. Father Nerinckx, was at once consulted, and he told them to persevere in their pious labor of love, he also entered three of the hosty Cross they would have to carry on their could sweet work a Christian crucifixion as a new Community of Sisters who were destined to save millions of immortal souls from the snares of Satan.

Father Nerinckx next sus Bishop Flaget he acquainted him with the designs of the pious young ladies in his parish, and the good Bishop at once drew up some rules for their guidance and gave the sick his paternal blessing. Then the infant community wanted a Superior, so the choice fell upon Mrs. Sanders and how notably it was that a holy virgin bearing the blessed name of Mary should be the first Mother of the Sisters of Loretto.

Miss Nellie Morgan, the only child of a widowed mother—was teaching a small school some little distance from where these wonderful Nuns were quietly and unostentatiously carrying out in a very humble way the great designs of an All-wise God. Divine Providence, almost, the also causes to let that she could be of service to the outgoing Sisters, so she continued one day to the Bishop and offered for a convent, and she, too, requested to be admitted. Of course, her offer was accepted, and when the Bishop visited her mother's consent—which was given—she went to the Convent of Loretto to pass herself, among others to Mrs. Susan Hayden, a sister of the founder—and she, too, thenceforth became her life to God in the cottage. Hyde!

Thus—and by one—God gathers in His holy lights—naked taken six.

As—drop by drop—from clouds ethereal

Form one river by streamlets fed.

Recent Benefactions in Rome.

The Rome correspondent of the London Tablet writes that on Sunday, the Feast of the Presentation of Our Lady, took place at the Church of the Pallacrina, the usual annual function, the school-examination, the distribution of prizes and publication of four diversos of the Sodalitium Congregation of Rites to which Holmes declared that it was the duty of the Ordinaries of the virtues and merits the Church may proceed in all security to the canonization of the Ven. Luigi Maria Monti, late Monti, founder of the Congregation of the Missionaries of the Holy Ghost and of the Sisters of Charity, and of the Ven. Clement Maria Hofbauer, professed priest of Order Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer. Of the Ven. Gregorio Lopez, Mendoza, Hermit, and Inca de Bengo Cardinal Bianchi, priests of the cause of Ven. Fra Felice da Nicosia, of the Minor Capuchins, and Cardinal Mezzofanti and

Farm and Home.

California Raisins.

California is rapidly assuming first rank as a raisin producing country. It is now reduced to a certainty that raisin grapes can be produced profitably on the vineyardist at one and one-half cents per pound. It has been demonstrated that three periods of Muscat grapes will make a pound of raisins. The cost of curing and boxing is estimated at one and one-half cents per pound, one cent per pound is allowed for freight, commission, etc., are deducted from the price of producing and marketing seven cents per pound. This would pay all expenses and leave the producer $30 per ton for his grapes. At five tons per acre, an ordinary yield in Yolo county, it would give the producer a return of $150 per acre. It is estimated that the annual requirements of this market are 20,000 boxes. It is also estimated that the production of this year will amount to 60,000 boxes, leaving 40,000 for Eastern shipment. That there is no danger of overstocking the market may be gathered from the annual importation of foreign raisins into this country, which, for several years, have ranged from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 packages, valued at $1,500,000 to $2,500,000 at New York alone. Here, then, would appear to be at least one branch of the fruit business open to our farmers that has not been overdone, and is not likely to be for years to come. The curing of raisins, unlike wine-making, requires no costly appliances. A piece of ground with smooth surface, sloping to the south, and provided with movable covering to keep off dews and showers, is all that is required. Indeed, some of the finest raisins ever brought to this market have been cured upon the ground between the rows of vines upon which the grapes were grown. It is well settled fact among the most experienced producers in this State that however superior machine-dried fruit of other varieties may be, the best raisins are cured by sunshine.—Yolo Mail.

Healthy Underclothing.

In the choice of woolen underclothing, Perkens says: The touch is a great guide. There should be smoothness and great softness of texture; to the eye the texture should be close, the hairs standing out from the surface of equal length, not long and straggling. The heavier the substance, is a given bulk, the better. In the case of blankets, the softness, thickness and closeness of the pile, the closeness of the texture and the weight of the blanket are the best guides. The non-conducting power of woolen fabrics lessens under continual washing; the soft fibres shrink, become harder and less elastic. In washing woolen articles they should never be rubbed or wrung. They should be immersed in hot soap suds, moved about, and then plunged into cold water; when the soap is entirely removed they should be flung up to dry without wringing. Night dresses made of cotton are preferable. In summer a thin material may be chosen; for winter the so-called "cotton flannel" is the most comfortable. The night-dress should be long, loosely fitted and button easily about the neck. Those people who are habituated to sleeping with the arms uncovered (right in cold weather to be secured against chills by thick under flannels. All undergarments ought to be changed at night, and the under vest for night wear should be as warm as that employed during the day. The one removed on rising should be carefully aired with the bed clothing; during the night the other should hang over a chair near a window. To dress and undress in an intensely cold room is a hardship which should if possible, be escaped. Wool stows, so rapidly, by heating, are far better for chambers than those in which coal are burned; light bindings soon warm them sufficiently, and the temperature quickly falls after the sleeper has enjoyed his sponge bath and is comfortably encased in bed.

The Largest Farm in the World.

In the extreme southwest corner of Louisiana, lies the largest production farm in the world. It runs 100 miles north and south and twenty-five miles east and west, and is owned and operated by a syndicate of Northern capitalists. The general manager, J. B. Watkins, gives an interesting account of this gigantic plantation, which throws the great Dalrymple farm of Dakota into the shade completely. He was conceived by a reporter of the St. James Herald last night and asked to give the participants of his gigantic enterprise. "Ten million and a half acres of land in our trace." Mr. Watkins said, was purchased in 1885 from the State of Louisiana and from the United States Government. At that time it was a vast grazing land for the cattle of the dealers of the neighborhood. When I took possession I found over 20,000 head of half-wild horses and cattle. My first work was to divide the immense tract into convenient pastures, establishing stations or ranches every 32 miles. The fencing alone cost in the neighborhood of $70,000. The land I found to be best adapted to rice, sugar, corn, and cotton.

"All our machinery, ploughing, &c., is done by steam power. We take a tract, say half a mile wide for instance, and place an engine at each side. These engines are portable, and operate a cable attached to four plough, and under this arrangement we are enabled to plow thirty acres a day with only the labor of three men, two harrowing, planting, and other cultivating labor is like manner, in fact, there is not a draught-horse on the entire place. We have, of course, horses for the feeders of cattle, of which we now have 18,000 head. The Southern Pacific Railroad runs for thirty-six miles through our farm. We have three steamboats operating on the waters of our own estate, upon which there are 300 miles of navigable waters. We have an ice factory, a bank, a ship yard and a riverain."

Incubators a Failure.

So far as raising broilers and chickens for roasting is concerned, the incubator is confessedly a failure. The sale of incubators is principally confined now to the new crop of experimenters that is always appearing in the community, who amuse themselves by figuring upon paper a short cut to fortune through raising chickens at wholesale. Ignoring the mother hen, excepting only the egg she lays, they merely find a practical farmer who has purchased and used an incubator who is satisfied with the system. A. C. Hawkins, of Louisiana, the most extensive poultry raiser in the country, has no faith in incubators, has abandoned their use, and relies entirely for his success upon the natural ways of the hen.

One of the most observant and most experienced dealers in poultry at Quincy market informs us that incubator chicks are decidedly inferior to those reared in a natural way. Their meat is tasteless and flavor. It has a pale, sickly, unnatural appearance. The flesh is soft, like pulp. Their quality may be likened to flowers and vegetables grown in the shade and artificially forced in the house. They lack keeping quality when dressed and placed on the market and will not command the highest price. Many first-class hotels will not buy them, though the chickens attain a good size. They seem to get a false start at birth, and always retain the artificial character so unfavorable in contrast with the strong, rugged, spontaneous life of and reared in the natural way.—American Cultivator.

Family Fun.

Afraid He Doesn't Lose Her.

Mrs. McSpillikins' mother is stopping with the family, and there is some little feeling. Johnny McSpillikins was reading in a Texas paper about a man who had killed his brother. Johnny asked

"Pa, is a man who kills his brother a fratricide?"

"Yes," responded Mr. McSpillikins.

"What is a man who kills his father?"

"A patricide."

"And what do he kill his wife's mother?"

"Uxoricide."

"And when he kills his wife's mother?"

"Justifiable homicide," replied McSpillikins, glaring at the old lady.

An Innocent Abroad.

It doesn't make any difference what his other name was, but he was a Congressman in Paris and he had never been there before. It is the custom to the city when a stage is full to put up the sign "Complet" and no more passengers can get in. Our Congressman wanted to see everything, and on three inland stages would pass him he would try to sleep them, but the driver would shake his head and drive on.

"You can't get in any of those," said an English-speaking citizen who had watched his woe-stricken face.

"But I want one of them," he pointed.

"Take one of the other with fifteen people in it. There's plenty of them," urged the citizen.

"Verge to thunder," he said angrily. "I guess I know what I want. I'm in this town to see the sights. Everybody seems to go to Complet, and I'm going too. I have to wait a week to catch a train with room in for me. That's the kind of American citizen I am, and don't you forget it."

The President's Favorite Song.

Since his marriage Mr. Cleveland has not worked so incessantly as he did before, and often in weekdays spends his evenings in the drawing-room with the ladies, sometimes joining them in a song. His favorite air is "Wait Till the Clouds Roll By, Jenny" and he rows out a boat when his evenings at that air first made the doorkeeper to the vestibule think some frightful cyclone was loose in the yard. A couple of Senators called the other evening when he was having an unusually good time, and as they entered the vestibule he was on some very high notes. They looked at each other in alarm and then at the doorkeeper, who answered at the expression on their faces, laughed outright.

"What on earth is that horrible noise?" exclaimed the one who first recovered his presence of mind.

"It's only the President singing, sir," replied the doorkeeper.

"Is he often taken that way?"

"Pretty near every night of late, sir."

"Then I reckon we'd better call during the day," observed the Senators, as they started toward John Chamberlain's club house to tone down their amazement.

How She Mastered George Ia.

"You look very much excited, dear," he said when she entered the parlor where he was waiting for her.

"Well, I should think I ought to look excited," she answered. "I've just had the most awful argument with a man I ever saw in my life."

"Why, what's the matter, my darling?" he inquired as he did his arm around her waist and endeavored to soothe her; "what was the argument?"

"Oh! now can I tell you?" she said; "we were only trifling with me." Then she burst out afresh.

"Never pop the question, and I find her she did you a great injustice." I believe that you would pop the question to me. Sis said you would not, but I knew you would, and we had it out and heavy. Well, George, you will not let me triumph over me, will you?"

"Why, certainly not," answered George; "I know it, my darling," the dear girl exclaimed, "come, let us go to me and tell her how much mistaken she was."

And they did, and sis didn't seem to be very much taken down over the affair after all.

How Hoosiers Spark.

In the early times there lived in Indiana a man by the name of George Bence, a descendant of the celebrated Daniel Boone. He would have stood well in Texas, for when there were giants in the land Hiram Bence was one of them. He was more than six feet high, with large bones and muscles, his hands were large and his feet near of extreme size in length, breadth and depth. The following anecdote was one those used to relate himself with exhibit urbanity, after he became one of the State Senators of Indiana.

I was absent eighteen years of age when, for the first time, I took it into my head to go a-sparking. Out of my neighborhood a miles off lived a pretty daughter that I thought I would find and see me.

It was late in the Fall, and the weather pretty cold still, it was the custom to use slows for those primitive times. When Sunday afternoon came I dressed in my best homespun-colored wool, tuck some extra pantaloons in my pocket, put on my boots and my coat stretched over me as tight as an old skin dried on a log-pole.

I started barefoot, wading the creeks and muddy bottoms till I reached the house.

The family were about sitting down to supper and invited me to eat. Sally said by my side. They had much and milk and plenty of it. The old lady, who was doing out the pudding, told me to take the bowl. I reached out my hand with the bowl, but I had made an calculation of the size of the table, the space between the big milk pitcher and the bowl, and the bowl was of my hand. With all my embarrassment I stood the milk pitcher in such way and upset it, and out when the milk over the table, Sally and myself. She jumped up and went slanting with laughter into the other room. I saw all was lost. I ran redding more of her.

When the clock struck ten, the old lady said "Mr. Bence, won't you wash your feet and go to bed?"

"Yes, ma'am," said I.

"Here is an old linen pot—all I've got that's fit," said the old lady.

I took the pot and found it so small that I could only get my feet on by sitting them in sideways. But I got them in. The water was too hot and I was forced them swelling tighter and tighter; I couldn't get them out.

I said nothing, though the pain and anxiety was so great that the sweat rolled down my face. The clock struck eleven, "My Bence, are you done washing your feet?" abruptly interrupted the old lady.

"Wed did this pot cost? I've got to pay for it, I reckon?"

"A dollar."

"Bring me the sass."

Slow brought it. I took the sass, locks the pot in places handed the old lady $1, opened the door and started for home.

I never went there again.

CATHOLIC TEACHERS

Any institution or family in the city or country requiring a Catholic teacher can have the same supplied free of charge by calling in this office. We had some thirty applications for the position advertised last week, and twenty-six of them will remain unapplied.

THE GIANT OF MEDICINES.

The Most Effective and Popular Remedy Ever Discovered.

WHY IS IT SO EFFECTIVE IN SO MANY DIFFERENT DISEASES?

Because Paine's Celery Compound acts on many causes at once. The disease have a common starting-point, and a remedy that can affect the cause, permanently cures all the diseases. The liver is the chief organ in the body, the kidneys when diseased, may be the cause of pain, and the very fact that it is not painful leads many people to delay that it is diseased. But Medical Authorities agree that it can be free from all disease and yet give forth no pain, because it has low if any nerves of sensation, and there are the only means of conveying the sense of pain, which is one of the primary Causes and Unexpected SYMPTOMS. Sick after Unusual desire to urinate at night; Flutterings and pains in the heart; Tired Feeling; Urinary Complaints; Feeling sensations; Acid, bitter taste, with furred tongue in the Morning; Headache; Sore Stomach; Heartburn; will; Dyspepsia; Costiveness; pain, upon taking; Uneasiness in the Stomach; Dizziness; Sudden Flushes of Heat; Dyspepsia; Nervous pain, upon taking; Uneasiness; Loss of Memory; Hesitation; Chills and Sweats; Feeling of Neglect; Feeling of Danger; Nervous Irritability; Sleeplessness; Frequent Nightmares; Sudden Fits of Anger; Sudden Fits of Fear; Sudden Fits of Despondency; Dizziness; Sudden Flushes of Heat; Dyspepsia; Nervous pain, upon taking; Uneasiness; Loss of Memory; Hesitation; Chills and Sweats; Feeling of Neglect; Feeling of Danger; Nervous Irritability; Sleeplessness; Frequent Nightmares; Sudden Fits of Anger

IRELAND'S PATRIOT DEAD.

Beautiful Letter from Archbishop Croke.

Mr John O'Brien, Hon. Secretary of the "National Monuments Committee, 41 York street, Dublin, has received the following important letter from his Grace the Archbishop of Cashel:

THE PALACE, THURSO, Dec. 2.

"My Dear Sir—I have fully sympathized with you in thinking that it is not at all to the credit of the Irish Nation that it has suffered the remains of Ireland's patriots when gone to their long home, to remain even for a time in Glasnevin Cemetery without some suitable memorial over them—a memorial of Irishmen's respect for the humanity, and, in a public acknowledgment for their self-sacrificing devotion to their native land.

"I am well aware, to be sure, that it has been said of them as it has been said of Burke, fully and well written of the Young Irelanders of 48—and of all who sympathized with them—that their mission was a Quixotic one—a fool and disorganizable failure; that, however personally brave and gifted, their prudence and judgment as a party were sadly at fault; that there was no proportion, whatever, between the end they aimed at and the means at their disposal to attain it; and, that, therefore, the very most which even friendship could reasonably conclude to them would be—not indeed, a monument in bronze or marble—but simply the charitable silence of posterity.

"I judge, I think, to be one in my admiration of the men who fell in the battle of our country—who have suffered and are prepared to suffer—obloquy and impressment in her cause; whose consolations for the last few years, (on purely constitutional lines) have exhausted within the breast of many an Irish-born slave, the spirit and aspirations that are thought to belong but to the free; who have preached and propagated the salutary doctrine, that the land of Ireland belongs to the whole Irish nation, for the Irish people, and not a paltry and pampered few; and that he has the first claim to the soil who has laboriously tilled it and made it fruitful.

"But, at the same time, no one who was in full sympathy with that earlier generation of patriots, whose youthful enthusiasm prompted them,—more than a quarter of a century ago,—to risk life and liberty in the hallowed cause of Ireland, it is most grateful to see, on reflection, to know and feel that even the most damaging defects of one epoch in a nation's life have often been the incentive to virtue in another, and that the sanctimonious, calm laughing in sorrow, has frequently matured into a harvest of plenty and delight.

"Thus, I believe it has come to pass that Mitchell's dauntless chivalry, Duffy's deep, historic research and organizing skill, the lyrical poetry of Thomas Davis, Dillon's pathy sense, and Meagher's entrancing oratory—to say nothing of the soul-stirring, yet eminently instructive lessons that were weekly poured into our young men's ears, through the medium of the old Nation,—though they failed to arouse into needful activity the sluggish forces to which they were addressed,—far from being lost on subsequent generations of Irishmen, they have, silently, but effectively led up to the successes of our own days, and thus at least, have borne ample and valuable fruit.

"In like manner, the tragic incidents and deeds of daring so conspicuously associated with the abortive rising of '67 (though in many ways to be deplored,) were far from being barren, in leading or beneficial results; and the ashes of the men who chiefly figured in the memorable scenes of that eventful year should not, therefore, be allowed to remain unhonored, any longer, on Irish soil.

"I am glad, then, to learn that your committee is about to erect a monument, in Glasnevin Cemetery, over the remains of Terrence Bellew McManus, John O'Mahony, and others; and I trust you will not be embarrassed therefore for £5 or any subscription towards it.

"I am, my dear sir,
"Your very faithful servant,
"T. W. Croke,
"Archbishop of Cashel."

A Champion of Catholic Education

Now that Catholic schools are springing up all over the country and that the Catholic theory of education has obtained so many earnest advocates, even among the non-Catholics, it is well gratefully to remember those who labored in the more when labrers were few and prospects dark. One name of a double-faced Celtic crest, one side of which bronts the church where the good priest had ministered as well daily. The other looks out upon the street, at once attracting attention by its graceful and stately appearance, and by its carving and plentifully scattered throughout, wrought with thousand pounds by the skill and cunning chisel of the artist. It stands upon a double limestone block, and represents a wolfhound hase of Beaumont granite, in which are inserted one front and two side panels of white Carrara marble.

Mr. James Ryan, Rev. J. E. Kiernan, Cork, died suddenly on Nov. 26th. Mr. Ryan succeeded the representation of Cork at the general election of 1874.

The nomination of the Irish Cupaneen provinces has been received from Rochestown, county Cork, by Kilkenny, and the prefecture of studies in the diocese of Newark, which then included the whole State of New Jersey. He was also founder and first president of the Seton Hall College.

There are now nearly 30,000 children in the Christian free schools in the diocese of Newark and Trenton; and a few weeks ago Bishop McQuaid preached at the laying of the corner-stone of a new and magnificent school in Morristown, where long ago he gave an unpromised testimony of his earnest zeal in the cause to which his whole life has been devoted.

Appointed Bishop of Rochester in 1868, he found the new diocese, except for a few little academies in his episcopal city, destitute of schools. In the face of difficulties which would have deterred even a fairly resolute spirit, he set at repairing on a new field the work he had done so successfully in New Jersey, and in little more than ten years the entire diocese was provided with free schools, which impartial judges have pronounced unsurpassed in America.

During this time his articles in the North American Review, the Journal of Education, the New York Independent, etc., attracted wide attention. He was looked to as the foremost exponent of Catholic education from the Catholic standpoint, and to be or to many and urgent invitations lectured on this theme in the principal cities of the Union.

Readers of the Pilot will remember his lecture, ten years ago, in Boston, at the invitation of the Free Religious Association (Free Thinkers). He then expressed his conviction that the equitable settlement of the school question would come from Boston and Massachusetts, which in the very outset of their history made religion the cornerstone of education. The recent significant utterance of President Eliot of Harvard University, and a prominent Boston newspaper, which we quoted in a late issue of the Pilot, of Boston Catholic journals, are the wisdom of succeeding something to thus, begin to give to the Bishop's words the prophetic aspect—Pilot.

Success.

If success be the true test of merit, it is a set, that Lord Beaconsfield's Pimples Treatise has equal for the cure of Pimples, Blotches and Throat troubles. Sold only by mail. Price 25 cents.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ARMAGH—As from Lisburn to Lurgan and Armagh and around the eastern side of Lough Neagh, as from Lough Neagh to Monaghan and Donagh, and from Gledstown to Dungannon, and Lough Neagh's western shores, the same and story, with all the accompanying distress, comes to the wearied and worried inspectors of the Agricultural depression in the every possible sense, without a solitary redeeming feature or a single counterbalancing influence, is the exceptionless rule. The bears of Russian waste driving out Canadian and American manure or making them pay a fine than wheat of unsurpassed quality arriving in increasing volumes, of money-lenders, mortgagees, arrears of rent, unsalable farms, with all credit on the part of large farmers, towards small ones, and shopkeepers towards large and small alike. There is, unhappily, a further element of misfortune, which, some two months ago, would hardly be expected, and of which there were then few indications, but which of late has assumed increasingly alarming dimensions. The potato crop is universally admitted, even already, to be about half the value of the crop for 1885. It is attributed to the result of the very unfavorable weather and the backward season, but especially of the disastrous floods of the last three or four months. Throughout the entire valley of the Blackwater, and the valley of the Bann, the potato crop is either lying under water or covered beneath upon. A great quantity recently dug out turned out to be useless, and in a state in which not a pig would eat.

Mrs. Garrett, of Annaghavan, attempted, last month, to sell her farm of 16 acres, but without getting a solitary offer. This farm could easily have been sold for about ten years ago, and for half as much again two years further back. It has not sold the tenant right on land, of much the same quality, in the same neighborhood, was sold at £25 per acre. On a plot immediately adjoining Colonel Waring's, about three miles from Rathfriland, and on the townland of Clara, four farmers, named Hughes, Murray, Hickson, and Fry, attempted to dispose of their tenant-right. Their farms are all good ones, varying from 18 to 25 acres, and therefore within the purchasing power of substantial yeoman. Yet, not as much as an offer was made for either of them. And, be it remembered, there is no so called illegal combination of farmers, the district being thoroughly Orange, Presbyterian, landlord-loving, and loyal.

CORK—At the Connaught Convent, on Nov. 30, the solemn ceremony of profession took place, when Miss Catherine, in religion Sister M. Cantee, daughter of the late Dr. Cormac, of Youghal, made her solemn vows.

The tenants of the Blennerville estate have adopted the "Plan of Campaign" and removed all their cattle and property off the lands.

The Mallow Board of Guardians have adopted a resolution to establish a "special ward" for evicted tenants and destitute landlords."

The usual monthly meeting of the Irish diocesan Chapter, took place on Dec. 3d, in the Cathedral. The Bishop, the Dean, and all the members were present, with the exception of Canon Barry, P. P., Glanmire, who was absent through illness. The meeting was signalized by the formal installation of Dr. O'Callaghan as Bishop of Cork. The Papal Bull authorizing his consecration as Coadjutor Bishop of Cork, with right of succession to Dr. Delaney, was read to the assembled Canons by Mgr. Neville, Dean of Cork. This document, which was signed by the Pope, was read on the occasion of the consecration of Dr. O'Callaghan in Rome, on June 29th, 1884, and the reading was the proclamation of his episcopal authority over the Diocese of Cork. The Bishop, in full canonicals, was then conducted to the throne, where, for the first time, he took his seat.

On Nov. 27th, the memorial to the late Very Rev. Canon Buckley, P. P., that had been designed, and brought, by Mr. John Ryan—a young sculptor of Lisburn road, Cork,—was erected and unveiled in the church recently erected at Buttevant. The memorial in question has taken the form of a double-faced Celtic cross, one side of which bronts the church where the good priest had ministered so efficiently. The other looks out upon the street, at once attracting attention by its graceful and stately appearance, and by its carving and plentifully scattered throughout, wrought with thousand pounds by the skill and cunning chisel of the artist. It stands upon a double limestone block, and represents a wolfhound base of Beaumont granite, in which are inserted one front and two side panels of white Carrara marble.

Mr. James Ryan, Rev. J. E. Kiernan, Cork, died suddenly on Nov. 26th. Mr. Ryan succeeded the representation of Cork at the general election of 1874.

The nomination of the Irish Cupaneen provinces has been received from Rochestown, county Cork, by Kilkenny, and the prefecture of studies in the diocese of Newark, which then included the whole State of New Jersey. He was also founder and first president of the Seton Hall College.

There are now nearly 30,000 children in the Christian free schools in the diocese of Newark and Trenton; and a few weeks ago Bishop McQuaid preached at the laying of the corner-stone of a new and magnificent school in Morristown, where long ago he gave an unpromised testimony of his earnest zeal in the cause to which his whole life has been devoted.

Appointed Bishop of Rochester in 1868, he found the new diocese, except for a few little academies in his episcopal city, destitute of schools. In the face of difficulties which would have deterred even a fairly resolute spirit, he set at repairing on a new field the work he had done so successfully in New Jersey, and in little more than ten years the entire diocese was provided with free schools, which impartial judges have pronounced unsurpassed in America.

During this time his articles in the North American Review, the Journal of Education, the New York Independent, etc., attracted wide attention. He was looked to as the foremost exponent of Catholic education from the Catholic standpoint, and to be or to many and urgent invitations lectured on this theme in the principal cities of the Union.

Readers of the Pilot will remember his lecture, ten years ago, in Boston, at the invitation of the Free Religious Association (Free Thinkers). He then expressed his conviction that the equitable settlement of the school question would come from Boston and Massachusetts, which in the very outset of their history made religion the cornerstone of education. The recent significant utterance of President Eliot of Harvard University, and a prominent Boston newspaper, which we quoted in a late issue of the Pilot, of Boston Catholic journals, are the wisdom of succeeding something to thus, begin to give to the Bishop's words the prophetic aspect—Pilot.

Success.

If success be the true test of merit, it is a set, that Lord Beaconsfield's Pimples Treatise has equal for the cure of Pimples, Blotches and Throat troubles. Sold only by mail. Price 25 cents.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS MARY RIERDON.

LEITRIM—In Mohill, December 21 Mary, widow of John O'Rierdon, aged 80 years. Deceased was a native of Mohill, County Leitrim, and was the mother of a family of twenty-four children, of whom twelve survived her, viz., Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes, Mrs. Mary Hughes. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved relatives in their sad bereavement, and we hope that the prayers of the faithful will be offered up for the repose of her soul. Her loss will be felt by the poor, to whom she was a ministering angel, and her place will be hard to fill. Her funeral was very large, and the cortège was composed of the clergy of the parish, and a large number of the people of the parish. The remains were interred in the family burial place, in the cemetery of Mohill, on the 23rd inst. The following were the pall-bearers: Mr. Michael Rierdon, Mr. Thomas Rierdon, Mr. Michael Rierdon, Mr. Thomas Rierdon, Mr. Michael Rierdon, Mr. Thomas Rierdon. May her soul rest in peace! Amen.

MARRIED.

DIED.

Important Notice to Catholics.

HEARING RESTORED.

CATARRH POSITIVELY CURED

Wilson's Vapor-ine Inhaler!

Market Report.

Type Writer Ribbon RE-INKED.

JOS. PESCIA, Physician and Surgeon

KNABE PIANOFORTES.

COLD, SILVER AND NICKEL PLATING.

TO THE REVEREND CLERGY AND RELIGIOUS!

BEESWAX ALTAR CANDLES

I CURE FITS!

An Extraordinary Razor

LEBENBAUM BROTHERS

PACIFIC BANK

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
Devoted to the Profession and Defence of Catholic Principles.
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO., Office: 536 Mission St., San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
Per Year by Mail (if paid in advance) $1.00
Per Year by Mail (if not paid in advance) 1.50
Six Months (if paid in advance) 1.00
Six Months (if not paid in advance) 1.25
Three Months (if paid in advance) 50
Three Months (if not paid in advance) 75
To Ireland or any of the British Possessions (if paid in advance) $1.00 (not in advance) 1.50

All Letters and Communications should be addressed to the Publishers.

J. J. MCGARRY, Editorial Manager.
P. C. YORKE, Business Manager.
Post Office at Second Class Matter.

The Monitor.

For Thy Sons do not abandon to any the Truth.... Strive for Justice for thy Sons, and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies by Thee. (Ecclesiastes 4: 28) is now in its thirteenth year of publication, and is a standard-bearer and a staunch and reliable Religious Newspaper, has passed the 4 mile circulation and an influence which makes THE MONITOR a valuable medium for advertising.

THE MONITOR

Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

TO CORRESPONDENTS
Communications, to secure insertion, (that I be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.

Communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the writer's real name. This is required as a proof of good faith.

Communications should be clearly condensed from all interested in the same subject by this journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and should write only on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return MS. that is not used.

All contributions and communications, whether on business or otherwise are to be addressed to the Manager.

VOL. XXX. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 5, 1887. NO. 14.

IF YOU BUY YOUR FURNITURE AND CARPETS AT FRIEDRICHS & GERCKE'S
1610 New Montgomery St., YOU WILL SURELY SAVE MONEY.
Wholesale Prices. Country Orders Solicited. EASY TERMS.

HOUSEHOLD GOODS Repaired and Plated
With the above name is the most beautiful and durable Silver-plated ware.
SAN FRANCISCO
Bold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works,
653 and 655 MISSION ST.
Sd Nr Kearny and Third Sts., San Francisco.
E. G. DENNISTON, Proprietor.

THE DRESS REFORM CORSET
The Finest Corset on the Canse Corset.
Ladies' Corsets, Plain Satin, Satin Jean, Coutil, Jean, Satin Jean, Coutil, Jean, Satin Jean, Coutil, Jean

Poetry.

THE PRICELESS THINGS.

Those are vulgar things we pay for, be they stones for or reps of kings;
While the precious and the peerless are angelical symbols things

Common debts are scored and cancelled, weighed and measured out for gold;
But the debts from men to men, their account is never told.

Always, see, the jubilant nations keep their highest prize unknown;
Clearness's deathless lies frowned above unbel-
tered stone.

Ah, the Greeks knew: Come their citizens languid from the secret gates,
Under arches red with roses, flushed to hear their shrieked laurels!

See their native cities take thefts, beach the wall to make a gate!
What supreme reward is theirs who bring such honors to their State!

So the forum stand they proudly, take their prize from the priest!
Little wreaths of pine and parsley on their sinker temples press!!

We in later days are lower! When a manlier stroke is made,
We must raise a purse to pay it—making manli-
ness a trade.

Sacrifice itself grows venal—surely Midas will subsidize;
And the shallow souls are gratified when worth accepts the bribe.

But s'no here amidst the markets, there are things they dare not price;
Dollars like their nickel lines when they meet ancient eyes.

Lovers do not speak with jewels—flowers alone
can plead for them.
And one fragrant memory cherished is far dearer than a gem.

Statesmen show the nation safely, artists gain
the burning test;
And their country pays them proudly with a ribbon at the breast.

What the soldier saves the battle, wraps the flag around his heart;
Who shall demarcate his honor with the values of the mart?

From his gains of houses we how a piece, and carve us a relic;
For the gain he gave was priceless, as napoleon spoke to his lance.

When the poet sings the love song, or the song of
life and death,
Till the workers cease their toiling with shaded,
wondering breath;

When he sifts the mill and mine, inspires the slave to rise and dare;
Lights with fire the obscurest garret, bids the tyrant to be aware!

When he stands the pang from poverty with meanings new and clear,
Recounting pain and peace, and bringing blissful visions near;

His reward! Not cross nor ribbon, but all others high above;
They have earned their glittering symbols; he has earned the people's love.

JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

THE HEART OF A MOTHER.

You were so far away
Beyond all help from me,
And the cruel waves were grey
Or else the clouds were grey
Where you were tossed threat-kingly,
And the wailing winds were blare
My heart went out to you.

I always felt afraid
You were out in the stormy weather,
The rain on your head beginning to rust,
The wind and the rain together,
Ah me! I never knew
What harm might come to you.

So many pains there are
And perils by land and sea,
And such the cruel war
And such the wailed must dree;
And it might be even then,
You lived your home of pain.

My fears were unavailing,
You are safe and home to stay,
My dear who went sailing
Out in the wide sea day;
Or Death's wide sea one day:
You answer not my call
Across the gray sea wall.

I follow with your eyes
Your boat's long lonely track,
But you are not with them
Nor long that you were back;
You're not with mate of your
Want safe to port, I know.

Oh! is the sea land? I ask
Of those who have journeyed to,
Where is your home, dear one?
And hills of marvellous hue,
And a city's shining spires
Pondered of day dawn's fires?

Oh! is it a pleasant country
That you are come into
With lawns on the green wood tree,
And birds above in the blue,
And shades below the trees
Where the weary dream at ease?

And little children playing
On a green and golden mead,
And one o'er the green sward straying
Whom here I have indeed—
The dead face on the road,
The sober face and good?

Oh! is it a pleasant country
That you are come into
With lawns on the green wood tree,
And birds above in the blue,
And shades below the trees
Where the weary dream at ease?

Literary Miscellany.

The Shoonean.

[FROM THE CATHOLIC WORLD FOR DECEMBER.]

CHAPTER I.

Alexander Macallister, of Batemeer, in the County of Wexford in Ireland—familiarly known in Kerdiston as "Sandy the shoonean"—was the supremeanous proprietor of a green lock, lying twixt Kerdiston and Ballyfoyle, roundly land-locked on three sides by a sufficiently picturesque rocky promontory, also fitted from month till night to meet the half-yearly "gale-day" of land extraction, he was a rigid Presbyterian, a bitter hater of Catholicism, a valiant loyalist—as the term goes—and a prominent member of an anti-lodge.

With his wife and daughter, the latter a beautiful young girl just budding into early womanhood, he resided in a big, unpainted, slate-roofed Batemeer House, which was situated on the only cultivated and tenable portion of his property. This shabby genteel residence was deprived of much of its bleak appearance by a profusion of wide-spreading shade-trees that enveloped it at every side. From the porch fronting the hall-door a gravelled carriage way led down to the main entrance through a lawn of vivid greenness in spring and early summer profusely decked with yellow dafodils and silvery daisies.

A large, low-ceiled, iron-barred gateway, a pair of white-washed piers surmounted with lime-me globes, a tremulous lodge-house, and several large elm trees, the home of a large colony of cawing rooks, were the most conspicuous characteristics of the abode of struggling gentility as viewed from the public road.

Major Brown, of the County Wexford militia, was a constant visitor at Batemeer House. Comly said he was paying his attentions to the lovely Flora Macallister, but to the gaze of an ordinary observer his manner and unexpensive manner in which these attentions were received told plainly that his suit was not a successful one.

The major, as a rule, spent his Sunday at church, and then drove home with them to a meagre yet ceremonious dinner, after which he lost and himself sifted away the evening over a couple of tumblers of weak whiskey toddy, discussing the stirring political events of the day, which, indeed, formed such great prominence in earlier conversations of a serious all the landed gentry in the county.

One Sunday evening, as the major and his host were engaged in this harmless settled of entertainment, the latter picked up a copy of the local Nationalist newspaper, and, running his eye over the columns, stopped at one particular paragraph, to which he invited the attention of his guest.

"Major," he inquired, "is there any truth in this story, boyeh? The Duncannon Warrior and the Jackass?"

"Not that I know of," replied the major, as his steady, fiery eyeballs fudged out in anticipation of a suspected unpleasant revelation. "I don't know who the blackguards can mean by a Duncannon warrior. Of course I have to attend drill at the fortress whenever that casually seems of puppet rebels seized the Wexford militia are called out for their annual training."

"Listen to this," said Macallister, adjusting his spectacles on his aquiline nose—"A few nights ago, as a well known Duncannon man was returning home at a late hour, he was accosted by three men, who, after paying a visit to a sympathetic Shoonean, one of them said, 'Sure there's mule-donkeys insisted upon entering into a practical discussion with this gallant son of Mars on the much-talked-of subject of physical force.

After a few brilliant rounds in the dark the jawbone or the ass was victorious, and the poor warrior was left behind, the Jackass proceeding on his way, as if to inform them to the ass-driving—work, for they'll do nothing for me, says the Irish, 'but set their mules loose and they'll do the rest themselves.' Well, major, interrupted the host, "you heard a sacraight in the trap. I presume he visited the cellar prepared to read the paper."

"Not only that, Sandy, but he actually did read a large portion of a scandalous epistle from Paul—and as his sight naturally weak and the room was so dark, he would have probably gone on reading, I dare say, but, being warm, it met that one of the drowsy attendants thought it of leaving.

"You don't mean to say he actually read the Bible to the donkeys?"

"I regret to say that he did. They were a mixed kind of an assembly, over which their heads alone prevailed, and as it was very dark and Mr Lawson was too anxious to get in some Scripture reading, he did not perceive the disorderly which had assembled in the stable, and commenced the reading of the first verse of the jackass'

"I am sorry for the reverend gentleman, said Macallister, scarcely able to refrain from smiling—"I presume he won't bother himself much further with fellows of this type.

"You may bet your life he won't, Sandy. All the benighted papists in the district may go to—well, they may go to Hong Kong—for any other place of worship, before Mr. Lawson will ever again make a single endeavor to affect their salvation. But here is Mrs Macallister, I declare. Her coming is my signal. To bagh mine I should be moving, Flora dear.

"You seem to have had a very interesting discussion, a buttercup may have been about, remarked the lady ally—but just entered the room.

"Merely a little story I was telling, mavourne, answered the major, rising and moving towards the hall rack, from which he took his overcoat . . . but an end most interesting—very thing you see . . . Ha ah!

"Good night, Flora, responded the host, as he followed his guest out to the hall-door to a dark night. Take care you don't knock up against Shaun Foddlerd on your way.

"The low, dirty scoundrel will keep close to the country lane, thought the major with a hollow laugh, "as long as I carry this hand-stick with me. I will light my pipe—I will keep my hand on my stick—I will keep on whistling.

The major struck a match, and, having lighted his pipe, puffed at one—I think, then, lustrating his coat up to his chin, started out on his homward journey.

CHAPTER II

When Macallister heard his guest shut using the hall-gate after him he retired within the hall, and, barred and bolted the outer door. This he returned to the sitting room, where he found his daughter, and, throwing himself into the easy-chair lately occupied by his friend, proceeded to lean himself slowly in transfer of a whiskey toddy.

His wife sat musingly by the chimney corner, gazing into the embers of the now smouldering fire, and occasionally leaning a kind of long-drawn sigh which caused her husband to turn his eyes slowly in her direction.

Heigho—she ejaculated, at last, a weary, weary world this is when the pocket is not as full as the desires.

Do you want money, Susan—inquired her husband languidly.

What a question! Good gracious Sandy Macallister, the poor woman part of I have growing out over my ears! Of course I want money. I always want money, and that is the very reason why I wished to speak to you about getting further time to pay Mr Lane a bill.

What can Lane do, about it? replied her husband, as he drained down his glass of toddy. It is a little hard on the poor young fellow—Mr Lane—but I'm sure I can do no more in the matter. I wish I could, Susan, I wish I could, but I have to think of your interests as well as my own. I'm not rich, Susan, I'm not rich, and I have to be very careful of my money, which leaves the poor young fellow to take his chance with the other creditors.

The following day the lawyer and his client met again in Batemeer House in answer to the lady's invitation

Dunsmeed O'Donoghue, attorney-at-law, was handsome, well-built, intelligent young man. He was a prominent figure at all the National meetings in the country, an eloquent speaker, and a general favorite with every politically-depressed human being in the district. His client, Dan Malone, was a young fellow, of rather old man, whose life might be said to have been entirely spent behind his counter, and who, as he took his seat upon a luxurious cushioned chair, seemed ill at ease at the comfort it afforded. After weighing about uncomfy for some time he sought relief in twirling his hat on his big, fat, speckled hands, and, after giving an owl like gaze about the tastefully furnished apartment, he turned his face in the direction of his legal adviser.

"I wonder, Mattie Donnel, he began, in a low, whispering tone, as he edged his chair over towards his lawyer, "is the place haunted, eh? Do you think I could see it if I stay a bridge he's train on us? You know I can't believe, exactly, in all this stuff.

"I really can't tell you, Dan," replied the lawyer, smiling—"I take it they want more time, and your presence is without doubt, my judgment against them to-morrow. It will be a very, very, hard case if they have the miserable payment of your account, and perhaps sends them up or for himself with them and take chance for your money.

"But do you advise me to do, Mattie Dunsmeed?

"What can you phone," was the quiet reply. "I have already explained the situation to you.

"Well, then Mattie Dunsmeed, said Malone, "in the name of God, I won't press my claim with you, whether you will force the miserable payment of your account, and perhaps sends them up or for himself with them and take chance for your money.

"But do you advise me to do, Mattie Dunsmeed?

"What can you phone," was the quiet reply. "I have already explained the situation to you.

"Well, then Mattie Dunsmeed, said Malone, "in the name of God, I won't press my claim with you, whether you will force the miserable payment of your account, and perhaps sends them up or for himself with them and take chance for your money.

"But do you advise me to do, Mattie Dunsmeed?

"Rather foolish of the reverend gentleman, I should say, said Macallister. "He should have asked some of us about the fellow's character.

"That's just what I said to him Sandy—he was very well—But, as Mr Lawson said to me, the less inquiries looked so simple as he actually knew, and, as he said, as the reverend gentleman he knew of any chapter or conformity—or rebellion, as he called it in the Bible, that the unnerved Georgian was fairly taken in. As Mr Lawson told me, quoting the magistrate even plentiful words, 'it would be a charity for you, yer reverence, to read a chapter of two on morality to these lazy shamrocks—some to try all notions them to do a little work—work, for they'll do nothing for me, says the Irish, 'but set their mules loose and they'll do the rest themselves.' Well, major, interrupted the host.

"Well, major, interrupted the host, "you heard a sacraight in the trap. I presume he visited the cellar prepared to read the paper.

"Not only that, Sandy, but he actually did read a large portion of a scandalous epistle from Paul—and as his sight naturally weak and the room was so dark, he would have probably gone on reading, I dare say, but, being warm, it met that one of the drowsy attendants thought it of leaving.

"You don't mean to say he actually read the Bible to the donkeys?

"I regret to say that he did. They were a mixed kind of an assembly, over which their heads alone prevailed, and as it was very dark and Mr Lawson was too anxious to get in some Scripture reading, he did not perceive the disorderly which had assembled in the stable, and commenced the reading of the first verse of the jackass'

"I am sorry for the reverend gentleman, said Macallister, scarcely able to refrain from smiling—"I presume he won't bother himself much further with fellows of this type.

"You may bet your life he won't, Sandy. All the benighted papists in the district may go to—well, they may go to Hong Kong—for any other place of worship, before Mr. Lawson will ever again make a single endeavor to affect their salvation. But here is Mrs Macallister, I declare. Her coming is my signal. To bagh mine I should be moving, Flora dear.

"You seem to have had a very interesting discussion, a buttercup may have been about, remarked the lady ally—but just entered the room.

"Merely a little story I was telling, mavourne, answered the major, rising and moving towards the hall rack, from which he took his overcoat . . . but an end most interesting—very thing you see . . . Ha ah!

"Good night, Flora, responded the host, as he followed his guest out to the hall-door to a dark night. Take care you don't knock up against Shaun Foddlerd on your way.

"The low, dirty scoundrel will keep close to the country lane, thought the major with a hollow laugh, "as long as I carry this hand-stick with me. I will light my pipe—I will keep my hand on my stick—I will keep on whistling.

The major struck a match, and, having lighted his pipe, puffed at one—I think, then, lustrating his coat up to his chin, started out on his homward journey.

CHAPTER II

When Macallister heard his guest shut using the hall-gate after him he retired within the hall, and, barred and bolted the outer door. This he returned to the sitting room, where he found his daughter, and, throwing himself into the easy-chair lately occupied by his friend, proceeded to lean himself slowly in transfer of a whiskey toddy.

His wife sat musingly by the chimney corner, gazing into the embers of the now smouldering fire, and occasionally leaning a kind of long-drawn sigh which caused her husband to turn his eyes slowly in her direction.

Heigho—she ejaculated, at last, a weary, weary world this is when the pocket is not as full as the desires.

Do you want money, Susan—inquired her husband languidly.

What a question! Good gracious Sandy Macallister, the poor woman part of I have growing out over my ears! Of course I want money. I always want money, and that is the very reason why I wished to speak to you about getting further time to pay Mr Lane a bill.

What can Lane do, about it? replied her husband, as he drained down his glass of toddy. It is a little hard on the poor young fellow—Mr Lane—but I'm sure I can do no more in the matter. I wish I could, Susan, I wish I could, but I have to think of your interests as well as my own. I'm not rich, Susan, I'm not rich, and I have to be very careful of my money, which leaves the poor young fellow to take his chance with the other creditors.

The following day the lawyer and his client met again in Batemeer House in answer to the lady's invitation

Dunsmeed O'Donoghue, attorney-at-law, was handsome, well-built, intelligent young man. He was a prominent figure at all the National meetings in the country, an eloquent speaker, and a general favorite with every politically-depressed human being in the district. His client, Dan Malone, was a young fellow, of rather old man, whose life might be said to have been entirely spent behind his counter, and who, as he took his seat upon a luxurious cushioned chair, seemed ill at ease at the comfort it afforded. After weighing about uncomfy for some time he sought relief in twirling his hat on his big, fat, speckled hands, and, after giving an owl like gaze about the tastefully furnished apartment, he turned his face in the direction of his legal adviser.

"I wonder, Mattie Donnel, he began, in a low, whispering tone, as he edged his chair over towards his lawyer, "is the place haunted, eh? Do you think I could see it if I stay a bridge he's train on us? You know I can't believe, exactly, in all this stuff.

"I really can't tell you, Dan," replied the lawyer, smiling—"I take it they want more time, and your presence is without doubt, my judgment against them to-morrow. It will be a very, very, hard case if they have

THE MONITOR.

THE ONLY JOURNAL OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 5, 1887.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

The offices of the MONITOR are now located at

536 KEARNY STREET,

(Fifth floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

— Africa has a Catholic population of 1,656,000.

— A magnificent parochial school is being erected at a cost of $45,000 in St. Vincent's parish, Detroit, Mich.

— The Most Rev. Dr. Carr, Archbishop of Melbourne, will leave Ireland for his new See next week. The Archbishop will visit Rome en route.

— William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, has begun an action for £5,000 against the Dublin Express for libel, in having accused him of being a swindler and an Invincible.

— Bishop Macheboeuf, of Denver, has recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination as a priest. He has been at work in the Rocky Mountains for thirty-five years.

— Boycotting has extended to Australia. The annoyed "escaped nun," "Edith" O'Gorman, whenever she enters a railway carriage or a steamer there, finds an unpleasant that she has no one to keep her company.

— Addressing a temperance meeting at Blackburn, recently, the Bishop of Salford said the moral condition of English society, both with respect to divorce and impurity, dishonesty and intemperance, was far lower than was generally supposed.

— It is a sad fact—established by careful statistics—that more murders are committed in the United States than in any country in the world. The following are the number of murders in the countries mentioned per 10,000,000 inhabitants in each: United Kingdom, 237; Belgium, 240; France, 263; Scandinavia, 266; Germany, 279; Austria, 310; Russia, 363; Italy, 504; Spain, 533; United States, 620.

— We are always reluctant to remove the names of subscribers from our mailing lists, so we again—for the last time—call the attention of those in arrears for subscription to remit before the 15th inst., or they run the chance of being without the Monitor after that date, as self-preservation is the first law of live newspapers as well as of nature itself, and we do not mean to keep "barnacles" on our backs to impede our progress.

— The rumor is once more afloat, this time credited to a private telegram received in Baltimore from Rome, that St. Paul's Mina., is to be raised to the dignity of an Archbishopric, with Bishop Ireland as the first Metropolitan, having for suffragans St Cloud and two new dioceses to be created, the one at Mankato, the other at Winona, Dakota is to be divided and to have its Vicariates, the rumor says, a Northern and a Southern, of which latter Bishop Marty will have the government.

— The Catholic Campbell case—unique in its very gross boastfulness—is not without its comical side, amidst the horrish unfolding of the facts. The fight is almost a National one—Irish against Scotch—the Hicols (Lady Colin's family), Lady Miles, Sir William Butler (knighted since the suit began), and Capt. Shaw came from Ireland, and the counsel defending these—Sir Charles Russell, Mr. Murphy, and Mr. Symonds, are fellow-countrymen. The Campbells are Scotch, and their advocate, Mr. Finlay, is also a Scotchman, formerly a Doctor of Medicine.

— The city election in Boston, Mass., on December 14th, resulted in a victory for the cause of sound politics. Hugh O'Brien has been elected Mayor by a handsome plurality over Hart, and McHenie, the George-Lather candidates. The following aldermen were elected: John H. Sullivan, Patrick J. Donovan, John A. McLaughlin, Tilly Haynes, Chas. W. Smith, William P. Carroll, Chas. M. Brennick, C. H. Allen, Patrick J. Maguire, Nathan H. Smith, John Lee, Samuel P. Capel. That reads like the roster of an Irish regiment! Assuredly there cannot be many Yankees in Boston!

— We hearty thank all our Atlantic coast contemporaries who have have so kindly noticed the Christmas MONITOR. The Catholic Columbian of Columbus, Ohio, got out a very creditable Supplement for the holiday season, and it is gratifyed at the enterprise manifested by the MONITOR in this respect. Our distant contemporary, Aide, of Memphis, Tennessee, is kind enough to say that California talent "contributes to make the MONITOR one of the very best Catholic papers published in this country." Such genial friendship will stimulate us to make the MONITOR better with each new year of its existence.

— At Rome, the Congregation of Rites has decided to proceed with the beatification of the following English martyrs, who suffered under Henry VIII: Cardinal Fisher, Sir Thomas More, Margaret, Countess of Salisbury, the mother of Cardinal Pole, the Carthusian Priors Forest, Houghton, Haughton, Pinnipface, Woodhouse, Nelson, Cuthbert, Mayne, professor of the English College; Sherwood, Campion, Bryant, Hay, Johnson, and others, martyring in all sixty. Those martyrs died because they preferred death to accepting the doctrine of the royal supremacy. The ponente of the cause is Cardinal Bartolini, Prefect of that Sacred Congregation; the postulator and the vice-postulator are the Very Rev. Father Arnsellim, S. J., and the Rt. Rev. Mgr O'Callaghan, Rector of the English College

MR. BORUCK'S IGNOMINIOUS HAUL DOWN!

Two weeks ago we made the following plain proposition to Marcus D. Boruck, Editor of the Spirit of the Times of this city:

CHALLENGE.

The MONITOR will place the sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000) in the Nevada Bank, subject to the order of Marcus D. Boruck of the city of San Francisco, to be drawn by him and divided among any city charities he may designate, if any four non-Catholic Judges of the popular District of this city shall decide that any statement in the Boruck Report on the Condition of this Province on Mixed Marriages, printed in the MONITOR of Wednesday, December 1, 1886, openly or covertly conveys the grosly false imputation upon the non-Catholic women of California, put upon it by said Marcus D. Boruck.

The said Marcus D. Boruck shall also deposit in the Nevada Bank a similar sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000), to be forfeited to the MONITOR for charitable distribution in such Protestant Judges selected as umpires between us shall decide adversely to the charges made by him against the Priests of this Province when he cites this foul calumny against them: "They say that all women not married in accordance with the rights and ceremonies of the Catholic Church are living in 'horrible concubinage,' or, in other words, are 'harlots.'"

This was as fair a test as could be made in order to arrive at a correct conclusion regarding the truth or the falsity of Mr. Boruck's virulent utterance upon the Pastoral Letter read last November in all the Catholic churches throughout this Ecclesiastical Province. But, as we plainly intimated in a former article, Mr. Boruck designed to keep his unpot uninterpretation of the plain text of the Pastoral Letter in question as a house banale for such brazen lies bagels as make up his corporal guard in the Native-American party he proposes to form out of the outcasts and deserters from all the other political organizations in this State. Hence he had no desire to submit his fanatical opinions to any tribunal ever, well knowing that he would stand pilloried as a public libeler of the Catholic Hierarchy of California if the question were referred to the decision of Protestant gentlemen of such probity as marks the character of the members of the non-Catholic portion of the Judiciary to whom the MONITOR was willing to have this matter in arbitration.

In a long, windy and irrelevant article, Mr. Boruck squirms and splurges to his effort to evade the direct proposition of the MONITOR and to conceal the real animus of his attack upon the Pastoral Letter which caused all his affected anger, his fearful fulminations and his mistaken zeal in the wrong direction.

No doubt Mr. Boruck will feel very cheap when we inform him that the same Pastoral Letter which caused such an ebullition of emasculated "patriotism" on his part, has been read annually in every Catholic Church in California during the past eighteen years! It has been printed, published and distributed both in Circular form and also in the MONITOR, yet—with all the affected Quixotic chivalry which Mr. Boruck evinces for the name and fame of the fair Protestant wives and mothers of this coast—he never found it convenient to manifest his Pastoral Letter until 1886, when his Native-American banshee was born into the world!

When, however, the time came to "leave the bastard political bantling of Mr. Boruck's begetting," this pantling parent, this great American Mogul, this modern Romulus Parmus, at once disowned his war paint, his political tomahawk! Now his tin sword and—assuming a swaggering air—proclaimed to the world

"Thus who would our wives disdain,
Must meet great Boruck, face to face."

But sensible people laughed as they witnessed the caverings of the doughty warrior clothed as a gay as compass tin and tinsel armor. And now that it is generally known that the Pastoral Letter in question was first issued eighteen years ago, it only goes to show how silly and how false Mr. Boruck has been in accusing his non-Catholic sphere! Mr. Boruck has also rest satisfied that the Pastoral which has aroused his bigotry will continue to be read and printed annually for years to come, even long after the bones of Marcus D. Boruck are left to bleach upon the farmer and hills of some deserted cemetery The Catholic Church never changes. He who attacks the doctrine contained in even the youngest member of her Hierarchy, and find himself sparring him all that Prelate's predecessors, all the Popes, all the Fathers of the Church, and every member proclaimed by the Holy of Christianity.

After the ensemble onlerfage which the Editor of the Spirit of the Times has reported to in order to crucify out of his church calumniating attitude, we have no further words to waste upon this hot-string antagonist of antiquated principles. We made the proposition above printed with the honest intention of settling the question in the manner most congenial to a gentleman at the head of a "sporting" paper, but as he has seen fit not to accept our fair and non-Catholic test, the only course left for us is to assure Mr. Boruck that our Challenge still remains open for the acceptance of himself or the whole Native-American party—with Pinky pitched in for top dressing!

Mr. Boruck deems it known that during his thirty-five years of journalism in this State he has never attacked the Catholic Church through his paper until the occurrence of the present discussion, and for this let us congratulate him upon his just wisdom whilst we lament his recent folly! He evidently makes a great mistake, yet he hides the manliness to admit it, but let him learn wisdom from experience, and this from time to time as his sore paint and burns into his his armor to set the ridiculous Bombastes Furioso of his fanatical spirit on him to make the laughable mistake of asking up like an old religious Rip Van Winkle eighteen years after the enemy has made a mysterious "attack" upon the fortress of his favored community!

In conclusion, therefore, of the frustrated Knight's late outbreak against the Pastoral Letter he made in this his first attack upon the unencumbered citadel of the Catholic Church, let us as a non-bound friend and well wisher kindly advise him to put a practical construction upon the adage—"Cobbler, stick to your last." A man may be a good dog fancier and yet prove a dunce when he enters the domain of dogmatic theology. He may understand the rules of the Prize Ring, yet on Ecclesiastical matters not know the difference between a Wesley and a Bishop.

And this is precisely the case with Brother Boruck. As an authority on "dogging," duck-shooting and dogcoursing he may be dubbed Sir Oracle, forsooth, in all Christian charity, we advise him to stick close to the tanbark, the trap, the trigger and the turf, where he will find congenial employment and liberal applause, rather than to venture outside his sphere—counting both dogs and fleas—and, in the attempt, disgracefully defeat and inexplicable disaster by presuming to pick flaws in Ecclesiastical documents which he has not the mean nary classical and Christian education to analyze, nor the mental capacity to comprehend—much less to interpret correctly.

When a low-pitcy undertaker undertakes Honor, the world laughs at his antlow arrogance, and, in like manner, when the representative of a sporting paper undertakes to enter the ecclesiastical arena, he may spread and strut like a turkey gobbler in the eye of Thanksgiving, but he can never, by any mischance, be mistaken for a gospel gladiator.

Finally, as Mr. Boruck had the courage, bad taste to allude to the MONITOR's "limited circulation," we are forced to inform him to build a lofier-iron roof over his cuckoo transparental country lest he throw stones at the Monitor regarding its circulation. When we read Mr. Boruck's contemptible and insulted reflection upon the Monitor's circulation, we naturally consulted the Pacific States Newspaper Directory, issued by Messrs. Palmer & Rey, of this city, in order to see the immense circulation enjoyed by that gentleman's journal who spoke thus disparagingly of the Monitor's circulation. Here is what we discovered:

California Spirit of the Times, Circulation 1,200

The fact that Mr Boruck's paper has a circulation of just twelve hundred copies after his vaunted thirty-five years service in the Editorial chair—looks very much like a literary life failure. We regret this, because we like to see all men who devote themselves for thirty-five years to newspaper make well a name and fame for themselves, and we also regret that Mr. Boruck's bad manners has brought upon himself this necessary expose of the magnificent number of his subscribers, and this unfortunate revelation of the remarkable succession of failures to which he has whatted down his patrons!

Of course after such a revelation as the force of Mr. Boruck's contempt of Boy presumed to us we immediately concluded not to waste any more of the Monitor's powder upon such a pop gun! Hence we leave Mr Boruck and his paper to the contemptible obscurity of a newspaper nonentity!

Two weeks ago we made the following plain proposition to Marcus D. Boruck, Editor of the Spirit of the Times of this city:

CHALLENGE.

The MONITOR will place the sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000) in the Nevada Bank, subject to the order of Marcus D. Boruck of the city of San Francisco, to be drawn by him and divided among any city charities he may designate, if any four non-Catholic Judges of the popular District of this city shall decide that any statement in the Boruck Report on the Condition of this Province on Mixed Marriages, printed in the MONITOR of Wednesday, December 1, 1886, openly or covertly conveys the grosly false imputation upon the non-Catholic women of California, put upon it by said Marcus D. Boruck.

The said Marcus D. Boruck shall also deposit in the Nevada Bank a similar sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000), to be forfeited to the MONITOR for charitable distribution in such Protestant Judges selected as umpires between us shall decide adversely to the charges made by him against the Priests of this Province when he cites this foul calumny against them: "They say that all women not married in accordance with the rights and ceremonies of the Catholic Church are living in 'horrible concubinage,' or, in other words, are 'harlots.'"

This was as fair a test as could be made in order to arrive at a correct conclusion regarding the truth or the falsity of Mr. Boruck's virulent utterance upon the Pastoral Letter read last November in all the Catholic churches throughout this Ecclesiastical Province. But, as we plainly intimated in a former article, Mr Boruck designed to keep his unpot uninterpretation of the plain text of the Pastoral Letter in question as a house banale for such brazen lies bagels as make up his corporal guard in the Native-American party he proposes to form out of the outcasts and deserters from all the other political organizations in this State. Hence he had no desire to submit his fanatical opinions to any tribunal ever, well knowing that he would stand pilloried as a public libeler of the Catholic Hierarchy of California if the question were referred to the decision of Protestant gentlemen of such probity as marks the character of the members of the non-Catholic portion of the Judiciary to whom the MONITOR was willing to have this matter in arbitration.

In a long, windy and irrelevant article, Mr. Boruck squirms and splurges to his effort to evade the direct proposition of the MONITOR and to conceal the real animus of his attack upon the Pastoral Letter which caused all his affected anger, his fearful fulminations and his mistaken zeal in the wrong direction.

No doubt Mr. Boruck will feel very cheap when we inform him that the same Pastoral Letter which caused such an ebullition of emasculated "patriotism" on his part, has been read annually in every Catholic Church in California during the past eighteen years! It has been printed, published and distributed both in Circular form and also in the MONITOR, yet—with all the affected Quixotic chivalry which Mr. Boruck evinces for the name and fame of the fair Protestant wives and mothers of this coast—he never found it convenient to manifest his Pastoral Letter until 1886, when his Native-American banshee was born into the world!

When, however, the time came to "leave the bastard political bantling of Mr. Boruck's begetting," this pantling parent, this great American Mogul, this modern Romulus Parmus, at once disowned his war paint, his political tomahawk! Now his tin sword and—assuming a swaggering air—proclaimed to the world

"Thus who would our wives disdain,
Must meet great Boruck, face to face."

But sensible people laughed as they witnessed the caverings of the doughty warrior clothed as a gay as compass tin and tinsel armor. And now that it is generally known that the Pastoral Letter in question was first issued eighteen years ago, it only goes to show how silly and how false Mr. Boruck has been in accusing his non-Catholic sphere! Mr. Boruck has also rest satisfied that the Pastoral which has aroused his bigotry will continue to be read and printed annually for years to come, even long after the bones of Marcus D. Boruck are left to bleach upon the farmer and hills of some deserted cemetery The Catholic Church never changes. He who attacks the doctrine contained in even the youngest member of her Hierarchy, and find himself sparring him all that Prelate's predecessors, all the Popes, all the Fathers of the Church, and every member proclaimed by the Holy of Christianity.

After the ensemble onlerfage which the Editor of the Spirit of the Times has reported to in order to crucial out of his church calumniating attitude, we have no further words to waste upon this hot-string antagonist of antiquated principles. We made the proposition above printed with the honest intention of settling the question in the manner most congenial to a gentleman at the head of a "sporting" paper, but as he has seen fit not to accept our fair and non-Catholic test, the only course left for us is to assure Mr. Boruck that our Challenge still remains open for the acceptance of himself or the whole Native-American party—with Pinky pitched in for top dressing!

Mr. Boruck deems it known that during his thirty-five years of journalism in this State he has never attacked the Catholic Church through his paper until the occurrence of the present discussion, and for this let us congratulate him upon his just wisdom whilst we lament his recent folly! He evidently makes a great mistake, yet he hides the manliness to admit it, but let him learn wisdom from experience, and this from time to time as his sore paint and burns into his his armor to set the ridiculous Bombastes Furioso of his fanatical spirit on him to make the laughable mistake of asking up like an old religious Rip Van Winkle eighteen years after the enemy has made a mysterious "attack" upon the fortress of his favored community!

In conclusion, therefore, of the frustrated Knight's late outbreak against the Pastoral Letter he made in this his first attack upon the unencumbered citadel of the Catholic Church, let us as a non-bound friend and well wisher kindly advise him to put a practical construction upon the adage—"Cobbler, stick to your last." A man may be a good dog fancier and yet prove a dunce when he enters the domain of dogmatic theology. He may understand the rules of the Prize Ring, yet on Ecclesiastical matters not know the difference between a Wesley and a Bishop.

And this is precisely the case with Brother Boruck. As an authority on "dogging," duck-shooting and dogcoursing he may be dubbed Sir Oracle, forsooth, in all Christian charity, we advise him to stick close to the tanbark, the trap, the trigger and the turf, where he will find congenial employment and liberal applause, rather than to venture outside his sphere—counting both dogs and fleas—and, in the attempt, disgracefully defeat and inexplicable disaster by presuming to pick flaws in Ecclesiastical documents which he has not the mean nary classical and Christian education to analyze, nor the mental capacity to comprehend—much less to interpret correctly.

When a low-pitcy undertaker undertakes Honor, the world laughs at his antlow arrogance, and, in like manner, when the representative of a sporting paper undertakes to enter the ecclesiastical arena, he may spread and strut like a turkey gobbler in the eye of Thanksgiving, but he can never, by any mischance, be mistaken for a gospel gladiator.

Finally, as Mr. Boruck had the courage, bad taste to allude to the MONITOR's "limited circulation," we are forced to inform him to build a lofier-iron roof over his cuckoo transparental country lest he throw stones at the Monitor regarding its circulation. When we read Mr. Boruck's contemptible and insulted reflection upon the Monitor's circulation, we naturally consulted the Pacific States Newspaper Directory, issued by Messrs. Palmer & Rey, of this city, in order to see the immense circulation enjoyed by that gentleman's journal who spoke thus disparagingly of the Monitor's circulation. Here is what we discovered:

California Spirit of the Times, Circulation 1,200

The fact that Mr Boruck's paper has a circulation of just twelve hundred copies after his vaunted thirty-five years service in the Editorial chair—looks very much like a literary life failure. We regret this, because we like to see all men who devote themselves for thirty-five years to newspaper make well a name and fame for themselves, and we also regret that Mr. Boruck's bad manners has brought upon himself this necessary expose of the magnificent number of his subscribers, and this unfortunate revelation of the remarkable succession of failures to which he has whatted down his patrons!

Of course after such a revelation as the force of Mr. Boruck's contempt of Boy presumed to us we immediately concluded not to waste any more of the Monitor's powder upon such a pop gun! Hence we leave Mr Boruck and his paper to the contemptible obscurity of a newspaper nonentity!

— Cardinal Theodili, Master of the Papa's Household, has had before his Holiness the Judgment of the Vatican for 1887. The fixed income is 320,000 francs, derived from the capital left by Pius IX., and deposited with English banking houses. Another 120,000 francs are derived from rents, and forty or 120,000 are obliated to come from the St. Peter's Pence. The expenses being calculated at 320,000, there would be a deficit of 120,000. In prospect of the expenses of the approaching exhibition in the Vatican, the Pope has decided that he will take nothing from the patrimony left by Pius IX., and has therefore dispensed with various proposed expenditures — Twenty-one of the Orange participants in the recent Belfast riots have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment ranging from three months to seven years. This may teach these bigoted leaders, we hope, that Catholics even in the Black North have some rights which they are bound to respect.

We heartily congratulate our old friend Hon. Sylvester Pennoyer, formerly of Oregon, upon having secured such a sterling gentleman as Peter H. D'Arcy of Salem to be his private Secretary. We have known Peter since he boyhood years, and the longer we know him the more highly we esteem him.

— Father Felix, Superior of the Passionists in St Louis, having finished the necessary authorization from the proper superior, will commence preaching the Jubilee Mission in the metropolitan church of the Catholics of St. Louis, beginning Sunday the 16th inst. Father Felix, Superior of the Passionists in St Louis, having finished the necessary authorization from the proper superior, will commence preaching the Jubilee Mission in the metropolitan church of the Catholics of St. Louis, beginning Sunday the 16th inst.

BROTHER McCARRY ON MARRIAGE.

It is the unusual and astonishing to Catholics when reading the numerous assaults which half nonconformist Protestant preachers like Brother McCarry of the Pacific Christian Advocate, occasionally make upon the Doctrines of the Catholic Church, to witness the torturing of truth, the blind blundering ignorance, and the plausible perfidiousness which they resort to in order to show that "Romanism is strong and Sectarianism right.

Some of our readers may find curious the appended extract from a recent article by Brother McCarry intimed that when a husband and Mormon man marguarded moment to print his opinions upon Marriage, and thus entailed upon the poor deluded preacher another public flogging from for indulging in his favorite pastime of falsifying the God given doctrines of Purity and unlimited Christianity.

Brother McCarry Who Takes the "Hall Mary."

With all his bigoted blundering errors and evangelical ton foolery, we have hitherto considered Brother McCarry in the light of a magnified Christian gentleman whose misfortune it was to be a Methodist preacher, but when the editor of a religious paper permits himself to publicly insult the consecrated Archbishop of San Francisco, we may reasonably infer that beneath the surface of that Christian Mask, he is a fiendish prelatess, there lurks the hatred of Luther, the brutal instincts of infernal malice, and the venom of diabolical rancor

We desire to be at peace with all men, but we will never purchase peace at the sacrifice of principle, nor by satisfying our conscience when the church of God or His consecrated Prelates are attacked.

Let us see what changes Brother McCarry may bring against the Catholic Church, so we can refute them all satisfactorily. But when he disgraces even the conversants of evangelical piety by the brutal allusions of a blackguard towards our holy beloved pastor, we can only think that the Christianity has fought so that they are called "Blessed by our Divine Redeemer" who are persecuted for justice sake and the reason good Lord Bishop we dismiss the prayer of our Brother McCarry, and our conscience is clear in the matter of his fulsome flattery.

The first bloody item which Brother McCrary fulminates his fanatical sanctit upon the Sacrament of Marriage, is when he says:

"Great marital scorching to the end that will be not proper offer is legal, binding and sacred, and the parties are not living in a state of horrible concubinage."

And this is what is called "Christianity from the Methodist standpoint. Any man and woman no matter how drunk they have been married and discharged on such a portion of the Pious is hitched together, and have their marriage sanctified by Brother McCary as "legal, binding and sacred." He as Wesley would re-bake Brothel or Mormon for this blasphemous use of the word sacred and "Christianity" in the morning? Why Mormonism—which we do not—is a pure and undefiled religion when compared with the blasphemous conversion of the Sacrament of Marriage into a Brothel ceremony. Brother McCarry, if you are so well versed in Christianity, why not inform your readers that the Sacrament of Marriage is a sacrament in the sanctified Church of Christ, and that it is the only sacrament conferred on a man and a woman by a Methodist preacher. Ah Brother McCarry, Luther has learnen the whole Bible, and he has taught the world that as modified Methodist morality that even in preachers oppose the plainest materialism of Christianity.

Now that we have seen what constitutes marriage from a Methodist standpoint, let us see what is the Christian Morality that says in His Word and through His disciples, the first place the law of God distinctly states that "Whosoever shall put away his wife and marry another, committeth adultery against her, and if the wife shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery." The Divine Law, but Brother McCrary is so flagitiously incensed against the Catholic Church that he will break every section of the Code of God rather than forward fragments and proclaim the sanctuary of adulterers

Is it any wonder that the world is growing more grossly immoral, more unbelief and more lawless every day, when a Wesleyan preacher can publicly proclaim such a horrible doctrine as part of the Christianity he represents? How can the world law against crime when Christ condemnes? How can the word "sacred" by applied to the act of a civil officer? That Methodist blundering bigot must have forgotten that God has prostituted the egregious folly of publishing such sentiments as diametrically opposed to the plainest teachings of Christianity, and the plainest teachings of the Sacred Scriptures. Brother McCrary, if you are so well versed in Christianity, why not inform your readers that God has condemned such a doctrine as that which Brother McCrary wishes to be called "Christianity" and "Morality" in the morning? Why Mormonism—which we do not—is a pure and undefiled religion when compared with the blasphemous conversion of the Sacrament of Marriage into a Brothel ceremony

Family Fun.

Allied The Music?

A bad little boy lit a pack of shooting crackers and threw them into the street to see them "go off." One of his fisteman's mates came along and picked them before they went off. The mule walked about fifteen feet and stopped. Things wasn't acting right inside. He began to issue the smoke of fire crackers. He laid his left ear around against his ribs and heard some thing. It was then fire-crackers having fun. The mule pecked out about then hundred and a half miles of straight road and started. A negro man him about a mile the other side of the slim house, g ing south, white with perspiration, and emitting of smoke shooting out of her nostrils, mouth and ears, while his tail stuck straight up. He found his mule one morning striking half way through a farm house still smoking. The man had got his family out and put them in a lot of trees. He hauled his mule home, when he got cool enough, on a drag. The man is going to move his house further back of the road, and his wife and daughter will be well when the weather gets warm.

She Wanted To Know All About It.

"So you joined the Macons tonight, did you? So you could have another loafing place to go to nights instead of remaining home with my, ah!" said Mr. Shrinkem's gentler half on his return from the lodge on the night of his initiation.

"Yeah, my dear," he meekly replied.

"Well, then, you just set yourself down in that chair and tell me every word and action you've been through with before you go to bed to night; I'm always wanted to know about these Free Masons fellers and I'll see what kind of company you are going to keep in the future. Don't you lie to me either. As the head of this family, I've got a character to maintain, and I don't want you to begin to drag it in the dirt by coming home at all hours of the morning with your shoes tied around your neck for the neighbors to laugh at. No sir, the first time you are out late again, you sleep out until daylight. You give me that night key this minute before I forget it."

Colored Confidence.

The ability of the average colored servant in the South to steal with impunity from his or her employer, as the case may be, is truly phenomenal. "How's your wife, uncle, in yer new place?" asked Jim Webster of Mathilde Snowball.

"I've done laid up much dan twenty dollars, and I hadn't drawed a cent ch wages yet."

"I ain't yer sheered day will hold back yer wages?"

"No, I'se got puffec confidence in 'em."

Mistaken Identity.

"What a beautiful child! What an extremely handsome fellow!" says the gushing visitor to the lady of the house.

"Yes, he is a handsome boy, I think."

"Oh, indeed he is. He is the perfect image of his father—the perfect image. Don't you think so?"

"Well, I don't know. I never saw his father. We adopted him."

A Categorical Question.

The teacher of the Sunday school class was telling the little boys about temptation and showing how it sometimes seems to the most attractive guise. She used as an illustration the parable of a man. "Now," said she, "you have all seen the pear of a cat. It is as soft as velvet, isn't it?"

"Yeaum!" from the class.

"And you have seen the paw of a dog?"

"Yeaum."

"Well, although the cat's paw seems like velvet there is nevertheless concealed in it something that hurts. What is it?"

answer.

"The dog bites," said the teacher, "when he is in anger; what does the cat do?"

"Scratches," replied the boy.

"Correct," said the teacher, nodding her head approvingly; "now, what has the cat got that the dog hasn't?"

The whole class, relieved a boy on the back seat, and the titter that ran around the class brought the lesson to an end.

A Curtained Courtship.

A well-known gentleman called on the Widow Collins. During the interesting conversation—interesting because the widow had reasons for suspecting that the gentleman was about to propose—Mrs. Lin's little boy entered the room.

"Dady," said the widow, "can's you spend?"

"Can if I want to."

"Speak to Mr. Gray."

"Don't want to right now. Will after a while."

"You ra a fine little man," said the visitor. "How old are you?"

"Five years old."

"Oh, you are not that old," the widow, with an air of embarrassment, replied.

"That's what you said, anyhow."

"Dady."

"And it some time ago—

"David."

"Before he got to comin here."

"Oh, you are such a young pest. Mr. Gray, please excuse me a moment. I must go out and give instructions to cut dinner. When the widow had gone the boy turned to the visitor and asked:

"Did you come to see my maw?"

"Well, er—that is, my little man; I came to see both of you."

"How old are you?"

"Oh, not very old."

"I don's my paw I

"How long has your father been dead?"

"Ain't dead.

"What?"

"I say he ain't dead. Paw and maw fit, an paw went away, an one day maw told me not to ask him paw my more, but I do, all the same. How much money have you got?"

"Not much."

"Yes, you have."

"How do you know?"

"Maw told Mr a Buck that you had a bushel of money. Are you going to marry my maw?"

"You must not ask such questions," said the visitor, coloring deeply.

"Have you got any sense?"

"Why, of course. What make you ask?"

"I know."

"Well, tell me."

"You might get mad."

"Oh, no I won't."

"Sho' sud?"

"Yes."

"Well, maw told Miss Buck that you didn't have much sense, but said she didn't care."

The widow entered. "Dady, have you been a good boy? Why Mr. Gray, you are not going to leave us?"

"Yes, madam, I must go."

"Oh, do wait until after dinner."

"I am not hungry. Good day."

In the evening, when the ladyfolks begin to tile their sass, the lonely widow wonders why Mr. Gray does not come to her. Hmm know. He is paying his court to an old maid.

The Wonder Flower and Feather Store. No. 104 Market street, is now in the 7th year of its existence, and it daily growing more and more popular as year by year it has left every other feather and flower establishment. The cause of the above is well known and understood. The care of the store is and will at each the period. The enormous elevators are always ready to show goods to certain and customers.

Farm and Home.

Special Adoption of California to the Sugar Beet.

In the northern countries where the beet sugar industry flourishes, the seed is sown in April or May, which grows about fifteen feet and stopped. Things wasn't acting right inside. He began to issue the smoke of fire crackers. He laid his left ear around against his ribs and heard some thing. It was then fire-crackers having fun. The mule pecked out about then hundred and a half miles of straight road and started. A negro man him about a mile the other side of the slim house, g ing south, white with perspiration, and emitting of smoke shooting out of her nostrils, mouth and ears, while his tail stuck straight up. He found his mule one morning striking half way through a farm house still smoking. The man had got his family out and put them in a lot of trees. He hauled his mule home, when he got cool enough, on a drag. The man is going to move his house further back of the road, and his wife and daughter will be well when the weather gets warm.

THE GIANT OF MEDICINES.

The Most Effective and Popular Remedy Ever Discovered.

WHY IS IT SO EFFECTIVE IN SO MANY DIFFERENT DISEASES?

WHY one remedy can affect so many cases is this: The diseases have a common cause, and a remedy that can affect the cause, permanently cures all that is in its power. Nine-tenths of the ailments of humanity are caused by derangement of the digestive organs. It is no paradox to say that most of the diseases that are incurable are curable if they are taken in time. Dropsy, Consumption, Bright's Disease, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Prostration, Female Complaints, Kidney Complaints, Urinary Complaints, Nervous Debility, Sleeplessness, Constipation, Piles, Blood Impurities, Fever and Ague, Malaria, Chills and Fever, Jaundice, Dizziness, Nervousness, Sick Headache, Flatulence, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Bowel

Family Fun.

Afraid The Mule?

A bad little boy lit a pack of shooting crackers and threw them into the street to see them "go off." One of Ira Hileman's mules came along and swallowed them before they went off. The mule walked about fifteen feet and stopped. Things wasn't acting right inside. He began to taste the smoke of fire crackers. He laid his left ear around against his ribs and heard some thing. It was them fire-crackers having fun. The mule picked out about three hundred and a half miles of the straight road and started. A negro man him about a mile the other side of the alms house, got in north, while with profanity and tobacco juice he slinged shooting out of her nostrils, mouth and ears, while his tail alone straight up. He found his mule one morning sticking half way through a farm house still smoking. The man had got his family out and put them in a lot of trees. He hauled his mule home, when he got cool enough, on a dray. The man is going to move his house further back of the road, and his wife and daughter will be mad when the weather gets warm.

She Wanted To Know All About It.

"So you joined the Masons last night, did you? So you could have another loafing place to go to nights instead of remaining home with me, eh?" said Mr Shrinkum's gentler half on his return from the lodge on his coming of a humiliation.

"Yeah, my dear," he merely replied.

"Well, then; you just set yourself down in that chair and tell me everything and not action you've been through with before you go to bed to night; I've always wanted to know about these Free Masons fellaws and I'll see what kind of company you are going to keep in the future. Don't you lie to me either. As the head of this family I've got a character to maintain, and I don't want you to begin to undermine it in any way by coming home at all hours of the morning with your shoes tied around your neck for the neighbors to laugh at. No sir; the first time you are out late again, you stay out until daylight. You give me that night this minute before I forget it."

Colored Confidence.

The ability of the average colored servant in the South to steal with impunity from his or her employer, as the case may be, is truly phenomenal. "How yer mean' yer in yer new place?" asked Jim Washer of Mathilda Snow ball.

"I've done laid up mosh dan twenty dollars, and I hain't drawed a cent ob wages fuh it."

"Ain't yer afeered dey will hold back yer wages?"

"No, I've got puffec confardence in 'em."

Mistaken Identity.

"What a beautiful child! What an extremely handsome child!" says the gushing visitor to the lady of the house.

"Yes, he is a handsome boy, I think."

"Oh, indeed he is. He is the perfect image of his father—the perfect image. Don't you think so?"

"Well, I don't know. I never saw his father. We adopted him."

A Categorical Question.

The teacher of the Sunday school class was telling the little boys about temptation and showing how it sometimes comes in the most attractive guise. She used as an illustration the paw of a cat. "Now," said she, "you have all seen the paw of a cat. It is as soft as velvet, isn't it?

"Yessum!" from the class.

"And you have seen the paw of a dog?"

"Yessum."

"Well, although the one's paw seems like velvet there is nevertheless concealed in it something that hurts. What is it?" No answer.

"The dog bites," said the teacher, "when he is in anger; what does the cat do?"

"Scratches," replied the boy.

"Correct," said the teacher, nodding her head approvingly, "now, what has the cat got that the dog hasn't?"

"Whiskers!" exclaimed a boy on the back seat, and the litter that ran around the class brought the lesson to an end.

A Curtailed Courtship.

A well-known gentleman called on the Widow Collins. During the interesting conversation—interesting because the widow had reasons for suspecting that the gentleman was about to propose—Mrs. Collins's little boy entered the room.

"Dery," said the widow, "what you spose I

"Can I I want to."

"Speak to Mr. Grey."

"I don't want to right now. Will after a while.

"You're a fool little man," said the visitor. "How old are you?"

"Five years old.

"Oh, you are not that old," the widow, with an air of embarrassment, replied.

"What's what you said, anyhow.

"Dery!"

"Said it some time ago."

"David!"

"Before he got to comin here."

"Oh, you are such a young pest, Mr Grey, please excuse me a moment. I must go out and give Isaac another slice of bread."

When the widow had gone the boy turned to the visitor and asked

"Did you come to see my maw?"

"Well, er—that is, my little man I came to see both of you."

"How old are you?"

"Oh, not very old?"

"O dat's my paw!"

"How long has your father been dead?"

"Ain't dead."

"What?"

"I say he ain't dead. Paa and maw St, an paw went away, an' one day maw told me not to call him paw any more, but I do, all the same. How much money have you got?"

"Not much."

"Yes, you have."

"How do you know?"

"Maw told Mr Buck that you had a bushel of money. Are you going to marry my maw?"

"You must not ask such questions," said the visitor, coloring deeply.

"Have you got any sense?"

"Why, of course. What make you ask?

"I know."

"Well, tell me."

"You might get mad."

"Oh, no! work."

"Sho' not?

"Yes."

"Well, maw told Mas Buck that you didn't have much sense; but said she didn't care."

The widow entered. "Dery, have you been a good boy? Why Mr. Grey, yonare, you going to leave us?"

"Yes, madam, I must go."

"Oh, do wait until after dinner."

"I am not hungry. Good day."

In the evening, when the babyfolds begin to fix their eaves, the lonely widow wonders why Mr. Grey does not come to her. Grey knows. He is paying his court to an old maid.

The Wonder Pyrene and Feather Soaps. Pa. 1000 are in daily, being sold in the year of 1 Have may be had of all druggists, and perfumers. Have may be had in Pyrene Soap, Pyrene Soap Powders and Sachet. The name of the above well known, for one will receive free the prepaid on all at each box price. The customers Wholesale are always ready to show goods to visitors and customers.

Farm and Home.

Special Adaption of California to the Sugar Beet.

In the northern countries where the beet sugar industry flourishes, the seed is sown in April or May, with constant dangers from late frosts. The crop then comes in, in a lump, in October and November. It must be then carefully stored away in subterraneous cellars in pits, well ventilated and closely watched, lest either the cold of Winter or the heat generated by some injured and consequently fermenting root, should invade and spoil a pit, or sometimes the whole, of a large board. Despite all precautions and care the rot will with the "non-sugars" and the difficulties of purification increase in a geometrical ratio, so that the campaign is usually brought to a close by the first of January.

In middle and south California no more costly protection than that of open sheds, to keep off the rains, is required from the time of harvest to the end of the campaign, and the perfect ventilation so secured maintains the sugar contents of the roots unchanged for a much greater length of time, the temperature being sufficiently low to prevent a tendency to sprout mid about the middle of February; when, as a rule, the beets are still in better average condition than where they have to be stored under ground. There is thus no difficulty whatever in beginning the annual campaign in the central California to fall six months, and probably more, if early adjustments from the great valley should be found desirable.

In respect to the growing and cultivation of beets, also, California enjoys a not very inconsiderable advantage in the fact of the absence of Summer rains, ordinary seasons does away with a large portion of the expense in manual labor in hoeing and weeding, which forms an item in the cost of production in both in Europe and in the East. With the rough pulp produced in the soil, a single weeding is sufficient where elsewhere three are necessary in order to carry a clean crop to maturity.—Prof. E. W. Hilgard in the Overland Monthly for December.

Cotton in California.

It has been known for some time that cotton would prove an advantage in San Diego county from various Six specimens exhibited at the annual county fair, but the first practical demonstration of the fact that it could be grown with profit has been made by John W. Barnes, of Bear valley. Last week W. W. Stewart & Co., an enterprising merchants, received from him at their warehouse thirty-nine sacks, or 3500 pounds, of very fine quality of cotton, which he raised on the farm of S G Antes, as an experiment. The experiment having proved a complete success, he will plant largely this coming season, which he estimates to be a much more profitable crop than grain. The first consignment will be shipped by Stewart & Co., per steamer Anodo, to the Oakland Mills, where it will be manufactured into fabrics. J. B. Frazier, experienced cotton planter of Louisiana, has assisted at and pronounces the quality very superior. There is no reasonable doubt that cotton growing will be one one of the important industries of the county and this behooves our capitalists to see to it that the product is manufactured at home instead of being sent to other cities. Samples of this cotton are now on exhibition at the Sun-Blue, and tinters are invited to call and inspect them.—San Diego Sun.

Waste in the Kitchen.

Waste in the kitchen is often great from apparently trivial sources.

In cooking meats the water is thrown out without reserve, and with it the grease from the dripping pan is thrown away.

Scraps of meat are thrown away.

Cold potatoes are left to sour or spoil.

Dry fresh are not boiled, and become wormy.

Unripe fruit sauce is left standing in tin.

Apples are left to decay for want of a cover.

The tea strainer is left open.

Victuals are left exposed to be eaten by mice.

Rinns of meat and the carcass of turkey are thrown away, when they could be used in making soups.

Sugar, tea, coffee and rice are carelessly spilled in the handling.

Soap is left to dissolve and waste in the water.

Rich towels are used for dish cloths.

Napkins are used for dish towels.

Towels are used for holders.

Brooms and mops are not hung up.

More coal is burned than is necessary by not arranging dampers when not using the fire.

Lights are left burning when not used.

Tin dishes are not properly cleaned and dried.

Blood raw browns are used in scrubbing the kitchen floors.

Silverspoons are used in scraping kettles.

Cream is left to mold and spoil.

Mustard is left to spoil in the crust, etc

Vinegar is allowed to stand until the tin vessel becomes corroded and spoiled.

Pickles become spoiled by the leaking out or evaporation of the vinegar.

Pork spoils for want of salt; and beef becomes the brine wants seeding.

Hams become rancid or filled with worm for the want of care.

Cheese molds or is eaten by mice or ermin.

Tea and coffee pots are injured on the stove.

Woodenware is uncoaled and left to warp and crack.

How to Cook.

"I see you try your beefsteak," remarked a tramp with his mouth full.

"Yes, said the woman shortly, 'how would you have it cooked? Roasted?'

"No, certainly not, drawed medamp, broiled. I may be a tramp, he added plaintively, 'but I'm no ostrich.'

Marriage Rules.

A man is what his wife makes him. Never both manifest anger at once. A good wife is the greatest earthly blessing. Never speak loud to one another, unless the house is on fire. Never make a remark at the expense of one another; it is manness. It is the mother who moulds the character of the child. Never put children lorting words to think of doing your absence. Husband, it was to her you will not meet again in life. Let each one try to be pleasant to the wishes of the other, which is the cultivation of an absolute un-selfishness. Never find fault, unless it is perfectly certain that a fault has been committed, and even then preceide it with a sine and lovingly.

Ingratitude and indifference sometimes arise from the absence of husband returns from his business at evening. During this absence throughout the livelong day the wife has been busy with school and hands preparing some little surprise, some new pastime pleasure, to make his home more attractive than ever. He enter's seemingly sees no more of what has been done to please him than if he were a blind man, and has nothing more to say about it than if he were dumb. Many a lonely wife has burns in her heart as she sitting sorrow, day after day, from season to season until, in process of time, the fire and enthusiasm of her original nature has burned out, and natural indifference spreads its pall over the friendly.

THE GIANT OF MEDICINES.

The Most Effective and Popular Remedy Ever Discovered.

WHY IS IT SO EFFECTIVE IN SO MANY DIFFERENT DISEASES?

WHY one remedy can affect so many cases is this. The diseases have a common cause, and a remedy that can affect the cause, permanently cures all the diseases. Unlike any other organ in the body, the Kidneys when diseased, may itself be free from pain, and the very fact that it is not painful leads many people to deny that it is diseased. Nine-tenths of all diseases are caused by diseased Kidneys.

Symptoms of kidney disease and yet give forth no pain, because it has lost its nerves of sensation, and there are the only means of conveying the sense of pain. Thus unconsciously disease of the kidneys develops insidiously. We do not even watch to see if it is going or is in good order. We look at the bowels, or notice the urine. We see no need to open the kidneys, and so it is diseased. We say of the following Symptoms and Consequences of Kidney Disease:

SYMPTOMS: Headache, Unusual desire to urinate at night; Flutter, Greasy Froth in water; Irritated, Hot and Dry skin; Feeble Appetite, Scalds and Neuralgia; Abundance of pale or nearly pure of dark-colored water; Sore Stomach; Heartburn with Dyspepsia; Intense pain, upon sudden excitement, Loss of Memory, Rheumatism, Gravel, Stones and Brick Dust Deposits in urine; Feel or a little brick dust, offensive and infectious in the urine; Constipation, Costiveness, Alternating with Looseness; Short breath, Flutter and Heart-beat at sudden jerks, Sleeplessness, etc.

These are only the chief disorders or symptoms caused by a diseased condition of the kidneys. Now then, but it is clear to you that the kidneys, being the great filters and strainers, if they are restored to health by the great specific, disease is gone. There is NO MYSTERY ABOUT IT. It does cure many bad states of the system, exactly as we have indicated. Now what does it do? It does it by the alliance, the like property of the blood, escapes through their walls and passes away in the form of water, which is thus made to wash the kidneys and free them from the kidneys by the use of "Warner's SAFE Cure." THE GREATEST DISCOVERY OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. Its action is MOST EFFICACIOUS in all cases of disease of the urinary organs. Its effectiveness in organic diseases of the kidneys, and other, false action in the kidneys, is the great feature of the remedy. Now, these are exactly the conditions that produce the most dangerous and fatal results in the system. Let us notice a few of these diseases and how they are affected by kidney disease.

"WARNER'S SAFE CURE."

CONSUMPTION: As a great many cases of consumption is only the effect of a diseased condition of the organs, and such are cured by the use of "Warner's SAFE Rheumatic Cure," the kidney poisons attacks their substance and consequently they waste away and are destroyed. Dip your finger in acid and it is burned. Wash the finger every day in acid and it will be burned, and some day it will be burned. The kidney poison acid in the blood burns some organ or other, destroying life. For this reason a prominent physician of Boston, Mass., has for the first personal demonstration of the fact that it could be grown with profit has been made by John W. Barnes, of Bear valley. Last week W. W. Stewart & Co., an enterprising merchants, received from him at their warehouse thirty-nine sacks, or 3500 pounds, of very fine quality of cotton, which he raised on the farm of S G Antes, as an experiment. The experiment having proved a complete success, he will plant largely this coming season, which he estimates to be a much more profitable crop than grain. The first consignment will be shipped by Stewart & Co., per steamer Anodo, to the Oakland Mills, where it will be manufactured into fabrics. J. B. Frazier, experienced cotton planter of Louisiana, has assisted at and pronounces the quality very superior. There is no reasonable doubt that cotton growing will be one one of the important industries of the county and this behooves our capitalists to see to it that the product is manufactured at home instead of being sent to other cities. Samples of this cotton are now on exhibition at the Sun-Blue, and tinters are invited to call and inspect them.—San Diego Sun.

IMPAIRED EYE-SIGHT. Kidney sick with some person has an especial hatred for sight. It is a curse for disorders, one night, many persons have written an expression, that after a the rough course of treatment, "Warner's SAFE Cure," their eyesight has been greatly improved. In fact, one of the first occulists in the country says that half the patients that come to him will had eyes, upon examination, show kidney disorder. We have no doubt that the reason why so many people are blind is because the kidney poison in the blood, settles in the eyes. Let the kidneys negative been out of order for years, and the sight is gradually growing dimmer.

OPIUM HABITS: It is a well-known fact recently shown anew, that opium, habits capture their victims by the paralyzing effect of morphine, cocaine, whisky, tobacco and other enslaving habits. In these organs the appetite is developed and sustained, and the best authorities are restored to perfect health. For this purpose, leading medical men prescribe the only specific for those diseases of all claimants for the fame of "Warner's SAFE Cure."

RHEUMATISM: Among reputable physician will tell you that rheumatism is caused by an acid condition of the blood. Vinegar is an acid. Vinegar in the condition is caused by inactivity of the kidneys and liver, and the stomach and food assimilating organs. It affects old people more than young people because the acid has been collecting in the system for various forms of rheumatism. "Warner's SAFE Rheumatic Cure," is a great specific for all forms of rheumatism.

BLADDER DISORDERS: Kidney and urinary trouble, with pelvic pressure of the bladder, frequent urination and urinary trace. Year and constantly causing thought these organs inflamed and ulcerated, and the sufferer is in great agony. Some cases, the kidneys and urinary are victims of kidney-weakness in life, is that all women who are subject to the kind of pressure or stone. "Warner's SAFE Cure," is the specific for the disease of the bladder, and the kidneys. Gravel, Inflammation and catarrh of the bladder and has effective control the tendency to the formation of gravel and stone. It challenges comparison with all other remedies in this work. Buy to-day.

"WARNER'S SAFE CURE."

CONGESTION: Congestion is a collecting together of blood in any one place. Kidney poison is the blood to circulate and it stagnates. This condition exists very long the collecting blood clots and eventually destroys the organ. Congestion is an unconscious form of this very common disease. Congestion, determined as it is to force blood into every part of the system, has to work harder and palpitation, excessive action, rush of blood to the organ, indicate that the Congestion has become chronic and a dense disease to the entire system. Congestion of the kidneys is a common disease. Congestion is the beginning of much chronic misery. "Warner's SAFE Cure" will remove it.

FEMALE COMPLAINTS: What we have said about Congestion applies with particular force to the above complaints. They are so common as to be, and as every doctor can tell you most of them. Congestion is the beginning of much misery. "Warner's SAFE Cure" is the great specific for disease and produces these countless sufferings which can be alleviated but not destroyed in a public place. Inquire of your druggist.

BLOOD DISORDERS: It is not strange that so many, many people with treatment with "Warner's SAFE Cure" at the same time have given themselves heavy, blotched, Pimpled skin have disappeared under its potent influence. The kidney poison in the blood thickens it. It clogs the pores of the skin and the result is the imperfect action of the system and of the skin, and if there is any local disease off the business in the kidneys to relief Further, the expression justifies us in the statement that "Warner's SAFE Cure" is the great purifier of the blood, and the skin.

STOMACH DISORDERS: Many people complain of stomach ills, thought, Indigestion, Waterbrash, Heat and distress in the stomach, sharp pains, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick headache, Dyspepsia, Constipation, etc., which will be produced in the stomach when the blood is filled with kidney poison. People lose themselves a vital parts of stomach not but get no better. They never will get better until they give the stomach no less than the kidneys, and liver, which is the source of the only specific—"Warner's SAFE Cure"

CONSTIPATION, PILES: These distressing ailments, more without disorders, but are secondary to imperfect action of the kidneys and liver. Life is like a hot furnace, which is taken from the blood by the liver. If the liver is torpid, the blood by piles, is almost always on indication of congested liver, and a break up down of the system is the consequence, even to the disease the kidneys by the use of "Warner's SAFE Cure," and these constitutional secondary diseases disappear.

HEADACHES: Many people suffer untold agonies all their lives with headache, cause. With some temperaments, kidney acid in the blood, in spite of all that can be done, will irritate and inflame the brain and produce intense suffering. Those obstinate headaches which do not yield readily to local treatment, may be regarded quite certainly as of a kidney origin.

THESE ARE SCIENTIFIC FACTS, and, from the way we have set them forth, we think, we have made them plain, that the kidneys, being the great filters and strainers, if the "Warner's SAFE Cure" is the specific for the disease of the kidneys, and the diseases of the system, which are victims of kidney-weakness in life, is that all women who are subject to the kind of pressure or stone. "Warner's SAFE Cure," is the specific for the disease of the bladder, and the kidneys. Gravel, Inflammation and catarrh of the bladder and has effective control the tendency to the formation of gravel and stone. It challenges comparison with all other remedies in this work. Buy to-day.

"WARNER'S SAFE CURE."

ASK YOUR FRIENDS AND NEIGHBORS WHAT THEY THINK OF

"WARNER'S SAFE CURE"

WESTERN HOTEL, 212-14 Broadway Street. JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor (Late Broadway Hotel.)

THE HAWAIIAN CONSULATE. THE OFFICE OF THE HAWAIIAN CONSULATE in San Francisco has removed to No. 417 CALIFORNIA STREET, above the Gregory Bank.

J. O. MCKINLAY, Hawaiian Consul.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRICE'S Famous California-Made CARVERS For Christmas Presents. (Ella nets made and dumps.) From $7.50 to $15.00 Per Set. M. PRICE, Pioneer Cutler, 415 Kearny St.

Long and Superior! BUTTERICK'S PATTERNS. CATALOGUE FREE. STAMPING PATTERNS. Order with other goods, or send 10c. for Catalogue. H. A. DEMING, 113 Post Street, S. F.

THE ONLY COMPLETE, CORRECT AND AUTHORIZED EDITION. SADLIERS' Catholic Directory, Almanac and Ordo for 1887. Pity 35th Annual Publication. Sadlier's Ordo and Almanac, Sadlier's Catholic Directory, Almanac and Ordo, Sadlier's Catholic Directory, Almanac and Ordo. PRICE. 1 vol. paper covers ... $1.25. 1 vol. bound in Cloth ... $1.50. 1 vol. bound in Cloth, Sm. ... 50c. Sent to any address on receipt of price. For Sale by all Booksellers. D. & J. SADLIER & CO., PUBLISHERS, 31 and 33 Barclay St., New York. SADLIER'S Catalogue of Standard Catholic Publications, including the famous Sadlier's Library, sent free on receipt of two cent stamp.

TO MUSIC PROFESSORS. WANTED! A Professor of Music. To apply personally or address with stamp, Box 1, Monterey, Cal.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. THE CELEBRATED SOHMER PIANOS Are for sale by Sohmer & Co., Ticket w/ Durability. Opera Pianos for Concerts, grand pianos in ... BYRNS BRAZE, Note Agent, 922 Market Street, near Jones S. F. S. F. MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS. Highest Honors of all Great World's Exhibitions for Purity, Quality, Durability. PIANOS. The Improved Method of Stringing introduced and perfected by MASON & HAMLIN, is considered the most important improvement in Pianos since their invention. Illustrated Catalogues free. ORGAN & PIANO CO 154 Tremont St., Boston. 149 Wabash Ave., Chicago. 46 E. 14th St., Union Sq., N. Y. KNABE PIANOS Unquestionably and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World. A. L. SANBORN & CO., 611 Dupontaine, S. F. Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast. ESTEY PIANOS Formerly the Pat. Action Piano. THE OLD FAVORITE! (Remove: 1 Eddy Address) BENJ. CURTAZ & SON, 26, O'Farrell Street, San Francisco.

EDUCATIONAL. Academy of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, OAKLAND, CAL. THE ACADEMY RECENTLY OPENED UNDER THE CARE OF THE SISTERS OF MERCY, is now in a flourishing condition. Its location is beautifully situated in the City of Oakland, and is equal in every respect to any other Academy in the State. A course of instruction is followed which is thorough and complete in every department of a Young Lady's education. Its pupils have shown a marked proficiency in their studies, and have gained a high reputation for the Academy. The Academy is now prepared to receive a limited number of Boarders, who will be treated with the kindness and affection of a mother. The Academy is pleasantly

MR. JOHN J. ROE.

Funeral Honors Paid the Remains in Dublin.-Resolutions Passed by His Friends in this City.

The Irish Times, of Dublin, under date of the 4th ult., contains the following notice of the funeral of Mr. John Roe, who was well known and highly esteemed by a large number of Monitor readers:

Yesterday morning, shortly after 10 o'clock, the remains of the late Mr. John Roe, which reached Queenstown on the previous day from America, were brought on their arrival at Kingsbridge by the Fisher's Inter, Tallon, were removed from that place to Glasnevin Cemetery, Dublin, by the deceased's sons, John and James.

The remains were followed by his sons and girls of both branches of the dual institute at Athlone, who by their appearance reflected high credit on the management of this noble charity. On reaching the cemetery the remains were brought into the Mortuary Chapel, where prayers for the dead were recited, the interment taking place immediately after. The body was entombed in a broken shell, the outer coffin being a beautiful example of Ancelloc work, richly tinted with silver mountings, while on the top were numerous wreaths and immortelles forwarded by his friends and admirers of the deceased gentleman.

Mr. Roe had long been connected with the Cuban Institution, for which he was collector for more than twenty-two years; and it is not too much to say that to his zealous exertions, during that long period may be attributed the splendid results now to be seen in the buildings and grounds at Cuba, in which the Dominican Sisters and Christian Brothers work so admirably for the dual states of Ireland. To those who have any experience in the difficult work, I admiring subscriptions, Mr. Roe's labors will be easily understood, and to those who have not, it is sufficient to know that it will be sufficient to say that he travelled constantly all the high Ireland, England, and Scotland for almost the period mentioned, receiving large subscriptions from persons of every rank and religious persuasion, and in most cases sending their assistance in a pecuniary manner, monthly. About three years since he left Ireland for America, taking with him a young pupil of the Cuban Institution, who was one of the mourners at the funeral, and is the State Ward transferred from city, receiving every where a generous welcome, and awaking a warm interest in the cause for which Mr. Roe's exertions in both it may be said of Mr. Roe, that he lived for the dual annual Ireland, and in their service he died. He contracted a cold when crossing the mountain region from San Francisco in his way to Nevada, the developing into severe inflammation of the lungs, which proved, unfortunately, fatal. Shortly before dying he expressed a wish that he should be interred in Glasnevin, and his remains were accordingly sent from America. We understand that it is the intention of the committee and friends of the institution to erect in each of the cemeteries, a suitable monument to perpetuate his services and death, in order that the world may ask a heritage may receive. His portrait will also be placed in each of the institutions.

Amongst those attending the funeral were—James, Michael Roe, brother; Patrick Thornton and James Cuerk, brothers-in-law; Wm. Kavanagh, uncle; John, James, Christopher, Patrick, and Michael Thornton, nephews; Thos. Malone, dual sons, who accompanied Mr. Roe through America; and the following members of the committee:—Very Rev. Canon Daniel, P. P., chairman; Very Rev. R. P. Conlan, Rev. Michael Fitzgerald, Rev. Thos. Ryan, Rev. Charles Dunne, Rev. Thos. Ryan, Rev. John F. Barry, William Kelly, J. P.; Rev. Brother P. M. Wickham, Rev. Brother J. Maher, C. M., Chaplain to the Institution; Rev. Brother J. A. Murray, Director of the Institution; Rev. Brother L. O'Neill, Director of St. Vincent's Orphanage; Daniel Cullen, Secretary to the Institution; Dr. O'Farrell, Rev. Brother T. M. Gallagher, Brother J. A. Gallagher, Brother M. J. Smith, Brother J. B. Fleming, Brother W. J. Warren, Brother Ignatius, Brother C. J. Healy, Brother M. F. Byrne, Patrick Fitzpatrick, Wm. Cullen, Michael Cullen, Thos. Sullivan, Wm. Cullen, Michael Cullen, Thos. Cullen, Thos. Cullen, Michael Cullen, Michael Cullen, Michael Cullen, Master Matthew Sandiman, John Hickey, J. Collins, Edward Tresse, James Higgins, J. Redmond, Cullen, Thomas Kenny, J. Cullen, Michael Cullen, Patrick Kelly, P. Kelly, J. O'Reilly, J. O'Donnell, J. Mahoney, Joseph Fitzpatrick, Arthur Fitzpatrick, Esq.

The funeral arrangements were admirably carried out by Mrs. Farrell, of Marlborough street.

ACTION OF THE PUBLIC COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee of the Catholic Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, Dublin, Ireland, to take some steps in relation to the death of Mr. Roe, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved: That the Committee express their sorrow at the death of John Roe, for over 22 years collector for the Deaf and Dumb Institution, and that, as a mark of respect and esteem for every respect, should be paid to his memory by the attendance of as many members of the Committee as possible at his interment in Glasnevin. Moved by John F. Barry, Esq., seconded by Rev. E. F. Conlan, D.D.

Resolved: That a marble tablet with the date of his death be erected in each chapel of each Institution. Moved by Chas. Kennedy Esq., P.P., seconded by William Kelly, Esq., J. P.

Resolved: That an oil painting be executed and with an appropriate inscription be hung in the school rooms or other prominent place in each institution."

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The following resolutions were adopted at the San Francisco meeting of the friends of the late John J. Roe:

WHEREAS it has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst and from the sphere of his great usefulness our beloved friend John J. Roe; and

WHEREAS we during our intercourse with him having witnessed his untiring efforts in behalf of the cause which brought him from his native land, desire to testify to the sorrow which we feel at his untimely taking off even while in the height of his success, for that which was his only cause of life, the welfare of afflicted humanity; and

WHEREAS we believe that in his demise there has been sustained an irreparable loss not only among the hundreds throughout this and Mexico, but also among those who only language is the sign of the sorrow which we feel at his untimely death; therefore be it resolved

Resolved: That in this their hour of affliction we tender our sympathy in the loss our earnest sympathy and

Resolved: That the thanks of the Institution which he represented and for which he labored so assiduously and faithfully, are due to Mr. Mary Jory who at great inconvenience and expense to herself and family left her home in Minister to his wants in his last illness, and furthermore be it

Resolved: That we endorse and commend his zeal in completing the work he so nobly begun, that his remains be sent to the land of his nativity and

Resolved: That copies of these resolutions be engrossed and forwarded to his relatives and to the Catholic Institutions of the Dual and Irish Dublin, Ireland.

Governor Washington Bartlett, S. J. McCoy, stock, chairman; Albert J. Brenner, secretary; R. C. Tobin, Mrs. R. C. Tobin, Chas. A. Clinton, M. H., Hon. Thomas Andrews, Mch. Ansorth, Miss McDonald, Robert, Tobin, C. F. Kennedy, J. J. O'Brien, Miss Agnes Manning, Miss Lizzie Manning, H. B. Hall, M. H., Jas. McFarland, James Hughes, J. J. Wm. Lynch, Mrs. Mary Lynch, Miss Lynch, Miss Lynch, P. C. McGinty, W. T. Bell, M. H., John O'Brien, Carlos Dwyer, P. Boland, Thomas Keane, Mrs. Brennan, Miss Rosalie Brennan, Mrs. Jennie J. B. Argenti, James B. Duggan, Thomas R. Carew, Wm. E. Roberts, Thos. Brennan, Thos. F. Prendergast, John F. Nolan, John Edgar, James Morgan, M. D., C. M. Enright, M. D., Jas. T. K. Wilson, James P. Sullivan, M. D., Miss Mitchell, M. Malone, John F. W. Lawor, M. J. Bolan, M. D., Miss Mary Graham, Rev. James Shanle, S. J., Rev. Jas. J. Cummings, Rev. J. J. Cashell, Mrs. J. J. Lynch, Mrs. Mary Lynch, Miss Mary Lynch, Miss Lynch, William Bradley, George H. Wilson, Frank Hopkins, Sheriff, John Lynch, P. J. Murphy, Tullie Argenti, Mrs. Tullie Argenti, Henry White, S. F. White, Revd. Congiato, S. J., Rev. P. Rowling, Rev. C. P. Maria, Rev. J. H. Murphy, John M. V. O'Connor, Mr. David Belden, Mrs. Martin Murphy, J. J. Hanlon, John Morgan, John Conway, Timothy Lonsey, James Lynch, Jas. Fitzgerald, Malachy, Terrence Scully, Timothy O'Neil, James M. Mahon, Edward McGoughlin, and B. T. McLoe, of San Jose.

A Friend of the Irish Cause.

A member of the Irish Association, a gentleman of this city presented the Reverend George W. Pepper, Secretary of the Institute of Mount Vernon, with a handsome gold-hooked case suitably engraved, in token of their appreciation of his long service. Cheerful in the Irish people's cause. The following were the donors of the handsome souvenir: Messrs. E. T. Hanmity, J. Mahoney, J. P. Griffin, Bryan O'Connor, J. M. Shannon, O. Reilly, Peter Reilly, P. J. Donnel, M. Conroy, Jas. Kelly.

Holiday Presents.

A dozen pictures in book by Flagler, hand them to the door once at home. Have one enlarged and stamp remembered—it will be an acceptable present. Flagler's gallery is the finest and most complete in the city and produces the best photo group. Market and Ninth streets.

SOCIETY ELECTIONS.

New Officers Elected for 1887 in Catholic Organizations.

CATHOLIC KNIGHTS, VIRGINIA CITY.—At the anniversaries of St. Mary's Branch, No. 1, C. K. of A., America, the following officers were elected: Spiritual Director, Father Tolmen; President, Frank Gardner; Vice-President, Owen Brennan; Recording Secretary, Thomas Cullen; Financial Secretary, D. J. Mahony; Treasurer, P. H. Ford; Sergeant-at-Arms, Patrick Rogers; Sentinel, Timothy White; Trustees, P. J. McNamara, J. F. Egan and Wm. English.

St. MARY'S (T. A. B. SOCIETY, A.O.H.) Leonard, president (re-elected); Ed. Hoolihan, vice-president; Charles J. Sandiss, treasurer; J. J. Kennedy, recording secretary (re-elected); Thos. Ryan, financial secretary; James Sandiss, sentinel; John Mullen, Michael Gresham, James Sullivan, trustees; Thomas Nelson, sergeant-at-arms; Dr. E. Phelan, physician (re-elected).

GRATTAN'S SOCIETY, St. Patrick's Church, Spiritual Director, Rev. J. M. Nast, S. J.; President, James E. Kelly; First Assistant President, Thomas R. Carew, Second Assistant President, Charles L. Cheney; Secretary, J. F. Finnerhill; Treasurer, F. J. Ford; Librarian, William Sullivan; Sentinel, J. Kelly; Door Keeper, Thomas Lynch; Marshals, Patrick McDonald and Lawrence Wise; Guardian, Jas. Ford; Trustees, Hugh J. Murphy, Maurice Jordan, Jos. Brennan, James Power; second division, Peter Lynch, Jr., and Matthew Kelly; third division, T. Fitzsimmons; fourth division, Mark Campbell; fifth division, James Markel and James Hendrick; sixth division, Edwin Lang.

St. MARY'S BRANCH, C. K. A.—At a meeting of St. Mary's Branch, Catholic Knights of America, held last Tuesday evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Spiritual Director, Rev. W. F. King; President, Dr. J. F. Gibbons; Vice-President, M. D. O'Donnell; Recording Secretary, J. J. Martin; Financial Secretary, C. J. Kelly; Treasurer, Thomas Ryan; Sergeant-at-Arms, M. F. Cullen; Sentinel, Jas. McCall; Trustees, Jas. Mathews, Sergeant-at-Arms, M. F. Burke; Sentinel, Nancy.

ST. PETER'S PARISH, C. K. A.—No. 61.—The Dalton Guards, Knights of Honor, meet the third Sundays of each month, at 8 o'clock P. M. Officers for 1887: Spiritual Director, Rev. J. Bourgeret; President, J. P. McGinnis; Vice-President, A. Boyd; Recording Secretary, P. E. Farrally; Treasurer, Frank Voit; Sergeant-at-Arms, Andrew Boyd; Sentinel, J. F. Stallman; Trustees, J. Voit, Wm. Horan, J. Lynch, Jas. Flows; 3 years, Dave Burke.

—St. JOSEPH'S BRANCH C. K. A.—President, W. J. O'Brien; Vice President, Mark Campbell; Treasurer, T. B. Cleary; Recording Secretary, T. J. Dugan; Financial Secretary, J. B. Hall; Sergeant-at-Arms, J. Cleary; Trustees, M. Dolan, T. J. McGuire, J. Ryan; Sentinel, Jas. Cleary; Guard, J. Ryan.

TRINO CHILDREN'S CLASS.—Thomas Cassidy, William Cassidy, Matthew Gleason, Thomas J. O'Connell.

FORTIN CHILDREN'S CLASS.—Joseph Hanchy, Thomas Connolly, James Murphy, Joseph Murphy, John Murphy, Michael Dowd, William Wilson, F. Wilson, Frank Richards, Frank Rankin.

FIFTH CHILDREN'S CLASS.—Thomas Cassidy, James Devlin, John Gorman, John Hare, Edward Manning, Joseph Murphy, Thomas Dowd, Daniel Ryan, Frank Sullivan, Edward Sanders.

SECOND INTERMEDIATE CLASS.—William Wilson, James Farlane, William O'Connell, Henry Bateman, John Donovan, James White, George Curtis, Thomas Kenny, J. Cullen, Joseph Richards, John Fagan, Alexander Dumont, Joseph Dowling, John J. Kane, Jas. Reynolds, Dennis Lynch.

THIRD INTERMEDIATE CLASS.—Robert Mullen, Joseph Nolan, Joseph O'Donnell, John O'Connor, Michael Cullen, Jas. Cullen, Jas. Cullen, Michael Cullen, Thomas Kagan, Dennis McCarthy, Michael Cullen, John Fitzpatrick, Jas. Cullen, Michael Cullen, Joseph Cowdery, Daniel Dunn, William Dunn, Thomas Ferrell, James Ferrell, Francis Lynott, Walter Martin.

FIRST PREPARATORY CLASS.—William Brown, John Boulgin, Bertin Craddock, Joseph Crowley, Thomas Mullen, Thomas Mullen, John Mullen, William Gorman, William Hines, Wilson J. Shea, Richard Cox, Jas. Thomas Sanders, William Hines, Jas. Cullen, Joseph Farrell, Thomas Mullen, Joseph Farrell, Thomas Cullen, James Cullen.

FIRST PREPARATORY CLASS.—Jas. Cullen, William Gorman, William Hines, James Dever, Edward Dever, Nicholas Walsh, Frank De Ruse, Frank Gardiner, Thomas Kagan, Arthur Mullen, Aloysius Mullen, William Cullen, John Carter, Thomas Kane, James Reilly, James Sullivan, Lawrence Bonner, Frank Cullen, Jas. Cullen, Jas McCarthy, Edward McCarthy.

SECOND PREPARATORY CLASS.—John Wilson, John Wilson, Edward Kennedy, Thomas Mullen, John McCarthy, Joseph Carter, George Kilduff, Thomas Kane, Thomas Fagan, Thomas Robert Joseph Gorman, James Duffy, James O'Neil, Adolph Steffens, William Cullen, Jas. Cullen, Charles Cullen, Jas. Cullen, Jas. Cullen, Jas.

Poetry.

NEW YEAR'S RESOLVE.

As the dead year is cleared by a dead December
So let your dead sins with your dead days lie.
A new life is yours, and a new hope! Remember
We built our new ladders to climb to the sky.
Mend not in the weights of persuasion, forgetting
Whatever your past hold of wrong or wrong!
We weigh all our strength in a useless regret
Idly
We sit by old tombs in the dark too long.

Have you missed your aim? "Well, the mark is still shining;
Did you faint in the race? well, take breath for the sprint;
Did the clouds drive you back? but one yonder flashes lining;
Share you mourned and doubt lest it were for a taint?
As each year harries by let it join that process of light!
With your eyes on the heavens, your face to the blast!
I tell you the future can hold no terrors
For any and well will the stars revolve.
If he will but stand fast on the grace of his armor
And instead of regretting, resolve, resolve!
It is never too late to begin rebuilding,
Though all life ruins your fair seems lovely,
For look! how the life of the lovely and gilding
The wave, was force of the broken old world!

ELIZA WHEELER-WILCOX.

THE DOWNY OF MARY.

[Lines suggested by the pageant at the Virgin Mother feast in Lourdes (Lourdes) the last entry.]

They parted Thy downy, my Mother,
Yea, s'en se s'ebla.
In the hour of Thy priestly enthronement
I sed darkly said:
Despoiled of the bride-wreath and jewels,
Ah!, weeping, sent forth
From a world-blighted grandeur
To snowdrifts of earth.

From the altar they led Thee, my Mother;
They silenced the prayer,
And the bellied and stately pealing
Thy name through the air.
To the home and the nave they were flingint
The flowers of Thy shrine;
But the harp and the heart of the minstrel,
My Mother were Thine.

They parted Thy downy, my Mother,
The wealth of the land;
But the harp and the heart of the minstrel,
The strength of their hand.
Hushed, then to mountain sleeping,
The Angel's even strain
Awake to sweet music expression
Again and again.

For anon, when the storm-sounds were raging,
Like winds of the sea,
Up sprang, as the song of the sea bird,
Thy name and Thee.
And the soul, from its temporary chilling,
Breathed wantonness divine;
For the harp and the heart of the minstrel,
My Mother! are Thine.

Though the hands of the minstrel may never
Be lifted in prayer,
Yet wherever the harp chords are wakened,
They sing in thee.
Though the eyes of the minstrel sources ever
Are cast to the sky,
To the heart that knows aught of true beauty
Thy beauty is nigh.

Though the lips of the minstrel have chanted
Earth's weariest sense,
With a soft startled cadence its angelic
A song of Thine one,
Till in some lovely chorus earth's poets
Shall sing of Thee.
For the heart and the harp of the minstrel,
My Mother! are Thine.

M. G. R.

MARTIN THE MONK.

"The dim Cathedral seems o'er my head,
The festival notes seem to me the loud or play.
Gold-barred by sunbeams, through the sun-lit nave
Why do they seem less calm and sweet?" he said,
Falling the solemn chanting of an hymn,
Martin the Monk, at Lincoln-on-the-Hill.

"Has I not spent my life in study and prayer?
My cotter cell, that looks across the hill,
And sees the sunset, is it not hallowed, hushed, and still,
Nor dreamed a thought that might be called a sin?
For my fathers seemed but then to be
Of praising God through all eternity.

"Then I was young, and I could see no harm
The shouter evil, and watched the shadows fall
Upon the quiet cloisters and of the wall;
When one who came cried: 'At the outer gate
Is a beggar, brother Martin, wait to see
And pray that then would'st pass to Galilee.

'Is the sacred years, the lovely Galilee,
From which a stream of rock and cool waters is seen,
Sun-lovely with many a bright-clad, form
I prested him with gladness, for that he
Brought tidings of the world, and from a distant home
Tidings from Rome to me a long time dumb.

'He spoke of home, of parents, and the pain
That one had borne, of love, and joy, and life,
Told of success, of triumph, and of strife;
Then uprose him to his feet and said, and
And I, the monk, back to my cell did go,
With the dream of the world in my heart and show.

'Ah! what a narrow cell is mine, and bare;
Could I have triumphed in the outer world?
Loved, and the honest of home instead
Is my long life to be one constant prayer,
Spoiled by the Children of the Holy Ghost?
Signed the young monk at Lincoln-on-the-Hill.

"I, as he drew adown the holy stair,
Where the dead angels wait, upon the wall
Where hung the crucifix, a ray did fall,
Touching the Saviour with a crown of fire;
I have just found in your company, said Rosen.
For that his soul a reverent awe did feel.

"Martin! I spoke upon the cross of fire
Stretched out, pale, upon the cross, and with thee
Female Mr—shadowing from thy beauties, and
Martin, count thou not lose thy cross! 'e Mr?'
And Martin, kneeling, saw the precious hand
Thorn-crowned and weary, and with tears he said
Ah!

"Lord! I will follow Thee! my cross is light,
My heart is Thine! and with thee words the
Slipped from the wall angels wait, upon the wall
Such a joy, such a peace, such comfort sight
He sate sang praise to God, who hath given
That Martin, monk, at Lincoln-on-the-Hill.

REMEMBER THY MOTHER

The mother sat still with snow-white hair,
Its feeble and thin and pale;
Two sweet blue eyes looked out from the chair,
Was rudely and tall and hale;
Its hair was black as the night and thick,
Its haughty lip is sculptured and
That he oft forget the tender care
That was still his mother's right!

Thy the carelessness and the cruel word
Were easy to do and say;
Till years wearily, with flashing cheeks,
The answered him then one day!
"I only the good could speak, my son,
If I to should remember right,
Lest I mortified then in these trembling arms,
And toiled for thee day and night.

Loving and pure! "ng, and unselfish
Till like you, no more than strong;
If only there should remember the
Then never wanders do me wrong;
For now I am cumbered upon thy love,
I am frail and old and gray;
I can think I owned long years ago,
Remember my love to-day."

He dropped by her knee, with a calm, thin, pale
Hand, and a tear in his eye;
He prayed beside his young mother head,
And her tears were on his cheek;
Is his strong young arms has cast,
For he never forgets that own his by
An infant upon her breast.

O men in your strength and hope and joy,
O ambitious young men!
Remember that waiting infants once
You lay on your mothers' breast;
Remember that the sun's rays
That you will grow old and gray
That the young or the fairest and
Will come back to your hearts some day.

—"100 Home Hot Dollar" is true only of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it is an unanswerable argument to everybody and economy.

Literary Miscellany.

The Shooneen.

[FROM THE CATHOLIC WORLD FOR DECEMBER.]

CHAPTER III.

The day after the lawyer visit Mrs. Macallister announced her intention of drawing into the neighboring market place to make some fifty goods purchases. Her daughter Flory, however, excused herself from accompanying her, and slade out as soon as she was she pitching out upon which her mother was almost passed out through the front gate. This she struck out quickly across the fine fields for the Long Lane, the hawthorn-bound and primrose-fringed trying place whereon she had promised to meet her lover.

With two young and sympathetically mated human beings who meet to tell each other the old, old story, time flies with wings of speed. It was not until the sun had cast the broad, flat land in cool gray shade and fired the yellow, farm-crowned summits of the distant uplands, that prudence suggested an immediate homeward journey.

As the lovers emerged from the long lane upon the winding high road, the forty farm of Father Tom Doyle, the jolly old parish priest, was seen advancing towards them. Although Father Tom, as he was familiarly called, had his hat off and was evidently returning from his breviary, still, as all the parish knew, he had a quick eye for everything passing round him.

"By jove! Flory," exclaimed to Dunglow as he perceived the young pair, "what a matchmaker! My friend Father Tom, and no way of escape. We must only make a bold front of it, and I can say that I met you casually on the road, and was merely accompanying you as far as your cross gate.

But Father Tom was too old a hand to be easily bamboozled and soon had Dunglow within a few paces of his young friend and parishioner and the deep blush which confused his cheeks, he began to suspect there was something in the wind.

He knew, of course, the lawyer's company, and were she of his own old there was no one in the entire county he would have better pleased to have met in the same situation; but a Presbyterian, and the pure miles daughter of "Sandy the Shooneen" Father Tom took a vigorous point of view and blew his nose with his big red handkerchief short.

What was to be done. The characteristic smile of friendly recognition was beginning to broaden on Father Tom's big honest face, and in another moment they were within speaking distance.

"Father Tom," began O Dunglow, with all conceivable faltering, "thats Miss Flory Macallister, of Barenscur.

The pastor lifted his hat and bowed.

"I was taken by the long, estimated the amatory disposed lawyer, merely to see if the young ducks were flying, as I intend having an evening's shooting at them next week, when Miss Macallister on the road.

Something seemed to interfere with the sight of one of Father Tom's eyes, as he stood into wrinkled tightness, while the open one gleamed with a sort of family knowingness at his young parishioner.

"I think, Dunglow, said he, as he pointed towards a pathway a short distance from him, "this passage leads straight to to Miss Macallister's house."

"Yes, sir," replied the young lady in a meek, bashful tone. "I fear I have delayed you long, Father Tom, but I am so obliged to you for your kindness in accompanying me so far."

Then she turned her eyes towards the priest, and, stretching out her hand to meet it, said: "Good-by, sir.

"Good-by, Miss Macallister," said Father Tom. "I am very happy, I assure you, to have made your acquaintance.

At this moment Flora's attention was attracted by the sound of approaching footsteps, and, looking around in a frightened manner, she perceived her parishioner, Brown, who had evidently been a witness to the handshaking familiarity with the priest. She quickened her footsteps to avoid him. In the hurry, brother Martin, were to thee, And prays that then would'st pass to Galilee.

"Is the sacred years, the lovely Galilee, From which a stream of rock and cool waters is seen,
Sun-lovely with many a bright-clad, form
I prested him with gladness, for that he
Brought tidings of the world, and from a distant home
Tidings from Rome to me a long time dumb.

"He spoke of home, of parents, and the pain
That one had borne, of love, and joy, and life,
Told of success, of triumph, and of strife;
Then uprose him to his feet and said, and
And I, the monk, back to my cell did go,
With the dream of the world in my heart and show.

"Ah! what a narrow cell is mine, and bare;
Could I have triumphed in the outer world?
Loved, and the honest of home instead
Is my long life to be one constant prayer,
Spoiled by the Children of the Holy Ghost?
Signed the young monk at Lincoln-on-the-Hill.

"I, as he drew adown the holy stair,
Where the dead angels wait, upon the wall
Where hung the crucifix, a ray did fall,
Touching the Saviour with a crown of fire;
I have just found in your company, said Rosen.
For that his soul a reverent awe did feel.

"Martin! I spoke upon the cross of fire
Stretched out, pale, upon the cross, and with thee
Female Mr—shadowing from thy beauties, and
Martin, count thou not lose thy cross! 'e Mr?'
And Martin, kneeling, saw the precious hand
Thorn-crowned and weary, and with tears he said
Ah!

"Lord! I will follow Thee! my cross is light,
My heart is Thine! and with thee words the
Slipped from the wall angels wait, upon the wall
Such a joy, such a peace, such comfort sight
He sate sang praise to God, who hath given
That Martin, monk, at Lincoln-on-the-Hill.

REMEMBER THY MOTHER

The mother sat still with snow-white hair,
Its feeble and thin and pale;
Two sweet blue eyes looked out from the chair,
Was rudely and tall and hale;
Its hair was black as the night and thick,
Its haughty lip is sculptured and
That he oft forget the tender care
That was still his mother's right!

Thy the carelessness and the cruel word
Were easy to do and say;
Till years wearily, with flashing cheeks,
The answered him then one day!
"I only the good could speak, my son,
If I to should remember right,
Lest I mortified then in these trembling arms,
And toiled for thee day and night.

Loving and pure! "ng, and unselfish
Till like you, no more than strong;
If only there should remember the
Then never wanders do me wrong;
For now I am cumbered upon thy love,
I am frail and old and gray;
I can think I owned long years ago,
Remember my love to-day."

He dropped by her knee, with a calm, thin, pale
Hand, and a tear in his eye;
He prayed beside his young mother head,
And her tears were on his cheek;
Is his strong young arms has cast,
For he never forgets that own his by
An infant upon her breast.

O men in your strength and hope and joy,
O ambitious young men!
Remember that waiting infants once
You lay on your mothers' breast;
Remember that the sun's rays
That you will grow old and gray
That the young or the fairest and
Will come back to your hearts some day.

—"100 Home Hot Dollar" is true only of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it is an unanswerable argument to everybody and economy.

The Shooneen.

[FROM THE CATHOLIC WORLD FOR DECEMBER.]

CHAPTER III.

The day after the lawyer visit Mrs. Macallister announced her intention of drawing into the neighboring market place to make some fifty goods purchases. Her daughter Flory, however, excused herself from accompanying her, and slade out as soon as she was she pitching out upon which her mother was almost passed out through the front gate. This she struck out quickly across the fine fields for the Long Lane, the hawthorn-bound and primrose-fringed trying place whereon she had promised to meet her lover.

With two young and sympathetically mated human beings who meet to tell each other the old, old story, time flies with wings of speed. It was not until the sun had cast the broad, flat land in cool gray shade and fired the yellow, farm-crowned summits of the distant uplands, that prudence suggested an immediate homeward journey.

As the lovers emerged from the long lane upon the winding high road, the forty farm of Father Tom Doyle, the jolly old parish priest, was seen advancing towards them. Although Father Tom, as he was familiarly called, had his hat off and was evidently returning from his breviary, still, as all the parish knew, he had a quick eye for everything passing round him.

"By jove! Flory," exclaimed O Dunglow as he perceived the young pair, "what a matchmaker! My friend Father Tom, and no way of escape. We must only make a bold front of it, and I can say that I met you casually on the road, and was merely accompanying you as far as your cross gate.

But Father Tom was too old a hand to be easily bamboozled and soon had O Dunglow within a few paces of his young friend and parishioner and the deep blush which confused his cheeks, he began to suspect there was something in the wind.

He knew, of course, the lawyer's company, and were she of his own old there was no one in the entire county he would have better pleased to have met in the same situation; but a Presbyterian, and the pure miles daughter of "Sandy the Shooneen" Father Tom took a vigorous point of view and blew his nose with his big red handkerchief short.

What was to be done. The characteristic smile of friendly recognition was beginning to broaden on Father Tom's big honest face, and in another moment they were within speaking distance.

"Father Tom," began O Dunglow, with all conceivable faltering, "thats Miss Flory Macallister, of Barenscur.

The pastor lifted his hat and bowed.

"I was taken by the long, estimated the amatory disposed lawyer, merely to see if the young ducks were flying, as I intend having an evening's shooting at them next week, when Miss Macallister on the road.

Something seemed to interfere with the sight of one of Father Tom's eyes, as he stood into wrinkled tightness, while the open one gleamed with a sort of family knowingness at his young parishioner.

"I think, Dunglow, said he, as he pointed towards a pathway a short distance from him, "this passage leads straight to to Miss Macallister's house."

"Yes, sir," replied the young lady in a meek, bashful tone. "I fear I have delayed you long, Father Tom, but I am so obliged to you for your kindness in accompanying me so far."

Then she turned her eyes towards the priest, and, stretching out her hand to meet it, said: "Good-by, sir.

"Good-by, Miss Macallister," said Father Tom. "I am very happy, I assure you, to have made your acquaintance.

At this moment Flora's attention was attracted by the sound of approaching footsteps, and, looking around in a frightened manner, she perceived her parishioner, Brown, who had evidently been a witness to the handshaking familiarity with the priest. She quickened her footsteps to avoid him. In the hurry, brother Martin, were to thee, And prays that then would'st pass to Galilee.

"Is the sacred years, the lovely Galilee, From which a stream of rock and cool waters is seen,
Sun-lovely with many a bright-clad, form
I prested him with gladness, for that he
Brought tidings of the world, and from a distant home
Tidings from Rome to me a long time dumb.

"He spoke of home, of parents, and the pain
That one had borne, of love, and joy, and life,
Told of success, of triumph, and of strife;
Then uprose him to his feet and said, and
And I, the monk, back to my cell did go,
With the dream of the world in my heart and show.

"Ah! what a narrow cell is mine, and bare;
Could I have triumphed in the outer world?
Loved, and the honest of home instead
Is my long life to be one constant prayer,
Spoiled by the Children of the Holy Ghost?
Signed the young monk at Lincoln-on-the-Hill.

"I, as he drew adown the holy stair,
Where the dead angels wait, upon the wall
Where hung the crucifix, a ray did fall,
Touching the Saviour with a crown of fire;
I have just found in your company, said Rosen.
For that his soul a reverent awe did feel.

"Martin! I spoke upon the cross of fire
Stretched out, pale, upon the cross, and with thee
Female Mr—shadowing from thy beauties, and
Martin, count thou not lose thy cross! 'e Mr?'
And Martin, kneeling, saw the precious hand
Thorn-crowned and weary, and with tears he said
Ah!

"Lord! I will follow Thee! my cross is light,
My heart is Thine! and with thee words the
Slipped from the wall angels wait, upon the wall
Such a joy, such a peace, such comfort sight
He sate sang praise to God, who hath given
That Martin, monk, at Lincoln-on-the-Hill.

REMEMBER THY MOTHER

The mother sat still with snow-white hair,
Its feeble and thin and pale;
Two sweet blue eyes looked out from the chair,
Was rudely and tall and hale;
Its hair was black as the night and thick,
Its haughty lip is sculptured and
That he oft forget the tender care
That was still his mother's right!

Thy the carelessness and the cruel word
Were easy to do and say;
Till years wearily, with flashing cheeks,
The answered him then one day!
"I only the good could speak, my son,
If I to should remember right,
Lest I mortified then in these trembling arms,
And toiled for thee day and night.

Loving and pure! "ng, and unselfish
Till like you, no more than strong;
If only there should remember the
Then never wanders do me wrong;
For now I am cumbered upon thy love,
I am frail and old and gray;
I can think I owned long years ago,
Remember my love to-day."

He dropped by her knee, with a calm, thin, pale
Hand, and a tear in his eye;
He prayed beside his young mother head,
And her tears were on his cheek;
Is his strong young arms has cast,
For he never forgets that own his by
An infant upon her breast.

O men in your strength and hope and joy,
O ambitious young men!
Remember that waiting infants once
You lay on your mothers' breast;
Remember that the sun's rays
That you will grow old and gray
That the young or the fairest and
Will come back to your hearts some day.

—"100 Home Hot Dollar" is true only of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it is an unanswerable argument to everybody and economy.

THE GREATEST TELESCOPE.

What the Huge Lick Glass May be Expected to Reveal in the Heavens.

The approaching completion of the celebrated telescope of the Lick Observatory in this State, lends interest to the question: How powerful will this instrument be? The Lick telescope is to be by the largest reflector in the world. There are instruments of larger aperture and of more perfect definition than this, but the Lick telescope is to be

THE MONITOR.

PRIVATE TEXT BY PURGATIVE

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1887.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

The offices of the MONITOR are now located at

536 KEARNY STREET,

(Bank-door, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

— At a meeting of the Geographical Society in Paris M de Lesseps declared that the Panama Canal would be open for traffic in 1889.

— The Catholic College, Kelvedon, Essex, England, was destroyed by fire last month. The damage, which is estimated at $10,000, is partly covered by insurance.

— The Vatican recently received a communication from the Spanish Government accepting the Pope's proposal regarding civil marriage, which is not to be considered valid unless preceded by the religious ceremony.

— The number of idle farms thrown on the hands of the bankrupt and bankrupted landlords of Ireland may be surmised from the fact that within a radius of twelve miles round Louth there are now 22,000 acres of land without tenants. Similar "barren wastes" are beginning to exist in every Province.

— Father Damian, the leper martyr, announces that a cure has been found for leprosy. The missionary priest has introduced it into the leper settlement at Molokai, and with the aid of a band of Franciscan Sisters the system of treatment is becoming used successfully. It is a Japanese discovery of a hydrophathic character.

— We specially commend to the careful perusal of our readers this week the fervid and eloquent oration delivered by Mr. Henry W. Grady, of Georgia, before the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers. It is a masterly production, and, as a plea for justice to the New South, it is one of the most eloquent and enthusiastic displays of word-painting we have had before our readers for many a day.

— There is a possibility in England of the imposition of a tax for a thing almost unknown. It is to impose a tax of £5 a year on all foreigners working in England, which would increase the revenue half a million sterling. The tax would be aimed principally at the Germans, who are becoming popular as servants, and have quite supplanted the English in large hotels.

— Light seems to be dawning upon the Protestant farmers of Ulster, who are swayed by unprodictive loyalty. They claim that the real reductions do not average 15 per cent., whereas in Munster and Connaught they average at least 30 per cent. They begin to realize that kicking up a row pays better than loyalty. The thorns have commenced to pierce in the beds of roses of Ulster landlords.

— The Italian Chambers have voted that the remains of Rossini, who died in Paris on November 13th, 1868, are to be brought from the cemetery of Pere Lachaise to Florence, and deposited in the historical church of Santa Croce, where the remains of Machiavelli, Michael Angelo, Galileo and Alfieri are buried. This has been done in accordance with a clause in the will of Rossini's widow, Mdme. Olympia Pelissier.

— A recent announcement in the Quebec Evenie chronicles the death of Father Felix Martin, S. J. Father Martin died in Paris, aged 84. The worthy religious was well known in Canada where he long labored. He came to Montreal in 1842, when Bishop Bourget invited the Jesuits into his diocese. He was the twelfth Superior of the Jesuits at Montreal and founded St. Mary's College. After having been Superior of the Jesuits in Quebec in 1852, he returned to France in 1862. Father Martin was the author of several works highly esteemed in Canada and the missions. R. I. P.

— More misleading information has been published in the daily press dispatches regarding Dr. McGlynn, of New York, than upon any matter that has come under our notice in a long life of journalistic experience. The latest "news" is that Dr McGlynn has rendered practically to leave the Church" sooner than "abjure his opinions on land tenure." Those who know Dr McGlynn will be both incensed and amused at such a report, but the readers of the daily press must have "news," hence such reports are published regardless entirely of personal character or public good.

— A Pastoral by the Archbishop of Paris, read in the churches on a recent Sunday says that this year, the Jubilee of the Pope's coronation as a priest, shall be specially devoted to prayers for him. Special offerings to the Peter's Pence Fund are invited, and a book containing the list of donors is to be offered to the Pope, so that on the fiftieth anniversary of his first Mass he may rejoice in the knowledge that he has received these thousands of the faithful. Jubilees and other objects are to be presented to him which will benefit sacred and poor church es. Clothing for the poor of Rome is also requested, and a tiara, as the special honour of Paris, is to be subscribed for, in which, the Archbishop suggests, jewels now only ministering to vanity may find a noble use.

— A recent colloquium from Vienna, alluding to the prospects of a European war, says: "M. Hanotaux, the French statesman who is visiting Vienna, said to-day to an interviewer "There can be no war between France and Germany unless Germany makes the first attack. Germany, every responsible Frenchman is determined that France shall offer no provocation. Even if Rome and Germany should fight, France would remain passive. It would respect gross provocation, indeed, to rouse France to war. Of course, France will refuse to disarm. It must be admitted that France has been coquetting with Russia, but that was intended merely to frighten Germany."

News from Florence announces the decease in that city of David Norsa, an illustrious citizen of Mantua, an Israelite by birth, who after prolonged relations between England and the Holy See, in order to crush out the present agitation in Ireland, a London paper enumerates the plain truth when it asks: "Is it necessary to remind our readers that the Roman correspondents of London papers are not the accredited mouthpieces of the Vatican? When Rome speaks it will not speak against Ireland."

— Rev. Wm. M. Gilbert, for many years a Methodist preacher in a Pennsylvania town, succumbed to his congregation last Sunday that he did not believe in the divinity of the Bible and did not know anything about immortality or whether there was a God. There are hundreds of Methodist preachers in the same predicament. It is the reaping of a good fat salary and an easy life that keeps them in the pulpit far more stoutlinally than any principle of trying to save other men's souls.

— Herr Schneppman, a Catholic member of the Parliament of the Netherlands, has brought forward a non-imperative resolution. The object is to amend the constitution in such a way as to permit the endowment by the State of primary denominational schools in which children of poor parents may be instructed by teachers belonging to their own religious creed. The resolutory disposition shown of recent years by the Dutch Government towards the Catholic authorities affords good ground for the hope that Herr Schneppman's bill will be supported by the Ministry.

— December 29th was the seventy-seventh anniversary of Mr. Gladstone's birth. In reply to the chairman of one of the numerous banquets given in his honor, he thus feelingly alluded to his recent labors in the House Rule cause: "The strain of the last year has been considerable, but never during my half century of labor have I more clearly seen that I was at work in behalf of my countrymen in all parts of the three kingdoms, and in behalf of the true union and greatness of the empire, which in the year of her Majesty's jubilee we ought to cherish more warmly and loyally than ever. In this conviction the recent progress of events confirms me daily."

— We learn from the Le Mavie that M. Louis Baillarge, a prominent lawyer of Quebec, while reading a number of Catholic Missions conceived the sublime idea of rendering honor to the Five Wounds of our Saviour by raising five altars, one in each of the five parts of the world—Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and America. The first, already erected, is at Hai Men, or Amoy, in the district of Fu Kien in China; it is dedicated to St. Francis Xavier. The second has been given to the missions of Cardinal Lavigerie in the south of Africa; the third to Father Strada, S. J., for his mission to the Aborigines of Northern Australia; the fourth to Mgr. Rouse, Prefect-Apostolic of Sta Salvador in South America, and the last to a poor mission in Scotland.

— A lady who had been cured at Lourdes thirteen years ago of a fearful cancer in the breast, recently submitted to a fresh examination by Dr. de St. Maurice, the physician stationed at the Grotto. He found no trace of the malady save a large scar. In 1873 her condition was such that it was judged useless to employ remedies, and on learning her resolutions of going to Lourdes, her physicians, one of renowned skill, declared that if she returned well, he would pronounce a supernatural power. She was instantly cured, and in a few days he saw her perfectly healed. The case of cure acknowledged himself vanquished, and issued a fervent Catholic. He has since died, but the patient whose case he declared hopeless thirteen years ago lives on in good health.

— Unfortunate who complain of the present "cold snap," may have their feelings for suffering humanity somewhat stirred up by a very sad occurrence which took place on Monday last in New York. Three little children of a blind man and his wife were found frozen. A dispatch tells this harrowing tale: "The postmaster, Herrick, today found the frozen body of "Blind Cooper" in a field near his home, six miles north of Kinsys, N.Y. The story of his death is very pitiful. The blind old man was going to his home, and by chance turned into a dog road. Here for lost his way. The large field in which he was found was crossed time and again by the blind man's tracks, showing that he had struggled long and desperately to find his way out, but he fell exhausted in the snow, quickly freezing in the bitter air within a few rods of the farmhouse. Apparently his wife, whose frozen body was found in their house early yesterday, perished the same night, as the rats had been feasting several days on his body.

— At the last Monday meeting of Protestant preachers in this city, Rev W. H. Pearson, the new chaplain at Alcatraz, was introduced and asked to speak. He said that "on Sunday he had attended two of the city churches—the Howard Presbyterian in the forenoon and the Trinity Episcopal in the evening. The first was about only one-third full and the last had not half as much as the other. He concluded that it was not a good day for church attendance in San Francisco." Such facts—carefully admitted by sectarian guilders themselves—go far to show the decay of every species of sectarianism as a religious system. Adult people have come to look upon Protestantism as a sham, while public school education has killed any needs of sectarian Christianity planted in the hearts of American children by Christian parents.

— Henry George has started a new paper in New York and commences his journalistic career by violently attacking the Catholic Church. The action will deprive him of fully three fourths of his followers and leave him with but a corporal's guard of communists and atheistists. The Catholic Union and Times curtly states the whole case in this paragraph: "Henry George has been for the past few months an apparition. The movement he crystallized his last attempt with sensibility has borne as the first fruits two untoward effects. If the career of the most amiable, earnest and least of men is clouded as a priest, the career of Henry George is ended, as a public man, by his own hand. The career of Henry George is ended."

— The English Tories, who feel that disaster, if he get an office chance, would give Ireland her rights, are telling each other that if he can only be kept out of power another two years old age will cut his claws and he will cease to be dangerous. In the first place, it does not look as though Gladstone meant to stay out of power for any such time, and even if he did, judging from present appearances, he would be quite able to "pay the piper to go in and clear out his opponents. At the celebration of his 77th birthday he looked as young and vigorous as at any time these ten years past, and he seems to have plenty of strength and energy left to do good work for Home Rule. All kinds of presents were sent him, including rocks, fowls, butter, honey, Banbury cakes, crayons, jams, and blankets, and he looked, if possible, one degree happier than when pleading over Churchill's stands.

— Alluding to Mr. Parnell's recent severe and prolonged illness, the London Freeman says: "The voice of Mr. Parnell will again be heard before long in no equivocal tones. The honorable gentleman has been suffering from a severe attack of gastric fever, but is now on the fair way to recovery, and will be ready to take his place in the House, like a giant refreshed, in the coming session. As testimony that the Irish question is no longer dependent on the guidance of any one mind, the plan of campaign, which has been so successful, was adopted while he lay on a sick bed. It may be safely assumed that when Mr. Parnell speaks he will range himself on the side of his colleagues. The impetus has been given, and Ireland, like the stirred avalanche, must and will move and gather strength as it advances. Leaders are but mental illustrations (O'Connell, Davis, O'Brien, all are dead) but the cause is everlasting and indestructible.

A Vile Calumny Contradicted.

It is surprising with what avidity the daily press publishes every atom of information which is detrimental to Catholicity and damaging to Catholic Religious Orders. Last week a brief woman committed suicide in Oakland, and, on the rumor of some unwarrantable party, the daily press of this city forthwith heralds the event in large display type as "The Sorrowful Death of a Former Sister of Mercy."

The news spread like wildfire and continued to give "full details" of how the unfortunate woman took vows, how she labored for years in the cause of reforming others, and how at last "she gave way to the impulses of a woman's heart, and married. Then her name in court was dropped and allusion is made to the "godlessness" she acquired from her "earlier associations" as a Sister of Mercy."

Now the whole story—from beginning to end—is a baseless falsehood. The unfortunate woman never was a Sister of Mercy, she never took vows, and never labored as one of the Sisters in charge of the Magdalen Asylum in this city. These are facts which the Sisters could prove this city could have learned in five minutes by telephoning to St. Mary's Hospital or to the Magdalen Asylum—But "Scandal and sensation—the most profitable pabulum of the daily press, and no matter how high or how lowly the parties may be who are thus publicly alluded to, an infamous woman—the "news" must be promulgated even if the reputation of a Religious Religious Order is damaged by the detraction."

Now what are the true facts of this woman whom the daily papers represent as her mitchel deathbed as "a dying sister"? Many years ago the Sisters of Mercy received into the Magdalen Asylum a young woman who had fallen a victim to unnatural wiles. The Sisters did all that daily example, prayer and patience could accomplish to reclaim her in the prudential spirit of a Magdalen. She persevered for several years, but at last the demon of pride assailed her and she demanded to be set free, or she could enjoy society in the world. The Sisters of Mercy—who knew the danger she contained—tried to dissuade her from that dangerous experiment, but their pleadings were in vain. With regret they saw her leave her back upon a life of peace and piety in order to plunge into the vortex of vice which exists in the world. In a short time she went through a mock marriage, deserted her husband, and then the sliding scale of sin was traversed until despair ended in a self inflicted death.

And so poor unfortunate creature—all this that the daily press designates "a sister of Mercy." Every educated Catholic knows that the female sentenced into the Sisters of Mercy or other Religious Orders of the Church without undergoing the most rigid scrutiny as to character. Every postulant must be pure and unbelled. Almighty God wants no second hand material to carry on His work of Charity and Mercy. Hence, Magdalen's can never be received into the Order of the Sisters of Mercy, no matter if they lived in the Magdalen Asylum mild and penitent for the age of Methusalah.

We earnestly hope this explanation will cause the daily press to halt in its future assertions when ever irresponsible "rumor is the only foundation for a so-called which especially reflects directly upon those holy virgins who are doing God's work in our midst, and whose sacrificed lives should not be immortalized by either the bigotry or the blackening of a scapegrace whose highest ambition seems to be popular for the dissemination of calumnies of degraded tissues in society.

Marriage Without Priest, Pursuer or Public Official!

"Marriage Made Easy" might be the title of a law which the learned fellow of the Pennsylvania legislature recently passed—not certainly for the public good. By this "Act" marriage may be made and female of marriageage can procure a license from the Clerk of the Courts and then they may marry themselves without the aid of priest, parson or public official of any kind.

The media operandi by which this novel system of Mormonizing Gentiles into matrimonial harness is perfected, is very simple. The Clerk of the Courts administers an oath to each of the parties, puts certain interrogatories to them, and then—if he is satisfied—he issues a certificate setting forth the fact that there exists no legal impediment to the parties joining themselves in matrimony. The unwoos well-lock are immediately pledge themselves—before two witnesses—to be true man and wife, and the mockery of holy matrimony is finished!

What is the world coming to, anyhow, when such an important factor as the ingenious and virtue of the human family as marriage certainly is—can be thus traversed by the laws of the land? The "good old sacrament" stripped of every vestige of religious blessing or solemn rite, left to the mercenary whim of Heathenized youth or to the designing diabolism of every crime-steeped rake who desires to compass the ruin of innocent virtue. It is a burning shame that such a law should insult the statute-books of any State in this Christian land which boasts of its "enlightenment."

Marriage is sacred. Badly constructed marriages will tend to a vast increase in the number of divorces, a greater amount of immorality in all classes of society, and a rapid deterioration in the moral stamina of the people in general. When children arrive at the age when they are by law entitled to marry, they will pay no deference whatever to those parents who have helped and commanded them to obey, but they will march up to the civil office, get through the legal formalities, and then enter on a life for which they may not be morally or materially prepared. What will be the sequence? Separation in a few months, a second marriage in a few years, and then the mockery will be kept up until death or the destruction of the home, the family and society in general.

Wisely, indeed, has the Catholic Church met around the sacrament of marriage limiting obstacles which neither wealth nor wealth can break. To her shrine does the world look when it seeks for the most perfect type of true womanhood in maid, wife or mother. The humanitarian and Christ-like heart-stroke of all that is beautiful and perfect in the open of Catholic female life is their model, their inspiration, their guide and their mother in love. To the Blessed Virgin, then, does the world owe a debt of gratitude for having given to her ideal virtues, her holy humility, and her reticent purity so many millions of Catholic females to follow in her footsteps, to be ever the steeped in sins of impurity and other forms of wanton vice. In the opinion of all virtuous people, therefore, society owes it our time to be "a great sacrament, no matter how lightly it may be esteemed by those who seek to make her care for Almighty God or the laws.

The increasing laxity of the marriage bond has become so apparent that even Protestant ministers are beginning to realize the fact that the easy marriage bonds are made the more readily are they dissolved. Among a host of reflecting non-Catholics who take the proper view of this question is Rev. H. Huber Newton, who truthfully and forcibly expressed wholly sentiments in such a recent sermon: "The growing laxity of the marriage bond will lost be remedied by women demanding a true position. Decree increases because of increasing domestic dissatisfaction, and this dissatisfaction is due to the fact that marriage is not entered into advisedly, soberly and in the fear of God. The best way to correct civil contracts is to correct the infamous woman—the "news" must be promulgated even if the reputation of a Religious Religious Order is damaged by the detraction."

Now what are the true facts of this woman whom the daily papers represent as her mitchel deathbed as "a dying sister"? Many years ago the Sisters of Mercy received into the Magdalen Asylum a young woman who had fallen a victim to unnatural wiles. The Sisters did all that daily example, prayer and patience could accomplish to reclaim her in the prudential spirit of a Magdalen. She persevered for several years, but at last the demon of pride assailed her and she demanded to be set free, or she could enjoy society in the world. The Sisters of Mercy—who knew the danger she contained—tried to dissuade her from that dangerous experiment, but their pleadings were in vain. With regret they saw her leave her back upon a life of peace and piety in order to plunge into the vortex of vice which exists in the world. In a short time she went through a mock marriage, deserted her husband, and then the sliding scale of sin was traversed until despair ended in a self inflicted death.

And so poor unfortunate creature—all this that the daily press designates "a sister of Mercy." Every educated Catholic knows that the female sentenced into the Sisters of Mercy or other Religious Orders of the Church without undergoing the most rigid scrutiny as to character. Every postulant must be pure and unbelled. Almighty God wants no second hand material to carry on His work of Charity and Mercy. Hence, Magdalen's can never be received into the Order of the Sisters of Mercy, no matter if they lived in the Magdalen Asylum mild and penitent for the age of Methusalah.

We earnestly hope this explanation will cause the daily press to halt in its future assertions when ever irresponsible "rumor is the only foundation for a so-called which especially reflects directly upon those holy virgins who are doing God's work in our midst, and whose sacrificed lives should not be immortalized by either the bigotry or the blackening of a scapegrace whose highest ambition seems to be popular for the dissemination of calumnies of degraded tissues in society.

Poems of Marcella A. Fitzgerald.

The name of Marcella Agnes Fitzgerald is most familiar to our readers who have often read and admired her many excellent contributions to the Monitor during several years past. The poetic pathos has collected for numerous poems and issued them in a neatly bound, elegantly printed and tasty volume of 160 pages. Her name is not confined to any one line of thought, but ranges through almost every passion and sentiment with equal ease and the same happy effect of subject.

A review of her poems which number nearly two hundred reveals the fact that the gifted authoress has a rare command of language, a striking purity of diction, a correct ear for metre and what is to be admiration and praised—a pure, thoroughly Catholic tone. Her whole extemporaneous are peculiarly unusual and she is at her best when using this matter, as could be seen by a perusal of her poems entitled "Crucifix Portrait," "Pauline Jaugiers—Mission martyr," and "Pa Pictures."

There is not a poor poem in the whole volume. Every one is a gem containing some hidden beauty or some well-expressed thought. The volume is divided into Miscellaneous, Sacred Legendary and Ballads. The mite-dainty poem, "The Lord's Day" is a highly pastoral exposition of that sweet day of prayer. Among the miscellaneous poems "The Stone," we think is the best. It is made realistic, by an appropriate and masterly word painting and a splendid metaphor. The concluding stanza of "The Women of the Revolution," "A Bird Picture," and "Gallantrania Welcome" to His Grace the Most Rev P. W. Riordan, D. D.

But Miss Fitzgerald is at her best in sacred subjects. Here the full tones of her pure chaste and lofty sentiments find a ready outlet. The Assumption of the Lady, "Our Lady of Knock," "St Pat. rick's Day," "St Dominic," "St. Thomas and the Angels," "Mater Dolorosa," "Mater Ecclesiae," "Mater Ecclesiae," "Mater Dolorosa," "Mater Ecclesiae," "Mater Dolorosa," "Mater Ecclesiae," "Mater Dolorosa

Family Fun.

She Was Disappointed.

On the last day of registration a woman armed with a bone-handled umbrella walked into the fourth precinct of the Second Ward and asked:

"Is this where the men register?"

"Yes'm and women, too," was the courteous reply.

"Then I can register without any fuss!"

"Yes'm."

"I didn't know as they 'lowed it," she said, as she took a seat at the table. "When I left home I had my mind made up that I'd either register or—"

"Put your name right down on this sheet of paper," interrupted the clerk. "You needn't even give your age."

"I needn't! Well, sakin' wonderful must have happened all at once. I guess you men have fooled out that as women are of some account after all."

"Oh, certainly. That's all, madam."

"And no fuss about it?"

"Not a bit."

"I expected I'd have to jaw and tear around, and perhaps use a weapon, and I'm a little disappointed."

"Yes. We won't keep you longer waiting, ma'am."

"Well, I'll go, but my old man won't believe it, and I'll hardly dare say it myself. I expected you'd refuse, and I'd have to jaw and argue—"

"Good day, madam."

And She Didn't.

"One of the most striking instances of 'mind over' I see," said Judge W——, one day, "was exhibited in an old lady client of mine; but it was a case of self-cure. Her name was Norton. She had been a second wife. She was in bed seriously ill, and sent for me to draw up her will.

"I fastened to the house with paper and pen. I sat by a table and chair ready for me at the women's bedside, and in a few moments told her that I was ready to draw the will if she would tell me what she wished its provisions to be. I wrote the introductory phrase rapidly, and leaning over towards her, said:

"'Now go on, Mrs. Norton.'

"Her voice was quite faint, and she seemed to speak with an effort. She said:

"'First of all, I want to give the farm to my sons, Harry and James; just put that down.'

"But, said I, 'you can't do that, Mrs. Norton; the farm isn't yours to give away.'

"'The farm isn't mine! she said in a voice decidedly stronger than before.

"'No, the farm isn't yours. You here only a life interest in it.'

"'This farm that I've run for goin' forty-three years next Spring, isn't mine to do what I please with it! Why not, Judge? I'd like to what you mean!'

"'Why, Mr. Norton—your husband—gave you a life estate in all his property, and on your death the farm goes to his son John, and your children get the village houses.'

"'And when I die John Norton is to have this house whether I will or not?'

"'Just so.'

"'Then I ain't goin' to die, said the old woman, in a decidedly ringing, healthful voice.

"And so saying, she threw her feet over the front of the bed, sat up, straightened up her gaunt form, walked across the room and sat down in a chair before the fire. The doctor and I came home. That was fifteen years ago. The old lady is alive today."

Farm and Home.

American Wheat Exports.

The following, from the N. Y. Bankers Magazine, state facts so important, and there is much insight of its deductions from them, that we deem it worthy of exposition here:

During the year ending June 30, 1885, the Continental valuation of our exports of wheat was 86 cents per bushel, whereas the average of the same valuation for the sixty six preceding years was 91.25. The fall in the price of wheat in the foreign market to which the exports were made, has been even greater than the foregoing figures would indicate, inasmuch as cheap freights were a good deal lower in 1885 than their average during the preceding sixty six years. The Continental valuation of wheat during the year ending June 30, 1886, is not expected to show any improvement, and according to present prospects, no improvement is probable for some time to come, unless it shall arise from the outbreak of wars on a large scale in Europe. Many people suppose that the United States has always been a great wheat exporting country, and that it will be an inconceivable and overwhelming disaster, if from a fall in prices and competition from new quarters it shall cease to be so. But the records show with certainty that the period during which our wheat exports have been large has not been a long one. During the 65yr five years ending June 30, 1875, our aggregate exports of wheat, and of flour reduced to wheat, were 1 081 494 363 bushels, or at the rate of 19 661 326 bushels per annum. During the sixteen years ending June 30, 1886, the aggregate exports were 1,340,249,787 bushels, or at the rate of 121 840,908 bushels per annum. From 1820 to 1860 our annual average export of wheat (including flour) was 9 000 000 bushels. The last report of the Agricultural Bureau says: "For eight years after that date (1860), under the stimulus of the premium on gold, the average rose to 36,562,000 bushels. Then the destroyed European harvests of later years gave increase for super breadth of our wheat fields. It is plain, therefore, that our special export area of wheat exporting country does not antedate the civil war. The theory of the Agricultural Bureau, that wheat exports were originally stimulated by the depreciation of our currency which the civil war brought on, may or may not be true; but the main causes which have kept them up since that time, have been the late years crops of bad European harvests, and the cheapening by railroads of transportation from the western fields to the shipping ports. It looks now as if increased competition in old quarters, and an enlarged competition in new quarters, will reduce our wheat exports again to a minimum. The fact remains that the far West owes its marvelous expansion of population to the epoch, even if not a long one, of large and prosperous wheat export. That epoch has now that it is firmly planted where it is, has the intelligence and vigor, if necessary, requires it, to seek out new industries, which will carry it to a yet higher pitch of prosperity, just as California, the settlement of which was hastened by at least half a century by the gold discoveries, is now growing richer, stronger, and more populous as the yield of the gold mines declines. If it had been the good fortune of Manitoba to be occupied fifteen or twenty years earlier than it was, it would have enjoyed a period of great prosperity from an activity and high prices in the European market for wheat, which have now disappeared. In that supposed case the Canadian Northwest and our own West, would have divided between them a stimulus to their development, which in the actual course of events has been monopolized by the latter. This is a related advantage of which our own West cannot now be deprived. The growth of the British Northwest must be comparatively slower. It certainly cannot compete in grain exporting with India, under present conditions.

A Word to Mothers.

Just a word to mothers. Have you daughters? If you have, does not every day's experience as recorded in the daily papers, in regard to the temptations and dangers that beset young girls appear to you in the most solemn and impressive manner to keep a close and watchful watch over those dear girls of yours! No doubt they are innocent and good. Keep them so by separating them as far as possible from the many evil influences that beset them. If they must go out in the evening see to it that they do so only under proper guardianship. Be sure that the mothers of France in their particular. Do not permit them to stay late in the park or public streets with no other protection than their own innocence. This is a time when such counsels and such precautions are fraught with wisdom. The girls may escape all the snares designing men may lay for entrapping them; and then again they may not. Full of life and full of fun, they are too apt to be led astray without the slightest intention on their part of doing wrong. How many mothers are to day lamenting their sons than folly—their almost criminal neglect in permitting their girls to take evening walks with perhaps no other companion than girls of their own age. When away from the loving guardianship of their parents and has been tifying influences of home they are too apt to forget how narrow is the route that separates them from danger and degradation. Never has poverty furnished a number of startling warnings, which should be taken home to the heart of every mother. If you would keep them safe you must not hesitate to throw around them not merely the moral influence of your home, but you must have those influences accompany them everywhere.—Philadelphia Call.

Good News for Fruitgrowers.

The eastern railroads have agreed to adopt the same tariff for the transportation of fruit on the roads owned or controlled in California. This will be a great boon to fruitgrowers, and cannot fail to have an encouraging effect on this already flourishing industry. We know that the low per diem fare for Chicago has been already adopted from San Jose to $30. The new step now taken by the eastern roads is a further benefit to the growers and the trade.

Saving Hartlette.

A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker says: "I saw my Hartlett pears so that they make due selling two weeks after those of my neighbors have gone. I make a small box and line it with paper, almost any kind will answer. The bottom is covered an inch deep with wheat bran. The pears are carefully picked, wrapped separately in paper and then packed deeply in the bran until the bottom is covered. In this layer is covered with bran an inch in depth and another layer of pears is placed in the same way. This is continued until the box is full, when the cover is tacked on and the box set away in a cool, dry place. The pears retain their fine flavor and color."

Some of the New York fire companies say they can hitch up and start for a fire in three seconds.

Look at the date printed on your paper or wrapper and if you see in arrears then remit the amount due; it only sometimes costs to buy a postal card or three dollars.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Continues, in a manner peculiar to itself, the best blood-purifying and strengthening medicine of the vegetable kingdom. You will find this wonderful remedy effective where other medicines have failed. Try it now. It will purify your blood, regulate the digestion, and give you life and vigor to the entire body.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla did me great good. I was tired out from overwork, and it tired me up." MRS. C. F. SIMMONS, Dover, N. H.

"I suffered three years from blood poison. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and think I am cured." MRS. M. J. DAVIS, Brockport, N. Y.

Purifies the Blood

Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarities: 1st, the combination of remedial agents; 2d, the proportions; 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, exerting cures hitherto unknown, and a book containing additional evidence, sent free. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones up my system, gives me a good appetite, and I feel strong in it make me comfortable." C. C. THOMPSON, Register of Deeds, Lowell, Mass.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla heads all others, and is worth its weight in gold." J. BARNINGTON, 139 Hunts Street, New York City.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

WESTERN HOTEL,
212-14 Broadway Street.
JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor.
(Late Proprietor Grand Hotel.)

THE LACE HOUSE.
D. SAMUELS,
123--129 Post St.
I am offering a Very Large and Choice Assortment of LIMERICK LACES,
DUCHESSE LACES,
APPLIQUE LACES and POINT LACES,
Suitable for Albs, Surplices, Vestments of all kinds and for the Altar,
TOGETHER WITH
The Fine Linen Batistes and Coutral Linens,
Used in their Manufacture,
AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.
THE LACE HOUSE.
D. SAMUELS,
123-129 Post Street, S. F.

JOHN F. LYONS,
NOTARY PUBLIC
AND
Commissioner of Deeds
For all the States and Territories
OFFICE, - 413 Montgomery St.
Residence, - 1115 Polk St.
Bet. Post & California

A NEW TOY Sporting Boy's Delight. Shooting Marbles Rattling Bones Jump up Jim Jerk Jerk Jerk Wonderful Magnetic Toy. Sent by mail for 25c. Stamps taken. More PRIZES than any other Game. Address, JOHN ROBERTS, Box 1428 N. Y. Agents Wanted. Sample 25c. Stamps taken. Lib. Cos. Box. NOVELTY CO., Portsmouth, O.

WARD & CO.'S
Male and Female
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE,
608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.
Telephone No. 747.
ALWAYS ON HAND—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Hands, Farm Hands, Dairymen, Dairy Boys, Gardeners, Cooks, Waiters, and Married Couples to make Ships, Hotel and Lodging Houses, Assorted Families going out of the country.

D. M ENCARINI,
911 Mission St,
San Francisco, Cal.
Manufacturer and Importer of
RELIGIOUS STATUARY,
ETC
Suitable for Churches, Convent Chapels, Academy Schools, Etc.
TAKE ONLY SUPERIOR COLLECTION ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.
100 Doses One Dollar.

For 1887. Fourth Year.
Per copy, free by mail, 25 cents.
Representing a good, pure article of medicine, carefully compounded and positively Blood Purifying Properties of a Sarsaparilla and Potassium Iodide, combined with the Alterative and Tonic properties of Stillingia, Mandrake, Yellow Dock, Cascara Amarga, Prickly Ash, Poke Root, etc. Recommended for Scrofula, Syphilitic Affections, Rheumatism, Mercurial Diseases, Ulcers, Eruptions, Blotches, Boils, Pimples, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Mercurial Rheumatism, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Mercurial Rheumatism, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Mercurial Rheumatism

THE BLUE AND THE GREY

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

New South," as in no sense disparaging to the Old. Dear to me, sir, is the home of my childhood and the traditions of my people. There is a New South, not through present against the Old, but because of new conditions, new adjustments, and, if you please, new ideas and aspirations. It is to this that I address myself. I ask you, gentlemen, to picture if you can, this form, worn soldiar, who, buttoning up in his faded gray jacket the parole which was taken, testimony to his children of his fidelity and faith, turned his face southward from Appomattox in April, 1865. Think of him as regard, half starved, hearty-hearted, enfeebled by want and wounds, having fought to a staundtin, he surrenders his gun, strings the bands of his comrades, and lifting his tear-stained and pallid face for the last time to the generals that dot the old Virginia hills, pulls his gray cap over his brow and begins the slow and painful journey. What does he find—let me ask you, who justly earned, full payment for your four years' sacrifice—what does he find, when he reaches the home he left four years before? He finds his house in ruins, his farm devastated, his slaves freed, his stock killed, his barns empty, his treasury depleted, his money worthless, his social system—feudal in its magnificence—swept away, his people without law or legal status, his produce stolen, and the hirelings of others heavy on his shoulders. Crushed by defeat, his very traditions gone. Without money, credit, employment, material or training, and, beside all this, confronted with the grave problem that ever and anon in twilight—the establishing of a status for the vast body of his liberated slaves.

What does he do—this hero in gray with a heart of gold—does he sit down in sullenness and despair? Not for a day. God, who had scourged him in his prosperity, inspired him in his adversity. A nation was never before so overwhelming, never was restoration more complete. The soldiers stepped from the trenches into the furrow; horses that had charged Federal guns marched before the plough, and fields that ran red with human blood in April were green with the harvest in June; women reared in luxury went up their dresses and made breeches for their husbands, and with a patience and heroism that his women always as a government, gave their hands to work. There was little bitterness in all this. Cheerfulness and frankness prevailed. "Bill Arp" struck the key note when he said: "Well, I killed as many of them as they did of me, and now I am going to work" (laughter and applause), or the soldier returning home after defeat and roasting some corn on the roadside, who made the remark to his comrades: "You may leave the South if you want to, but I am going to Sandersville, line my wife, and raise a crop, and if the Yankees feel with me say more I will whip them again."

I now want to say to General Sherman, who is consider a no able man in our parts, though some people think he is a kind of careless man short fire—that from the time left us in 1864 we have raised a brave and beautiful city; that somehow or other we have managed to put the sunshine in the bricks and mortar of our homes and here builded therein not one as single ignoble prejudice or memory (applause).

THINGS THAT HAVE BEEN ACCOMPLISHED.

But what is the sum of our work! We have found out that in the general scrimmage the free negro figures more than he did as a slave. We have planted the schoolhouse on the hill top and made it free to white and black. We have sowed town and cities in the South with the seeds of enterprise and business above politics (applause). We have challenged your spinners in Massachusetts and your iron makers in Pennsylvania. We have learned that the $60,000,000 annually received from our cotton crop will make no rich, when the supplies that make it are home-raised. We have refused the commercial rate of interest from 24 to 6 per cent, and are facing 4 on our knees. We have learned that one Northern immigrant is worth 50 foreigners, and have smoothed the path to the Southwest, pointed out the place where Mason and Dixon's line used to be and hung our lamp-setting out to pass and yours (prolonged applause). We have vanished the point that marks perfect harmony in every household, when the husband acknowledgeth the wife and the man wife cooks are as good as those his mother used to bake; and we admit that the sun shines as brightly and the moon as softly as it did "before the war" (laughing). We have established thrift in city and country. We have fallen in love with work. We have restored the law to man from which colleges and eloquence never departed. We have let economy take root and spread among us as rank as the oak grass which sprung from Sherman's cavalry camps, until we are ready to lay odds on the Georgia peach as the supreme pure olive oil out of his cotton seed, and challenge any Down Easter that ever snapped wooden nutmegs for genuine lasting qualities of Vermont. Above all, we know that we have achieved in these "piping times of peace," a fuller independence for the South than has when our fathers sought to win in the forum by their eloquence, or compel on the field by their swords (loud applause).

It is even privilege, sir, to have had part, however humble in this work. Never was nobler duty assigned to human hands than the up lifting and up-building of the prostrate and bleeding South, misguided, perhaps, but both brave in suffering and honest, brave and generous always (applause). In the record of her social, industrial and political restoration we await with confidence the verdict of the world.

But what of the negro? Here we solved the problem he presents or propounded in honor and equity towards its solution! Let the record speak to this point. No section shows a more prosperous laboring population than the negroes of the South, none be fuller sympathy with the employing and land-owning class. He shares our school fund, has the fullest protection of our law and the friendship of our people. Self-interest as well as honor demand that he should have this. Our future, our very existence depend upon our working out this problem in full and exact justice. We understand that when Lincoln signed the emancipation proclamation; your victor was assured, for he then committed you to the cause of human liberty against which the arms of man cannot prevail (applause). While then of our statesmen who made slavery the corner-stone of the Confederacy deceased as to debtor, committing as to a man that reason could not defend or the sword maintain, in the light of endeavor civilization (renewed applause). Hail Mt. Toombs said, which he did not say, that he would sail the roll of his sisters of the foot of Bunker Hill, he would have been foolish, for he might have known that whenever slavery become entangled in war it must perish and that the shattel in human flesh raded forever in New England sixty years fathers—not to be blamed for parting with what didn't pay—sold their slaves to our fathers—not to be praised for knowing a paying thing when they saw it, but to the kind of careless man short fire—that from the when left us in 1864 we have raised a brave and beautiful city; that somehow or other we have managed to put the sunshine in the bricks and mortar of our homes and here builded therein not one as single ignoble prejudice or memory (applause).

THINGS THAT HAVE BEEN ACCOMPLISHED.

But what is the sum of our work! We have found out that in the general scrimmage the free negro figures more than he did as a slave. We have planted the schoolhouse on the hill top and made it free to white and black. We have sowed towns and cities in the South with the seeds of enterprise and business above politics (applause). We have challenged your spinners in Massachusetts and your iron makers in Pennsylvania. We have learned that the $60,000,000 annually received from our cotton crop will make no rich, when the supplies that make it are home-raised. We have refused the commercial rate of interest from 24 to 6 per cent, and are facing 4 on our knees. We have learned that one Northern immigrant is worth 50 foreigners, and have smoothed the path to the Southwest, pointed out the place where Mason and Dixon's line used to be and hung our lamp-setting out to pass and yours (prolonged applause). We have vanished the point that marks perfect harmony in every household, when the husband acknowledgeth the wife and the man wife cooks are as good as those his mother used to bake; and we admit that the sun shines as brightly and the moon as softly as it did "before the war" (laughing). We have established thrift in city and country. We have fallen in love with work. We have restored the law to man from which colleges and eloquence never departed. We have let economy take root and spread among us as rank as the oak grass which sprung from Sherman's cavalry camps, until we are ready to lay odds on the Georgia peach as the supreme pure olive oil out of his cotton seed, and challenge any Down Easter that ever snapped wooden nutmegs for genuine lasting qualities of Vermont. Above all, we know that we have achieved in these "piping times of peace," a fuller independence for the South than has when our fathers sought to win in the forum by their eloquence, or compel on the field by their swords (loud applause).

It is even privilege, sir, to have had part, however humble in this work. Never was nobler duty assigned to human hands than the up lifting and up-building of the prostrate and bleeding South, misguided, perhaps, but both brave in suffering and honest, brave and generous always (applause). In the record of her social, industrial and political restoration we await with confidence the verdict of the world.

But what of the negro? Here we solved the problem he presents or propounded in honor and equity towards its solution! Let the record speak to this point. No section shows a more prosperous laboring population than the negroes of the South, none be fuller sympathy with the employing and land-owning class. He shares our school fund, has the fullest protection of our law and the friendship of our people. Self-interest as well as honor demand that he should have this. Our future, our very existence depend upon our working out this problem in full and exact justice. We understand that when Lincoln signed the emancipation proclamation; your victor was assured, for he then committed you to the cause of human liberty against which the arms of man cannot prevail (applause). While then of our statesmen who made slavery the corner-stone of the Confederacy deceased as to debtor, committing as to a man that reason could not defend or the sword maintain, in the light of endeavor civilization (renewed applause). Hail Mt. Toombs said, which he did not say, that he would sail the roll of his sisters of the foot of Bunker Hill, he would have been foolish, for he might have known that whenever slavery become entangled in war it must perish and that the shattel in human flesh traded forever in New England sixty years

THE WEEK'S NEWS FROM IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

CORK.—On Dec. 15th, the Most Rev. Dr. Croke presented to the following charges in the episcopal chapel of the diocese of Cashel, the Very Rev. Canon Fitzgerald, Administrator of St. Peter and Paul's, to be Bishop of Cashel, which had been previously vacated by the Bishop; Rev. R. A. Sheehan, C.C., Doneraile, to be Administrator of St. Peter and Paul's; Rev. W. J. Meagher, Administrator Cathedral, Secretary to the Bishop, and to be attached to St. Patrick's Church, Rev. J. Ryan, C.C., Ballyporeen, to be Secretary to the Bishop; Rev. Jas. Ryan, C.C., Tipperary, to be Administrator of Ballyporeen; Rev. J. Lane, C.C., Ballybacon, to be Administrator of Tipperary; Rev. Jas. Ryan, C.C., Ballybacon, to be Administrator of Ballybacon; Rev. J. Fanning, C.C., Ballybacon, to be Administrator of Ballybacon; Rev. J

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

LIFE AND ETERNITY.

There a restless rush of the ocean's surge
As it breaks upon the shores of Time,
And it chants a dreary, doleful dirge,
In a weird and wandering rhyme;
There are millions of souls in its foaming bosom,
They are whirling wild and free,
They are millions emerged in each fatal crest,
And swept on to eternity.

But the wind and wave are force and strong,
And our souls and hearts are weakly wrought,
Life is a bubble that bursts ere long,
And nothing from nothing is sought;
Yours well, indeed, if we only have
Not nothing below will live or last,
The present and future are lost in the past,
But the peace of Heaven are endless years,
And the years of earth are few.

There's a restless rush of the ocean's surge,
And of doleful dirge is its chant,
As it sweeps with a dreary, doleful dirge,
O'er the ruins that lie below;
O'er the ruins of half-shaped hopes and lives
In it's seething depths entombed,
For it's merciless waves still sweep,
And all else upon earth is doomed.

Alas! for the morning, thirsting throng,
Who are drinking Sinner's cup (bitter) thirsty!
Life's whirlpool that bursts ere long,
And nothing from nothing is sought;
Yours well, indeed, if only sought,
That nothing on earth will satisfy,
The nothing, and not lost in the past,
But the years of Heaven are endless years,
And the years of earth are few.

C. ANTHONY DOYLE.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE REASON WHY.

ADDRESSED TO J. S.

Why is life not what we want it,
Why have we so little gain,
Why are sin and love so bitter,
Why that we so much in bear?

Why is life so short yet weary,
Why are hopes so soon and coming day
Be brighter than the present,
Not following our hope decay?

Why must time be ever passing,
Why must friends and loved ones die,
Why cannot our time be ever
Unclouded as you bless sky?

Why is life's sea so restless,
Why can not its waves be calm,
Why can not God's love be ever
A peaceful resting balm?

Oh! if life were what we wanted,
If we had no sorrow or care,
Why should we look for heaven,
Or the blue dome of God's skies there?

If life were long and merry,
And brighter each coming day,
What would we have to wish for
Or look in heaven to pray?

If life's sea were calm,
And its waves were always calm,
Then we would not know
Or God's great gift—the Palm.

If in life there were no partings,
Death would be a welcome guest,
Then there were no sweet longings
For a home in the skies.

This much I know: God's ways are perfect,
All else unknown,
I shall be guided safely on, for God
Will keep his own.

Clouds may obscure the sky, and drenching rain
Fall on the drooping leaves,
And the longest mark, with all her bitter train,
Make night weary.

And there I lay the lonelest death the soul
May rest alone;
But through it all I shall be led, for God
Will keep his own.

—Sister Mary Quinlan died at Notre Dame convent, Cleveland, on the 25th ult., aged 41. Was 24 years a religious. May she rest in peace.

—Purify your blood, tone up the system, and regulate the digestive organs by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists.

Literary Miscellany.

Jessie's Happy New Year.

Jessie Speedwell sat on a low stool beside her frisky pointed dog Prince, with her head in her palm, and gazing mournfully into the fire. It was the last day of the old year, cold and gloomy, with a light covering of snow on the ground. But of all without had been clad in the garb of June, it would have been winter in Jessie's heart.

On the floor beside her lay a sad-iron and hammer, with which she had been cracking turkey nuts, while on a chair to her left, sat a plate filled with fat kernels which were to enter into the delicious compound known throughout Brush Park as Jessie's cake.

Mrs. Speedwell never permitted the Christmas baked meats to coldly furnish the New Year's table. Not only was it the birthday of the year, but of her husband also, and the anniversary of her wedding day. So this triple holiday was always duly celebrated, and she was now in the kitchen making preliminary preparations for the morrow's festivities.

"Jessie," called she in a kindly voice, "have you finished cracking those nuts?"

"Yes ma," answered Jessie, finishing, as and carrying the plate of kernels to the kitchen. "What have you for me to do now, mother?" asked she, when she had put away the utensils used in cracking the nuts, and a wept the hearth.

"Nothing, I believe. Why, child, you must be takin' cold. I'll make you a little apyfle to night."

"Jessie, and this evening, looking up from her knitting, "if you feel like it, you may wind your father's yarn for him."

Jessie arranged the skein of yarn on the backs of two chairs, and commenced winding, trying to shake off as many her sorrowful thoughts as she would, but her thoughts would run on the sad subject on which they had dwelt all day.

She was thinking of Charley Hunniwell, the blither young carpenter, who had built the swing in her father's orchard, and who were now living.

He had made his appearance in Brush Park a year before, but had turned only for six months, the enterprise of Brush Park not supplying him with work for a longer period, and had then gone to Harrsburg, a thriving town a hundred miles distant, where he found no lack of employment.

But after so had been his origin at Brush Park, he had carried off Jessie's heart when he left, leaving her own in her keeping. This exchange of valuables had been effected without spoken words, and he had not even written to her; but he had confided her in a joining manner, under which she discerned earnestness, that when he became rich enough he would come back and ask her to be his wife.

No one suspected the state of Jessie's feelings, not even her brother Rob, who had her, with pretended seriousness, that she had acted very ungenerously in giving her heart to a stranger, seemingly singing for her benefit:

"For a sweetheart can be found
At each port, I am told,
Plenty of men who have a purpose,
Only twenty-three years old."

Jessie was accustomed to hear Charley's age to absolute correctness.

But Rob had been home found some one else to tease Jessie about, and by all accounts he had found a fascinating lady friend, to the thought of, until the latest issue of the Harrsburg Herald brought the news that there had been a fire in Harrsburg, several lives had been lost, and among the number that of Charley Hunniwell.

This news it was which cast so deep a gloom over poor Jessie.

She was winding slowly and thinking sadly when she was roused by her grandmother's voice.

"Sent that ball o' yarn and it lein' the day is in, puts me in mind of a story I used to tell your forefoums on New Year's eve, when I was young."

"How was that?" asked Jessie, trying to appear interested.

"Why, you take a ball o' yarn and go to an old house that you don't live in, and throw the ball in at the window, and—"

"Why, you take a ball o' yarn and go to an old house that you don't live in, and throw the ball in at the window, and—"

When had time came, Jessie, feeling afraid, for the first time in her life, to be alone in her room upstairs, requested that Prince might sleep with her. Jessie's dreams had swallowed a long dream of spirits with a will which caused her mother great concern, lest she was going to have an "attack of pneumonia.

The next afternoon the Speedwell family, with the exception of Jessie, climbed into the "big wagon," the snow not being deep enough for a sleigh, to ride, and spend a day and part of the night with the family of Mrs. Speedwell's mother, who lived in a little cottage.

Jessie begged that she might go, but her mother refused to permit her to go out in the cold and "catch her death."

So she was forced to stay at home alone, mentally bewailing that Rob should so turn before it grew dark enough for dead to come to see her.

But after the last departure she heard a quick step at the door, and went, with some timidity, to open it.

As she did so she startled back with a little cry, for, for a moment, she thought Charley Hunniwell, in a long, gray overcoat and red comforter, stood before her.

"What is the matter?" asked the apparition, with a very musical voice—"you are not afraid of me are you?"

"I thought you were dead, fallen!" Jessie.

"Well, do you think so now? Do I look like a ghost?"

He certainly did not look much like an ghost, with his bronzed cheeks redden ed by the keen air, his sparkling blue eyes and curling brown hair, and, so thought Jessie.

Moreover, she had never heard of a ghost materializing in the daytime or a gray coat; so she ushered him into the cozy sitting room and placed a chair before the glowing fire.

"Where all the folks?" asked he, trying to assume his overcoat with the air of an old acquaintance.

"Gone over to Aunt Mary's. When did you come home?"

"From Mr. Crouch's, where I stayed last night. I left Harrsburg just after the fire occurred, wanted to surprise you, and I reckon I succeeded."

"Did you hear of the fire?"

"Why, what fire? asked Jessie, trying to appear interested.

"Why, you take a ball o' yarn and go to an old house that you don't live in, and throw the ball in at the window, and—"

"Why, you take a ball o' yarn and go to an old house that you don't live in, and throw the ball in at the window, and—"

"Why, what fire was it,

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE ARCHDIOCESE

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1887.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

The offices of the MONITOR are now located at

536 KEARNY STREET,

(first-floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

— A surgical operation was performed recently upon Cardinal Jacobini's throat. The operation was successful, but the Cardinal was left very weak.

— Sister Catherine the Superior of the Convent of the Sacred Heart in Atlanta, who has been celebrated throughout the South for years as a most successful and versatile teacher of young women, has justified. She was born in Dublin and was named Alice Gordon.

— A cablegram announced last Saturday that the British Government had determined to purchase 40,000 additional cavalry horses and 500,000 Manchester repeating rifles, to be ready March 1st next. This looks as if grim visaged war was going to raise his gory hand to Europe during the present year.

— A new and excellent soap advertisement appears in the Chicago newspapers. It is the picture of a very dirty and dangerous table tramp sitting at a table writing. On the table are and wall are portraits of Patti, Langtry, Booth, and other well known soap puffers. The tramp is writing: "I used your soap two years ago and have not used any other since."

— Mr. Healy created much merriment, being at the same time loudly cheered, when reminding his audience at Dublin recently, that "while the right of the Irish tenant to live and thrive in his country comes from heaven, the right of the Irish landlord to exact rack-rent from him comes from London; and," added Mr. Healy, "as between the authority of the two versions, I think the Irish people will not have much difficulty in making up their minds."

— Looking at the distressed condition of Ireland, at present, one is reminded of a rather witty retort recently given by a Tipperary cooper, when asked what was Ireland like. With true Hibernian wit he said: "Ireland is a place of punishment where the people must suffer for a time before they can go to America." This was certainly not very complimentary to his country, but no one can deny that, to-day, it is a land of woe and tribulation.

— Few residents of this State have any idea of the rapidity with which California is becoming populated. The Immigration Association reports that 66[illegible] immigrants arrived in this State during last week by the Central Pacific. It is estimated that from 6,000 to 7,000 people arrived in the Southern part of the State during the same time by the Southern Pacific. Most of them are looking up lands in San Luis Obispo, Los Angeles and San Diego counties. In one day forty-three carloads arrived in Los Angeles.

— This has been an intensely cold winter in the Western States. A dispatch from Chicago says that on the 5th the thermometer registered 15° below zero. The suffering of live stock was very great and on the arrival of the cars at Chicago the platforms were covered with dead cattle and hogs that perished from cold and starvation. The Texas cattle suffered the most. A friend writing from Chicago on the 11th says: "Eighteen degrees below zero this morning. I envy you in the glorious climate of California."

— An interesting discovery was made the other day by M. Quentin-Bauchart of Chalons-sur-Marne, in a bookstall of that town. This is the "Office de la Divine Providence," the sole comfort of Marie Antoinette in her weary captivity at the prison of the Temple and Conciergerie. The book, the binding of which is much worn, contains on a fly leaf the following inscription, dated Oct. 16, 4] a. m: "Lord have pity on me! I can no longer keep away the spent for you. O my children! Farewell, farewell!—MARIE ANTOINETTE."

— Adios, a Catholic paper published in Tennessee, tells the plain unvarnished truth when it says: "The Irishman who ignores the sacred obligations of his Church denies his God, and becomes the greatest enemy of his race and creed. We are in this country losing more by the infidelity of Catholics than we are gaining. The Catholic who neglects to assist at Mass on Sundays or to approach the Sacraments as commanded, is a living scandal, especially in the little ones. As soon as one commandment of the Church is ignored grace is lost, and the end no man knows. We need practical Catholics today."

— John Gilmary Shea, LL.D., in his history of the Catholic Church in the United States, says: "Of the 171 Prelates, living and deceased, whose biographies it contains, 50 were born in Ireland, 31 in France, 13 in Germany, 13 in Maryland, 9 in Pennsylvania, 8 in New York, 7 in Belgium, 4 in Canada, 2 in Italy, 2 in the West Indies, 2 in Spain, 4 in Austria, 3 in Ohio, 3 in Kentucky, 3 in Switzerland, 2 in Massachusetts, 2 in Florida, 2 in South Carolina, and 1 each in England, Holland, Yoloiania, Mexico, New Brunswick, Scotland, Vermont, New Jersey, Maine, Georgia, and West Virginia." This goes to demonstrate the universality of the Church.

— It is possible that cable connection will be established between the coast and Australia within the present year as it is announced that the company of Canadian and English capitalists lately formed to construct a line of cable between Vancouver, B. C., and Australia is pushing on the work. The company has applied to the Imperial Government for bounds to conduct the soundings and other works from the coast of Australia, and the matter is now under the consideration of the Government. The most encouraging offers of assistance in the way of subsidies have been received from all the Governments with whose territory it is proposed to make connection, and the matter has at last been placed beyond the possibility of failure.

— Alluding to the lamented death of Gen eral Logan, the Boston Pilot says: he was the son of an Irishman, his father, Dr. Logan, having emigrated in 1823. There never was a bolder type of an American than Logan. He was Republican personified. He was a man whom men might hate but never distrust. The relations between him and his wife were beautiful beyond description.

— Mr. Forster was an Irish Protestant who numbered. "They almost lost them selves in each other's identity, says a Senator who knew General Logan and his wife intimately. Her faithful arms were around him when he died. She had not left his side for two days and nights. The last touch on the living brow was from her hand; and the last recognition look in his eyes went up to meet the eyes of his wife."

— Not only does the religious persecution go on steadily in Russian Poland, but it goes on with the shedding of blood. For several weeks the faithful of the parish of Kempinen have mounted guard night and day in their church to prevent its being closed by military force. At length orders were sent down from Petersburg directing the use of extreme measures. The Cossacks at once hastened to the church with his troops, and ordered the crowd to disperse. As the latter did not move, he gave the command to fire, and a large number of the unfortunate victims fell. Three at length the peasants abandoned their church, the priest escaped with the Sacred Host, and the church was definitely closed. The church of Bent Lakowa, a parish of 20,000 souls, and two churches in the district of Stuck have been similarly desecrated.

— The question about the final resting-place of the Abbé Liszt is alleged to have been definitely settled by a deposition made by the Franciscan Fathers at Pesth. It has more than once been erroneously asserted in the papers that the Abbé Liszt was a Franciscan friar in the ordinary sense of the term. This of course he was not; he was, like many other persons, clerical and lay, from the Pope himself downwards, a member of the Third Order of St. Francis for years before his death. And the Franciscans of Pesth have testified on oath that he repeatedly expressed his desire to be buried in the vaults of their monastery, the funeral to take place at six in the morning, and that the Franciscan habit in which he wished to be interred has been kept ready for years. This evidence, it is said, will decide the question.

— Cardinal Gibbons in a recent address to his flock in the Baltimore Cathedral, spoke emphatically and impressively against the Catholics of the United States having any relations with Socialism, Nihilism or Communism. He condemned all those associations which, while pretending to destroy, not to build up the Union, and brought them to be true and steadfast in their love to the government which shelters and protects them. In regard to labor and capital, he said that both should live in harmony, as one could not exist without the other; that all men owed a two-fold duty—a duty to God and a duty to their country—and that both should lovingly be performed. His words should be well pondered. They are full of practical patriotism and common sense, and convey more to the mind of the toiler than all the bookwaver written on capital and labor.

— The New York German's Journal says that "thirteen million, two hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars were expended for school purposes by the State of New York during the last scholastic year. The average daily attendance of pupils was 626,813. If their numbers had been increased by the 123,000 boys and girls in our Catholic educational institutions, the taxpayers would have had to expend out of their pockets an additional two million and a half. Catholics not only pay their full share of the school tax, but, for conscience-sake, provide other schools for their children." The same may be said of every State in the Union, the Church saving the general public millions of dollars every year by educating her children in Christian parochial schools. We hope the day is not far distant when the fair minded portion of the American peoples will see the injustice of their double taxing Catholic citizens merely because they desire Christian education for their children.

— Reading the other day in an Irish paper that a deputation of Irish priests and laity prayed to ask Archbishop Walsh's sanction to an Irish pilgrimage to Rome on the occasion of the Pope's Jubilee, suggested the propriety of organizing a pilgrimage of Catholics from the Pacific Coast on the same auspicious occasion. We think that at least one hundred priests and laymen would be glad to unite with their co-religionists for that honorable purpose, and we make the suggestion this early in the year so that proper steps may be taken to ascertain the cost per capita and other information as to route, etc. The Golden Jubilee—the celebration of the Holy Father—will not occur until the 23rd of next December, so that visitors to the Vatican from this Coast can have every month in the year to select from in order to make the visit to Rome at the most convenient season for those who desire to make the pilgrimage. We shall be happy to hear from the Hierarchy and laity concerning this proposition and we hope to see it carried out.

— The German "Old Catholic" bishop, Dr. Reinkens, small as his sect, finds himself confronted with the same kind of difficulties between this coast and Australia within the present year as it is announced that the company of Canadian and English capitalists lately formed to construct a line of cable between Vancouver, [illegible] newspaper edited by him, 1[illegible] Bote, which he declares to be [illegible] purpose to the old Catholic cause. The complaints will be numerous, and the number of the disobedient and hostility of the clergy of the Government, the most encouraging offers of assistance in the way of subsidies have been received from all the Governments with whose territory it is proposed to make connection, and the matter has at last been placed beyond the possibility of failure.

— Alluding to the lamented death of Gen eral Logan, the Boston Pilot says: he was the son of an Irishman, his father, Dr. Logan, having emigrated in 1823. There never was a bolder type of an American than Logan. He was Republicanism personified. He was a man whom men might hate but never distrust. The relations between him and his wife were beautiful beyond description.

— Mr. Forster was an Irish Protestant who numbered. "They almost lost them selves in each other's identity, says a Senator who knew General Logan and his wife intimately. Her faithful arms were around him when he died. She had not left his side for two days and nights. The last touch on the living brow was from her hand; and the last recognition look in his eyes went up to meet the eyes of his wife.

— Not only does the religious persecution go on steadily in Russian Poland, but it goes on with the shedding of blood. For several weeks the faithful of the parish of Kempinen have mounted guard night and day in their church to prevent its being closed by military force. At length orders were sent down from Petersburg directing the use of extreme measures. The Cossacks at once hastened to the church with his troops, and ordered the crowd to disperse. As the latter did not move, he gave the command to fire, and a large number of the unfortunate victims fell. Three at length the peasants abandoned their church, the priest escaped with the Sacred Host, and the church was definitely closed. The church of Bent Lakowa, a parish of 20,000 souls, and two churches in the district of Stuck have been similarly desecrated.

— The question about the final resting-place of the Abbé Liszt is alleged to have been definitely settled by a deposition made by the Franciscan Fathers at Pesth. It has more than once been erroneously asserted in the papers that the Abbé Liszt was a Franciscan friar in the ordinary sense of the term. This of course he was not; he was, like many other persons, clerical and lay, from the Pope himself downwards, a member of the Third Order of St. Francis for years before his death. And the Franciscans of Pesth have testified on oath that he repeatedly expressed his desire to be buried in the vaults of their monastery, the funeral to take place at six in the morning, and that the Franciscan habit in which he wished to be interred has been kept ready for years. This evidence, it is said, will decide the question.

— Cardinal Gibbons in a recent address to his flock in the Baltimore Cathedral, spoke emphatically and impressively against the Catholics of the United States having any relations with Socialism, Nihilism or Communism. He condemned all those associations which, while pretending to destroy, not to build up the Union, and brought them to be true and steadfast in their love to the government which shelters and protects them. In regard to labor and capital, he said that both should live in harmony, as one could not exist without the other; that all men owed a two-fold duty—a duty to God and a duty to their country—and that both should lovingly be performed. His words should be well pondered. They are full of practical patriotism and common sense, and convey more to the mind of the toiler than all the bookwaver written on capital and labor.

— The New York German's Journal says that "thirteen million, two hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars were expended for school purposes by the State of New York during the last scholastic year. The average daily attendance of pupils was 626,813. If their numbers had been increased by the 123,000 boys and girls in our Catholic educational institutions, the taxpayers would have had to expend out of their pockets an additional two million and a half. Catholics not only pay their full share of the school tax, but, for conscience-sake, provide other schools for their children." The same may be said of every State in the Union, the Church saving the general public millions of dollars every year by educating her children in Christian parochial schools. We hope the day is not far distant when the fair minded portion of the American peoples will see the injustice of their double taxing Catholic citizens merely because they desire Christian education for their children.

— Reading the other day in an Irish paper that a deputation of Irish priests and laity prayed to ask Archbishop Walsh's sanction to an Irish pilgrimage to Rome on the occasion of the Pope's Jubilee, suggested the propriety of organizing a pilgrimage of Catholics from the Pacific Coast on the same auspicious occasion. We think that at least one hundred priests and laymen would be glad to unite with their co-religionists for that honorable purpose, and we make the suggestion this early in the year so that proper steps may be taken to ascertain the cost per capita and other information as to route, etc. The Golden Jubilee—the celebration of the Holy Father—will not occur until the 23rd of next December, so that visitors to the Vatican from this Coast can have every month in the year to select from in order to make the visit to Rome at the most convenient season for those who desire to make the pilgrimage. We shall be happy to hear from the Hierarchy and laity concerning this proposition and we hope to see it carried out.

— The German "Old Catholic" bishop, Dr. Reinkens, small as his sect, finds himself confronted with the same kind of difficulties between this coast and Australia within the present year as it is announced that the company of Canadian and English capitalists lately formed to construct a line of cable between Vancouver, Foolish New York Catholics.

It is one to believe a number of extraordinary sensational telegrams published in the daily press during the past week. The parish priest of St. Mediphans late parish in New York have conducted themselves in a manner both unbecoming and unpardonable—even from a worldly point of view.

When the congregation of any Catholic Church undertake to "run" the Bishop, to oppose his actions to such an certain point, and to dictate to him the manner in which he may conduct the affairs of his diocese—then they become rebels to their religious and direct antagonists to the Catholic Church—no matter how much they may proclaim the animosities of a Spanish the Bishop and not against the Church that their opposition is directed.

The organized attempt in New York to be contribution a dollar towards the vision fund of the Supreme Court, is an old trick of malcontents and mischief-makers, which has failed every time it has been tried. This fact was well proved in the diocese of New York during the time of Bishop Dubois, when certain Catholic lay trustees of some of the city churches inflicted to "run" the churches to suit their own views and in direct opposition to the will of the venerable pastor.

These misguided men spent like their present imitators—old Bishop Dubois that they would make him come to terms by stopping the supplies. Not a dollar should be contributed for any purpose to the parishes whom they had control, until the Bishop should yield to the views of his lay thirty. The aged Bishop was the embodiment of humility and piety, non-resistance and faith, with an antagonistic children that he was answered the insolent letter of his lay tormentors by sent for eleven he could with Father Eugene Onan, for this know no will but that of God.

For months the small Pulaski was beset with continually, until at length he was deserted by all but a few—some of the priests in the parishes protested against the malcontent parties. Then, indeed, the parishes were dismissed people broke out in a regular anti-Catholic disturbance, and again the threat was rife that the congregations would leave the Church.

This time patience ceased to be a virtue, the perpetrators with which to stop the vicious conduct of the rebellious spirits who, as they had invaded the sanctuary, had defied the authority of the Shepherd whom Almighty God had placed over them. Accordingly, Bishop Dubois sent a letter to the Street and that dignity and courage which Dominic Dubois never abandon the moment or conducted the affairs of his diocese and for either with or without the Church.

"I am an old man, said the saintly prelate, "and my days are numbered. Now be firm, my wants are simple. I can live on a crust in a garret or in a cellar. Rather than yield to the lay trustees, I will go to a garret, or down into a cellar. I shall not yield to them, and you will find that you cannot exercise this fact."

The honeyed-tongued "lay trustees" were not long in finding out that the sink and said Bishop Dubois was encamped in an unfurnished garret and cellar, and eventually made him return to his diocese. Of course, the rebellious spirits who had invaded the sanctuary, and defied the authority of the Shepherd whom Almighty God had placed over them, were dismissed from the parishes they had disturbed and from the Church altogether.

What would Washington's lay patriots, democrats and Catholics, and Catholics, do if they should turn, spontaneously, the sanctuary and defy the authority of the Bishops? And what would the cultivated members of mental energy and Catholic lay trustees, do if they should turn the sanctuary and defy the authority of the Bishops? Why, they would be dismissed, and their places would be filled by other people, and their churches, but the people would follow the Bishops.

Catholics in this country are not to be trifled with. They are not to be trifled with. They are generally a few exceptions, at present, there are no Cardinal Bishops, 45 Archbishops, and 1[illegible] Bishops. Among the last class figures the learned and zealous Bishop Ireland, of Minnesota, and well also be said "Catholic Bishop." Bishop Ireland, of Minnesota, and well also be said "Catholic Bishop." Bishop Ireland, of Minnesota, and well also be said "Catholic Bishop." Bishop Ireland, of Minnesota, and well also be said "Catholic Bishop." Bishop Ireland, of Minnesota, and well also be said "Catholic Bishop."

Is Culture Opposed to Christianity?

"No thinking man can deny the truth of the fact that the so-called "cultured classes" of every community in America are tainted with either a mild form of Agnosticism or the concerning growth of infidelity. Would the prospect seems to have a paganizing influence upon all those who, in their individual approach to the mysteries of Mammon, the Lord Jesus Christ and the Catholics and their Catholics alike say in classed in this category, which only serves to show what a baneful influence Protestantism exercises even outside the circumscribed area of sectarianism.

If there is any one thing which more than anything else tends to direct mere thoughts to the omnipotence existence and the omnipotence of God, it is the study of the wonders of the universe, contemplating the marvellous effect which flowed from the hand of the Almighty. Yet, strange to say, many of the Protestant moralists in Africa are morally corrupt and victims of drunkenness.

And then are the men who accuse Catholics religious of doing the work of Satan in Africa. Shame upon such scandalous lies! Shame upon such scandalous lies! Shame upon such scandalous lies!

Farm and Home.

Urging Fruit Culture.

A. T. Hatch, of Suisun, who has over 500 acres of fruit in bearing, is an enthusiast on the subject of fruit, and well he may be, for it has made him rich. He is urging others to do likewise. In the course of a conversation he said that his wife asked why he wanted other people to plant fruit trees, and thus come in competition with him. He told her it was selfishness that made him urge his neighbors to plant trees and vines. He wanted to create a market. Mr. Hatch thinks that the fruit business of California must improve for many years. A train of ten cars of fruit looks big going out every day, but suppose there were fifty or a hundred cars started out, and as the train pulls through the country from South to South and East to West, it would drop one here and there until they would soon all be gone. A great deal of fruit raised here would get people to depend on it, and would make a market.

Money in Berries.

As an instance of what may be done in the way of raising small fruit we refer to H. H. Williams, whose experience the past season is worthy of mention. From one-half-acre of blackberries he has this year harvested 3,000 pounds of berries, which he sold here at six cents a pound, giving him $180 from the one-half, or a gross profit of $360 per acre. He performed most of the work himself, so that his expenses were light. Small fruits will pay handsomely in this valley, if properly attended.—Pomona Progress.

Two Crops a Year.

Plowing and seeding are going forward at a rapid rate because of the harvest that is being sown for hay will be ready to cut in time for a crop of corn or potatoes to be matured on the same ground before frain next fall. Such things appear like fables to many of our Eastern friends, yet it is all true. Adjoining the town of Bakersfield last summer was a field in which this dual progress was carried on. We noted the crops carefully and know that both were well matured. After the barley was taken off for hay a crop of corn was planted, and under the benign influence of our obnoxious summer skies and tropicous moisture ever ready for application, made a growth that equaled any we have ever seen in the most noted corn-growing States. Adding to this the further consideration that we have no long idle winters where domestic animals must be housed and fed at great expense and the advantage of this as a purely agricultural country really appear. And yet experience shows that several crops are not the most profitable. Rare fruits, such as oranges, lemons, prunes, peaches and raisins, all of which do well in this section, are making their producers more clear profit than the ordinary agricultural production. These facts, and others equally potent, are the cause of the unprecedented immigration from the Eastern States. The most remarkable feature of this wonderful influx is that so many stop in Los Angeles and San Diego counties where prices of rich, productive land are not to be compared with those asked in this and adjoining counties.—Kern County Echo.

Growing Flax.

A new industry is to be established in San Mateo County which may rise into considerable importance. A linen factory is to be established to manufacture flax of local production. To encourage farmers to grow flax, seed will be advanced, to be paid for when the crop is delivered. Flax grows well in almost any part of California, and it has been produced in a considerable extent for the seed, but this is the first attempt to grow it for the fiber. Once the flax industry of the United States was of great importance, but it has dwindled away to almost nothing. It remains to be seen whether California can revive this decaying business.

A Credulous Farmer.

A strolling gypsy told a West Virginia farmer that if he would place $25 in a certain hollow stump and leave it there all night it would be doubled in the morning. The farmer tried it, and was enough fooled $50 in the stump. The gypsy advised the farmer to get all he had, $700, in the stump and draw out $1400 in the morning. The farmer tried his advice, and now he is looking for a gypsy who he says has stolen $700 from him.

Money in Raisins.

A Southern California raisin-grower has sold 3000 pounds of raisins from a vineyard of one and two-thirds acres. The fruit was disposed of in the seeds for 3½ cents a pound, and the return was at the rate of about $200 an acre. This is not an exceptional instance by any means, for the local papers throughout the State are filled with just such items. The price, however, was moderate, as 6½ cents has been paid for many tons of raisins by the large packers this year. It does not need an elaborate mathematical demonstration, with such facts as these for a basis, to show that the cultivation of raisin grapes is one of the most profitable branches of horticulture which may be engaged in.

What a Royal Baby Can Do.

The birth of Princess Beatrice's son was indirectly the cause of a terrible panic in the West End of London recently. From an early hour the whole of the metropolis had been wrapped in a dense fog. Nothing like it has been experienced for years. The traffic in the streets was all but suspended, and trains from the suburbs were delayed hours on the regs. In this dismal and dangerous condition of affairs, at about four o'clock that evening, the West End was startled by a tremendous explosion. In the underground railway station, at Victoria the passengers confronted a with one voice that "the dynamiters were at work." The first explosion was followed very quickly by a second and a third, and it was not until the fifth or sixth that the people in the street began to look more calm as it dawned upon them that after all the din was occasioned by nothing more criminal than the discharge of blank cartridges from the cannon in the adjacent St. James' Park. In Piccadilly and the streets on the other side of the park the alarm was equally great. There were forty two guns fired in all. Surely the celebrity Mistie wants of powder. Princess Beatrice has presented the Queen with her thirty sixth grandchild, and almost from the moment of its birth it became, after the manner of its race, an expense to the country.

California Raisins.

The California Grower and Canner has interviewed several business men in San Francisco relative to the manner of disposing of California raisins, from which it appears that some commission firms in the city have formed them prematurely on the Eastern market, without reference to the demand, so as to get their commissions quickly, when by holding them back a short time, a fair price might have been realized, as the better qualities of California raisins are found in the East to be fully equal to imported fruit and commands just as good prices when judiciously handled.

Family Fun.

Once was Enough.

Sick wife—If I die, John, you will never marry again, will you?

John (with unnecessary earnestness)—No, indeed!

At the Seaside.

Mrs. Levy—"Schmidt, almost look at those beautiful swans, how they cross and dive."

Mr. Levy—"Hequeen, don't I have told you already sometimes dat I don't want to hear apout those fluctuations? I vants to hear no talkings at all apout dat money market vile I vas dot seaside—oi."

Time's Social Revenges.

Mrs. Vengeanide—"Oh! I know that Mrs. Upstart is just green with envy this day."

Sympathizing Friend—"Yes, indeed."

"You remember we were both married in the same church and her wedding was ever so much finer than mine and she knew it too."

"Yes, it's so."

"I just like to see her now turning her hair when she thinks of the fact that my husband had the biggest funeral that ever was in this street, and with her husband just wallowing in health, she can't equal it for years yet."

The Irish Soldier's Ready Excuse.

While on the peninsula during the war, an officer one day came across a private belonging to one of the most predatory companies of the Irish Ice ade. The fellow had the lifeless bodies of a goose and a hen, tied together by the hinks daughter from his mouthes, "where did you steal those you ran ay?" the officer demanded.

"Steal, sir!" Faith, I was marching along with Colonel Sergeant Magpiece, and the goose had come to pay some out and knowed the Ameriean flag, and I shot him on the spot."

"But the hen, sir; how did the hen die?"

"It's the hen, is it? Bad luck to the hen! I caught her laying eggs for the Confederate army, and as a Federal soldier I couldn't stand that, sinhow, and I gave her a bit that stopped that act of treason."

She Knew Him.

Maud—"Oh! I just dote on palmistry. I've been studying it for a week, and I can tell any one's fortune now."

Augustus—"Well, tell mine, please."

Maud—"Well, let me see. This is the line or the other one there is, but I guess it don't matter much, they look a good deal alike anyhow—yes, now I see.

"You will be awfully in love with you, but she will die an old maid."

"And I?"

"Oh, you'll go through life just the way you have been doing, never seeing beyond your nose."

"But why will she die an old maid?"

"Because you won't have nerve enough to ask her to marry you, that's why."

Didn't Care for Sweets.

She (looking over the bill of fare)—Am I to have carte blanche, Charley?

Charley—Why, yes; take some carte blanche if you want, but I prefer something solid.

Seeking Free Advice.

"Doctor," he said casually to a physician whom he met on the street, "I've got a boil on my heel. What would you advise me to do?"

And the doctor, who doesn't give something for nothing when he can help it, replied:

"I would advise you to buy a dozen pocket handkerchiefs and then consult a physician."

Between the Acts.

"How truly rural that scene was" said a husband to his wife as the curtain descended after the first act, and then he went out to see a man.

At the close of the play—it was five-act play—he again expressed his admiration for the truly rural nature of the scenery, but he pronounced it "tooly booral," his wife got him home quickly as she could.

A Unfortunate Order.

"James," said a grocer to his clerk, "you mustn't say 'lady' to the women customers any more; they don't like the term."

"All right, sir," replied James, and presently Mrs. Wayback came in.

"I want a Philadelphia dry picked codfish," she said, "an three pans of soap."

"Yes, ma'am," responded James; "where'll you have 'em sent?"

"Don't you remember, you young snapper-jawed," and Mrs. Wayback, eyeing him with displeasure, "I'm a lady an' don't you forget it," and she flounced out.

A Father-in-Law's Vengeance.

A jury composed of 11 business men and an old fellow from across the creek retired to the jury room. The fellow, who was selected, remarked that he thought that the prisoner ought to be sent to the penitentiary for five years.

"They ain't long enough," said the old fellow. "Let's put it on him for 10."

"Oh, no, that won't do."

"Well, then," stretching himself out on a bench, "I'm with yer."

"What, you're going to hang the jury?"

"Tain't about it."

"My dear sir, we are anxious to get back to our business."

"Then send him up for 10."

"But that would be a great injustice."

"Then squal an' make yourselves comfortable."

"Have you any special reason why the prisoner should go up for 10 years?"

"I think I have," throwing a quid of tobacco at the spittoon.

"Will you please name it?"

"Wa, for it won't take no long. He is my son-in-law an' I have been supportin' him ever since he was married."

He was up for 10 years.

Glad He Hadn't Anything.

An awkward, ill-favored boy, while on an Arkansaw railway train approached a man and said:

"Mister, won't you please help me along?"

"You are going along fast enough. If you are in a hurry why don't you get out and walk."

"I mean, won't you give me fifty cents?"

"What for?"

"I have fits and—"

"(Sent Cesar, do they have to pay a fellow to have fits in this country? I'd, when I come from people don't have to pay for fits."

"I am not able to work—"

"Well, don't do it. I don't care if you never work any. I am not so very fond of work myself."

"All I want is money enough to pay my fare to Jacksonville."

"What do you want to go there for?"

"My brother lives there."

"Well, what have you got against him? I want to live with him. Won't you please give me money enough to—

"Have fits, you say?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, you are better off than I am. I haven't even got fits. I haven't anything. Go on off somewhere and amuse yourself.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DYSPEPSIA

Causes its victims to be miserable, hopeless, confused, and depressed in mind, very irritable, languid, and drowsy. It is a disease which does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy to throw off the causes and cure the disease. The organs kill they perform their duties willingly. Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven just the required remedy in hundreds of cases.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, from which I have suffered two years. I tried many other medicines, but none proved so satisfactory as Hood's Sarsaparilla."—THOMAS COOK, Brush Electric Light Co., New York City.

Sick Headache

"For the past two years I have been afflicted with severe headaches and dyspepsia. I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and have found great relief. I cheerfully recommend it to all."—MRS. E. F. ANNABLE, New Haven, Conn.

Mrs. Mary C. Smith, Cambridgeport, Mass., was a sufferer from dyspepsia and sick headache. She took Hood's Sarsaparilla and found it the best remedy she ever used.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

WESTERN HOTEL,

212-14 Broadway Street,

JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor

(Late Broadway Hotel.)

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.

608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.

Telephone No. 747.

I WANT TO BE SAILOR—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL (Bath), Parlor, Hands, Dishwasher, Dairyman, Sawyer, Shoeboy, Laundrymen, Gardeners, and Barber (organ in private families and hotels). Also, good reliable Pantry Man, Cook, Waiter, Dishwasher, Butcher, Boy, Milker, Farmer, Gardener, Teamster, Sawyer, Sawing Machine Operator, Blacksmith, Wheelwright, Carriage Ironer, Wagon Maker, Spring Maker, Horseshoer, Carriage Painter, Trimmer, Laundrymen, Laundry Girls, Cooks, Waiters, Chambermaids, Housework Girls, Nurses, Seamstresses, Dressmakers, Ladies' Tailor, Cutter, Fitter, Ladies' Hairdresser, Manicure, Chambermaid, Waiter, Dishwasher, Cook, Laundry Girl, Laundry Machine Operator, Ironer, Starcher, Sorter, Marker, Wagon, Driver, Teamster, Blacksmith, Horseshoer, Wheelwright, Spring Maker, Carriage Painter, Trimmer, Carriage Ironer

AN AMERICAN AT KNOCK.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

in the blames and other prayers which he recited. Afterwards nearly all repeated in the shrine where the apparitions had been seen. I had a few minutes' conversation with Archbishop Cavagnari.

ROME,

the venerable clergyman invited me to his house and listened to what I had to say. He was singularly impressed, so he told me, if he addressed me from the pulpit. Of the many portals priests I met with in Ireland all of whom carry the dignity of their calling in their manner and language, no one is now so vividly impressed by my mind as this gentleman. Whether it was from the association of the place with the news approval of the principal Irish-American citizens of Cincinnati, I, yet next in importance, and pledge you an unyielding support in the conflict.

JOHN FITZGERALD, President.

The substance of President Fitzgerald's address to the meeting of the Irish National League of America is as follows:

The present position of affairs in Ireland deserves consideration and renewed energy on our part. The inhumanity, greed and aggravation of landlordism, aided by a plunder the Irish people have forced upon them the alternative of resistance, such as is within their power to offer. There can be no doubt that the present plan of campaign offers the best practical means, so far as discovered, for offering effective the determination of the Irish people to protect themselves against the greed of those who become, therefore, by duty to their interest and the new crisis has arisen in Ireland. In doing this I feel that I have done all that is necessary to urge you to renewed zeal and energy in the labor of love which you have undertaken. I am glad to be able to announce to you that the affairs of the Irish National League of America are in a most satisfactory and flourishing condition, and the organization itself has never been more healthy, vigorous and hopeful than at the present time. The address speaks of what has already been accomplished, compliments the efforts of Treasurer O'Reilly and Secretary Sutton, and closes with an appeal to the members of the League to take new courage, and proceed with new zeal to the task still before them.

First National Bank.

The First National Bank of San Francisco, Cal., held its seventeenth annual meeting yesterday, on change of date made in the last issue of THE MONITOR—January 21. Photos successfully his father, James Phelan. The board now consists of Daniel Callaghan, James McNab, George A. Low, W. Van Bergen, Lewis Gerstle, George A. Bourdinn, James M. Donohoe, Chester G. Hooker and James H. Jennings. The board re-elected by electing Daniel Callaghan, President; James McNab, Vice President; George A. Low, Cashier, and Chas. W. Kline, Assistant Cashier.

The bank has paid the stockholders 111 successive dividends, amounting to $1,110,000, and did a very good business in 1886, adding $25,108 72 to its surplus, which now stands at $954 10 96. Its capital stock paid up is $1,500,000, and its total resources amount to $4,208,119 38.

Young Men's Institute.

Grand Lecturer Lynch delivered a very able address before Stockton Institute No. 7, last week.

Death assessment No. 2 of $1 has been levied by the Board of Directors.

All communications for the Institute should be addressed to Joseph J. Tuohy, Grand Recording Secretary, No. 104 Fort street, room 12, San Francisco.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ANTRIM.—The Ulster Winter Assizes having concluded at Ennis, the last of the political prisoners, Patrick Hanlon, left for Belfast, and were met at the Boundary by a large crowd, who cheered them. The prisoner was strongly guarded.

ARMAGH.—On Dec. 21, at Armagh, a man named William Nugent, charged with grievous and a capital crime and between Rosslyn and Ballymacrea, on the evening of the 5th of November last, was committed for trial at the Assizes, and sentenced to be hanged. The prisoner is now in custody and will be tried at the Assizes. The deceased was a man very much respected, both in Keady and Armagh, and there is great sympathy felt for his family.

CAVAN.—On Dec. 15th, the tenants residing on the property of Mr. Kennedy, in Drumlish, Drumreach, and Aghalill, came into Cavan to pay their rents, and were received by his agents, who informed them that Mr. Kennedy was not at home. The tenants asked for an abatement of the abolition in the rental on the old rents, and twenty-four of them demanded a reduction of 25 per cent. The agents said that Mr. Kennedy had previously signified his intention of giving an abatement of 25 per cent. All agreed. The tenants left without paying.

CLARE.—Mr. Charles Mahon, sub-Sheriff for Clare, received a sound caning on Tuesday in the Sixth-mile Station, at Killaloe, from Mr. Stackpole Stokes, of Doo. Dr. J. Hill, Doon, and a large force of police were present, but the assailants escaped. It is said that the very laborious on the part of the people following.

On Dec. 20th, the sheriff, with the usual force of Ennis, Francis street, Kilkee, was completely beaten, as was the Sheriff at Ballyvaughan, in the house; and the proprietress likewise pitched a vain attempt to sell her property. It appears that the only occupants of the house were, besides Miss O'Connell, a young man, named Michael McInerney, and the Sheriff's deputy and his cousin, all of whom had come there for the purpose of carrying out some eviction in the neighborhood.

CORK.—The Rev. E. Hayes, pastor of Georgetown, Iowa, United States, lecturing recently at Youghal, on the Land Question, and Times, spoke of the Liberator as the apostle of moral force, the advocate of Irishmen's rights and the sublime impersonation of incorruptible patriotism.

The Duke of Devonshire has allowed his Cork tenantry a reduction of 25 per cent. on the half-year's rent, being the same as he granted in his Waterford tenantry. The tenantry have accepted the reduction, which is equivalent to 50 per cent. on other properties in the district, considering the made of rent. He holds 30,000 acres in the county Cork.

By Finance, of Dublin, has given his tenantry at Ballycondon, Mitchelstown, an abatement of 25 per cent., through the agent, Mr. Bell, Tipperary.

The tenantry of Mr. R. G. Davis, at Fidane, near Mallow, have received an abatement of 30 per cent., through the agent, Mr. Bell, Tipperary.

The Island tenantry of Mr. Lamoche, Dublin, have, through the agent, Mr. Keogh, received an abatement of 20 per cent. The tenants paid the rents. The Baltimore tenantry, near Castlehaven, have been granted similar reduction, by the agent, Mr. Williams, of Dromore, Mallow.

Captain Townsend, the agent over the estate of the late Mr. John Hyde, has given reductions of rent from 15 to 25 per cent. to the tenantry in the Mitchelstown and Fermoy districts. A permanent reduction of 25 per cent. has also been given to the good tenants.

Early on Dec. 21, an old man named Anthony Mooney was found on the road near the town of Tralee. He had been in town, and left late in the evening, the Carrigan Hill, where he was with a load of coals. It is supposed that he fell asleep, and that death was caused by the intensive severity of the weather.

Mr. Jeremiah Mahony died on December 21, at his residence, Camden quay, at the ripe age of 84 years. Mr. Mahony for many years was a member of the Corporation, with the Dublin Corporation, and was Sheriff of Cork in 1848. Subscriptions to the Mahony testimonial fund were received by Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Mahony's son-in-law, at the Cork Steam Packet Company's office, Dublin, and the amount of $450 was reached. Subscriptions to the testimonial fund, being moved to the chair, and large number of objections from the different parishes in which the estate has fallen also present. After an elegant speech from the chair, it was decided to ask a reduction, and in case of refusal, abide by the advice of the land League.

LEITRIM.—On Dec. 19, at Ballyconnell, Cavan, a meeting of Conal Ring Hermitage branch was held in Ballymahon, the Rev. J. Skelly, P.P., Carrickboyland, being moved to the chair, and large number of objections from the different parishes in which the estate has fallen also present. After an elegant speech from the chair, it was decided to ask a reduction, and in case of refusal, abide by the advice of the land League.

LIMERICK.—On Dec. 23, the ceremonial of the profession of a Sister of the Order of Mercy took place in the Convent chapel attached to the Dublin-road. The young lady professed was Miss Mary Agnes Blandy, fourth daughter of Myles Blandy, Esq., Ashtown, and second of the same family in religion of Sister Mary Elizabeth.

On Dec. 21, a deputation from the Corporation, consisting of the Mayor, Sir Thomas Gaffney, the Rev. Dr. Hillyard, Dr. O'Connor, and Mr. Cornelius Ryan, waited on the Bishop of Limerick, Dr. Gillooly, and presented him with an address congratulating him on his appointment to his present valued position.

On Wednesday last, Mr. Ryan, who had served 40 years as a Dublin Commissioner, retired from the service, and received a handsome testimonial from the staff of the Commission.

MAYO.—Mr. Peter Tuohy, tenant-at-will of Mr. Murphy, Ballycastle, Ballina, Dublin, has received notice to quit. Mr. Tuohy, who is a man of good character, and a good farmer, has been in occupation of the farm for 30 years, and has always paid his rent. The farm, in question, is a large one, and the rent is very low. The present rent is £60 per annum, and the landlord has offered to take £30 per annum, and the tenant has offered £40 per annum, and the landlord has refused to accept it. The tenant has offered £40 per annum, and the landlord has refused to accept it. The tenant has offered £40 per annum, and the landlord has refused to accept it. The

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

DESTINY.

Whither to-day and whither to-morrow,
Goeth our lives and hearts and hope;
Revolves in pleasure and care and sorrow,
Say what it cost in Fate's horoscope!
Infancy, young, and manhood fled,
Age with its staff—and this is all—
Life is a smile and a tear and pall,
And the dream is past away.
Blissely,
Chastely,
Wrathfully,
Meekly,
Gleams our lives and our hope for aye—
Againe and falling like leaves from tree!
Dropping away,
Dropping away,
Like leaves from a bereaved autumnal tree;
(As the leaves in the Mountain Ferns in the River,
And the River flows on to the Sea!)

Hither to-day and thither to-morrow,
Led by Fatality, changeless storm and storm,
From whose experience good may we borrow—
He is that is gone can never return.
This do we know—our hopes are dissipated—
To ourselves be true, hear Faith in the end;
An honest hand have of help to extend,
And a heart of hope always!
Lenghingly,
Tearfully,
Trustingly
Goeth our lives and our hopes each day,
Like the wrinkled rumblings of restless waves,
Rushing along,
Changing and moving incessantly,
Blown by the winds of great Destiny;
(So the Stream in the Mountain Ferns as to the River,
And the River flows on to the Sea!)

C. ANTHONY DUFFY.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

ST. PLACIDUS.

[Under the altar of St. Francis Latin, in the Church of St. Ignatius, is this city, reposes a life-size representation of St. Placidus, containing the relics of the youthful martyr.]

How calm, in his young, manly beauty,
He lies in his unbroken sleep!
Reward, as the fair child of duty,
To his, now, triumphant, to reap.

In the school of wisdom is his station, they tell him,
A prince of the old Roman race;
And fittingly, too, they arrayed him
In robes so suited to grace!

The bright, lapsed red thrown around him,
The wealth of his love to display;
And white, in which purity bound him,
His innocent soul to portray!

The gold, too, of fanciful weaving,
In which the young noble was decked,
The strength of his faith is believing,
When Faith meant blood-pouring sacrificed.

The open, red wound that is glowing
Where his pitiless steel found its rest,
Was the point of the sharp, sword, now showing
In the hand on his virginal breast.

Oh, well on his brow to place wreathing,
The bright lily—as crown that he wears;
And low at his shrine to kneel, breathing
For there is the glory he bears.

Years have rolled by since he perished;
Centuries, too, have long fled;
And yet is his memory cherished,
For such fire, should such bodies be dead.

O, men, in your wild, fevered rushing
For what the bare world can afford,
Whether, sun OR MOON OR LIFE!

Is its pleading or its things that are lasting
In your restless and vain, longing search,
To be Faith that in yearnings aspires,
And the years that is found in the Church.

Go, look at the saint who his sleeping
On the bed which his martyrdom gave;
Then turn to the weary world stepping
The ends which their God gave to rave.

Ah, then, with an ardent wish burning
For the bliss which the saint has attained,
Level low at his feet, humbly learning
The way by which Heaven is gained.

Ask for a faith never ending;
Ask him to help you to love,
Pray with a penite heart bending
For the grace he will find you above.

Oakland, Jan., 1887. HELOISA RETLEY.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

"LET THE LITTLE ONES COME UNTO ME."

TO R. T. G.

In the life of our Saviour sweet nonesia we read,
The lessons of wisdom He loved to bestow;
In the hospital of the children instilling the seed
Of patience and charity—a.n to shelter the foe.
But, mortalita, as I ponder o'er prospects of gold
Which flowed from the life of that Prophet of grace,
Adopted alike to the young and the old,
To nations at large, every people and race.
There is one of all others I love to bend o'er,
And wish I, too, present, that we might gaze to see,
When our Saviour, while resting on Galilee's shore,
Breathed forth: "Let the little ones come unto Me."

Not the great or the learned He summoned that day
To list to His lessons so curiously hoard;
Oh, no! 'twas the little ones blessing to lay
On the breast of the Master and hear His sweet Word.

What joy, oh, what rapture, what purest delight
Must these children have felt as they lay on His breast,
With that prayer being smile beaming on them so bright;
Oh, truly, 'twas blissful and heavenly rest.
And while holding them thus I to His loving embrace,
A lesson of meekness is wafted to me:
"If you wish in the house of my Father a place,
A spirit like these little ones you must crave."

Oh! thrice happy little ones ever to be,
So dearly beloved by your Saviour of men!
How favored, how blessed, how happy to see
In the course of the angels that Saviour again!
How glorious shall be your lot in the blest
To repose in the arms of our Father and Friend;
So peaceful and happy in unalloyed rest,
Through the day of eternity—never to end.
Oh, keep ever spotless thy fair robe of grace,
And hear it annulled o'er life's stormy sea,
That—when leaving this exile—and quitting the race,
You may hear that sweet bidding: "Child, come unto Me."

FELICITAS.

Singing Songs of Joy

"Hurrah for the Irish May Flower's bloom,
That cured my Rheumy's ills,
It kept his fleet from death's doom,
And cured him by his pills.
Do you know me, Mr. Delaney,
I'm Mike Flynn, of Ballyshannon,
Irish May Fly cures, sure's the power,
Cured my darling Joy.

Literary Miscellany.

The Great Strike at Errickdale.

A STORY OF RICH AND POOR

CHAPTER I.

Errickdale is famous for its coal pits. It has dozens of them. All night long their fires glow red through the darkness, and all day the sound of pick and hammer, and the creak of rusty iron chains dragging heavily loaded cars up the slope of the mines into the light, mingle with the hum of the busy workshops of their lofty pinnacled sheds as they come and go, till the place with noisy life. It is a lonely place otherwise, close to the sea-coast. A poisonous strike wind puts far out into the water, and a tramway roadway for it for the use of the cars which take the coal to the vessels that are constantly loading.

The village of Errickdale, at the time of our story, consisted of the black buildings connected with the mines, the rows of little blue-stone tenements where the miners lived, and one spacious, rambling, old fashioned dwelling, built a century previous by the first owners and operators of the mines, and preserved intact ever since, in its antique and solid elegance, by each new owner of the place. Eight months of the year it was closed, with the exception of a few rooms occupied by the agent, the old housekeeper, and two servants, one other apartment being always kept in readiness to receive the master whenever, for any reason, he chose to make his appearance.

But for four months, from June to October, the whole house was thrown open and filled with a brilliant company, who spent their summer days in nonty idleness, and made Errickdale a scene of delight. The beautiful it was always, in spite of its loneliness—a loneliness so extreme that not another town or village, or house or hut, was to be met within five miles around it, except Tom Teal, lying hidden from sight behind the hills, and five miles away at that, and the lighthouse which rose up early on the point of the dangerous, ugly rock ledge in the centre of Errick Bay. That lay open to every opportunity for sailing, rowing, bathing, and fishing; the beach was firm and good for those who cared to walk; the rocks were bold and tempting for those who cared to climb. In the fields the wild pink roses blossomed, and straw berries, raspberries, tiny alpine berries, and blueberries followed one upon the other in superabundance. The longs of coal-dust, the begrimed men, the care-worn women and dirty children, the confusion and drifting, marred very much the beauty of the place; but what would it, the place without them? The guests who came there soon forgot such trifles as the days spent in the merry-making; and the city of Mallton a summer at Errickdale was spoken of as a season of unrivalled pleasure.

It was in Malton that John Bennett, the present owner of Errick mines, had his palace-like city house. There he had collected such treasures as few men could boast, even in that city, famed for its super-fluity of the beautiful and the costly; and all of them he lavished upon the only lady whom made life dear to him—the daughter whom his stalwart young wife had left to him when, at the child's birth, she died.

It is a marvel that Eleanora Rosetti grew up as amiable and gentle as she was; for she scarcely knew what it meant to have a wish thwarted or the slightest wish for her fancy ungratified. Delicate and fair, like some exotic plant, she bloomed in the tenderness wherever she went, and it seemed to her only as the air she breathed—she knew nothing else. She was a perfect queen in her kingdom, and her subjects were her willing slaves; for, in her intercourse with them, she was gracious and regular beauty, and to bear the rich woman's name with a sense of evidence like the manor notes of an organ music. Even had she been of like station and wealth with herself, Eleanora would have left no room for jealousy; for her own beauty and that of Bridget were of so different a character that no contrast for that, her trained artistic taste was considering it with pleasure all the while that their talk went on.

"Not that way, Bridget answered her for the fourth time, and then a plenty myself. Hit it's as if the hangys and want were trying to put my heart instead of my body. Sakes alive! I'm sure I'd be ashamed of myself, and my poor mother, if I ever let myself be so very mean! Why should she hope they would lend her their tattlin' tongues? Would not the neighbors be more ready to speak against his nibbers, because of the shame to her daughter? Well, I'm sure, she, she ought to see that this would be the result. And then the long, long days and weeks which must elapse before the chance would come at all—if it should ever come at all! She just that sudden hope and plan away. Instead of it, she prayed against and again with steady, tired voice, "Let it come, Lord, let it come! I'm so tired for me, save thy people now."

(TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

GEOLOGY AND CATHOLICS.

A Catholic Bishop the Founder of Geological Science.

[illegible] people ask where that the father of the science of geology was not only a Catholic, but a Catholic Bishop? The Bologna Congress at Bologna some twenty years ago brought prominently forward the name of the Danish anatomist, Niel Stensen, eldest son of the Danish Lutheran minister at Stenos, as the founder of geological science. On Sunday, 11th of the Calends of Cyprenius (celebrated the two hundredth anniversary of the death of this remarkable man by a grand festival, in which many non-Catholic persons of distinction, including Professor Huxley, took part side by side with the Prefect Apostolic, Mgr. Von Eoch.

Sir Charles Lyell, in the first volume of his "Elements of Geology," gives a detailed account of Stensen's works and theories, but no reference to his ecclesiastical character. Born a Lutheran, Niel Stensen, at the age of twenty five had made the first map of the daily study of anatomy, when, being called upon to dissect an Italian, he turned his attention to the great muscle of the heart, and made a discovery a new science.

Being sent to the convent of a Catholic, it is interesting. He was marked all through life by a deep reverence for the Author of truth. Humanity was his study, his first pupil-friend, gradually fell into by their writings, and led on to the study of creation. From anatomy he passed to mathematics, and finally to the consideration of lore of truth earned him even further favor with the Holy Ghost, and Pope Urban presented at Leghorn and the Lady Christina of Sweden, the judge in the streets, fire turned his curiosity to the study of the Scripture, and he was ordained priest at Ratisbon, and the Elector Ernest of Hanover, who was a Lutheran, made him his court preacher. Not long after

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED FREE OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1887.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

The offices of the MONITOR are now located at

536 KEARNY STREET,

(first-floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

— Henry George, a Protestant, advises Catholics to revolt from the authority of their Church. Comment is unnecessary.

— A movement is on foot, originated by Mr. M. M. Busman, of Eufaula, Ala., to erect a monument over the grave of Father Ryan, the poet priest, at Mobile, Ala.

— The pastor of St. Agatha's, Philadelphia, has secured for $18,000 a large piece of ground on which he proposes to build handsome parochial schools. He sold the old church property for $11,000.

— A cablegram from Rome, received on Saturday last, announces the Pontiff's Secretary of State to succeed Cardinal Jacobini, as Monsignor Rampolla del Tindaro, at present the Papal Nuncio at Madrid.

— The death is announced of Rev. Thomas Scannell, for many years the esteemed parish priest of Douglas, Cork, and one of the Canons of the Chapter of the diocese. The deceased clergyman had reached an advanced age.

— Cardinal Innocent Ferrieri, who died recently, was born at Faino, Italy, Sept. 14, 1813, and was elevated to the dignity of Cardinal March 12th, 1866. His death reduces the number of Cardinals nominated by Pope Pius IX. to twenty-six.

— The opinion of Mr. Henry George's friends of his hysterical articles in his organ, may be gauged by the fact that the Irish World, his staunchest supporter, was silent last week. It left Mr. George to himself. "Alas! Poor Yorick!"

— One of the New Zealand Bishoprics is to be elevated to the dignity of an Archiepiscopal See. The Catholics of Auckland have forwarded an address to the Vatican in support of the claims of that Diocese, where the first scenes of Catholicity were seen in the Colony.

— A recent remnal of the Diocese of Brooklyn, shows an aggregation of 158 priests, 90 churches, 39 chapels, 1 theological seminary, 2 colleges—St. John's and St. Francis—16 academies and 1 select school, 43 parochial schools, 16 Catholic asylums and 4 hospitals.

— The oldest person in France, perhaps in the world, is said to be a woman who lives in the village of Aubeville, in Perigord. She was born March 16, 1761, and is therefore 125 years old. The authentic record of her birth is to be found in the parish register of St. Just du Claix, in the Department of the Isere.

— Cardinal Gibbons will leave Baltimore next month to attend the College of Cardinals, which meets at Rome in March next. During his absence the affairs of the Archdiocese will be managed by Mgr. McGigan, the Cardinal's Vicar General. Cardinal Taschereau, of Quebec, will attend the same conclave, and the two Cardinals will receive the Red Hat from Pope Leo at the same time. They will be absent about two months.

— A recent cablegram from Rome states that the Pope has written a letter to Emperor William thanking him for the reference in his speech opening the Landtag to the increasing friendliness of the relations between Prussia and the Vatican. The Pope promises to cooperate with the Emperor in bringing the negotiations between Prussia and the Vatican to a successful termination.

— Catharine Cotter, in religion Mother St. Virenina, died at the Ursuline Academy, Cleveland, O., on the 12th inst. Her well-fortified by the last rites of Holy Church, passed from earth without a struggle. Mother St. Virenina will be long remembered as true Ursuline, self-sacrificing, and as a devoted, hard-working teacher. The deceased was in the 40th year of her age and the 19th of her profession.

— The new edition of the London Post Office Directory consists of 2,672 pages, plus 322 pages of advertisements, and contains 244,000 names. On each page are 16,000 letters, the number of letters in the "Commercial" alone making a total of 7,680,000, and the weight of the type used for the volume is about twenty-five tons. Here is a small but interesting table which shows the difference of arrangement. In the new directory there are : 2,120 Smiths, 1,168 Jonesses, 708 Browns and 467 Robinsons.

— Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman, Liberal Member of Parliament, and formerly Chief Secretary for Ireland, in a speech on Saturday said he believed that when Home Rule was granted to Ireland, Parnell would be the conservative leader in the Irish Parliament, supported by the Government and the landlords, while Parnell's present adjutants would lead the opposition. But this is only the opinion of one of England's defeated minions in Ireland.

— A telegram has been received from William R. Hibler, who is now at York Factory on his way to discover the long-sought-for Northwest Passage, in which he says of the Catholic Indians he found there: "The Indians are very poor and will not start for Churchill until they have received Holy Communion at Christmas, as they think bad luck will follow them all next year if they go without receiving it." What a lesson for Legions of people who call themselves the lightened and civilized Catholics! These poor Indians may appear pitiable and useless by the eye of the worldling, but their demonstration of Catholic faith makes them an object in the sight of God, who loves to sanctify the souls of the faithful poor.

— The Colorado Catholic makes this pertinent observation: "General Logan died a Protestant, if anything, though his father was an Irish Catholic physician. Another case of ambition or carelessness making shipwreck of faith. Of all fellows, certainly the worst a sin for worldly pride and position another religion. Yet, even by their own acknowledgment, this is what the parents are doing who send their children to the public schools. We do not pity their fearful reaping of later years, for they sow in broad day light."

— Speaking of Henry George's letter of the McGlynn case, Justin McCarthy says: "The whole thing is something to be deplored. Mr. George was no doubt sincere in his convictions, but it was just possible that he was too severe. Dr. McGlynn will receive fair treatment when he goes to Rome. His case will not be prejudiced. The Catholic Church is always conservative, and acts with great deliberation in dealing with questions which concern its own welfare. In my opinion Mr. George's letter will have no effect from an ecclesiastical point of view.

— Under the heading "The Vatican and Ireland," the weekly press recently published a dispatch from Rome which runs thus: "In consequence of the increasing agitation in Ireland, the Pope to-day conferred with Cardinal Simeoni, Prefect of Propaganda, with reference to instructions to be sent to Irish Bishops, charging them to keep the clergy in their respective dioceses scrupulously within the limits of their duty. There is not a word of truth in this announcement. The Pope is perfectly aware that there is no increase of agitation in Ireland, except among the law officers of the Crown in the Four Courts. And Cardinal Simeoni denies that any conversation has taken place between him and the Holy Father with regard to Ireland.

— A reporter of the New York Herald recently interviewed Archbishop Corrigan in relation to the personal attack made upon him by Henry George in the second issue of his anti-Catholic crusader, and—after reading the charge that his Grace tried to defeat the preparations for the Labor Convention, and had coerced his priests to aid him—Archbishop Corrigan read the paragraph quoted above, and, turning to the reporter with a smile said: "I never pay any attention to those things." "But, your Grace, otherwise, and the charge will be scattered broadcast over this country." "You may say," said the Archbishop, "that it is entirely false from beginning to end."

— The statistics used by the enemies of the Church to sow discord in the souls of Catholics.

— The Rome correspondent of a secular non-Catholic paper says that the Propaganda is still pursuing its investigations in reference to the question whether the Knights of Labor is a proper association for Catholics to join.

— The decision concerning the Knights of Labor is perhaps not so much that there is no danger of agitation in Ireland, except among the law officers of the Crown in the Four Courts. And Cardinal Simeoni denies that any conversation has taken place between him and the Holy Father with regard to Ireland.

— A telegram from Rome states that the Pope has written a letter to Emperor William thanking him for the reference in his speech opening the Landtag to the increasing friendliness of the relations between Prussia and the Vatican. The Pope promises to cooperate with the Emperor in bringing the negotiations between Prussia and the Vatican to a successful termination.

— Catharine Cotter, in religion Mother Mt. Virenina, died at the Ursuline Academy, Cleveland, O., on the 12th inst. Her well-fortified by the last rites of Holy Church, passed from earth without a struggle. Mother St. Virenina will be long remembered as true Ursuline, self-sacrificing, and as a devoted, hard-working teacher. The deceased was in the 40th year of her age and the 19th of her profession.

— The new edition of the London Post Office Directory consists of 2,672 pages, plus 322 pages of advertisements, and contains 244,000 names. On each page are 16,000 letters, the number of letters in the "Commercial" alone making a total of 7,680,000, and the weight of the type used for the volume is about twenty-five tons. Here is a small but interesting table which shows the difference of arrangement. In the new directory there are : 2,120 Smiths, 1,168 Jonesses, 708 Browns and 467 Robinsons.

— Cardinal Jacobini, who died recently, was born at Faino, Italy, Sept. 14, 1813, and was elevated to the dignity of Cardinal March 12th, 1866. His death reduces the number of Cardinals nominated by Pope Pius IX. to twenty-six.

— The opinion of Mr. Henry George's friends of his hysterical articles in his organ, may be gauged by the fact that the Irish World, his staunchest supporter, was silent last week. It left Mr. George to himself. "Alas! Poor Yorick!"

— One of the New Zealand Bishoprics is to be elevated to the dignity of an Archiepiscopal See. The Catholics of Auckland have forwarded an address to the Vatican in support of the claims of that Diocese, where the first scenes of Catholicity were seen in the Colony.

— A recent remnal of the Diocese of Brooklyn, shows an aggregation of 158 priests, 90 churches, 39 chapels, 1 theological seminary, 2 colleges—St. John's and St. Francis—16 academies and 1 select school, 43 parochial schools, 16 Catholic asylums and 4 hospitals.

— The oldest person in France, perhaps in the world, is said to be a woman who lives in the village of Aubeville, in Perigord. She was born March 16, 1761, and is therefore 125 years old. The authentic record of her birth is to be found in the parish register of St. Just du Claix, in the Department of the Isere.

— Cardinal Gibbons will leave Baltimore next month to attend the College of Cardinals, which meets at Rome in March next. During his absence the affairs of the Archdiocese will be managed by Mgr. McGigan, the Cardinal's Vicar General. Cardinal Taschereau, of Quebec, will attend the same conclave, and the two Cardinals will receive the Red Hat from Pope Leo at the same time. They will be absent about two months.

— A recent cablegram from Rome states that the Pope has written a letter to Emperor William thanking him for the reference in his speech opening the Landtag to the increasing friendliness of the relations between Prussia and the Vatican. The Pope promises to cooperate with the Emperor in bringing the negotiations between Prussia and the Vatican to a successful termination.

— Catharine Cotter, in religion Mother Mt. Virenina, died at the Ursuline Academy, Cleveland, O., on the 12th inst. Her well-fortified by the last rites of Holy Church, passed from earth without a struggle. Mother St. Virenina will be long remembered as true Ursuline, self-sacrificing, and as a devoted, hard-working teacher. The deceased was in the 40th year of her age and the 19th of her profession.

— The new edition of the London Post Office Directory consists of 2,672 pages, plus 322 pages of advertisements, and contains 244,000 names. On each page are 16,000 letters, the number of letters in the "Commercial" alone making a total of 7,680,000, and the weight of the type used for the volume is about twenty-five tons. Here is a small but interesting table which shows the difference of arrangement. In the new directory there are : 2,120 Smiths, 1,168 Jonesses, 708 Browns and 467 Robinsons.

— Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman, Liberal Member of Parliament, and formerly Chief Secretary for Ireland, in a speech on Saturday said he believed that when Home Rule was granted to Ireland, Parnell would be the conservative leader in the Irish Parliament, supported by the Government and the landlords, while Parnell's present adjutants would lead the opposition. But this is only the opinion of one of England's defeated minions in Ireland.

— A telegram has been received from William R. Hibler, who is now at York Factory on his way to discover the long-sought-for Northwest Passage, in which he says of the Catholic Indians he found there: "The Indians are very poor and will not start for Churchill until they have received Holy Communion at Christmas, as they think bad luck will follow them all next year if they go without receiving it." What a lesson for Legions of people who call themselves the lightened and civilized Catholics! These

THE MONITOR.

Triumphant Exposure of Sectarian Falsehood.

We speak from a quarter of a century's experience in the pursuit of Protestant papers when we declare our firm conviction that no slander against the Catholic Church is too gross, too repugnant to common sense, or too improbable, even if the Protestant press to refuse to publish. Any item of such character, to leave mud marks upon the pure and seamless robe of the Catholic Church is paraded in the columns of the secular press with a degree of Satanic glee which fully demonstrates the diabolical spirit against the Church of God which rankles in the irreligious hearts of those persons preachers who preside over the columns of that portion of the sectarian press which circulates these slanders.

The Monitor has heretofore had occasion to caution the Congregational organ in this city against giving currency to anti-Catholic outrages which it should be assured was false. But it seems to be one of the impossible things in this world either to coax or to reason sectarian scribes into telling the truth concerning matters pertaining to the Catholic Church. They either can not or they will not abstain for more than three days at a time from insinuating some lie, slander against the Church, or inserting in their columns some gangrenous gossip which has been handed from the garbage of the Father of Lies.

The People of this city, in its sum of the whole contained in the Bulletin, will gain an a fair sample of the lovelike food upon which anti-Catholic fanaticism is fed by those false-teachers who, in the nursing bottle to the mouths of their benighted babes.

CONVERTED CATHOLIC CANON.

Rev. Joseph Leopold Delmonnacha, ex-R.C., Rector of Ballyvourney, Co. Cork, Ireland, Professor of Anglican, and Father Stepparter of the Monastery of Mount Melleray, Co. Waterford, Ireland, will be for monastery Feast of the Immaculate Conception, December 8th, and died 19th, aged 70 years. He was put in a cell in his own monastery, where he had resided for twenty years, by himself and water, his bed knocked down in a fit, his clothes stripped and tied to his neck. July 20, 1886, when by the order of his superior, he was released, and was taken to the Free Methodist Church. Most remarkable of all the experiences of this man. For a period of 40 years, with the exception of a power which great, he was a zealous Catholic priest, sang and fast, a most practical person, the height of his ambition was to be made Prior of the monastery, and to be elected to succeed the work of a Free Methodist. Yet, in the Catholic Church, he was a Catholic priest, and Father Francis will furnish sketches of his life, which expected, Amen. Let those who Wanted more converted priests and enrolled Free and Congregational Methodists, and revolutionists the Free Methodist Church on the side of the Holy Church.

The moment we concluded reading the extract of a sermon of a religious rubbish and falsehood combined, we determined to sift the matter to the bottom, so—so—and on how far it was possible for fanatical falsehood to go to the diabolical detraction of the Catholic Church, as well as in its efforts to lead the unsuspecting into the pit of hell.

Accordingly, on the 8th inst., we addressed a letter to one of the Dagonites of Gathers and Methodists, welcoming the show clapping, and asking him—not the fanatical the Mountain with the facts in the case in order that the outrageous calumny might be successfully exploded. We asked the pleasure of receiving a reply to our letter, and concluded with the following: Hurray earthquake in the office of the Devil. We heartily thank Father Joseph Leopold Delmonnacha for the light he has given us, the unchaptered worldly, the unchaptered worldly, the unchaptered who but gave currency to the Pecoka paragraph, or only allowed it to appear in the Bulletin, we proved successes that fanaticism latter upon fraud just as Protestantism rests upon the perjury of the Reformers.

METAWAS, 10, January 1887.

Editor of the Monitor.

Dear Sir: I have received your six letter dated January 8th, together with the newspaper cutting, "Converted Canon." Father Francis Joseph Delmonnacha, (R.C., D., M.A., B.C.L., he a priest at all, Amen man, I am tell you, I may probably be I feel it is a man, base to the, that is was Satan of Darkness, Hell, Amen, Hallelujah, I never anything to do with the Monastery at Metaness, or with one Prevface in Ireland. He is nothing but a Free Methodist, a most fraud and liar. Just think of "Sixty years' service in 40 months is a little laborious, considering exactly 14 mile." He was an head and water, (?) his bed knocked down in a fit, (?) his clothes pinned to (?) of his clothes (?). Poor "Father Frank" Cannon—they—they was could stand a man, the year, sir, this is a man to see. This well-fed, fraudulent fraud, was second here on neighborhood Methodists, Mr. Mr. Wilkins, County, Tipperary, etc., and whenever can Mr. Mr. Mr.

Farm and Home.

Causes of Diphtheria.

Diptheria has been unusually prevalent in Connecticut the past year, and the State Board of Health has been trying to learn the reason. There has been no general epidemic, but the disease, has been endemic in Stamford, New Canaan, Greenwich, Meriden and some other places. Not the only report that the Board has received that has the merit of any discovery respecting this disease has been a verbal and informal one from Meriden, which will be amplified with a formal and detailed statement. It will be quite likely to attract the attention of all physicians.

There have been a good many cases in Meriden and some of them could not be traced to any of the causes, such as unsanitaryness and filth presence, to which the disease is ascribed. It was noticed that not a single fatal case occurred in the town in any house where gas or gasoline were used. In every case the family in which it appeared were in the habit of using kerosene oil exclusively. Inquiries made elsewhere showed the same results. In one case in Meriden the lamps were removed and candles substituted for light, and there was immediate improvement in the patient. But by accident a night or two later a kerosene lamp was brought into the sick chamber and left burning all night. The patient next day grew worse and died.

A very careful inquiry based on this clue was made. It may be nothing more than a coincidence, but already it has been learned that persons stricken with diphtheria in the vicinity of kerosene refineries rarely recover. The State Board of Health is inclined to the opinion that a very important discovery may have been made in the study of this scourge.

Said to be a Cure for Diphtheria.

Rectified oil of turpentine (oleum terpethina rectificatum) is said by an Eastern exchange to be an infallible remedy for diphtheria. For children the dose is one teaspoonful in the morning and the same at evening.

Adults should take one tablespoonful. Afterward drink a little lukewarm milk to allay the burning in the throat.

For children the second dose can be mixed with milk, which will render it easier to take.

The result is really marvelous. The inflammation of the abnormal diphtheritic spots in the throat grows lighter at the edges, and in this way they gradually shrink until in twenty-four hours they disappear entirely, leaving no sign. A gargle of chlorate of potash may be used with advantage every two hours between the first dose and the second—one ounce chlorate of potash to forty ounces of distilled water. Marvelous cures are said to have been wrought by this simple remedy.

Cure for Heartburn.

For the disagreeable sensation known as heartburn, which so often accompanies indigestion, a salt spoonful of common salt, dissolved in half a wineglass of water, and drank, is an effective remedy as a dose of saleratus water, and a much pleasanter and safer one. Rubbing a bruise in sweet oil and then in spirits of turpentine will usually prevent the unsightly black and blue spots which not only hold tales, but betray. When there is an unpleasant odor about the feet, a small quantity of a weak solution of salicylic acid in the foot bath is a sure destroyer of the offence. Many of the worst extracts and bitters are compounded of an alcohol derived from wood, and this is said to be a peculiarly dangerous form of alcohol, capable of producing very serious brain troubles. It is all the pharmacopeia in the hydrate of chloral which is commonly used; cases are reported where two hundred grains have been taken in safety, and other cases where ten grains have proved fatal or of fourteen only a nervous escape from death by timely aid and effect; this drug should never be taken but with the advice and attendance of a physician. Iron articles will seldom rust if they have been cleansed from oil by hot lime-water, and dried. Collodion, spirits of turpentine, and the commonest olive oil are the best of all cures, and are valuable enough to apply to burns and scalds before a physician has arrive to do better, if better is to be done, and sweet oil and lime-water boiled up together make a cooling and healing ointment for them as good as any medicament known.

Keep a Scrap-Book.

I advise every person to keep a scrap-book. If you see too, or Bloom, or twenty years old, keep a scrap book. Let me tell you why and how:

Hundreds of things you see that you would like to keep; but if you lay them away you will never be able to find them when you want them. When I was a boy, I did not have sense enough to keep scrap books, I began some, but did not keep on long enough with them to make it worth my while. My memory was good, but I can now remember many things that I can't remember. What that means is this: I remember reading a beautiful piece of poetry of which two or three lines I can call up, but the whole I have forgotten. In some cases I do not know the name of the writer. I have seen many fine pictures in magazines and papers that would now be valuable and interesting. Some I cut out; but they are lost. Charming stories, wise remarks, prayers, directions for doing a great many useful and serious things, are also lost. So much do I feel are that I have lost that I would give fifty dollars a piece for the scrap books of each and every year that I might have made, from the time I was ten till I began to preserve things, only a few years ago. There is a gentleman who has kept scrap-books since he was eight years old. He is now forty, and has been arranging them in volumes, with index in the back of each one. You would hardly think that the author would be of much use of him. But they are. He often amuses himself as he reads them; for he sees how little he knew when he was little; but also finds a little that he still thinks valuable. Besides his children are much interested to see what their father has collected and pasted in his books. The older he grows the more use he finds for them. He can go to his books and in a few minutes get information about everything that has happened in his whole life—tell you about the Civil war, the Crimean war, the Italian war, the overthrow of Louis Napoleon, and many other things, just as they were published in the newspapers at the time the events happened. His scrap books also contain many funny things which provoke a smile and often a merry laugh, as he reads them to his family in the long winter evenings. The children would rather hear him read from his scrap-books than from the newest story. If you have no scrap-book, get one and put in it whatever pleases you. If you have one, and have not used it, take it up again. I assure you that you will be very glad of it afterwards.

Constipation.

In curing death and desolation
Take the great American nation.
One hundred thousand people are travelling in the shadow of death
If they take Dr. Henley's TARAXACA they never will regret,
For it has saved hundreds already from the sure of death.
What will TARAXACA do?
It will make the weak in the feeble class and so good as new.
Any person that has to work for his bread
Requires a clean stomach and a clear head.

Family Fun.

A Foiled Elopement.

It was the night before New Year's. Approaching a mansion, Aubrey Mugt calm grasped his mule by the ears and brought him under a second story window. Much silence was lying round about, mixed with darkness. Aubrey gave a whistle in a low voice. The window above went slowly up, and the owner of a head put it out.

Then came a voice like the music of the spheres when they grain together. "Aubrey, is that you . . . and the mule?"

"Darling Vinetta, it is us. Hurry up, and climb down this mule's ears, means behind, and we will soon cross the line into Indiana and matrimony. First, reach me down your little bundle. Don't make it large."

He dismounted and caught:

1. A hat, done up in a newspaper.
2. A bundle, in a shawl strap.
3. Another bundle, in a shawl strap.
4. A cord-bound hand basket.
5. A stuffed red hand-box.
6. A stuffed blue hand box.
7. A large bundle, rope bound.
8. A well-used carpet sack.
9. Another hand-box.
10. A valise—no value.

As one end of a trunk protruded out of the window above him, Aubrey jumped aside and exclaimed, "Heaven Vinetta, what are you going to do with all this household furniture?"

"Why, I want to take something along."

"Well, darling, we won't be gone more than one day; besides I did not bring a wagon and truck. How are we to freight these across the line? You need no baggage. I have only an extra paper collar."

"Aubrey, you are just beginning to get acquainted with woman. How can she travel without a little baggage? This is a long journey."

He had fallen across the pile in a swoon. On recovering, he said: "Precious, those bundles gave me much."

"Hat they must go. I mean,"

"It is unnecessarily impossible."

"Then, Aubrey, the procession can't start. I have only taken what I require."

"Well, I cannot transport em."

"Then we can't elope."

"Then our elopement and marriage are off."

"Clear off!" she cried, between a couple of sighs.

"Then so am I; farewell forever!" And the sound of mule heels broke the New Year's morn almost down the road.

Lay Will Swear Off.

Solomon Levy and Moses Schaumburg had a settlement of accounts last long since, and Levy paid a small balance which was due Levy had been taking too much wine, and paid Moses more money than was coming to him.

Next morning Schaumburg's clerk came to Levy's place of business and handed him a $5 bill.

"Vat for is dat?" asked Levy.

Mr. Schaumburg says that when you settled with him yesterday, you paid him $5 too much.

Levy clasped his hands and an expression of intense anguish came over his face as he said:

I reader how much too much I have paid, ran a man like Moses Schaumburg seeds me back five dollars. I suppozes I paid that subscribed a hundred dollar bill for a one cellar bill. Yes it was less den dot he would have sent me paid noddings. I was ruined man. Vine was a mockery. I schwears off ride dis day forever!"

A Fare-Box Episode.

In some of the St. Louis one-horse cars there are brass nickel carriers that run the length of the car. From any part of the car you can drop a nickel into one of these carriers and then watch it as it rolls along on its edge down the incline and finally goes rattling into the fare-box. I saw a fat western gentleman come into a car, and after putting his fare in the ordinary way he seized a new comer drop a nickel down this elevated railway.

The device aroused his utmost admiration. He at once changed a couple of dollars into five-cent pieces. Then he took his place at the door and started one dime six simultaneously down each side the car and offered to accept bets as to which would get into the fare box first. He kept this up until his $2 worth of coin was gone, and wound up saying: "Well, that's the darndest contraption I ever saw."

Unappreciated Music.

Miss Birdie McGinnis imagines that she is a talented performer on the piano, and whenever there is company at the McGinnis mansion, she delights all the visitors the only piece she knows, which is very lively and is entitled "Mozart's Funeral March to the Tomb."

On a recent occasion she had been getting her work in shortly for about half an hour, when her brother Holstetter, who had heard that funeral march a thousand times, heaved a deep-drawn sigh and remarked to his sister:

"Great Journal Birdie, how much longer will it take you to get to that cemetery?

Trying to Boycott Her.

"Mamma, please read to me."

"No, my child, I can't read to you; you have been naughty."

"Well, I'll get grandma to read to me instead."

"No, my child, I will not let your grandma read to you."

"Why, mamma, you're a regular Knight of Labor; you're trying to boycott me."

More than Eight Hours.

Prisoner—He said he didn't believe in the eight hour system, your Honor, and so I struck him.

Magistrate—You went eight hours, do you?

Prisoner—Yes, your Honor.

Magistrate—I can do better than that for you. I'll give you ninety days.

Choice Fruit.

An elderly woman entered a Broadway fruit store, and pointing to some ripe tomatoes, said:

"How much are tomatoes a quart?"

"They're forty cents apiece, ma'am," said the clerk. "I suppose there would be a dollar and a quarter a quart, that would be—"

"Never mind figgerin', said the elderly woman accusatorily, "you may keep them from spoilin'."

"Merry Christmas," said the clerk.

An Unpleasant Person.

"Isn't Robinson a disputatious sort of man?"

"I should say so. He is bellicopugnical."

She Drove.

"Oh, Clara," said Maud, "Charley took me sleigh riding last night! I had such lovely drive."

"What was the matter with Charley?"

"Stupid! He couldn't drive with his teeth, could he?"

A specialty: Linens, children, and cool dresses. Wear Threshill, 838; 1-2-6, 1101 Market st.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CANDLES FOR CANDLEMAS.

GOLDBERG, BOWEN & CO.

THE LEADING GROCERS.

428, 430 and 432 PINE STREET.

Have imported a FRESH Stock OF PURE BEES WAX HAND-MADE CANDLES for Candlemas and the Holydays, in which to procure ALTAR CANDLES that are PURE, CLEANER, and CHEAPER than any others in the Market. Send for our Price List. Telephone No. 1

Dr. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.

THE GREAT VERY TONIC—Unequaled as a remedy for General Debility, Sleeplessness, Indigestion, Neurasthenia, Rheumatism and Nervous Complaints.

Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

COAL OIL!

NOTICE.

Unscrupulous competitors having circulated the report that I had sold out my business, I hereby give notice to the public and my customers that such report is ABSOLUTELY FALSE. I have not sold out, neither have I any intention of so doing.

IRVINE GRAHAM,

Fifth, Channel and Berry Sts.

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.

608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.

Telephone No. 707.

JOHN F. LYONS,

NOTARY PUBLIC

—AND—

Commissioner of Deeds

For all the States and Territories.

OFFICE, - 522 Montgomery St.

Residence, - 1418 Polk St.

Sat. Free in California.

CATHOLIC CHURCH MUSIC

A NEW and MOST VALUABLE Catalogue

—OF—

CATHOLIC CHURCH MUSIC

Now Ready.

In anticipation of the Christmas Season, the undersigned, Lithographic Works and Music Publishers, have just issued and put on the market, a catalogue of CHURCH MUSIC, comprising a large number of select publications of Messrs. Cathedral Organists, Choir Directors and Singers, which should receive a copy of it. It is decidedly the most valuable and complete catalogue ever published in this country. Address

PETER J. MOLLOY,
Lithographic Works and Music Publisher,
No. 7 Bible House, cor. Astor Place,
NEW YORK.

A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St.
San Francisco.

WE WANT YOU! A few energetic men or women to represent us in your locality. Salary $75 per month and expenses, or allow a large commission on our goods to our representatives. Address, STANDARD SILVERWARE CO., BOSTON, MASS.

JOHN T. SULLIVAN,

—Manufacturer of CUSTOM MADE—

BOOTS & SHOES,

20 Fourth St., Pioneer Building.

FACTORY: N. E. Cor. Battery & Jackson

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Full line of Ladies', Misses' and Children's Fine Shoes.

Show this copy of the MONITOR to your Catholic friends and neighbors, and ask them to subscribe. Only $2 a year when paid in advance

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ONLY COMPLETE, CORRECT AND AUTHORIZED EDITION.

SADLIERS' Catholic Directory, Almanac and Ordo for 1887

Fifty-Sixth Annual Publication.

Now in press, and will be ready early in January, the Catholic Directory, Almanac and Ordo for 1887, containing a great variety of useful information, Lists of Archbishops, Bishops, Colleges, Convents and Schools, Religious Societies, Societies and Associations, Religious Orders, Ordinations, Statistics, Ecclesiastical Changes, Obituaries, Jubilees, Dioceses, Parishes, Missions, Pastors, Churches, Chapels, Stations, Population, Statistics of Catholic Charities, Hospitals, Asylums, Orphan Asylums, Homes, Schools, Colleges, Academies, Libraries, Societies, Institutions, Publications, Ordinations, Deaths, Events of the Year, Statistics of Population, Dioceses, Parishes, Missions, Pastors, Churches, Chapels, Stations, Schools, Colleges, Academies, Institutions, Societies

SOCIAL INEQUALITIES AND THEIR REMEDIES.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

of the nineteenth century, after theories innumerable had been promulgated, after education—which had been considered the panacea for all evils—had failed simply because it was a godless education, we find that the conservative here the voice of poverty and labor is the freedom are those in which it is stifled by force, hence we see that after all those plausible theories the great question finally appears to be resolving itself in a mere question of bitter force. Continuing, the speaker condemned the pride, the avarice and want of charity on the part of the rich, which made such discontent among the poor possible. Incidentally he referred to the doctrines inculcated by Ingersoll, and to the total failure of such theory as a good living, comfort and plenty, as lauded by him, to satisfy the poor man embittering

TO FEED AND CLOTHE A LARGE FAMILY ON 20 CENTS A DAY.

In suggesting the remedies for such social inequalities, Father Dowling claimed that education alone could not accomplish the desired results. Education without religion would prove ineffectual, because the heart would not respond to the dictates of the mind. Man, without God, was a creature of clay and a man of sorrows. Christianity offers the only effectual solution of this great problem. It teaches justice. It teaches that God intended this world only as a means of attaining perfection in the next, and with this view life was worth living. It shows that God intended that some persons in the world, who, by patience, may win their way to heaven, and others who, because of the high position given them, might succor the poor, and by their charities might likewise obtain eternal life. Poverty had not been made to serve as a background for wealth. The speaker saw no solution of these difficulties either in repression or in godless education.

CHRISTIANITY ALONE IS THE SOLUTION.

There was no hope in socialism or communism. Some of the means suggested in President Cleveland's message, in arbitration or legislation for strikes, he saw no hope in the general diffusion of even the principles of equality. He saw it only in that Christianity which redeemed nearly 1,000 years ago, and Christianity alone could remove the modern jaundice, now infesting the world. What society needed was more of the Gospel of Christ and less of the theories of modern communists.

GOING FOR THE MORMONS.

Passage of the Bill to Disfranchise Them and Seize their Property.

The Utah bill came up last week in Congress and after some hours debate was passed unanimously without a division, only eight members rising to demand the yeas and nays. The bill now goes to a conference committee, and unless the Senate wants to defeat this legislation it will become a law at this session.

Mr. Scott, of Pennsylvania, who opposed the bill, stated that he had voted for it on a final motion. The amendment, however, was not admitted.

And be it further enacted that this act shall not take effect till six months after its approval by the President.

And there shall be an election held in the several precincts of Utah Territory on the third Monday of March, 1887, at which the qualified electors of said Territory may elect from each legislative district double the number of members they are now entitled to elect of Councillors and Representatives to the legislative Assembly of said Territory. And the delegate to be elected to meet in Salt Lake City on the first Monday of April, 1887, at twelve o'clock noon, and shall form a Constitutional Convention.

And if said Convention shall form and adopt a constitution republican in form and which shall protect Polygamy in said State, and the same shall be ratified by a majority of the votes cast by qualified electors at an election to be held for that purpose at the several precincts of that Territory on the 3rd Monday of April, 1887, then the provisions of this act shall continue to remain inoperative until such amendatory act shall be presented in the usual manner to and acted upon by Congress.

The elections herein provided for to be held, noticed and returns thereof made in the manner now provided by law for the holding of elections for county and precinct officers in said Territory, and on the parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this section shall be and the same is inoperative until the expiration of said six months; and no person of the religion and tuidoctrine of and constitution as hereinbefore provided, then and provisions shall remain inoperative until such action on said constitution by Congress.

Rogues Set to Catch Rogues.

Two miserable creatures who were employed by the Law and Order Society and other professional hounds of the Rhode Island, to procure evidence against liquor dealers, have been exposed and driven from the State. They testified at various trials and secured many prosecutions, but it was found that thorough investigation into their operations in Newport and elsewhere disclosed the fact that they were nothing but a pair of the most corrupt blackmailers and blood suckers. All the strange machinery some decades of temperance principles employ to correct the misses which they claim have crept into our social system!

DR. PRENTICE.

So much has been said in the leading papers of Dr. Prentice that his name and memory are familiar to all the reading public. Some of his speeches and even an so quently his many healing physicians say that such things are impossible, but after obtaining the cures they are forced to admit that they are wonderful and true. His office is 324 Geary St. on daily inspection with patients. The following are a few of the many remarkable cures he has made.

DEAFNESS CURED IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Madame Emma Rodolfo, the sister of the late Baron H. Rosenau, has been deaf for some time; would not hear a watch when pressed hard against the ear. She has been under Dr. Prentice's treatment for only two weeks, and can now hear the tones of a piano from the rear. She attributes her cure to the skill of Dr. Prentice, the speedy and perfect results of Dr. Prentice's treatment. The doctor says the cause of the deafness was catarrh of the Eustachian tube. Madame will be pleased to answer any questions concerning her case at 24 Fourth St., San Francisco, Cal.

TULAR.

To whom it may concern:

After all other treatments have failed I have used Dr. Prentice's for piles and find it a perfect success. One dollar worth of medicine has done more for me than was treated by Dr. Flower, of Boston, and myself after the treatment of Dr. Prentice, and cured at home.

DR. J. C. ANDERSON,
St. Louis, Mo.

PILES.

David Keener, of Colorado City, Texas, suffered many years from piles, the size of the hand and burned out, and yet was not cured. Dr. Prentice cured him in one treatment, and removed the mass.

CROSS EYES.

I have been cross-eyed twenty-nine years. I went to see Dr. Prentice the week-ago. In two time then one minute he made my eyes perfectly straight, and they have remained so since. Myself and family are delighted with the result. I can also see much better than ever before.

L. PATTERSON,
Phaeonician, Bierbella Parlor, 14.

Offices, 626 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. Telephone 2016. Send stamp for Dr. Prentice's Journal.

FATHER McGLYNN'S CASE.

Public Explanation Made by Archbishop Corrigan.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Archbishop Corrigan to-night makes public a long written statement in regard to Dr. McGlynn's case. It goes back to 1882, when Dr. McGlynn is declared to have disobeyed the mandate of Rome against making political speeches in public, and when under correction he promised to refrain from further offending, but had to be called to account again in 1883 for his new public statement that the great question finally appears to be resolving itself in a mere question of bitter force. Continuing, the speaker condemned the pride, the avarice and want of charity on the part of the rich, which made such discontent among the poor possible. Incidentally he referred to the doctrines inculcated by Ingersoll, and to the total failure of such theory as a good living, comfort and plenty, as lauded by him, to satisfy the poor man embittering

TO FEED AND CLOTHE A LARGE FAMILY ON 20 CENTS A DAY.

In suggesting the remedies for such social inequalities, Father Dowling claimed that education alone could not accomplish the desired results. Education without religion would prove ineffectual, because the heart would not respond to the dictates of the mind. Man, without God, was a creature of clay and a man of sorrows. Christianity offers the only effectual solution of this great problem. It teaches justice. It teaches that God intended this world only as a means of attaining perfection in the next, and with this view life was worth living. It shows that God intended that some persons in the world, who, by patience, may win their way to heaven, and others who, because of the high position given them, might succor the poor, and by their charities might likewise obtain eternal life. Poverty had not been made to serve as a background for wealth. The speaker saw no solution of these difficulties either in repression or in godless education.

CHRISTIANITY ALONE IS THE SOLUTION.

There was no hope in socialism or communism. Some of the means suggested in President Cleveland's message, in arbitration or legislation for strikes, he saw no hope in the general diffusion of even the principles of equality. He saw it only in that Christianity which redeemed nearly 1,000 years ago, and Christianity alone could remove the modern jaundice, now infesting the world. What society needed was more of the Gospel of Christ and less of the theories of modern communists.

GOING FOR THE MORMONS.

Passage of the Bill to Disfranchise Them and Seize their Property.

The Utah bill came up last week in Congress and after some hours debate was passed unanimously without a division, only eight members rising to demand the yeas and nays. The bill now goes to a conference committee, and unless the Senate wants to defeat this legislation it will become a law at this session.

Mr. Scott, of Pennsylvania, who opposed the bill, stated that he had voted for it on a final motion. The amendment, however, was not admitted.

And be it further enacted that this act shall not take effect till six months after its approval by the President.

And there shall be an election held in the several precincts of Utah Territory on the third Monday of March, 1887, at which the qualified electors of said Territory may elect from each legislative district double the number of members they are now entitled to elect of Councillors and Representatives to the legislative Assembly of said Territory. And the delegate to be elected to meet in Salt Lake City on the first Monday of April, 1887, at twelve o'clock noon, and shall form a Constitutional Convention.

And if said Convention shall form and adopt a constitution republican in form and which shall protect Polygamy in said State, and the same shall be ratified by a majority of the votes cast by qualified electors at an election to be held for that purpose at the several precincts of that Territory on the 3rd Monday of April, 1887, then the provisions of this act shall continue to remain inoperative until such amendatory act shall be presented in the usual manner to and acted upon by Congress.

The elections herein provided for to be held, noticed and returns thereof made in the manner now provided by law for the holding of elections for county and precinct officers in said Territory, and on the parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this section shall be and the same is inoperative until the expiration of said six months; and no person of the religion and tuidoctrine of and constitution as hereinbefore provided, then and provisions shall remain inoperative until such action on said constitution by Congress.

Rogues Set to Catch Rogues.

Two miserable creatures who were employed by the Law and Order Society and other professional hounds of the Rhode Island, to procure evidence against liquor dealers, have been exposed and driven from the State. They testified at various trials and secured many prosecutions, but it was found that thorough investigation into their operations in Newport and elsewhere disclosed the fact that they were nothing but a pair of the most corrupt blackmailers and blood suckers. All the strange machinery some decades of temperance principles employ to correct the misses which they claim have crept into our social system!

DR. PRENTICE.

So much has been said in the leading papers of Dr. Prentice that his name and memory are familiar to all the reading public. Some of his speeches and even an so quently his many healing physicians say that such things are impossible, but after obtaining the cures they are forced to admit that they are wonderful and true. His office is 324 Geary St. on daily inspection with patients. The following are a few of the many remarkable cures he has made.

DEAFNESS CURED IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Madame Emma Rodolfo, the sister of the late Baron H. Rosenau, has been deaf for some time; would not hear a watch when pressed hard against the ear. She has been under Dr. Prentice's treatment for only two weeks, and can now hear the tones of a piano from the rear. She attributes her cure to the skill of Dr. Prentice, the speedy and perfect results of Dr. Prentice's treatment. The doctor says the cause of the deafness was catarrh of the Eustachian tube. Madame will be pleased to answer any questions concerning her case at 24 Fourth St., San Francisco, Cal.

TULAR.

To whom it may concern:

After all other treatments have failed I have used Dr. Prentice's for piles and find it a perfect success. One dollar worth of medicine has done more for me than was treated by Dr. Flower, of Boston, and myself after the treatment of Dr. Prentice, and cured at home.

DR. J. C. ANDERSON,
St. Louis, Mo.

PILES.

David Keener, of Colorado City, Texas, suffered many years from piles, the size of the hand and burned out, and yet was not cured. Dr. Prentice cured him in one treatment, and removed the mass.

CROSS EYES.

I have been cross-eyed twenty-nine years. I went to see Dr. Prentice the week-ago. In two time then one minute he made my eyes perfectly straight, and they have remained so since. Myself and family are delighted with the result. I can also see much better than ever before.

L. PATTERSON,
Phaeonician, Bierbella Parlor, 14.

Offices, 626 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. Telephone 2016. Send stamp for Dr. Prentice's Journal.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM— IRELAND.
IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ARMAGH.—John P. Hoine, Dublin, has given a reduction of 20 per cent. to all relets in Tullyroasil, Lenaghy, Mr. Erskine, Newry, 20 per cent. on his property in Camlough; Mr. McKown, 25 per cent., relatetated evicted tenants and taking possession of their holdings; Lord Lurgan, 20 per cent. for cash, the rents still not be paid.

CLARE.—Lord Finally got evicted bill decisions in Kilkishen, Ballinalacken, and Lissycasey, in the following amounts, and said that the landlord of the office in Jerrestagan, and requested a reduction of 25 per cent. on behalf of the tenantry. Capt. Douglas, however, refused to comply with the wishes of the tenants, and in consequence the tenants resolved to a month's rent until they get a substantial reduction.

CAVAN.—On Christmas Eve, a force of twenty-five men, under Head Constable Hill, under the command of A. M. Harper, Esq., R.M., proceeded to the townland of Tullyhaine, near Carbonalg, county Cavan, to eject three families who had been evicted from Mr. Hugh Finlay, Esq., J.P. Hugh Finlay, the landlord, was evicted last March, and the tenants had paid half-year's rent, £3 10s. per week, pending redemption, but they did not pay the rent due last March, and were in arrears. The tenants offered a reduction of 15 per cent. on the half-year's rent, and to pay the balance in six months, but they did not pay the rent. The crowbar men then pull, and the tenants received a month's notice.

LEITRIM.—On Dec. 29, an imposing demonstration of tenants on estates in the adjoining parishes of Kiltyclogher and Ballinamore, Leitrim, at which the members for North Leitrim, Messrs. Sheridan and Gallagher, were asked for a rent reduction of 20 per cent. The agents offered a reduction of 15 per cent. on the half-year's rent, and to pay the balance in six months, but they did not pay the rent. The crowbar men then pull, and the tenants received a month's notice.

LEITRIM.—On Dec. 29, an imposing demonstration of tenants on estates in the adjoining parishes of Kiltyclogher and Ballinamore, Leitrim, at which the members for North Leitrim, Messrs. Sheridan and Gallagher, were asked for a rent reduction of 20 per cent. The agents offered a reduction of 15 per cent. on the half-year's rent, and to pay the balance in six months, but they did not pay the rent. The crowbar men then pull, and the tenants received a month's notice.

LIMERICK.—The Earl of Kilmarney has offered an abatement of 25 per cent. to his tenants, and it is understood that it is stated have decided to accept that offer.

Mr. J. Ryan, of Knockfierna, near Galbally, has made a reduction of 25 per cent. to his tenants, and the tenants have decided to accept that offer.

LONGFORD.—On Dec. 27, Messrs. H. Wood and Joseph Wilson, of Longford, attended a meeting of the tenants on the Tirnaneil estate, who have been recently refused a reduction similar to their condition, and addressed an enthusiastic gathering of about 500 of them. Resolutions were unanimously adopted demanding a reduction of 60 per cent. for tenants of Griffith valuation and 50 per cent. for those having judicial leases.

LOUTH.—On Dec. 29, Mr. T. Wood, Dublin, and Mr. T. Sullivan, Dublin, and Mr. H. H. Townsend, Carlingford, County Tipperary, acting for Mr. Smith Barry, attended at Dundalk to receive the rents due on his County Louth estate. A deputation of the tenants waited on them and asked for a rent reduction of 20 per cent. The agents offered a reduction of 15 per cent. on the half-year's rent, and to take poor cases, which amounted to about 25 per cent. on the half-year's rent. The crowbar men then pull, and the tenants received a month's notice.

LUTHERN.—On Dec. 29, an imposing demonstration of tenants on estates in the adjoining parishes of Kiltyclogher and Ballinamore, Leitrim, at which the members for North Leitrim, Messrs. Sheridan and Gallagher, were asked for a rent reduction of 20 per cent. The agents offered a reduction of 15 per cent. on the half-year's rent, and to take poor cases, which amounted to about 25 per cent. on the half-year's rent. The crowbar men then pull, and the tenants received a month's notice.

MAYO.—A meeting of the priests of Lord Dillon's estate was held at the presbytery, Ballyhaunis, on Christmas Day, to hear the resolutions, proposed by the Very Rev. P. Lavelle, P.P., Ballyhaunis, and Rev. J. Lyons, C.C., Ballyhaunis, and also to hear the reasonable request of his tenantry for a reduction of rent, which they had been informed with entire approval their determination to stand by their tenantry in their fight for permanent possession. 2. That we have held from the outset of the struggle in the case objected for this purpose is just and justifiable, and we believe that the tenants have not by change our letter. 1. That seemingly they further suggestion of a meeting of their landlords.

MONAGHAN.—Mr. Thomas Moore, of Dublin, has given a reduction of 25 per cent. on Ballymacon, an abatement of 20 per cent. His agent, Mr. Lyons, has also granted a reduction. Mr. John Hood, Castlemore, Ballybay, has given an abatement of 25 per cent. on Rockfield, and 20 per cent. on rents fixed a few years ago by Sir Stafford Cassell at Griffith valuation.

TIPPERARY.—On Dec. 31, Michael Ahern, Ashbury, Cashel, and Mr. Ryan, Ballyrichard, Miss Ryan, from the parish of Thurles, received a reduction of 25 per cent. on their holdings, on Sir Stafford Cassell's estate.

TUAM.—On Dec. 23, Deputy Sub-Sheriff Quinn, accompanied by bailiffs and the police, proceeded to the Ballyhaunis Station, Castlebar, to eject Patrick Joyce, a tenant holding 17 acres of land, for an arrear of four years' rent. Mr. Hopkins Bell, agent to Colonel Maunsell Waddy, of Ballyhaunis, Castlebar, offered to take the land in exchange for the tenant which he had held for the last four years, and to give the tenant a month's rent for the years rent. The tenant and he would accept it.

WATERFORD.—Rev. John Hearty, P.P., of Tinck and Clonea, died at his residence, on Christmas Day, after a long illness, at the age of 70 years. Deceased was a native of Kilmeaden, County Waterford, and was ordained in the year 1840. He was for many years Chairman of the Board of Guardians, and was a very popular man. He was a very strong supporter of the Parnell movement, and their determination to assist nothing less than Home Rule in solution of the Irish question, were passed with

WEXFORD.—On Christmas Eve the week of eviction was carried out in Wexford, and in the Bank Winters, Mr. Lyons, Ballinaclash, flung out the roofing, and to use two great old women sitting outside the door of their cabin which is three, but from which they have been in the place for 40 years, and the place was demolished and burned. Mr. Lyons, entitled to realize the fact of the eviction

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

THE GOLDEN GATE.

I stood beside the Golden Gate,
And gazed on the glistening waves
That rushed to kiss the Western sea,
Low dropped o'er their mystic caves.

A mist of tears bedimmed my eyes,
Renewing the pain in my heart;
I saw, through the misty vapor, the Golden Gate and wished—fond illusion depart.

Have rushed with hopeful sanguine,
As rush the voluptuous waves,
To find in the Golden Gate's embrace
Fruition that vanity craves.

Is sager judgment I laid
My life at the radiant altars,
Nor trembled when the golden bars
Shut out all the love that was mine.

The glittering fetters round me cast,
Imprisoning me closer each day,
And from the burning fatal breath
I turn sick heartsick away.

I turn, as turns a soul that's lost,
From horrible vicious aisles,
To quench in tears of force despair
The fires that scathed my soul.

I gazed beyond the Golden Gate,
Far o'er the glistening sea,
While Ocean's tumult I heard
Of or hopes that are shattered for me.

M. P.

WHAT IS LIFE?

What is life? I asked the babe,
And she looked it an hour
Then smiling sweetly, she made reply
Why life is one happy summer day.

What is life? I asked the youth,
And he smiled as the sun smiles at truth;
Why life is an awfully jolly, you know,
I hope it will ever continue so so.

What is life? I asked the young girl;
Why life is one merry, merry while!
Of pleasure and gayety she said;
And she laughed and shook her pretty head.

What is life? I asked the old man,
And he pointed above with a feeble hand—
A preparation for a home up there,
Where the children have always their Father's care.

And what also is life, but an alay bubble!
Or a mixture of joy and sweet often of trouble!
O, may we so live, that when death draws near,
We may have no regrets of the life we spent here.

LORAINE.

THE IRISH SCHOOLHOUSE.

Upon the rugged ladder range whose pinnacle is Fame,
How often have ambition pons deep graven thereon!
The game of glory Cambridge won o'er all the world around,
And rulers in the realms of thought look back with pride to Trinity.
Tis no such Alma Mater can my Muse in triumph raise
Its Irish valor in contains of gratitude and praise.
Yet still I hold in stories of gold, and until death the Irish school.
When in the balmy morning, rosing down the Tuscarora in purple, ivy-framed, our early hands We left us chasm for regard coats, our blunder But bubbled our with laughter dear old master.
Tis we be beside the home upon each an swaddling spring and
Of learning's fearful mysteries and academic lore.
Na mount yielded empire half so potent as life call
In that old schoolhouse, thatched with straw, that lay behind the hill.

Perhaps—and yet tis hard to think—our boast
Of a mission of joy and sweet often of trouble!
O, may we so live, that when death draws near, We may have no regrets of the life we spent here.

LORAINE.

THE IRISH SCHOOLHOUSE.

Upon the rugged ladder range whose pinnacle is Fame,
How often have ambition pons deep graven thereon!
The game of glory Cambridge won o'er all the world around,
And rulers in the realms of thought look back with pride to Trinity.
Tis no such Alma Mater can my Muse in triumph raise
Its Irish valor in contains of gratitude and praise.
Yet still I hold in stories of gold, and until death the Irish school.
When in the balmy morning, rosing down the Tuscarora in purple, ivy-framed, our early hands We left us chasm for regard coats, our blunder
Perhaps—and yet tis hard to think—our boast
Of a mission of joy and sweet often of trouble!
O, may we so live, that when death draws near, We may have no regrets of the life we spent here.

LORAINE.

Literary Miscellany.

The Great Strike at Errickdale.

A STORY OF RICH AND POOR.

CHAPTER II.

Bridget walked the long walk home from Errickdale-strong and well to meet the world on her own-to find The children had learned to understand her pity for them. They welcomed her return with cries for food; she gave them what she could, and lay down supperless herself that night to rest. After that, each day brought her a full meal, from the great house, but she never tasted of it; there were those who needed it more, she said

There, on her way to a poor family with a basket of the afternoon, the smell of the wall-cooked food produced such a violent craving that it seemed to her for a moment that she should go mad. With a great effort she controlled herself and stood still. "Christ," she prayed, "have mercy! Shall I eat therefore while the children starve!"

The craving did not cease, but strength to resist it came. She entered the wretched room to which she was bound, and fed the hungry children. The poor woman, who had not tasted food for a long time, groaned and a boon already well cooked. How sweetly they tasted! And while she feasted on them a woman crawled feebly in. "I'm famed hungry," she said; "ud scarcely Bridget gave her all she had.

Twice afterward she felt that horrible craving, and then it ceased. Her father saw that she ate little, but never guessed how little it really was; he saw that she grew pinched and pale, but fancied it was grief alone that caused it. He did not know, and no one knew, that, with what Errickdale counted "plenty" at her command, Bridget was living like the poorest. The thirst for self-sacrifice, the thing of a supernatural love, consumed her. "He did it," she used to say to herself. "He was poor for us, and He died for us." From her resting by one her possessions departed; she carried them to those who, in their thoughtlessness, had them more, or she disposed of them for their use. Scarcely the attic room, which no one but herself ever entered, held literally nothing but the comfort in the sail. Levying her weary limbs on the hard floor at night, she thought of the land even where on her Lord had died. "Mine is an easier bed than His," she said, and smiled in the darkness. "May He make me worthier to share His blessed pains."

But the nights were few that she spent so even a couch as this. There was sickness in Errickdale as well as want, and Bridget was nurse, and doctor, and servant, and watcher beside the dead. Not in her princess life at Mahon, Eleanora Rossetti counted the same long hours blithely, eager for her festival to come.

The 20th of January: Stars overhead, and snow underfoot, and a biting frost to make Errickdale as its forings washed. Winter without, and want and woe perhaps, but who needed to think of that? In the old mansion-sumptuous with its engaging, tinsel and lemon trees mingled their golden fruits with spicy flowers in the corridors and halls and up and down the winding stairs. Lamps burned some faintly, scented oil, that filled the warm air with a subtle, delicious odor; and lamps and tall wax tapers flooded the room with golden, but unblinking light. Fountains played among beds of rare ferns and exotics; and magnificent flowers, set in reckless confusion upon the floor, to be trodden upon, and yield their perfume to the air unheeded. And in doubtful and hoarse tones, the pipes, and all the gay festival gayer of a king's court of modern time, footsteps of servants waited upon Eleanora's word.

The winter twilight fell soon over Errickdale, in its hapless gathering, and Eleanora was galloping home from Tual on his fleetest horse, when the creature stood suddenly, then stopped, trembling all over.

Woman stood in the path, gloaring strangely to see through the gloom. Fearless John Rossetti started at the unexpected sight.

"What do you want of me?" he asked.

"Food," the woman answered, in a voice that thrilled him with unaccountable awe—from some far-off land it seemed to come—"food, food, food! Give me food and you."

"Your people die of want, and of disease, and of misery," said he. "In the name of God, almighty, and while you have time, repent and help them.

Then the fearless John Rossetti spurred the horse and fled.

"While I have time!" he said. "I have no time to-night, I warrant you—I have better reason than this for your begging, Bridget O'Rourke."

He struck the spur into his horse, but, though it quivered all over again, it would not move an inch. The woman lifted her hands to heaven. "God, my God! I have done all I can," she said. "I leave it now with Thee." And so she vanished.

In Errick Hall Eleanora was speaking to a servant. "Make haste," she said. "I have almost forgotten it. Make haste and bring Bridget O'Rourke to me. I promised she should see it all."

The servant hurried obediently to John O'Rourke's cottage. He comer was crouching silently over the fire. "Where's my girl?" he said. "Miss Eleanora wants her to see the sights. It's little she got Bridget, now, poor thing. Bridget! Bridget!"

But though he called lustily, no one answered. He climbed the stairs to the attic, and still no reply.

"Give me the light, lad," he cried, with a dull foreboding at his heart, and to and the servant entered the room together.

She was not there. What was more, everything was gone—literally everything except the cross of Him who gave His all, that we might, for our sake.

"I fear I fear," this John said, trembling, and he took the crucifix down and carried it with him for defence against invisible foes whom he dreaded far more than anything he could see.

"We will go and look for her, O'Rourke," the servant said. "I must tell her for Miss Eleanora, if not for her own sake."

In the kitchen supper was on the table, and the fire crackled on the hearth. In the living father had been waiting long for her. Where was the child?

They called the question at every tenement and every room. The people joined them in the search for for whom they all held dear. On the outskirts of the place, and where the road stretched out without another sign of habitation for five miles to Tual, was a lonely hovel.

"She's there—one woman said to another. "Unless she's there. Night's known, and it's little else they have. She's there, carsing it I say."

Yet they were not crowned by sin, to open it. The whole throng seemed to feel that vague foreboding which John O'Rourke had felt, those who were able to feel that the narrow room entered it timidly. What was it that they dreaded?

In the grand saloon of Errick mansion, darked like a regal hall, Eleanora Rossetti's daughter, gloried gorgeously like the French queen in the famous painting, which is Mahon's pride received her courtiers and the long table glared the gay dance-music, and the light feet of the dancers glided over the floor.

In the present lot of Errickdale John O'Rourke's daughter received her courtiers, lies in regal state.

It was dark and silent there before the torches were brought in. By their flaring light the people saw the poor mother on a bed of rags and straw.

"Be still as you can," she said softly. "Let her, O Brother! The girl gets been so me this four hours. Once my babes died, thank God! She had it out there all decent."

And then, in the dim light, they saw the outline of a tiny form beside the bed, and bring the room and adornment of Bridget's court.

"She heard a horse go trampling by, and went to meet it," the woman said. "When she came back, says she—'Tess master' Then she fell, and she took it to still it, and lay down so it, and, ever since, they've been here still, and I hope she's slept and lay get her where she's, God bless her!"

Sleeping on the hard floor, but she does not feel it. They bring the clothes near her; she does not heed the glare, though the light from her bosom startled wake and weep. She does not hear it weep. In truth, this spirit has forgotten her wise in a dreamless slumber, and truly tired has blown of long with toilsome waiting her courters kneel before her in the court of Death, the king.

There is food on the table which her own hands had placed there; there is fire on the hearth which her own hands kindled. She who has there has not died of cold or hunger, she has died of a broken heart.

And the violin and flute and harp rang merrily, and the trumpet and drum lauds a merry measure in the ballroom where the guests are all a-tiptoe and make merry. The great doors were thrown open, and an long pomp hall, where the guests passed into the banqueting-hall, where, at the head of a long table sat the magnificent tables, and Eleanora's place was empty, and there, in the place of honor, sat a living picture was a hall of Grand Monsoque. "John Rossetti has surpassed himself," his guests said with admiring wonder. In a jasmine of the mine Eleanora's silvery laugh was heard; and looked with pride at her father, and spoke aloud so that all might hear "Yes, there never was such a father as mine. His faith, his love, his charity, are beyond my highest expectations."

Rosetta or Errickdale?

From above their heads the strange voice came. Far up in the embrasure of a window, a man with a lighted torch was stand ing. John O'Rourke's eyes met John Rossetti's, and commanded there, and held them fast.

"Go, go!" he—lame, he said. "Woman, you said, if you were in yourself, tor of 'evil, thirsty danger and death all round you. I warn you fately. Man Eleanora, take my Bridget come to me her feast, and we will go home. Come, Bridget, all of you for we've fire to lack us." And he held his torch dangerously near the curtains. Errickdale half and Errickdale man were in his power.

Coming through the hall they heard the stole, stowly, on wand tramp of an orderly and determined crowd, the tones of a wild Irish dirge heralded their coming. Two and twenty men, armed with pikes, and clubs, marched in.

Men in rags, there lips pale as chalk and grim, a rude and flaring torch borne on a long pole, a hatred, haggard women with selfish eyes and sunken cheeks, and, in the midst of them, those who are walking lonely or mourning in a way, with their dead in their arms, while the men shrinkly sung that dirge for, departed souls, and all the terrible procession never cease! Brows and clamor would be easier to bear than that long dirge-bearer, as two and two the people filed around the loaded tables and poly stirred guests.

Rising in consternation at the first entrance of these new comers, throughout their company, and silently stirred guests, one hand pressed upon her heart as if to quell its rapid fluttering. Beautiful, and, possibly despite her pallid cheeks, she stood there, yet two and two the people slowly passing the hall, and slowly passed before her dais, and made a long line of strange. It was another queen, who held them in her sway.

The twilight fell soon over Errickdale, in its hapless gathering, and Eleanora was galloping home from Tual on his fleetest horse, when the creature stood suddenly, then stopped, trembling all over.

Woman stood in the path, gloaring strangely to see through the gloom. Fearless John Rossetti started at the unexpected sight.

"What do you want of me?" he asked.

"Food," the woman answered, in a voice that thrilled him with unaccountable awe—from some far-off land it seemed to come—"food, food, food! Give me food and you."

"Your people die of want, and of disease, and of misery," said he. "In the name of God, almighty, and while you have time, repent and help them.

Then the fearless John Rossetti spurred the horse and fled.

"While I have time!" he said. "I have no time to-night, I warrant you—I have better reason than this for your begging, Bridget O'Rourke."

He struck the spur into his horse, but, though it quivered all over again, it would not move an inch. The woman lifted her hands to heaven. "God, my God! I have done all I can," she said. "I leave it now with Thee." And so she vanished.

In Errick Hall Eleanora was speaking to a servant. "Make haste," she said. "I have almost forgotten it. Make haste and bring Bridget O'Rourke to me. I promised she should see it all."

The servant hurried obediently to John O'Rourke's cottage. He comer was crouching silently over the fire. "Where's my girl?" he said. "Miss Eleanora wants her to see the sights. It's little she got Bridget, now, poor thing. Bridget! Bridget!"

But though he called lustily, no one answered. He climbed the stairs to the attic, and still no reply.

"Give me the light, lad," he cried, with a dull foreboding at his heart, and to and the servant entered the room together.

She was not there. What was more, everything was gone—literally everything except the cross of Him who gave His all, that we might, for our sake.

"I fear I fear," this John said, trembling, and he took the crucifix down and carried it with him for defence against invisible foes whom he dreaded far more than anything he could see.

"We will go and look for her, O'Rourke," the servant said. "I must tell her for Miss Eleanora, if not for her own sake."

In the kitchen supper was on the table, and the fire crackled on the hearth. In the living father had been waiting long for her. Where was the child?

They called the question at every tenement and every room. The people joined them in the search for for whom they all held dear. On the outskirts of the place, and where the road stretched out without another sign of habitation for five miles to Tual, was a lonely hovel.

"She's there—one woman said to another. "Unless she's there. Night's known, and it's little else they have. She's there, carsing it I say."

Yet they were not crowned by sin, to open it. The whole throng seemed to feel that vague foreboding which John O'Rourke had felt, those who were able to feel that the narrow room entered timidly. What was it that they dreaded?

In the grand saloon of Errick mansion, darked like a regal hall, Eleanora Rossetti's daughter, gloried gorgeously like the French queen in the famous painting, which is Mahon's pride received her courtiers and the long table glared the gay dance-music, and the light feet of the dancers glided over the floor.

In the present lot of Errickdale John O'Rourke's daughter received her courtiers, lies in regal state.

It was dark and silent there before the torches were brought in. By their flaring light the people saw the poor mother on a bed of rags and straw.

"Be still as you can," she said softly. "Let her, O Brother! The girl gets been so me this four hours. Once my babes died, thank God! She had it out there all decent."

And then, in the dim light, they saw the outline of a tiny form beside the bed, and bring the room and adornment of Bridget's court.

"She heard a horse go trampling by, and went to meet it," the woman said. "When she came back, says she—'Tess master' Then she fell, and she took it to still it, and lay down so it, and, ever since, they've been here still, and I hope she's slept and lay get her where she's, God bless her!"

Sleeping on the hard floor, but she does not feel it. They bring the clothes near her; she does not heed the glare, though the light from her bosom startled wake and weep. She does not hear it weep. In truth, this spirit has forgotten her wise in a dreamless slumber, and truly tired has blown of long with toilsome waiting her courters kneel before her in the court of Death, the king.

There is food on the table which her own hands had placed there; there is fire on the hearth which her own hands kindled. She who has there has not died of cold or hunger, she has died of a broken heart.

And the violin and flute and harp rang merrily, and the trumpet and drum lauds a merry measure in the ballroom where the guests are all a-tiptoe and make merry. The great doors were thrown open, and an long pomp hall, where the guests passed into the banqueting-hall, where, at the head of a long table sat the magnificent tables, and Eleanora's place was empty, and there, in the place of honor, sat a living picture was a hall of Grand Monsoque. "John Rossetti has surpassed himself," his guests said with admiring wonder. In a jasmine of the mine Eleanora's silvery laugh was heard; and looked with pride at her father, and spoke aloud so that all might hear "Yes, there never was such a father as mine. His faith, his love, his charity, are beyond my highest expectations."

Rosetta or Errickdale?

From above their heads the strange voice came. Far up in the embrasure of a window, a man with a lighted torch was standing. John O'Rourke's eyes met John Rossetti's, and commanded there, and held them fast.

"Go, go!" he—lame, he said. "Woman, you said, if you were in yourself, tor of 'evil, thirsty danger and death all round you. I warn you fately. Man Eleanora, take my Bridget come to me her feast, and we will go home. Come, Bridget, all of you for we've fire to lack us." And he held his torch dangerously near the curtains. Errickdale half and Errickdale man were in his power.

Coming through the hall they heard the stole, stowly, on wand tramp of an orderly and determined crowd, the tones of a wild Irish dirge heralded their coming. Two and twenty men, armed with pikes, and clubs, marched in.

Men in rags, there lips pale as chalk and grim, a rude and flaring torch borne on a long pole, a hatred, haggard women with selfish eyes and sunken cheeks, and, in the midst of them, those who are walking lonely or mourning in a way, with their dead in their arms, while the men shrinkly sung that dirge for, departed souls, and all the terrible procession never cease! Brows and clamor would be easier to bear than that long dirge-bearer, as two and two the people filed around the loaded tables and poly stirred guests.

Rising in consternation at the first entrance of these new comers, throughout their company, and silently stirred guests, one hand pressed upon her heart as if to quell its rapid fluttering. Beautiful, and, possibly despite her pallid cheeks, she stood there, yet two and two the people slowly passing the hall, and slowly passed before her dais, and made a long line of strange. It was another queen, who held them in her sway.

The twilight fell soon over Errickdale, in its hapless gathering, and Eleanora was galloping home from Tual on his fleetest horse, when the creature stood suddenly, then stopped, trembling all over.

Woman stood in the path, gloaring strangely to see through the gloom. Fearless John Rossetti started at the unexpected sight.

"What do you want of me?" he asked.

"Food," the woman answered, in a voice that thrilled him with unaccountable awe—from some far-off land it seemed to come—"food, food, food! Give me food and you."

"Your people die of want, and of disease, and of misery," said he. "In the name of God, almighty, and while you have time, repent and help them.

Then the fearless John Rossetti spurred the horse and fled.

"While I have time!" he said. "I have no time to-night, I warrant you—I have better reason than this for your begging, Bridget O'Rourke."

He struck the spur into his horse, but, though it quivered all over again, it would not move an inch. The woman lifted her hands to heaven. "God, my God! I have done all I can," she said. "I leave it now with Thee." And so she vanished.

In Errick Hall Eleanora was speaking to a servant. "Make haste," she said. "I have almost forgotten it. Make haste and bring Bridget O'Rourke to me. I promised she should see it all."

The servant hurried obediently to John O'Rourke's cottage. He comer was crouching silently over the fire. "Where's my girl?" he said. "Miss Eleanora wants her to see the sights. It's little she got Bridget, now, poor thing. Bridget! Bridget!"

But though he called lustily, no one answered. He climbed the stairs to the attic, and still no reply.

"Give me the light, lad," he cried, with a dull foreboding at his heart, and to and the servant entered the room together.

She was not there. What was more, everything was gone—literally everything except the cross of Him who gave His all, that we might, for our sake.

"I fear I fear," this John said, trembling, and he took the crucifix down and carried it with him for defence against invisible foes whom he dreaded far more than anything he could see.

"We will go and look for her, O'Rourke," the servant said. "I must tell her for Miss Eleanora, if not for her own sake."

In the kitchen supper was on the table, and the fire crackled on the hearth. In the living father had been waiting long for her. Where was the child?

They called the question at every tenement and every room. The people joined them in the search for for whom they all held dear. On the outskirts of the place, and where the road stretched out without another sign of habitation for five miles to Tual, was a lonely hovel.

"She's there—one woman said to another. "Unless she's there. Night's known, and it's little else they have. She's there, carsing it I say."

Yet they were not crowned by sin, to open it. The whole throng seemed to feel that vague foreboding which John O'Rourke had felt, those who were able to feel that the narrow room entered timidly. What was it that they dreaded?

In the grand saloon of Errick mansion, darked like a regal hall, Eleanora Rossetti's daughter, gloried gorgeously like the French queen in the famous painting, which is Mahon's pride received her courtiers and the long table glared the gay dance-music, and the light feet of the dancers glided over the floor.

In the present lot of Errickdale John O'Rourke's daughter received her courtiers, lies in regal state.

It was dark and silent there before the torches were brought in. By their flaring light the people saw the poor mother on a

GEN. SHERMAN'S SON.

He Does Not Regret His Action, but Looks Forward With Pleasure to His Ordination.

"I am Mr. Sherman. He spoke at all in the reception room of the Roman church College on Jefferson avenue yesterday. He came hence a month ago, say a correspondence of the Chicago Times, to study theology. He is an institution around, and, in the meantime, he is a member of the Father, General Sherman's son. Mr. Sherman is a slightly built young man, with a hundred-or-still grayer moustaches and a pleasant face. He is a good talker, and has influence with people. He is a good talker, and has influence with people. He is a good talker, and has influence with people

THE MONITOR.

PACIFIC ERA OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1887

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

The offices of the MONITOR are now located at

536 KEARNY STREET,

(2nd-floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—Cardinals Gibbons and Taschereau have gone to Rome to attend the next Papal Consistory and to receive the insignia of their high ecclesiastical positions from Pope Leo XIII. Both Cardinals sailed by the steamship La Bourgogne, which left New York for Havre on last Saturday, and we hope every reader of the MONITOR will pray that God may guard them during their voyage, and that they may speedily and safely return to preside over their respective flocks in these Dioceses and in Canada.

—One of the most pleasing tributes ever paid to the MONITOR comes all the way from Ireland, from whence a distinguished Ecclesiastic sends his annual subscription and adds this pleasing remarks: "I herewith enclose £1, another year's subscription to your excellent and well-edited journal. I never get such good value in newspaper reading for the same amount." The friends of the MONITOR will feel pleased at this flattering testimonial of its merits, even in a land where some of the best periodical literature of the world circulates.

—A celebrated Catholic—Mr. Thomas Weld-Blundell, recently died in England. The deceased was celebrated for his great charity and his good works. Three of his sons had the happiness to become members of the Benedictine Order, and as a thank-offering to Almighty God for this rare blessing, he created three Catholic churches entirely out of his own private means! What an example of Catholic munificence for the Catholic millionaires of California! We hope at least one of them will emulate Mr. Weld-Blundell's laudable generosity and devote a portion at least of their vast wealth to the honor of that God who lent it to them to do good with in this world.

—Another antagonist to the Public School system of secularized education has arisen in this city in the person of Rev. Joseph Rowall, who, during the discussion of the Congregational Club on Monday week, stated that much of the crime, immorality and vice which is rampant among the youth of this city, was due to the Public Schools. "Many of the teachers," said Dr. Rowall, "are utterly unfit for their positions. They are untrained and practice frauds on the children. Books of the most infamous character are scattered in school hours, not only among boys, but girls, even in the High School." We print these startling words for the special benefit of Catholic parents who have children attending the Public Schools, in they may not wonder by-and-by why their children grow up disobedient, vicious and irreligious—a curse instead of a blessing to their parents, and a blighting disgrace to every relative whom name they bear.

No Misrepresentation in the Monitor.

Brother McCrory says in last week's Advocate that the MONITOR misrepresented his ideas in our criticism on his "Horrible Conceitedness" article. In this, however, Brother McCrory is wrong. We gave his language as he wrote it, hence his effort to cram fish now out of his former attitude is only another proof of that mendacity for which Methodist preachers are proverbial.

Brother McCrory also says he never insulted Archbishop Riordan. Here again the editor of the Advocate falsifies his own record. Here is his own language:

"If the Archbishop and his sycophants mean to assert that all non-Catholic morals, as we are living in "heathen surroundings," are guilty of an atrocity unless approached by ordinary criminals."

The logical, blunted anti-Catholic feelings of a fanatical Methodist preacher, such language may seem "good enough" even for the Prelate of the Catholic Church, but no gentleman, no matter what his religious antipathy to Catholic dogma might be, would write such a scurrilous insinuation without degrading himself to the lowest level of a brawling blackguard. Brother McCrory lacks in his heart and soul that the Pastoral Letter in question did not allude to Protestants, yet his virulence prompted him to resort to the vile insinuation and the vile allusion to "ordinary criminals" in connection with the dearly beloved and highly-revered Prelates who preside over this Ecclesiastical Province, and whose characters are as far above their assailant as Washington manhood as the archangels are above the archlemons.

The MONITOR misrepresents no man. We give the correct text in each case where it is used by any adversary of the Church whose calumnies we feel called upon to criticise, and if Brother McCrory misrepresents his own real sentiments by the language he disguises them in when printed in the Advocate, he thus adds the crime of double-faced duplicity to his other bad faults in the display of his bigotry!

Brother McCrory also charges the MONITOR with misrepresenting "innocent Protestants" like Luther, Luther and Leyden. This also is untrue. We make no statement concerning the pride, conceitedness, or morals of people of any Protestant sect, nor do we pretend to be the arbiter of political preferment. His memory is a sieve to the end in view, and he utilizes it. The question of what he is worth seems a more important query than what does he know. This is more generally the case in the Western and Middle states than in the South and New England.

—A cablegram from Rome states that Rev. Matthew Hankey, Rector of St. James' Church, Harrison avenue, Boston, has been selected by the Holy Father to fill the vacancy in the Diocese of Providence, Rhode Island, caused by the death of Right Rev. Thomas F. Hendricken, last June.

Some Idle Protestant Prediction.

We notice with some measure of amusement that many sectarian papers seem to build great hopes of a schism in the Catholic church in consequence of the continuance of Father McGlynn in refusing to go to Rome. Why, bless their unsophisticated souls, a fly speck on the Moon would be of about as much of an impulsement to the dispersion of the rays of that orb of light, as the case of Dr. McGlynn is in importance as a schismatic maker in the Catholic church. The church believes with the inspired writer St. Matthew, that "Scandals must come," but in her heart of hearts she pities the unfortunate Catholic—be he priest or layman—by whom scandals come!

Persons who are familiar with the history of the Church in this country, know that even as early as a century ago the Jesuits of the first Archbishop—Most Rev. John Carroll—were constantly regarded by symptoms of schism far more threatening and powerful than the present excitement in St. Stephen's parish, New York. At the very outset of his ecclesiastical career in America, Bishop Carroll had to cease from missionary work in order to devote himself to writing a long and admirable defense of the Churchmen against an enemy who was previously a member of his own Order, but who rebelled against the Church and then scattered from the faith which for many years he had helped to propagate. In New York, Dr. Carroll met with bitter opposition from a coterie of disaffected members of his flock, who were followers of a suspended priest, who, with insinuating guided tongue, was guilty of such violence as to forcibly compel Dr. Carroll to leave the church, whither he had gone to instruct the people in their duty. In Boston and Philadelphia, also, Dr. Carroll's patience was sorely tried by the perverseness of both priests and people who ultimately were glad to be removed to peace only that God might use the ministrations of that very Prelate whose sacred character they had maligned and whose motives they had misjudged.

These embryo schisms all occurred prior to 1785, when the total number of Catholics in the United States was but 25,000, and at a time when Catholicity was but an infant in its American cradle. And thus has it been in the history of the Church in America through every decade of its existence. But Almighty God, who doeth all things well, and who rules and guides His Church in all lands, acted towards the Church in America precisely as He did in the College of the Apostles. He gave to the Church a fair proportionate of good priests for every Judas who basely betrayed Her.

The spiritual life of the Catholic church is supernatural. As well might her enemies expect Almighty God to cease to exist, as to live in the vain hope of seeing the Church die through schism or sectarianism. An uninterrupted career of nearly nineteen centuries should be sufficient to convince even the most virulent victim of Protestant prejudice that the Catholic Church can never be annihilated by persecution or penal laws from without or from schism by secularist and costermay from within.

The Catholic church is the Kingdom of Christ in this world, and the Pope who reigns in Rome is Christ's Vicar, who may be likened to the super-eminent Centurian of Capernaum, inasmuch as he has under him the army of Christ's Soldiers, and he says unto the one "Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh." This, as Christ is one, as is the Church, and though a second Reformation should rob the church of a hundred millions of souls, yet would she still continue her work in the world, supported, guided and guarded by that supernatural grace of God which has been her sole protective in the past, and which will continue with her even though the world were to become dotted with sects and schismatics as numerous as the grains of sand on the sea shore.

Millionaires in the Senate.

The fact that candidates for the United States Senate are now selected for their wealth more than their wisdom or statesmanship, is beginning to attract the attention of thinking people who see a baneful influence in thus making the money kings of the republic the highest law-making power of the land.

Senator Jones of Florida truly says that "the forcing of millionaires to the front as members of what should be the ablest body of statesmen in the world, is going too far. If a halt is not called the people will throw the revolutionary things in time. The evils to which it tends will be cured by the power of public disapproval. In the days when the Senate met the preconceived ideas of those who established it, money was not the test of fitness for membership of that body. A man to enjoy such honor and most such responsibilities must stand forth as one recognized for his learning, his ability and his integrity."

He being asked, what means brought about the change, Senator Jones gave these cogent reasons:

"Among the principal causes, is one already alluded to. It is natural for aspiring human nature to court distinction and power. In those former days there were comparatively few men of great wealth, and its possession by a man gave him such power and distinction as I have referred to. He did not need the selfish honor of place to greatly his ambition or to feed his pride. Wealth now does not give a man the distinction he craves. He seeks it in something beyond, and, naturally enough, in the direction of political preferment. His money is a means to the end in view, and he utilizes it. The question of what he is worth seems a more important query than what does he know. This is more generally the case in the Western and Middle states than in the South and New England."

Ireland in the Present Parliament.

On last Thursday the British Parliament commenced a session which promises to end only with an increase of the woe of woes of Ireland. In the customary speech of the Queen, she is made to give utterance to the regular royal rubbish about the "decrease of grave crimes in Ireland," and the usual fulsome compliments about the passage of Acts of Parliament to promote the prosperity of British law in Ireland. Beneath this rose-colored surface, however, there is a volcanic state of the public mind in Ireland, and the Irish people may expect "no quarter" from their ancient enemy when next the auto-fink party in Parliament becomes numerous enough to pass a new Coercion Bill aimed at, and specially framed for, the stamping out of all National feeling in the breasts of the Irish people.

In such a coming crisis what is the duty of the friends of Ireland in America? It is to build up, strengthen, and solidify the Irish National League in every town, hamlet and city from Alaska to Louisiana; to place the "sinews of war" in each Branch treasury, and thus be prepared with both men and money when the struggle commences between the Celtic and Coercion, to help the people of Ireland in the unequal struggle.

If this Parliament passes a Coercion Bill the Irish Magistrates will be intrusted with arbitrary powers of arrest and imprisonment which will virtually suspend the writ of habeas corpus, and the Government will then depend on securing the conviction of accused Nationalists by resorting to special juries and a change of venue from Catholic to Protestant communities. These powers, all of which are outside of the ordinary law, will be used in prosecuting Mr. Dillon, Mr. O'Brien, and every member of the National League who has been active in promoting the organization to resist, almost all of the soon thus threatened with the loss of liberty are poor, and they will need a great deal of money for their legal defence against English acts of injustice and tyranny. Then, too, the frustration of the Nationalist "plan of campaign" will be followed by a general resumption and merciless enforcement of eviction proceedings, and the resultant of destitution can only be alleviated by an immediate outpour of American sympathy in the form of money contributions.

In time of peace prepare for war," is an appropriate motto which—in view of these circumstances—should be put into practical operation by Ireland's friends all over this free land. Ireland's cause may be won through the vigilance of its friends in America, or it may be lost through lack of organization and the want of funds for defence of the grandest cause that ever aroused the sympathies of the Christian world.

About the Ashe Elect.

A subscriber in one of the Islands of the Pacific desires some information about Father Lavelle, and asks the following questions: (1) Was he ever married? (2) Was he an Apostate? (3) Was there ever any scandal connected with his name? (4) Or, was he a Religious?

(1) Lavelle was never married, although scandal-speakers of the French infidel press have falsely charged that there was a Platonic union between him and Wagner's daughter. (2) Lavelle was an ex-Apostate while living; he died in the church and was buried in the Lands of the Third Order of St. Francis, to which he belonged. (3) The only "scandal" connected with his name was of precisely the same nature as those other "scandals" which earn a nanoled press shrinkers print as the reflection of their own corrupt minds. Lust lived and lived upon the applause of the animal world, which he valued far more highly than his dull God. He moved in the highest society and basked in the sunshine of the smile of beauty, but beyond that he was quibblous. (4) Lizzt was not a Religious. In 1865, he was in Rome with the intention of giving up the fleeting pleasures of the world and entering the ecclesiastical state. His Eminence Cardinal Antonelli, the Papal Secretary of State, was anxious that Lizzt should be ordained a priest, and he was so ardent that his whole soul would be absorbed by it, and hence he could never be content in Holy Orders. The Prelate doubted him with the title "Abbe" as a mark of recognition for his musical genius, but he never belonged to any Order save that in which any good Catholic layman can become a member—the Third Order of St. Francis.

A recent writer, describing the peculiarities of what should be the ablest body of statesmen in the world, is going too far. If a halt is not called the people will throw the revolutionary things in time. The evils to which it tends will be cured by the power of public disapproval. In the days when the Senate met the preconceived ideas of those who established it, money was not the test of fitness for membership of that body. A man to enjoy such honor and most such responsibilities must stand forth as one recognized for his learning, his ability and his integrity."

He being asked, what means brought about the change, Senator Jones gave these cogent reasons:

"Among the principal causes, is one already alluded to. It is natural for aspiring human nature to court distinction and power. In those former days there were comparatively few men of great wealth, and its possession by a man gave him such power and distinction as I have referred to. He did not need the selfish honor of place to greatly his ambition or feed his pride. Wealth now does not give a man the distinction he craves. He seeks it in something beyond, and, naturally enough, in the direction of political preferment. His money is a means to the end in view, and he utilizes it. The question of what he is worth seems a more important query than what does he know. This is more generally the case in the West-ern and Middle states than in the South and New England."

Concerning Parochial Schools.

The Parochial school being the cornerstone of the Church in the future, it is well to disseminate as much as possible the reasons why it should be numerously attended by Catholic children and also generously sustained by Catholic parents.

On a recent Sunday, Father Lavelle of St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, delivered a discourse on Christian education, in the course of which he said: "The man who does that we have to carry in his sign-for our parochial schools. These establishments contain nearly eighty hundred children, and cost about $16,000 a year. We find that it costs little more than $10 a year to support a child in our parochial schools. There he described the manner in which it had been decided to sustain Catholic schools in each parish, by establishing therein a society to be known as the "School Fund Association," the members of which would contribute yearly to the support of the schools, the dues to be $100 for those who can give more—$25 or $10—all to be all the more welcome, and they will make up for the deficiency of those who are too poor to contribute. Each of the heads of families this contribution is expected to come. No purpose—but Father Lavelle—but good—and a circular asking for the names of those who will contribute, how much, and in what way they desire to make it, and the amount of donation. Then at the 9 o'clock Mass, which the children attend, the benefactors of the schools will be specially remembered.

In reply to the query often asked, Why are Catholics not satisfied with the public schools? Father Lavelle said:

"Now, many people wonder why we are not satisfied with the public schools provided by Public Schools Act, and why we send them good enough. The answer is that without Catholic schools we cannot bring up our children in Catholicity. There can be no question that our children cannot be educated in the Catholic faith unless in parochial schools. We have not one word to say against our public schools, we have no contempt for them; we have no excuses to make; we have no fault to find. They are to their own way as schools, but they are not for us.

We are not for our parochial schools we would have not in this country the flourishing Catholic Church that we have. In our discourse everywhere where the parochial schools played the faith of the Catholics all the stronger, and the greatest good of all. Where the parochial schools are revealed, the faith of the Catholic is weakened, and where the child that is not educated in the Spring time.

Now say to us, "But your parochial schools are good enough for us. You should make good business out of your boys. You do not give your children a fair education." To these I would say that the Catholic Church has been everywhere and in all times the light, the educator, the civilizer of the world. In the days of Alfred, Augustine, in the Middle Ages, it was the home of the learned that they could not write their names. But right among these barbarous schools were established in monasteries that taught the world how to civilize themselves the world. Such are Oxford, Gandergay, Salamanca, Bologna. These are not given as illustrations. These are not given as illustrations. These are not given as illustrations

Farm and Home.

Sweeping and Dusting.

At all times nowhelcome, when damp one gets hold of this dust it forments, decays and becomes positively poisonous; and this must needs happen on any rainy day, on foggy mornings, on dark nights, and at that season of the year when the darkness so set to permeate the house, and is not yet time to light the fires that might dry it out or hinder it. The rooms of a dwelling house, then, can not be kept too thoroughly well swept and dusted; in order that the least possible deposit of dust may not be left in them. Many housewives thinkthat the loss the dust is stirred in sweeping, the better the work is done, and too brown and wet grass and mouldered meal are thrown about the floor in order to rather the dust and prevent it from rising. But people giving the matter philosophic attention have come to the conclusion that precisely the opposite course is the fit and proper one; that a good stirring up set than a good blowing out is what the dust needs, and that with a wind blowing unobtrusively through the room as thoroughly as a wind can be made to blow.

Errors to be Corrected in Diet.

1. That there is any nutriment in beef tea made from extracts. There is none whatever.

2. That gelatine is nutritious. It will not keep a sick alive. Beef tea and gelatine, SOUPS, possess EXCITING properties of power, we know not what.

3. That an egg is equal to a pound of meat, and that every sick person can eat eggs. Many, especially those of nervous or bilious temperament, cannot eat them; and to such, eggs are injurious.

4. That beaman milk is an important article of food it must be forced upon a patient. Food that a person cannot endure will not cure.

5. That arrowroot is nutritious. It is simply starch and water, useful as a demulcentive, quickly prepared.

6. That cheese is injurious in all cases. It is, as a rule, contra-indicated being usually indigestible; but it is a concentrated nourishment and a waste-repairer, and often ordered.

7. That the cravings of a patient are whims and should be denied. Thousands often needs, craves for, and digests articles not held down in any dietary. Such, for example, as fruits, pickles, jams, coke, hem or bacon with fat, cheese, butter and milk.

8. That an infinite diet may be marked out which shall apply to every case. Choice of a given list of articles allowable to given cases must be decided by the opinion of the stomach. The stomach is right and the theory wrong, and the judgment admits no appeal.

A diet which would keep a healthy man healthy might kill a sick man; and a diet sufficient to sustain a sick man would not keep a well man alive. Increased quantity of food, especially of liquids, does not mean increased nutriment, rather decrease, since digestion is overtaxed and weakened. Strive to give the food in as concentrated a form as possible. Consult the patient's stomach in preference to his cravings; and if the stomach rejects a certain article do not force it.

The Influence of Cheerful Homes.

Sou to it, then, that your home compete with public places in their attractiveness. Open your blinds by day and light bright fires at night. Illuminate your homes. Hang pictures upon the walls. Put books and newspapers on your tables. Have music and entertaining games. Banish demons of dullness and apathy, and have so long ruled in your homebodies, and bring in mirth and good cheer. Invent occupations for your sons. Stimulate their ambitions in worthy directions. Walks you make home their delight, till them with higher purposes than mere pleasure. Whether they shall pass a happy boyhood and enter upon manhood with refined tastes and lofty ambitions depends you. Believe it possible that with exertion and right means, a mother may have more control over the destiny of her boys than any other influence whatever.

Words in the English Language.

By actual enumeration of the words contained in the best dictionaries, it has been ascertained that 12,350 English words are of Saxon origin and 29,354 of classical origin. In conversation and the popular nature of the Teutonic words in the language, the Saxon element largely preponderates in the works of our greatest writers. The pronouns, numerals, prepositions, conjunctions, and auxiliary verbs, the names of the elements, and their changes, of the seasons, the heavenly bodies, the divisions of time, the features of natural scenery, the organs of the body, the modes of bodily action and passion, the commonest animals, the words used in earliest childhood, the ordinary terms of traffic, the constituent words in proverbs, the designation of kindred, the simpler sensations of the mind, terms of pleasantry, satire, contempt, indignation, irrevoice, and anger are for the most part of Saxon origin. Words indicating a more advanced civilization and complex feelings, and most of the terms employed in art science, mental and moral philosophy, are of classical origin. The English language, which is now spoken by nearly one hundred millions of the earth's inhabitants, is in its vocabulary one of the most heterogeneous that ever existed. There is, perhaps, no language so full of words, evidently derived from the most distant sources, as English. Every country of the globe seems to have brought some of its verbal manufactures to the intellectual market of England. Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Celtic, Saxon, Danish, French, Spanish, Italian, German—nay, even Hindustani, Malay, and Chinese words are mixed together in the English dictionary.

The Potato's Origin.

Before the conference held in London the other day in connection with the potato centenary, Mr. W. R. Mitchell read a paper stating that the potato had been introduced into England by Sir Francis Drake in 1580. He believed that Drake had originally obtained the tuber from South America, either by purchase or plunder, and had conveyed it to England at the conclusion of the voyage in which he relieved Raleigh's Virginian colony.

Mr. Clements R. Markham, C.B., F.R.S., read a paper upon "Potato Cultivation by the Incas and Other Andean Nations." He said that the original home of the potato was in the Cordilleras of Chile, in South America. There it had been cultivated from time immemorial over an extent of 3,000 miles. When the Spaniards first arrived the potato was a cultivated plant in the Kingdom of the Chibchas, in the Province of Quito, throughout the Empire of the Incas of Peru, and in Chi-Chi. The fact of its immemorial cultivation rendered it difficult to ascertain with certainty the localities where the potato was indigenous. It was most probable, on the whole, that the potato originally grew wild in suitable localities throughout the Cordilleras of Peru and Chili. The potato was unknown farther north than the highlands of Bogota in Colombia, and it was there that one of the three American civilizations had its rock—namely, that called by the Spanish conquerors the Myzca Nation. Its people spoke a language called Chibcha, which is now extinct. But vocabularies have been preserved, and they remember the fact that the ancient people of Bogota cultivated the potato extensively, and had produced several variation.

Family Fun.

Needed More than Once.

"John, do you remember when we used to sing in my father's front gate?"

"Yes, Maria, I do."

"And the moon used to look so beautiful, John."

"I did, Maria."

"And the stars were so bright."

"They were."

"I wonder if the moon is so beautiful and the stars just as bright now as they were then, John?"

"I presume they are, Maria."

"Then why can't we sit on the front gate now and look at the moon and the stars and the blue sky, with their fleecy clouds, as we used to do then?

"We can, Maria, if we want to."

"Then, John, let us go out to the front gate for awhile, and see if it will seem anything like it used to."

"All right, Maria. You go out and try it awhile, and if you like it maybe I'll take a turn at it."

But Maria thought him too much of a brute to do anything of the kind.

She Meant Well.

Young Hopeless serious wife to husband—Oh, Chesley, I made a lovely purchase for you, to-day.

Young husband—Necktie!

Young wife—Oh, I wouldn't choose an object, too—such a lovely bargain.

Young husband—Suspenders!

Young wife—And to make such a saving, too—so much cheaper than you are in the habit of getting them for.

Young husband (reading answer in the stars)—Dotted!

Young wife (convulsed with laughter)—What a poor guesser you are, Charley. Just think of it! I bought a whole box of them for $1 and they are such lovely ones, too.

Young husband (returning to his paper) —I thought so.

Willing to Scale.

"Did you get diamonds for Christmas?" was asking in a Baker-street car.

"Yes."

"How much did they cost?"

"Mr. Husband says $250, but I haven't had a jeweler price them yet. My mind is made up to scale all the way from $350 down to $15."

"That's right, Bertha. It may save you a great shock to your nervous system."

A Married Couple's Mishap.

A new married couple who started from Portland, Maine, on a wedding trip the other day were having a hard time at last accounts. It seems that while the bridegroom was looking after the baggage at the station he met a man, who was a little nervous, hurried the bride into the wrong car and started her for Boston one train too soon. The disconsolate husband took the next train, but got to Dorchester only to find that his bride had returned to Portland. She, against the advice of friends, did not stop there, but started west again and got to Boston at the same time he again reached the starting place. At last accounts the two were hurrying backward and forward as fast as steam could take them, each frantically trying to overtake the other.

A Woman Fish.

"Walk up! Walk up, ladies and gentlemen," shouted a man at the top of his voice in front of a booth at a fair. "Walk up and inspect this curious phenomenon—a real, live woman-fish, the only one in existence. There was a rush; the place was crammed to the doors. The curtain was drawn and the showman dressed all in black appeared on the stage and said, in doleful tones, "Ladies and gentlemen, I am the woman Fish. I was married last Christmas. My husband's name was Fish. He was a sinner by trade. He was killed last summer through a fall off a scaffolding, and, as he has left me with four children unprovided for, I will take the liberty to go round and make a collection on their behalf."

It Has Come to This at Last.

"I have noticed," remarked the horse editor, "that when an anarchist accumulates a little property he begins to agitate for a division of capital."

"Well, he has a very ancient precedent for that," replied the man with the hoe.

"Indeed! What?"

"Why, you will remember that when the dove brought the green branch back to Noah he soon caused to be an ark-ist."

A Smart Woman.

An insurance agent applied to a woman to induce her to get her husband insured.

"Will I be sure to get the money if he dies right off?"

"Certainly, ma'am."

"But will you give me any assurance that he will die right off?"

"No, ma'am, we cannot do that."

"Well, then, what good will it be to me to get his life insured if he doesn't die? I knew there was some catch about this insurance business."

Conceding Something to Washington.

She was a Boston girl and was receiving New Year's with a friend in Washington.

"Ah, Miss X., and so whom Lucien saw who had just been presented, "you are from Boston, I believe."

"Yes, that is my home."

"Delightful place, Boston. So intellectual. So classic, I say, say. Such elegant people. Such an air of refinement permeating every environment. Nothing loud; nothing coarse; nothing vulgar. Delightful, delightful."

"You but your life in it," she replied, innocently. "Dey so far as I've got, I think Washington takes the cake."

When they got the Lieutenant out of the wreck he started for home to make out an application for a pension.

Striving to Please.

Young Husband—Isn't there something peculiar about these odious, my dear?

Young Wife (coyly)—Oh, I hope not, dear. I took such pains with them. I even sprinkled them with Jockey Club before I put them to bed to take away the unpleasant odor.

A Satisfactory Purchase.

Wife—I'm afraid you will think I am extravagant, my dear, but I bought a Hubbard today and paid forty dollars for it.

Husband (centrally)—Only forty dollars! Why, you couldn't have pleased me silver. But are you sure it is a genuine Hubbard?

Wife—That is what the milliner said she sold it to me.

Holiday Presents.

A dress picture taken by Flagler. Send them to a dear one at home. Have one enlarged lately, retouched—it will be an acceptable present. Flagler's gallery is the finest and most convenient in the city and produces the best photographs. Market and Fifth streets.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CANDLES FOR CANDLEMAS.

GOLDBERG, BOWEN & CO.

THE LEADING GROCERS,

428, 430 and 432 PINE STREET,

Have imported a FRESH Stock of PURE BEES WAX HAND-MADE CANDLES for Candlemas and the Holydays, to which they call the special attention of the Rev. Clergy and others who desire to procure ALTAR CANDLES that are PURER, CLEANER, and CHEAPER than any others in the Market. Send for our Price List. Telephone No. 1

Dr. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.

THE GREAT NERVE TONIC.—Unsurpassed as a remedy for General Debility, Sleeplessness, Indigestion, Neuralgia, Rheumatism and Nervous Prostration. Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

DR. PEIRO'S OXYGEN TREATMENT

For the cure and cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Nervous Catarrh, Nervous Prostration, Etc. Address "MAX" Dr. Peiro's Office, Cor. Sutter and Kearny Sts., San Francisco.

COAL OIL!

NOTICE.

Unscrupulous competitors having circulated the report that I had sold out my business, I hereby give notice to the public and my customers that such report is ABSOLUTELY FALSE. I have not sold out, neither have I any intention of so doing.

IRVINE GRAHAM,

Fifth, Channel and Berry Sts.

D. MENCARINI.

911 Mission St.,

San Francisco,

Manufacturer and Importer

RELIGIOUS STATUARY, ETC

Suitable for Churches, Convent Chapels, Academy Schools, Etc.

THE ONLY COMPLETE COLLECTION ON THIS PACIFIC COAST

Catalogues sent free on application

JOHN T. SULLIVAN,

—Manufacturer of CUSTOM MADE—

BOOTS & SHOES,

20 Fourth St., Pioneer Building.

FACTORY: H. E. CO. Battery & Jackson

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Full line of Ladies', Misses' and Children's Fine Shoes.

JOHN F. LYONS,

NOTARY PUBLIC

—AND—

Commissioner of Deeds

For all the States and Territories.

OFFICE: - 412 Montgomery St.

Residence: - - 1422 Polk St.

Sets Time a Lifetime.

WE WANT YOU! A live energetic man of good address and good character, to represent us in his county. Business entirely pleasant and profitable. Address, with stamp, STANDARD PROPRIETARY CO., BOSTON, MASS.

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.

608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.

Telephone No. 107.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD

THE DONAHUE SINGER SEWING MACHINE

WARRANTED FOR FIVE YEARS.

ALWAYS IN SEASON.

A Help, Farm Hands, Carpenters, Mechanics, Miners, Teamsters, Blacksmiths, Wagon Makers, Ranchers, Stockmen, Miners, Tanners, Shoemakers, Tailors, Sailors, Soldiers, Hotels, Restaurants, Boarding Houses, Saloons, Steamboats, Steamships, Lumbermen, Millmen, Miners, Prospectors

FATHER McGLYNN'S CASE.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

I thought the occasion warranted my informing Mr Hewitt of the great risk the Doctor ran in taking a prominent part in politics, hoping thereby that Mr Hewitt would dissuade a friend from exposing himself to clearly foreseen consequences. That same evening the following note was written:

No. 452 MADISON AVENUE, New York.

REVEREND DEAR DOCTOR: I have met with great regret a project started in which you and Mr Henry George are meeting to be held shortly on next Friday.

You consider have not forgotten the mandate of his Holy Father the Prefect of Sacred Propaganda in '62 and '64, nor the repeated promises made by you to His Eminence the late Cardinal Archbishop.

As your Bishop I now forbid you, in the most positive manner, to attend the proposed meeting in Chickering Hall on Friday night, or take part in it directly, any political acting whatever will be an violation of the sacred Congregation de Propaganda Fide. I am very sorry to be obliged to write this, but I feel bound in duty to my sacred duty, I am, in obedience.

I am, reverend dear Doctor, faithfully yours,

M. A. CORRIGAN, Abp.

SUSPENDED.

To this note Dr. McGlynn replied by saying he would address the mass meeting notwithstanding the prohibition, and he was accordingly suspended for two weeks in a letter of October 2, of which the following is an extract:—

"So flagrant an act of disobedience cannot be passed over. Before accepting the invitation to address the meeting you know full well the sincere wishes of the Holy See, the Propaganda. You were not ignorant of my own position in the subject, as you expressly alluded to it in your note to me in introducing Mr. George. This objection, consequently, to your course of action has neither any one hand and of sacerdotal obedience on the other. In view, then, of these facts, and much to my regret, I am constrained to have recourse to ecclesiastical measures. I hereby suspend you from all sacerdotal functions for the space of two weeks from date.

"Next cause the and sight of a Catholic priest relying in an open barouche from poll to poll on election day. Some three weeks after the political campaign was over a pastoral letter was issued enunciating the plain teachings of the sovereign Pontiff. A few days later, November 26, the decree of Pope Leo XIII., was assailed by Dr. McGlynn, although, he says, without adverting to it, and the statement of the Holy Father as the solution of the conflict between rich and poor was to be found in the teachings of the Gospel was met by another declaration that the true and only adequate remedy for social evils lay in the abolition of private ownership of land and in the end that anyone unjustly monopolized by a few. Dr McGlynn was invited to correct the misstatement, as he claimed, of his words. Had he done so no censure would remain. He declined to comply, alleging that, after silence he made a quasi retraction in the Times of December 2, but he never withdrew his main statement—that private ownership of land is unjust. In consequence of this statement of November 26 he was again suspended, for the balance of the year and Rev. Dr. Curran placed in temporary charge of St. Stephen's Church.

SUBMISSION TO ROME.

"On December 4 the following telegram came from the Propaganda:—

Abbatem McGlynn immediate Romam vocet. PRAEFECTUS.

(Let Abbatem McGlynn present himself to Rome. PREFECT.)

"The cablegram," His Grace went on to say, "was as great a surprise to me as to the Doctor. I never asked, nor even hinted in any way that he should go to Rome. My former experience of June, 1883, would have precluded such a suggestion. When the telegram was delivered Dr. McGlynn simply replied, 'There is no money.' and as far as he known paid no further heed to the matter.

"To this date no answer seems to have been sent to Rome asking an extension of time or proposing any willingness to comply, when Also, with the order of last December. After waiting in vain two weeks for the slightest symptom of any disposition on his part to obey the Holy See (for by the constitutions of Congregations Propaganda Fide Propagandis has supreme delegated power from the Pope, except in the very gravest matter), I wrote to Dr. McGlynn proposing some reply, when, after waiting four days longer, he wrote on December 20, 1886, that he would not go to Rome, and at the same time reaffirmed his doctrine positis as follows:—'My doctrine about land has been made clear in speeches, in reports of inter views, and in published articles and I repeat these here—I have taught, and shall always teach in speeches and writings as long as I live, that land is rightfully the property of the people of the country, that private ownership of land is against natural justice, no matter by what civil or ecclesiastical laws it may be sanctioned, and I would bring about immediately, if I could, such change of laws all the world over as would confiscate private property in land without one penny of compensation to the unlawful owners.'

"The next correspondence was dated December 30, 1886, when I wrote:—

REVEREND DEAR DOCTOR—Your letter of this date has reached me postal lucigerous that you declined going to Rome, and that you believe and would continue to teach the injustice of private ownership of land, no matter by what laws of Church or State it may be sanctioned.

As sure of your decision as to permit you to resume the holy ministry would be manifestly wrong. Unless you withdraw them, as I hope and trust you will, the censures now in force will be kept intact, pending until the receipt of the answer to a request from Cardinal Simeoni, which is on my way to the city. I regret that under so painful circumstances we should take a wide difference from the course just indicated. The duty is to your humble

I am, reverend dear doctor, very truly yours,

M. A. CORRIGAN.

CARDINAL SIMEONI'S CONSULTATION.

"Early in January a most kind and consolatory letter came to me from Cardinal Simeoni for Dr. McGlynn. He was invited to call and receive it, but refused. 'I will not come to see you,' he sent word back. It was five days before he was mad, and five days later a note came in reply from the Doctor to the effect that—

"I have received Cardinal Simeoni's letter with your request that I would inform you of my plans. I will not go to Rome. The grave reasons which I gave in the letter of December 2 are still held good, but will continue to do so for a long time.

After this I wrote as follows:—

No. 452 MADISON AVENUE, New York, January 14, 1887.

REVEREND DEAR DOCTOR—On the receipt of your letter of December 20 I had an exact copy of it forwarded to Propaganda, in which I said your reasons for not going to Rome in the very words which you yourself had expressed then and have I at any misrepresentation. Tonight I wrote cable to the Cardinal Prefect authorizing the withdrawal of your notice of the 14th inst. in which you say the reasons still hold good and will continue to do so for a long time.

I hope that you will appear before my flock on Sunday next, and, in the spirit of the Gospel, I will do all in my power to assist you in the great work of charity. I do so because I believe it is your duty, as a priest, to devote your entire time to the salvation of souls, and I believe that the interests of your flock will be better subserved by your undivided attention to them than by your attention to the Government in this locality.

SILENCE.

"On December 4 the following telegram came from the Propaganda:—

Abbatem McGlynn immediate Romam vocet. PRAEFECTUS.

(Let Abbatem McGlynn present himself to Rome. PREFECT.)

"The cablegram," His Grace went on to say, "was as great a surprise to me as to the Doctor. I never asked, nor even hinted in any way that he should go to Rome. My former experience of June, 1883, would have precluded such a suggestion. When the telegram was delivered Dr. McGlynn simply replied, 'There is no money,' and as far as known paid no further heed to the matter.

"To this date no answer seems to have been sent to Rome asking an extension of time or proposing any willingness to comply, when Also, with the order of last December. After waiting in vain two weeks for the slightest symptom of any disposition on his part to obey the Holy See (for by the constitutions of Congregations Propaganda Fide Propagandis has supreme delegated power from the Pope, except in the very gravest matter), I wrote to Dr. McGlynn proposing some reply, when, after waiting four days longer, he wrote on December 20, 1886, that he would not go to Rome, and at the same time reaffirmed his doctrine positis as follows:—'My doctrine about land has been made clear in speeches, in reports of inter views, and in published articles and I repeat these here—I have taught, and shall always teach in speeches and writings as long as I live, that land is rightfully the property of the people of the country, that private ownership of land is against natural justice, no matter by what civil or ecclesiastical laws it may be sanctioned, and I would bring about immediately, if I could, such change of laws all the world over as would confiscate private property in land without one penny of compensation to the unlawful owners.'

"The next correspondence was dated December 30, 1886, when I wrote:—

REVEREND DEAR DOCTOR—Your letter of this date has reached me postal lucigerous that you declined going to Rome, and that you believe and would continue to teach the injustice of private ownership of land, no matter by what laws of Church or State it may be sanctioned.

As sure of your decision as to permit you to resume the holy ministry would be manifestly wrong. Unless you withdraw them, as I hope and trust you will, the censures now in force will be kept intact, pending until the receipt of the answer to a request from Cardinal Simeoni, which is on my way to the city. I regret that under so painful circumstances we should take a wide difference from the course just indicated. The duty is to your humble

I am, reverend dear doctor, very truly yours,

M. A. CORRIGAN.

CARDINAL SIMEONI'S CONSULTATION.

"Early in January a most kind and consolatory letter came to me from Cardinal Simeoni for Dr. McGlynn. He was invited to call and receive it, but refused. 'I will not come to see you,' he sent word back. It was five days before he was mad, and five days later a note came in reply from the Doctor to the effect that—

"I have received Cardinal Simeoni's letter with your request that I would inform you of my plans. I will not go to Rome. The grave reasons which I gave in the letter of December 2 are still held good, but will continue to do so for a long time.

After this I wrote as follows:—

No. 452 MADISON AVENUE, New York, January 14, 1887.

REVEREND DEAR DOCTOR—On the receipt of your letter of December 20 I had an exact copy of it forwarded to Propaganda, in which I said your reasons for not going to Rome in the very words which you yourself had expressed then and have I at any misrepresentation. Tonight I wrote cable to the Cardinal Prefect authorizing the withdrawal of your notice of the 14th inst. in which you say the reasons still hold good and will continue to do so for a long time.

I hope that you will appear before my flock on Sunday next, and, in the spirit of the Gospel, I will do all in my power to assist you in the great work of charity. I do so because I believe it is your duty, as a priest, to devote your entire time to the salvation of souls, and I believe that the interests of your flock will be better subserved by your undivided attention to them than by your attention to the Government in this locality.

SILENCE.

"On December 4 the following telegram came from the Propaganda:—

Abbatem McGlynn immediate Romam vocet. PRAEFECTUS.

(Let Abbatem McGlynn present himself to Rome. PREFECT.)

"The cablegram," His Grace went on to say, "was as great a surprise to me as to the Doctor. I never asked, nor even hinted in any way that he should go to Rome. My former experience of June, 1883, would have precluded such a suggestion. When the telegram was delivered Dr. McGlynn simply replied, 'There is no money,' and as far as known paid no further heed to the matter.

"To this date no answer seems to have been sent to Rome asking an extension of time or proposing any willingness to comply, when Also, with the order of last December. After waiting in vain two weeks for the slightest symptom of any disposition on his part to obey the Holy See (for by the constitutions of Congregations Propaganda Fide Propagandis has supreme delegated power from the Pope, except in the very gravest matter), I wrote to Dr. McGlynn proposing some reply, when, after waiting four days longer, he wrote on December 20, 1886, that he would not go to Rome, and at the same time reaffirmed his doctrine positis as follows:—'My doctrine about land has been made clear in speeches, in reports of inter views, and in published articles and I repeat these here—I have taught, and shall always teach in speeches and writings as long as I live, that land is rightfully the property of the people of the country, that private ownership of land is against natural justice, no matter by what civil or ecclesiastical laws it may be sanctioned, and I would bring about immediately, if I could, such change of laws all the world over as would confiscate private property in land without one penny of compensation to the unlawful owners.'

"The next correspondence was dated December 30, 1886, when I wrote:—

REVEREND DEAR DOCTOR—Your letter of this date has reached me postal lucigerous that you declined going to Rome, and that you believe and would continue to teach the injustice of private ownership of land, no matter by what laws of Church or State it may be sanctioned.

As sure of your decision as to permit you to resume the holy ministry would be manifestly wrong. Unless you withdraw them, as I hope and trust you will, the censures now in force will be kept intact, pending until the receipt of the answer to a request from Cardinal Simeoni, which is on my way to the city. I regret that under so painful circumstances we should take a wide difference from the course just indicated. The duty is to your humble

I am, reverend dear doctor, very truly yours,

M. A. CORRIGAN.

CARDINAL SIMEONI'S CONSULTATION.

"Early in January a most kind and consolatory letter came to me from Cardinal Simeoni for Dr. McGlynn. He was invited to call and receive it, but refused. 'I will not come to see you,' he sent word back. It was five days before he was mad, and five days later a note came in reply from the Doctor to the effect that—

"I have received Cardinal Simeoni's letter with your request that I would inform you of my plans. I will not go to Rome. The grave reasons which I gave in the letter of December 2 are still held good, but will continue to do so for a long time.

After this I wrote as follows:—

No. 452 MADISON AVENUE, New York, January 14, 1887.

REVEREND DEAR DOCTOR—On the receipt of your letter of December 20 I had an exact copy of it forwarded to Propaganda, in which I said your reasons for not going to Rome in the very words which you yourself had expressed then and have I at any misrepresentation. Tonight I wrote cable to the Cardinal Prefect authorizing the withdrawal of your notice of the 14th inst. in which you say the reasons still hold good and will continue to do so for a long time.

I hope that you will appear before my flock on Sunday next, and, in the spirit of the Gospel, I will do all in my power to assist you in the great work of charity. I do so because I believe it is your duty, as a priest, to devote your entire time to the salvation of souls, and I believe that the interests of your flock will be better subserved by your undivided attention to them than by your attention to the Government in this locality.

SILENCE.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.
IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ANTRIM.—At the meeting of the Ballycastle Board, on New Year's Day, Mr Edward Harford retired from the office of Mayor, held by him for two consecutive years, and Alderman James H. Hazlett, late member for the West Ward of the borough, was called to the civic chair. The installation was of the usual formal character.

The Belfast Police Force has been increased to 800.

ARMAGH.—At the request of the Most Rev. Dr McGettigan, the Holy See has been pleased to yield to the application for the appointment of a Coadjutor, to assist his Grace in the administration of the archdiocese of Armagh. All the parishes priests of the Armagh diocese have been accordingly summoned to attend in St. Patrick's cathedral, on the 13th January (Thursday), for the purpose of selecting the names of three clergymen, to be forwarded for submission to His Holiness the Pope for approval. The parishes of Ballymore and Mullaghbrack have been selected by lot to travel short and shortly after the meeting, the result of the ballot, and the names selected for canvass, would seem to be those of the three most popular priests.

CORK.—On Jan 10, a deputation consisting of Messrs. Buckley, J. McAuliffe, and Wm. Crowley, waited on the Rev. Father Lane, of Killavullen, to present him, on the conclusion of his mission, which was very successful, to his members of his flock. The deputation were cordially and sympathetically received by the gentleman, who replied in suitable terms.

A large number of clerical appointments are posted on the Cloyne, at the end of the diocese of the Cullery estate, adjacent lands in the district for non-payment of a year and a half's rent. There are close a law at the end of the year same-mo. Mrs. Frances Babcock Sadlier (Miss Frances Babcock).

The first notes of the approaching great land war on the Kingston estate, which is a season's rent—but only amounting to a season's rent for the year ends before Dec. 25th, 1887. A large deputation of the tenantry of the Ballyvourney and Kilbrittain districts, was held. Great enthusiasm prevailed.

The installation of Alderman John O'Riley, as Mayor of Cork, in succession to Alderman Lyons, took place on Jan 10, in the city Courthouse. There was a large crowd in the room, and the cutting and mounting Mayor's chair was a matter of difficulty. Mr Lyons was the idol of the Corporation, Ladies, J. P., in the room, and the priests of the parish.

Mr. Abraham Lyons, a well-known Cork corn merchant, was sitting at his few on Christmas Eve, and a friend, with his heart was at midnight service, and when they returned they found his house on fire. Mr Lyons partially succeeded, he thinks being forced to leave his lady alone. In 15 minutes the Brigade was summoned. When the doctor arrived he found the lady in a state of fright, who was brought to Mr Lyons' residence in Lenhall, as he had had a severe attack of paralysis, and was in a state of extreme nervous prostration. The house was completely burned and the furniture was saved. The premises then left unbroken, and there is the land and a certain amount of insurance. The cause is unknown. As the crow, the house was in a lonely place, and the nearest house was quite a mile distant. The house was quite lighted in the usual manner, and no fire was in the room. The house was owned by Mr Lyons, of Mayor Cork, and Mayor, M.P., who was now in Paris, and who had recently left Cork. Mr Lyons, in delivering his speeches in Bellinghamshire and Bellinghamshire, stated it should be his first to do house to the tenantry. He spoke of an intended legislation connecting the emigration of the Tipperary tenantry, and stating that the Government would be prepared to lend Irish a reliable will for tenants.

HONGCHOW.—To death is announced of Mr. Thomas Cooper, of Hongchow, China, late partner of the well-known Wolfhamcote, and Co., of Hongkong, and Shanghai, and of Swatow in Canton, and though being an invalid, he was in the prime of life, and was in the service of the Government in this locality.

SLIGO.—A public dinner was given to the Rev. Father Lane, who was preparing to leave for America, on a change of duty, in Sligo, a large number of people assembled in the street of Sligo.

LEITRIM.—Leitrim continues very from the black record of the year, the tenantry, the tenants, and the landlords, and the clergy, political cause, Messrs Redden and Lowry, also are only defaulters and are subject to the interest, for about the home of their family, and the tenants, and only an action for the rent, and the tenants subscribed the Land League, and the tenants paid the subscription of the Crown.

Thus, your Hongkong, whose is was a doubting young man, Mr. Kelly had played a prominent part in the National events in Hongkong, for many long, since the stirring of the Land Agitation, which was long, and it is belied by persons of attributes and friends, look down in Jan 4. He body was interred in the graveyard adjoining the Rapid Immaculate, and a large number of people attended. Mass was celebrated. An offering found offered for the repose of the soul. Cliff of the Immaculate, Mr Kelly, Sr., and of Mr. Kelly, Jr., and of Mr. Kelly, Jr., and Charles Kelly, Esq., Hongkong, and the letters of condolence and sympathy from a large number of the Irish Parliamentary party.

MEATH.—Mrs. McCaulay, widow of the late Lieut. Colonel McCaulay, C. B., Ballinlough, Meath, on Dec. 31. The deceased whose maiden name was Miss Ellen Ryan, was the eldest daughter of the late Colonel Ryan, of the Meath Militia, with some other connections. She was extremely good and Father Mass.

Mr. Thomas O'Reilly ("Arthur"), for many years a well known in Metropolitan and country circles, and during the last three years sub-editor of the Freeman's Journal and Registrar's Association, died on Jan. 2. He is the eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas O'Reilly, who was for many years a well known in the leading Irish provincial journals, and died on the 2 of May, 1883, in Tuam, Parish, B. H. A., in now finished 1 year. Mr. O'Reilly, the deceased, was born in the Irish Metropolitan district, and was a member of the Catholic Guilds. The late Thomas O'Reilly, expressed in the office of his home, with the last and said, "Let the Lord Christ, of which he was a knight, open his bosom." To Name Station, Esq. M. P., High Sheriff of Dublin city, has nominated John Dunne, Esq., of Ballinlough, Meath, to be his successor. Mr. Dunne was appointed Mr. P. J. McGrath, Esq., J. P., Dublin, on Jan. 21 from Dublin, Esq., J. P., Dublin, on Jan. 21 from Dublin, Esq., J. P., Dublin, on Jan. 21 from Dublin

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

JUST FOR TO-DAY.

Naught I ask for morrow's need,
Only for to-day,
Dearest Father, Thy child lead
Only for to-day;
Lead Thy native grace to me,
Help me Thy due will to see,
From temptation's path to flee,
Only for to-day.

Guide this wayward will of mine,
Only for to-day,
Fill my heart with love divine,
Only for to-day;
Still this storm within my breast,
Help me, for Thou knowest best
What I need of all the rest,
Only for to-day.

Let my thoughts be good and pure,
Only for to-day,
Let no demon them allure,
Only for to-day;
Let me always see Thy face,
Father, lead Thy saving grace
To me, in this dreary place,
Only for to-day.

Father, help me when I speak,
Only for to-day,
To be gentle, kind, an meek,
Only for to-day;
Let me say no cruel thing,
Great I may Thy praises sing,
And my words with Thy love ring,
Only for to-day.

All my actions, Father, guide,
Only for to-day,
Keep me from sin's dismal tide,
Only for to-day;
Let such thought, and word, and deed,
Of my yesterday's record,
And me assure, to Thee, lead,
Only for to-day.

So Thou all the world to me,
Only for to-day,
Thy glory, great my mission be,
Only for to-day,
Every movement that I make,
May it be for Thy dear sake,
And my footsteps take,
Only for to-day.

Help me fight the battle well,
Only for to-day,
What though yesterday I fell,
Only for to-day;
Help me take up cross anew,
And forget how hard it grew,
Thy dear steps once more pursue,
Only for to-day.

Great such deed of wisdom's love,
Only for to-day,
Then mayest in my heart to prove,
Only for to-day.
May it grow, and leaves unfold,
As the mustard seed of old,
Being forth grown a hundred fold,
Only for to-day.

Help me tread the narrow path,
Only for to-day;
Let no never stray from that,
Only for to-day;
Briers and stones obstruct the road,
Virtue's way with thorns is sewed,
Lead me onward with my load,
Only for to-day.

Literary Miscellany.

The Golden Bond of Grief.

A Beautiful Catholic Story in Two Chapters

CHAPTER I

In the churchyard of P——, there is a lonely, simple in form and of remarkable beauty—that everyone who wanders curiously about this quiet resting place of those who have entered the land of the dead before him, stops to read the inscription it bears.

The inscription is as follows

"Here rests Catherine C——, widow, died three daughters, and brought up six grandchildren. She was not rich, but she could love, and she could work. She was always cheerful and healthy. She slept in the Lord without sickness or suffering in the seventieth year of her age."

On such ends of this tomb is a grave, one exactly like the other. At the head of each is a stone with a name and date. Both were for many years kept as carefully covered with turf, and shaded from flowering plants, and the approach to them was always such good order that there was every evidence not only of love and gratitude towards the woman who rested there, but tender recollections were connected with these hillocks, to which there were hearts dearly attached.

Moved by the inscription upon the tomb of the old person whose life and blessed end were so publicly expressed by it, I then looked with surprise at the exact roundabouts and careful tending of the two neighboring graves, and sought to learn who rested there, and who it was that so treasured and preserved them.

I did a fortunate chance, the particulars of which it is unnecessary to detail, led me to the discovery of this little story.

In the beginning of December, 18—, died a respectable widow, whose only son, Michael, though only twenty years of age, already had an important situation.

She was buried in the churchyard of P——, and on the night of the above mentioned month, Michael, who had always had an irreproachable love for his mother, on the tomb of the funeral watered her coffin with tears of gratitude, and throw onto its hard full of frozen earth. When the grave was covered in, and everyone had departed, he remain behind, and kneeling by the fresh earth, prayed earnestly for the soul of her who had not only kept his body in health and strength, but has sent in the fear and love of God, and formed in him what was good and noble.

He deeply regretted that the winter did not permit him to erect any memorial as a proof of his gratitude, and this never as he dutiy obliged him to leave the place; for during his mother's illness, and a week before her death, he had received his promotion to a situation in another town.

He determined, therefore, to have the grave in such a condition that if he could obtain leave to come to Warsaw next April, he would hasten thither to fulfil this holy duty; and that he might know exactly where the dear remains were resting he carefully observed the side plain stone slab to that in through the labyrinth of grave mounds around.

He remarked also the inscription on the gravestone, and the graves of the two women as similar to each other, and endeavored to impress their remembrance so deeply on his memory that he had but to close his eyes the last, under having been very considerable.

Two or three weeks later he promised Anna he would fulfil her wish, for he longed for help from his brother, first, however, he would go the grave in order. The delay troubled the poor girl, but when she had learned the true reason for it and thought that she had benefit on a great measure been the cause of the expenses which had so exhausted her father's means and placed him in debt, she wept and prayed for her mother's soul in the neighboring church, and determined to wait.

One day she bethought herself to go and visit her neighbors and acquaintances by whom she was always treated with kindness, thank them for their kind sympathy with her during her mother's illness.

Her hearty wish was well pleased to see her again in full health, with a fresh color upon her cheeks, and the expression of life and interest in her eyes which was their wont. They then mentioned to her a well known establishment which was in want of a teacher of music and languages for a few hours each day.

Anna felt that she was quite able to undertake the duty, and longed to be able to help her father by this means.

She was kindly received there, and with the full consent of her father entered upon her duty.

A fortnight had hardly passed when the young pupils were so much attached to their teacher, and her superiors were so pleased with her, that as soon as they heard of her wish they offered her twenty pounds in advance of her quarter's salary.

Anna was only too happy to close with this proposal, and at once determined to surprise a surprise for her father, and to spend her first instalment of salary upon a gravestone for her mother.

This was towards the end of April. The weather was covered with fresh green, the trees bursting out from their young leaves, and the churchyard at P——— looked beautiful, so soothingly was it tended, as if to keep up at least the appearance of life.

The following morning, Anna's father was given her his office and the house had been given up to order, that Anna took with her the old servant who had attended the last illness, that he might show her his mother's grave, and proceeded to the churchyard.

She knew her mother lay very near her grandmother. The sey and, too, knew that, just as during the interment he had, as is usual with the lower class of people, taken little hoard of what was going on, he did not observe on which side his mother's grave had, and led Anna to the wrong one.

The poor girl was filled with sorrow when she looked upon the neglected hillock covered with weeds and the fallen leaves of the past year, not even a slate heading with the name and date, by which every other grave might be recognized, was there.

At the thought that such was her mother's grave, Anna burst into tears. She knelt down by the mound and prayed fervently for the dear deceased, kissed the earth which, as she thought covered the remains of her heart's treasure and kissed herself still more earnestly in carrying out her plan.

In the course of an hour everything was in order. She found a mason who made the foundation for the gravestone, and then a gardener who could lay down the turf, plant some flowering shrubs, and clear the paths to the grave, and finally engaged a little boy, who always had beautiful bouquets of flowers, to keep some constantly placed on the grave till such time as the shrubs which had been planted should be covered with leaves and flowers. She made it a duty to pay a frequent visit to see the progress of the work, to water the roses and flowers, and to pray the last, without having been very considerable.

Two or three weeks later he promised Anna he would fulfil her wish, for he longed for help from his brother, first, however, he would go the grave in order. The delay troubled the poor girl, but when she had learned the true reason for it and thought that she had benefit on a great measure been the cause of the expenses which had so exhausted her father's means and placed him in debt, she wept and prayed for her mother's soul in the neighboring church, and determined to wait.

One day she bethought herself to go and visit her neighbors and acquaintances by whom she was always treated with kindness, thank them for their kind sympathy with her during her mother's illness.

Her hearty wish was well pleased to see her again in full health, with a fresh color upon her cheeks, and the expression of life and interest in her eyes which was their wont. They then mentioned to her a well known establishment which was in want of a teacher of music and languages for a few hours each day.

Anna felt that she was quite able to undertake the duty, and longed to be able to help her father by this means.

She was kindly received there, and with the full consent of her father entered upon her duty.

A fortnight had hardly passed when the young pupils were so much attached to their teacher, and her superiors were so pleased with her, that as soon as they heard of her wish they offered her twenty pounds in advance of her quarter's salary.

Anna was only too happy to close with this proposal, and at once determined to surprise a surprise for her father, and to spend her first instalment of salary upon a gravestone for her mother.

This was towards the end of April. The weather was covered with fresh green, the trees bursting out from their young leaves, and the churchyard at P——— looked beautiful, so soothingly was it tended, as if to keep up at least the appearance of life.

The following morning, Anna's father gave her his office and the house had been given up to order, that Anna took with her the old servant who had attended the last illness, that he might show her his mother's grave, and proceeded to the churchyard.

She knew her mother lay very near her grandmother. The sey and, too, knew that, just as during the interment he had, as is usual with the lower class of people, taken little heed of what was going on, he did not observe on which side his mother's grave had, and led Anna to the wrong one.

The poor girl was filled with sorrow when she looked upon the neglected hillock covered with weeds and the fallen leaves of the past year, not even a slate heading with the name and date, by which every other grave might be recognized, was there.

At the thought that such was her mother's grave, Anna burst into tears. She knelt down by the mound and prayed fervently for the dear deceased, kissed the earth which, as she thought covered the remains of her heart's treasure and kissed herself still more earnestly in carrying out her plan.

In the course of an hour everything was in order. She found a mason who made the foundation for the gravestone, and then a gardener who could lay down the turf, plant some flowering shrubs, and clear the paths to the grave, and finally engaged a little boy, who always had beautiful bouquets of flowers, to keep some constantly placed on the grave till such time as the shrubs which had been planted should be covered with leaves and flowers. She made it a duty to pay a frequent visit to see the progress of the work, to water the roses and flowers, and to pray

THE MONITOR.

TRADEMARK REGISTERED

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—After Cardinal Gibbons receives the red hat in Rome next month, he will make a tour of Northern Europe. Upon his return to America his Eminence will visit Rome, where he will meet Archbishop Ireland with the Italian Bishops.

—In 1886 the death of four Cardinals were recorded. In the United States three Bishops passed to their eternal reward and 107 priests ended their earthly labors. Fifty-two Sisters and eleven Brothers also passed away.

—In the coming Consistory, the twin brother of Cardinal Manzella, Canon Henry Manzella, Rector of the Seminary of Benevento, will, it is said, be promoted to the Archiepiscopal Bars. He was born at Vitulano, near Benevento, and is about fifty years of age.

—A subdeacon from Rome states that the next Consistory for the elevation of Cardinals and the nomination of Bishops to various Sees, will take place on March 7th. The Pope, it is alleged, is preparing an Allocution affirming with increased emphasis, the principle of the temporal power of the Church which has been so ruthlessly ignored by the Italian and other European governments.

—The large number of immigrants coming into California seems to have aroused a spirit of laudable rivalry between different sections of the State and led to the foundation of Immigration Societies. Last Saturday week at a meeting of the citizens of Bakersfield, it was determined to make the same effort to induce an influx of desirable immigrants and capital into Kern county that is now making, with such marked success, in other parts of the State.

—We regret to learn from a New York paper that James Redpath, the well known advocate of Ireland's rights, is dangerously ill in that city. Mr. Redpath, although an Englishman, did valorous deeds for the Irish people during the Land League campaign. With voice and pen he persistently pleaded for Home Rule, and his writings brought the cause of Irish grievances prominently before the people of all civilized lands. We hope he may live to see the results of his patriotism crowned with success.

—We learn from a Dublin paper that on a recent occasion bands of music and crowds of people assembled outside of Kilmainham Jail and serenaded the Nationalist Moreney, who was imprisoned for refusing to testify in his bankruptcy case arising out of the adoption of the plan of campaign. Mr. O'Brien, in a speech referring to Mr. Chamberlain's condemnation of the plan of campaign, said that Mr. Chamberlain's life during the past year had been a lie, and that his turning against his friends made him equal to an assassin.

—Some time ago the MONITOR urged the necessity of the Government erecting a decent place of worship on the Presidio for Catholic soldiers. But the reply came from the Secretary of War that no funds could be appropriated for such a purpose. Now we learn from a Kansas paper that Congress has appropriated $11,000 for a Catholic Church, a Catholic school-house and a priest's house, at Fort Leavenworth.—Even this it would seem that Secretary of War Lincoln's objection was not based either on good will or good law.

—One of the strangest of Protestant religious sects is that which calls itself the New and Latter House of Israel. Its headquarters is in Chatham, England, in which town its devotees are building a magnificent temple, which will cost $250,000. They believe that they will not die and that they are the remnant of true Israelites who will reign with Christ for a thousand years. Their founder was a man named Jezriel, who is now dead. His death was a great shock to the believers, but his wife claimed that it was an accident and declared herself to be his successor. Vive la fumisterie!

—On Quadragesima Sunday—the Sunday after Ash Wednesday—which falls this year on the 27th inst., a collection will be taked up in all the Catholic churches in the United States for the benefit of the colored and Indian missions under the jurisdiction of Cardinal Gibbons. The Rev. Father Burke, of the Church of St. Benedict the Moor, the colored church in New York City, has applied to the committee, which consists of Cardinal Gibbons, Bishop Kain, of Wheeling, and Bishop Curtis, of Wilmington, for the relief of his church and St. Benedict's Home for Destitute Children.

—An Eastern paper reports that when in New York recently Cardinal Taschereau of Canada made an important statement regarding the Knights of Labor. Cardinal Taschereau was asked whether he would move at the meeting of the Cardinals by which he will attend at Rome, to consider the Knights of Labor. "Yes," the Cardinal replied, "and I will try to get a specific declaration from Pope Leo not only regarding the Knights of Labor, but also as to the theories concerning property in land as advocated by Henry George." It will be remembered that Cardinal Taschereau at Montreal last summer condemned the Knights of Labor.

—Mr. Chamberlain the prominent English politician, has so much love for the Orangemen in the North of Ireland that he has hatched out a novel scheme for the amelioration of Ireland by having two Parliaments—one in Belfast for the Protestant section of the people, and another in Dublin for the Catholic Irish. Such a scheme is ridiculous in its very conception and could not in any possibility be carried out. Mr. Gladstone, on the other hand, says very justly that whatever scheme is sanctioned must be approved by the Irish people, and he knows nothing short of a Legislature with a responsible Executive, which would give the Irish people power to execute as well as to make laws, would satisfy their national aspirations.

—A subdeacon from London brings the sad news that Mr. Parnell's health is so badly shattered that it is considered almost impossible for him long to sustain the position he occupies at present as leader of the Irish Parliamentary Party. His malady is reported to be a very serious attack of Bright's disease which has for late baffled the best medical skill. In casting around for a successor to leader of the Irish Parliamentary Party, the name of T. M. Healy stands first on the list. We sincerely hope the news by cable is exaggerated.

—It is generally conceded that one of the most effective natural agents for shaking up the consciences of doubtful Catholics sinners is a regular series of earthquake shocks at short intervals. Attach a time thermometer to a people fond of the confessional, approach the Sacraments and generally make the peace with God. We see by a Charleston paper that the same cause creates the same results in that city, both the Catholic and Protestant congregations having been greatly enlarged since the earthquake warning which reminded the people of that well shaken section of the South that in the midst of life we are in death.

—The progress of the Church in Cleveland, Ohio, is well demonstrated by the fact that it is but 47 years since the first Catholic Church was erected in that city. When the first small church was commenced there were but five Catholic families in that city. Now there are 50,000 Catholics in Cleveland, with 20 churches and congregations (besides old St. Patrick's and St. Columbkill's), with schools attached, educating nearly 10,000 children; with 32 secular priests and 14 regulars; 2 hospitals, 3 orphan asylums, caring for about 400 orphans; foundling asylums, home for the aged, reformatory for girls and fallen women; and its religious communities of women number some 350 members.

—At the session of the National Woman Suffrage Association held in Washington last week, resolutions were adopted demanding the passage of a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, which shall secure the right of suffrage to the women of the United States. An appeal is made to the working women to strive for the right of suffrage, upon the ground that a disfranchised class is always an oppressed class. Reference is made to the fact that in New York a woman is under arrest for casting a ballot, an act held to be commendable when performed by a man, which is declared to be proof of the inconsistency and injustice of the present position of woman. The end-moment of woman suffrage by the United Labor party and by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union is recognized as a hopeful sign of the times.

—Recent advices from Europe state that despite the peaceful reaction war is seriously considered there as among the possibilities. The general opinion of the chances is generally against the French. Wise heads say the preparations are quite insufficient, notwithstanding the 400,000 guns ordered by Gen. Boulanger to be ready for April 15th. The artillery has all been sent from Vincennes to Lunerille and Vernon, and it really seems to be a forward movement if reserve strength in both instances. No one appears to have much illusion about the risks. A cutting up of France is openly talked of, and, as the penalty of defeat, the feeling that a crushing indemnity would be demanded is universal. For this very reason the French would fight this time, if war is inevitable, with a savage determination not to survive a defeat.

—Germany evidently believes in the prudent maxim: "In time of peace prepare for war," as the Berlin papers announce the purchase of large school buildings at Zillichau, near Cüstrar, for barracks for the cadets. Recruiting-offices have arrived at Dieuze, Hagenau, and other frontier posts. An Alsace journal also reports that the French are building wooden barracks at Belfort to accommodate 20,000 men and at Cornier for 5000 more, and that at other places in Vosges smaller barracks are being erected. The garrisons at Epinal, Bruyeres and St. Die have each been increased by 5,000 troops. The National Zeitung says it seems that France is preparing for immediate war. The German need have no fear the truth of the assertion that France is only defending herself against possible assault.

—Rev. A. J. Canfield, who ministers to the pre-holiness and other plutocrats in the church of Our Father, Brooklyn, N. Y., is a preacher who has the courage to tell the truth about Protestantism and its failure as a religious system. In the course of a recent sermon, Dr. Canfield was not afraid to tell his aristocratic hearers that "the Protestant Church has failed to preach the Gospel to the poor. Atheis, in its paimy days, was a trifle smaller than Brooklyn is to-day, and it had 140,000 slaves. The Catholic Church abolished slavery and took the side of the poor as against the rich. Protestantism claimed to be an advance on Catholicism, but it had failed to ameliorate the condition of the poor. The feudal lord enacted only one-tenth of the aid produced as rent. Now the landlord is not satisfied unless he gets from one third to one-half."

—The peace of the Church in China is assured for some time, if we may judge from the fact that the authorities of several of the Chinese centres have issued proclamations calling on the people to live at peace with the Christian missionaries and converts, and explaining that the Christian religion teaches men to do right and shield therefore its special protection. The proclamation reminds them that by becoming converts to Christianity they do not cease to be Chinese. "Know, therefore," says one of the proclamations, "all sort of whatsoever sort or condition, that the sole object of establishing chapels is to exhort men to do right, those who embrace Christianity do not cease to be Chinese, church and state, therefore, should continue to live in peace and not let mutual jealousies be the cause of strife between them." This change has been brought about without any outside pressure.

THE MONITOR.

Closing Calvary Cemetery.

In consequence of the great number of interments daily in Calvary Cemetery in this city, it is possible that all the land available for burial purposes will be occupied in the course of a couple of months, and then Calvary Cemetery will be closed against all further burials except for the relatives of persons who have already secured plots therein. Simultaneously with the closing of Calvary Cemetery, the new Cemetery on San Mateo county will be dedicated and opened. The present cemetery will be scrupulously kept sacred for the repose of the ashes of all who repose therein, none of the remains being disturbed, and no portion of the land appropriated to any purpose whatever save for interment in graves or tombs already owned by individuals.

Calvary Cemetery was blessed by Most Rev. Archbishop Alemany, D. D., on Sunday August 17th, 1862, in presence of a vast concourse of citizens. His Grace was assisted on that occasion by Rt. Rev. Bishop Lora, Bishop of Sidon, from whom he was raised the year previous, arriving in this city where he was tendered a public reception and a handsome sum of money. The priests present were Very Rev. James Croke, Rev. John McGinnis (Rt. P.), Rev. J. P. Harrington, Rev. Michael King, Fathers Affandinato and Maurain, S. J.

The sermon on the occasion was preached by Most Rev. Archbishop, in front of the vault at the summit of the hill, in the center of the grounds, the text being the words inscribed over the door of the vault—"Yesterday for me, today for thee." At the conclusion of the sermon, the great cross in front of the vault was sprinkled in the usual manner in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and the Litany of the Saints recited. The long procession then moved down the main carriage-way to the cross on the right, which was in like manner sprinkled, and holy water placed upon the grave. The funeral procession then moved down the entire circuit of the grounds, something like a mile in extent, was made, the chanting and sprinkling of the aisles being kept up throughout, and on returning the ceremony of blessing was taken was performed. The procession then made the entire circuit of the grounds a second time, and then moved back to the central cross in front of the vault, where prayers were said, and the ceremonies were concluded. It was half-past six o'clock before the ceremonies were finished, and the last concourse of people returned to the city.

Calvary Cemetery—originally consisted of one hundred acres, which was laid out by Mr. W. H. Dwinell of San Jose, and improved at an expense of some $50,000. This was the first work of this character ever undertaken in California. The cemetery comprehends one of the finest views of the neighborhood. It overlooks the city and the bay, beyond Hunter's Point, and to the Alameda shores, away the mouth of the Sacramento, the shores of Marin, the Pacific Golden Gate Heads and the Farallones. Underneath, it possesses but few attractions of these scenes of panoramic views, but since its adornment, its attractions to the living have been greatly enhanced. What were appropriate sites for last earthly resting-place of the dead, whose dirge in the never-ceasing roar of the waters of the Pacific, accompanied by the wail of the east-wind! May all who shall in repose in Calvary's sacred soil reap the reward of Calvary's sacrifice.

Authority in the Church.

"What has the Pope to do with an American citizen?" asks the Colorado Citizen, and it gives the following precise and pungent answer: "Nothing. What has the Pope to do with a Catholic priest? Great deal. The Pope has to see that priests do not make the Protestant ministers uttering every foolish doctrine that diseased brains can germinate; he has to see that priests respect constituted authority; he has to see that when their heads get abnormally large, they should have quiet and not until the swelling is reduced. If he let things run disorderly, as they do in the sects, he would soon have the Church as little like a church as the Baptists or Congregationalists or the Unitarians. The doctrines of the Church are definitely fixed, thanks be to God. If they were not, Catholics would be tossed and tumbled and jumps from belief to belief which make the interesting gymnastic pseudo-religions of the Protestant sects. The Pope, therefore, is a public benefactor, besides being a solid authority. If a priest or layman thinks he knows better than the Pope what should or what should not be believed, there is no chain around him, and he can throw off his allegiance and join one of the neutral administration societies in which absence of all belief seems to be the highest recommendation."

Church Progress in California.

In every portion of this State the Catholic Church is progressing with that sure and steady growth which betokens stability. It is only twenty-one months since Archbishop Riordan was installed in the archiepiscopal charge of this Archdiocese, and since that brief period a great Cathedral has been completed; new parishes have been formed; six new churches and a chapel have been dedicated; two female academies have been blessed, and four parochial schools have been added to those which previously existed in the Archdiocese. In the dioceses of Monterey and Los Angeles the same advance in the temporal and spiritual progress of the Church is made manifest by the commencement of a cathedral of magnificent proportions in Sacramento, the completion of the finest hospital building on the coast in Los Angeles, and the establishment of parochial schools in many sections. All of which goes to prove the ever-enduring vitality of the Church of Christ and the constant progression of His Faith throughout every secular field, whether the field of Christ exists.

Archbishop Riordan has collected in a large album pictures of all the old Franciscan missions of California. This magnificent historical collection the Archbishop has presented to his Alma Mater, the University of Notre Dame, Ind., for the Bishops' Memorial Hall.

Papist Discrimination Against Churches and Charities.

A proposition is now before the Legislative Assembly of this State with the laudable intention of laying before the people of California the propriety of amending an amendment to the State Constitution exempting churches, school-houses, colleges and benevolent institutions from taxation. This much-desired and well-deserved legislation is being strenuously opposed by members of the Methodist ministry, assisted by the clergy and influential laity of other Protestant sects, who find themselves crippled financially and their philanthropy curtailed in consequence of the onerous taxes now placed upon every movement having for its object the exercise of religion, the spread of Christianity, the amelioration of poverty, the shelter of the orphan or the relief of the sick.

It is a loming disgrace that the statutes of California were ever enriched by such a scandalous ordinance by a law calculated to curtail the best and most generous instincts of charity in the human heart, for what man will bestowth an amount of money to erect a charitable institution when he knows that the land, the buildings, the supervision, and finally, the results, the orphans, the sick, the aged, will be taxed to the hundredth by the State and can be seized by the sheriff and sold for unpaid taxes!

Yet this is precisely the position of every Church and eleemosynary institution in this State, and it is to right this wrong that our separated brethren now seek this legislation—and the MONITOR heartily hopes that the efforts of our evangelical brethren may be crowned with success.

To the credit of the American people be it said, California is almost alone in the annals of Christendom in taxing churches and charitable institutions. Nowhere else, nearly all the States on the Atlantic shore help to save upon property used for public worship or public charity. North all the New England States also exempt such property. Missouri, Mississippi, Virginia, the Carolinas and all the Western States also exempt from taxation all property—whether held for church, school or charitable purposes—lying on the north of 36 and Nevada on the east—both exempt property held for educational, scientific, literary, charitable and religious purposes. Why, therefore, is Christianity curtailed and clamped by the oppressive Constitution of California?

From these facts it will be seen how difficiently Christianity, charity and philanthropy are treated in this State from the outset—by recognition they receive in other parts of the Union. We hope, therefore, when this proposed amendment comes before the voters of this State that it will receive the endorsement of a large majority of the people.

The Catholic Church is forced to pay taxes on every foot of land in use for God's worship, on every church, orphanage, asylum, hospital and school. Yet there is not a single building of this character in California that does not save the State from one to two thousand dollars a year. It costs about $500 each—exclusive of the expense of purchasing land and erecting buildings—to educate children in the public schools, yet the Catholic schools in this State contain not less than ten thousand children, all of whom are educated without costing the State a dollar! Let us, in simplicity, otherwise, if only Catholic institutions did not exist, there would have to be at least $500,000 added to the State taxes, to drain upon the public treasury for public school purposes. Besides this, at least another $500,000 would have to be expended in the purchase of land and the erection of additional school houses—not to accommodate the ten thousand children for which Catholic churches are nobly taxed in order to educate them free. The injustice of this state of things must be apparent to every reasonable mind. It is fair play and who takes to see the best interests of Christian human nature hanged by laws with oppressive and unjust bias.

Bishop Gross on Labor.

The Right Rev. Stephen Vincent Ryan, Bishop of Buffalo, has written a very strong Pastoral Letter, which was read in all the churches of the Diocese last Sunday week.

Labor and capital—the Bishop says—the working classes and monopoly are at war with each other, for even hundred and impal treatment at the present time. We are yet no one can fail to see where sympathy lies—it is where it ever has been and will be forever affection. False sons desert for a time their mother, the Church, for worldly loss, may now, as in days past, rise up against her and make slaves of the Church. The loss is all theirs. Like a true and loyal mother, she will mourn over the lost sons, but without murmuring. She will bring on—as of her divine message.

"Honest and industrious workingmen, the loss and shame of the nation, the Church honors you; yours your right to combine peacefully to secure the amelioration of your condition, an equitable share of the profits of your hard labor, a just remuneration for your daily toil, to maintain your wives and families in decency and reasonable comfortably, in homes where the rational children of God may be the comfort of your leisure hours. . . . . If there shall be any combination in our city, now through your own careful folly, because of lely we have prayed you abjuring, the union that ends you propose to yourselves or the unjust employers, we will attempt your peace. But should you, in spite of her warnings fly in the face of divine law, after a time accepting the extend away by sin and social, shameful, immoral, and irreligious theories, no matter by whom propounded or whom defended, you certainly may, as yet the Church's condemnation in any and state, leaving a monument as striking as the Babel's tower on the plains of Shinar, and of the supreme folly of looking to equal tion to the Almighty."

Rev Henry A. Brauns of New York has sent a letter to a local paper in Henry George's mayoralty campaign, in which he says that Mr. George's theory that private property in land is unjust, is not only contrary to the practice of the United States and the principles of the Catholic Church, but is repeated by every pope and in Ireland George's theory of the rights of property is taken from the Germans without Fidelity, "the nationalization of land" is from the English disciple Herbert Spencer, and the "unearned increment" theory is from another English disciple, John Stuart Mill. Not one of these lads ever has an Irish or a Catholic origin.

Rev. Mr. Brauns mentioned the case of a child patient who was brought to him jumping and prking with St Vitus dance. He asked the child's father if he had found there a geography or arithmetic. Here—of the United States, a "Protestant" Hygeian—whatever that may be and in spite of whatever he may have. His only wisdom, then, was that which had not been forewarned. Instead of St Vitus dance.

"She was using her brain capital and not her muscular capital, and, in consequence, "Intellectual handicaps are starting in the race of life, and the wonder is that the school master who forgets that children are not all equally developed in their right senses when they come to school, and who, in the name of intense mental exertion and sound and hold sets the child to work with the physical labor. How much better, then, than to have prevented the physical overtaxation of the brain, and prevented the physical exertion of the muscles, and the consequent disorder of the nervous system. From the very earliest age, the child's education is to proceed on knowledge, ... the education of the child is to take place in the perception organs, and the faculties of understanding and reason, and through the perception organs in the first year of childhood, and the child will know how much or a book until it is in the second year of childhood, and the child will know how many letters in the alphabet at three, and the child will know a multiplicity of studies at three, and the child will be able to look afterwards for his mistakes through the perception organs, and the child will be able to read at four years of age, and the child will be able to read at five years of age, and the child will be able to read at six years of age, and the child will be able to read at seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at ten years of age, and the child will be able to read at eleven years of age, and the child will be able to read at twelve years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at fourteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventeen years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at nineteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at twenty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at thirty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at forty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at fifty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at sixty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at seventy-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at eighty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at ninety-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ten years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eleven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twelve years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fourteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventeen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and nineteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ten years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eleven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twelve years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fourteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventeen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and nineteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventy-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ninety-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and ten years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eleven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twelve years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fourteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and seventeen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and eighteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and nineteen years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and twenty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and thirty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and forty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-six years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-seven years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-eight years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and fifty-nine years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-one years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-two years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-three years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-four years of age, and the child will be able to read at one hundred and sixty-five years of age, and the child will be able to read at one

Farm and Home.

A Talk with Young Men.

Observe that pale young fellow crossing the street. Not one a good many of that kind just now. Some folks say it is the climate. The truth is, that the climate of America, with a fair chance, produces not only the best complexions of the best health in the world.

Did you notice the thing he was carrying in his mouth? Well, it is that meerschaum that is doing the business for him. It is busy with three million of our men. Let us study one of those meerschaum smokers. We will take a young man. He shall have money and plenty of time for nothing. Pale, nervous, irritable, thin in the chest and stomach, weak in muscle, he is fast losing the power of thought and application. Let us get near enough to him to smell of him! Even the beast of prey will not touch the corpse of a sailor saturated with the vile poison. Nice boldfellow he for a sweet, pure companion.

Chewing is the mastest mode, stuffing ruins the vision, but smoking, among those who have time to be thorough, is most depressing.

Young K——, graduated at Harvard (no devotee of the weed has ever graduated with the highest honors that institution), and soon after consulted his physician with reference to his pale face, emaciation, indigestion, and low spirits. He weighed but one hundred and eight.

"Stop smoking," was the prescription. In four months he had increased twenty-eight pounds, and become clear and healthy in skin, his digestion all right, and his spirits restored. One or two million of our young and middle aged men are in a similar condition, and would be restored in health and spirits by the same prescription. On the whole, the cigar is worse than the pipe.—Home Science.

Christian Mothers Wanted.

Model mothers are of the first importance in molding the nature of a child. If we would have fine characters, we must constantly present before them fine models. Now the models are constantly before the child's eye is the mother. "One good mother," said George Herbert, "is worth a hundred school masters. In the home she is a load stone to all hearts and a load-star to all eyes." Imitation of her is constant—imitation which Bacon likens to a "globe of prospects." Its instruction, like teaching without words, often examplifying more than any tongue can teach. In the face of bad example the best precepts are of little avail. The example is followed not the precepts. Indeed, precepts at variance with practice is worse than useless, inasmuch as it only serves to teach that most cowardly of vices—hypocrisy. Even little children are judges of hypocrisy, and the hasocs of the parent who says one thing and does the opposite are quickly seen through.

Fresh Eggs Won't Swim.

"How do you tell whether an egg is fresh or not?" was asked of a Front street produce dealer yesterday.

The dealer picked out seven eggs, and dropped them into a tub of water. "That egg," he said, "which went plump to the bottom was laid to-day. Those two which stopped when they got to within two inches of the bottom were laid yesterday. Those two swimming around the middle were laid three days ago, that one on top, about a third out of water, is probably a week old; and that one standing up like a cork is old enough to be gray. They never get quite old enough to rise out of the water into the air. That water has two ounces of salt to every pint in it. But the only way to be sure of getting fresh eggs is to buy from the hens."

Two More Remedies.

The New York Sun publishes the following "by request":

Diphtheria—Take a string of soft-shell clams and bind them on the patient's throat. They will turn black and offensive. Apply again until relieved; only soft-shell clams.

Asthma—Take thirteen autumn, bore holes it them, string them, and wear as necklace, allowing them to reach as far down as the chest.

MAE DIXON.

A Happy Home.

In a happy home there will be no dull finding, overbearing spirit; there will be no peevishness or fretfulness. Unkindness will not dwell in the heart or be found on the tongue. Oh, the tone, the sighs, the wasting of life and health and strength, and of all that is most to be desired in a happy home, occasioned merely by unkind words. A celebrated writer remarks to this effect, namely, that fretting and scolding sore life tearing the flesh from the bones, and we have no more right to be guilty of this sin than we have to curse and swear and steal. In a happy home all selfishness will be removed. The members will not seek to please themselves, but will seek to please each other. Cheerfulness is another ingredient in a happy home. How much does a sweet smile, emanating from a heart fraught with love and kindness, contribute to make home happy. An evening how soothing is the sweet cheerfulness that is born on the countenance of a wife and mother! How do parent and child, the brother and sister, the mistress and servant, dwell with delight upon those sheerful looks that, these scolding smiles that beam from the eye and burst from the inmost soul of those who are dear and near. How it hastens the return of the father, lightens the cares of the mother, renders it more easy for youth to resist temptation, and drawn by the cords of affection, how it induces them with lowly hearts to return to the parental roof! Seek, then, to make home happy.

A Successful Economist.

It is really worth while for the wage-worker to save, although the process has become so unfashionable among more fixed incomes, that to follow it is regarded almost as a mark of eccentricity. The path to influence and independence for the toiler begins and steadily follows on the line of small economies applied in daily life.

Two years ago, in a Pennsylvania manufacturing town, a machinist went home one evening and said to his wife, "I'm tired of this work for others, and we'll turn over a new leaf. I get three dollars a day. Now we will put away ten dollars a week, and live on the rest. If we can't live on it we'll starve on it. He carried out his determination. In two years he had $1,000 in the bank. With this he began business for himself in a small way, capital was attracted by his energy, and now he is at the head of one of the largest manufacturing concerns of his section, rich, proper one and respected. What this man did was possible, of course, for one of strong resolve will and a fixed purpose were at that was needed after his determination became fixed. Why should not such an example attract the attention of other wage-workers, equally able and of like qualities? It is only the beginning that counts; after that the task of self elevation becomes easier each day.

—The most stubborn cases of dyspepsia and the bandanke yield to the life-imparting and living influence of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Try it.

Family Fun.

Not so Bully After All.

One day the troopers of Reddy's cavalry were about to go into battle, dismounted, leaving every fourth man to hold the horses. The man was drawn up to count from right to left. Of course, every fourth man fell jolly, and this is the way the count went on:

"Fifty."

"Two."

"Three."

"Bully!"

"One."

"Two."

"Three."

"Bully!"

Gen. Reddy, heard each fourth men call out "Bully!" His face flushed. When all had called off, he said:

"Numbers 1, 2, and bully will go into the fight as dismounted cavalry. No 3 will hold the horses."

An Interchange of Logic.

"How is this for logic?" remarked Mr. Sing. "A dog is an animal, so is a horse; therefore a dog is a horse."

"Good, very good" ejaculated Mr. Thump. "By the way, a dollar is money, so is a cent; therefore a cent is a dollar. Just take this copper, Mr. Sing, for the dollar I owe you."

Please Register.

Hotel clerk (to farmer)—Will you register, please?

Farmer—"Will I do what?"

Clerk—"Register, sign your name in this book."

Farmer—"Not much, young feller. Ya don't git me to sign my name on no paper. I ve been beat once, and that's enough."

A Child's Faith.

In a family of several children, one little three-year-old was busily watching all the rest at play. Mamma was sick, and all the children were going with ring dolls except Neddy. There wasn't one for him. Going to his mamma, he asked her permission to use the telephone. After ringing, he says, "Hello, Kinbaby!"

"Hallo!" came back the answer.

"Please give me heaven."

There was consternation in the exchange office for a moment, and then the answer was shouted back "All right; connected with heaven."

Neddy then said "Dear God, please make my mamma well, and send us another big baby, for we are one short, and I can't play with the children.

This is an actual fact."

He Married a Modern Belle.

Customer—Have you any corned beef? Fancy Grocer—Best kind, Mr. ——; any thing else!

"Any canned tongue already boiled?"

"Yes."

"Canned chicken, already cooked?"

"Yes."

"Let's see. They don't put up boiled hasheesh, do they?"

"Oh, no."

"Not roast beef?"

"No."

"By the way, what are these; lock like fried potatoes.

"That's what they are—Saratoga chips."

"Well, I'll take a bushel of them. Hello! What's that?"

"Canned corned beef hash."

"Just the thing. Gimme a lot of it. Got any bake meat?"

"Yes. Boston baked beans; three different brands."

"Let's see what else there is here. How are these used?"

"Those are soup essences, and used nothing but thinning with hot water.

"Well, I'll try those, and throw in a lot of other things you think good, no matter what, only be thy're cooked. I'm tired of starving."

"Is your mother sick, Mr. ——?"

"No, she's well, but I don't live with her now. I'm married."

Not Very Polite.

Mrs. Hendricks (the landlady)—Can I give you some more soup, Mr. Dumley?

Mr. Dumley—No, thanks.

Mrs. Hendricks (congingly)—You'll refuse, Mr. Dumley, because it isn't considered good form to be helped twice to soup.

Mr. Dumley—Oh, etiquette has nothing to do with it, madam; it's the soup.

Where He Was Great.

Miss Duffy—I hear that you are engaged to young Bobbie, Mr. Plumber.

Miss Puffy—It is a fact, Jane.

I hear he always struck me as being a cold, callous creature.

"Well, Jane, I confess that he does not do very much sobbing, but in billing he cannot be surpassed."

One Society He Had Forgotten.

"John, I would like to invite in my friend, Mrs. Healizy, this evening. Will you be able to be in?"

"No, my dear, I must attend the meeting of the Ancient Order of Foresters tonight."

"Well, to-morrow evening?"

"I have the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and you know——"

"What about Wednesday evening?"

"Oh, the Odd Fellows meet that night, and on Thursday I have a meeting of the Knights of Labor to attend; on Friday the Good Templars and Temperance; on Saturday there's a special meeting of the Maccabee lodge, and I couldn't miss that, and then Sunday night—let me see—what is there on Sunday night, my dear?"

"The Grand and Ancient Order of Christian Fatherhood."

"Why, I had forgotten. Am I a member of that—let me see——"

"But you have forgotten another society, John, of which you were once a member."

"What's that?"

"Your wife's."

Something to Remember.

A mother had reproved her little girl for being so rough as to drop a dish, and the little girl, after a thoughtful silence, said:

"Mamma, can you write with your left hand?"

"I could if I want left-handed, but I'm not."

"Well," said the little girl, "I guess little children are left-handed all over."

Surprising Ignorance.

"Young man," he said in solemn tones, "don't you realize that if you persist in drinking you will never get ahead in this world?"

"Won't get ahead!" repeated the young man. "Why, my dear sir, your ignorance surprises me. I have a head on me to-morrow morning as big as a barrel."

Oneipha.

"Brown's Bronchial Troches" are used with advantage in Asthmatic Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness and Bronchial Affections. Old only to boxes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

THE GENTLE, YET EFFECTUAL ACTION OF this great and celebrated Medicine, have rendered it the favorite family medicine.

It is recommended should be without it. It prevents as well as cures Torpid Liver, Headaches, Nausea, Bile, Colic, Indigestion, Constipation, Fevers, Sleeplessness, Languorous, Foul Breath, and over dozen troubles so aggravated by a disordered stomach.

It has no equal as a Preventive Medicine: No matter what the attack, a dose of it will afford relief and in a dozen cases will effect a speedy cure. Over one hundred testimonials by thousands of people have endorsed it as

THE BEST FAMILY MEDICINE

COAL OIL!

NOTICE.

Unscrupulous competitors having circulated the report that I had sold out my business, I hereby give notice to the public and my customers that such report is ABSOLUTELY FALSE. I have not sold out, neither have I any intention of so doing.

IRVINE GRAHAM,

Fifth, Channel and Berry Sts.

WARD & CO.'S
Male and Female
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.
606 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.
Telephone No. 767.

ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST CLASS HOTEL Girls, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Barrel Hands, Gardeners, Cooks, and Married Couples for private families and ranches. Also, good reliable Female Help, without any charge to employer. Initial setting room for cooks at 606 Clay street.

JOHN F. LYONS,
NOTARY PUBLIC
—AND—
Commissioner of Deeds
For all the States and Territories.
OFFICE: 418 Montgomery St.
Residence, - - 1113 Folk St.
San Francisco, California.

Acknowledgments and Depositions taken at any time or place. Affidavits and Contracts of all kinds taken and Legal Documents carefully drawn.

WE WANT YOU! A live energetic man or woman in every county to represent and distribute our publications. Liberal salary and expenses paid. Address, STANDARD DISTRIBUTING CO., BOSTON, MASS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

H. M. NEWHALL & CO.,
OFFICE: 309 & 311 Sansome St.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Shipping and Commission Merchants.
Agents for Growers and Manufacturers.
Charterers of Vessels for all Trades.
Agents for the Mexican Phosphate and Sulphur Co's Products.
General Insurance Agents.

Correspondence with the Chief Cities of the United States, Europe, Australia, India, China and the Islands Ports of the Pacific, purchase goods and sell Californian Products in those countries.

General Agents for the Pacific Coast
—OF—
National Assurance Company
OF IRELAND
Capital, - - - - - - $5,000,000
Atlas Assurance Company
OF LONDON
Capital, - - - - - - $6,000,000
Boylston Insurance Company
OF BOSTON, MASS.
Capital and Surplus, - - - $710,000

PATENTS THOS. P. SIMPSON, Washington, D. C. Established 1869. Advice and Circulars free. Unsuccessful cases not charged for. Reference Boston Office.

D. MENCARINI,
911 Mission St.
San Francisco, Cal.
Manufacturer and Importer of
RELIGIOUS STATUARY,
ETC
Suitable for Churches, Convent Chapels, Academy Schools, Etc.
THE ONLY COMPLETE COLLECTION ON THE PACIFIC COAST
Catalogue sent free on application

RAILROADS.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD.
"THE OVERLAND SHORT LINE."
COMMENCING SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1886, AND until further notice, Boats and Trains will leave from and arrive at the Pleasant Passenger Depot, Market Street Wharf, as follows:

Leave S. F.	Destination	Arrive S. F.
9:00 a.m.	Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Healdsburg, Lytton, Geyserville, Cloverdale	6:00 p.m.
3:30 p.m.	Cloverdale	10:45 a.m.

Stages connect at Santa Rosa for Sebastopol, at Lytton for Lytton Springs, at Geyserville for Skaggs Springs, at Cloverdale for Ukiah, Geyserville, Soda Bay, Lakeport, Bartlett Springs, Highland Springs, Kelseyville, Carlotta, Kesick, Bonesteel, Howard, Middletown, Oil and the Geysers.

EXCURSION TICKETS good for Sundays only—to Petaluma, $1; to Santa Rosa, $1.50; to Healdsburg, to Cloverdale, $4.50; to Ukiah, $5.50.

From San Francisco to Point Tiburon—Week Days—8:00 a.m., 10:30 a.m., 3:45 p.m., 5:00 p.m., 6:15 p.m., 11:00 p.m. Sundays—8:00 a.m., 10:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m., 5:00 p.m., 6:15 p.m., 11:00 p.m.

To San Francisco from Point Tiburon—Week Days—7:20 a.m., 8:20 a.m., 11:50 a.m., 2:55 p.m., 4:30 p.m., 5:45 p.m., 10:30 p.m. Sundays—8:20 a.m., 10:50 a.m., 1:50 p.m., 4:30 p.m., 5:45 p.m., 10:30 p.m.

PETER J. MOLYNEN, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agt.
H. C. WHITING, Superintendent.
Ticket offices at Ferry, 222 Montgomery Street and No. 1 Market Street.

San Francisco & North Pacific R. R.

"THE DESERT'S PRICELESS GIFT TO CITY."
COMMENCING SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1886, AND until further notice, Boats and Trains will leave and arrive at the Pleasant Passenger Depot, Market Street Wharf, as follows:

Leave S. F.	Destination	Arrive S. F.
8:00 a.m.	Sonoma, Glen Ellen	6:15 p.m.
4:00 p.m.	Sonoma, Glen Ellen	10:45 a.m.

Stages connect at Sonoma for Boyes Springs, at Glen Ellen for Kenwood, Glen Oak, Glen Ellen, Oakmont, Melita, Madrone, Glen Springs, Kenwood, Yulupa, Santa Rosa Springs, Mark West Springs, Mirabel Heights, Fulton, Windsor, Healdsburg, Lytton Springs, Geyserville, Cloverdale, Stewarts Point, Skaggs Springs, Ukiah, Lakeport, Bartlett Springs, Highland Springs, Kelseyville, Carlotta, Kesick, Bonesteel, Howard, Middletown, Oil and the Geysers.

SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.
8.15 A.M. Sonoma only, from Washington street corner of Water and Davis streets, Saturdays only, for round trip. Round Trip Tickets to Sonoma, $1 00; to Glen Ellen, $1 25.

PETER J. MOLYNEN, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agt.
H. C. WHITING, Superintendent.
Ticket Offices at Ferry, 222 Montgomery street, and No. 1 Foot Montgomery street.

QUICK TIME AND EXPEDITION
To Eastern and European Cities
via the Great Transcontinental Air-line Route
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY,
Daily Express and Emigrant Trains make prompt connections with the several Railway Lines in the East.
PASSENGERS
New York & New Orleans
with the utmost Summer speed.
TO ALL EUROPEAN PORTS.
PULLMAN PALACE SLEEPING CARS attached to Overland Express Trains
THIRD-CLASS SLEEPING CARS
are not daily with Overland Emigrant Trains.
Reasonable charges for Berths in Third-class Cars. Tickets sold, Sleeping-car Berths secured, and other information upon application at the Company's offices, where pamphlets of Rates, Routes and Sailings of Steamships may be obtained.
RAILROAD LANDS
For Sale on Reasonable Terms.
W. H. MILES, Land Agent, No. 1 P. S. N. P. R. R.
A. N. TOWNE, General Manager.
E. P. ROGERS, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agt.
No. 1 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Show this copy at the MONITOR to your Catholic friends and neighbors, and ask them to subscribe. Only $2 a year when paid in advance

DR. PEIRO'S OXYGEN TREATMENT
For the relief and cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hay Fever, Catarrh, Nervous Prostration, Etc. Send stamp for Circular, or inclosing back of this paper, Four Cents for Postage, and receive a Valuable Medical Work on Compound Oxygen, or Oxygen by direct inhalation, with full information and testimonials. Address
DR. PEIRO, 1032 GRAND OPERA HOUSE, CHICAGO, ILL.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ONLY COMPLETE, CORRECT AND AUTHORIZED EDITION.
SADLIERS' Catholic Directory, Almanac and Ordo for 1887
Fifty-fifth Annual Publication.
Now in press, and within ready early in January, the Catholic Directory, Almanac and Ordo for 1887, containing full statistics of the various Dioceses in the United States, Canada, Great Britain and Ireland, Australia, West Indies, Brazil, Mexico, Germany, Austria, etc. Every report comes from the highest authority in the Diocese.
PRICES.
Paper cover, - - $1.25. Bound in Cloth, 1.50
The Ordo or Catholic Directory for 1887, contains all the Dioceses to be hereafter in the United States and Canada, Bishops.
Paper Cover, - .50 Bound in Cloth, .75
For Sale by all Booksellers.
D. & J. SADLIER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
31 and 33 Barclay St., New York.
SADLIERS'
Catalogued at Standard Catholic Publishers
Including their famous Household Library cheap, popular priced series of Catholic Standards to be found in Altars, manual free upon application

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,
PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
648 MARKET STREET
1165 MARKET ST.
LAUNDRY,
12th St. bet. Folsom and Howard S. F. Cal

WESTERN HOTEL,
212-14 Broadway Street.
JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor
(Late Broadway Hotel.)

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

THE CELEBRATED
SOHMER PIANOS
Are Unequaled in Tone, Touch and Durability.
Organs, Pianos—Best medium priced piano for the money.
BYRON MAYZ, Sole Agent,
202 Market Street, next door 1 X L S. F.

BEST PIANOS.
Antiseil.
Dunham.
Shoninger.
Schuman & Sons
Billings & Co.
Standard.
Cable.
Steinway.
Knabe.
Chickering.
Steck. Weber.
Antiseil Pianos Exceptional highest award area 200 makers.
All Pianos sold by us guaranteed—for 7 years. Rented by half a million dollars capital.
CALL ON
T. M. Antiseil Piano Co.
7th and Market Sts., (O. P. Hall.)

KNABE
PIANOS
Unqualified and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World.
A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 116 Dupont St., S. F.
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

ESTEY PIANOS
Superior in Tone and Finish.
UNEXCELLED IN DURABILITY.
BENJ. CURTAZ & SON,
Agents,
20, 0 Farrell Street, San Francisco

-EDUCATIONAL.

Academy of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary,
WOODLAND, - - - CAL.
THE ACADEMY SITUATED IN THE TOWN OF WOODLAND, IS NOW THE 14th YEAR of its existence. The Holy Cross from Notre Dame, Indiana, established in 1872, by the Sisters of Notre Dame, is beautifully situated in the locality and pleasant and healthy in climate. Its course of study is that of the Academies of the Sisterhood, and includes all the branches of a thorough education, from the primary to the graduating class, inclusive. The course of instruction continued during the entire year, without interruption.
Instrumental Music and Modern Languages are taught by competent Professors.
REFERENCE FOR TERMS PATRONAGE IN ADVANCE
Boarding (Tuition Board including Bed and Bedding, washing) Tuition in English, German, French, Latin and Greek, per month, $20 00
SEMI-ANNUAL.
Piano, with use of instrument and lessons, half term, $20 00
Harp, " " " " " " " 20 00
Drawing, " " " " " " " 10 00
Painting in Water Colors and on China, " " " " " " " 10 00
Painting in Oil, " " " " " " " 10 00
Use of Philosophical Apparatus, " " " " " " " 5 00
For further information apply to the SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME, Woodland, Cal.

ACADEMY OF OUR LADY OF LOURDES,
EAST OAKLAND, CAL.
THIS ACADEMY CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS of Notre Dame, is pleasantly situated in the Town of Oakland, one hour's ride from San Francisco. The attractive year commences in July, and ends in May, of each scholastic year.
TERMS
(Per quarter, payable in advance.)
Board and Tuition, - - - - - $60 00
Washing, - - - - - - - - - 10 00
Music, vocal and instrumental, Drawing, Painting, Fancy Work, and Private Elocution, forms no extra charge. Singing and Drawing in class are taught free of charge.
Using in class, Drawing, French, Fancy and Ornamental Needlework, forms no extra charge.
DAY ACADEMY
Terms per month, in advance:
Senior Class, - - - - - - - $ 12 00
Intermediate Class, - - - - - 10 00
Primary Class, - - - - - - - 8 00
Music (Instrument belonging to the pupil), - - - 10 00
Music (Instrument belonging to the Academy), - - 5 00
Use of Philosophical Apparatus, - - - - - - - 1 00
For further particulars address:
COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
San Jose

ST. CERTRUDE'S ACADEMY,
RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL.
THIS ACADEMY OFFERS A PLEASANT HOME UNDER the direction of the Sisters of Mercy, in beautifully situated District of Rio Vista, Solano County, Contra Costa and Sacramento Rivers. The location is remarkably healthy, and the buildings are well adapted to the purpose. The course of studies is that of the Academies of the Sisterhood, and includes all the branches of a thorough education, from the primary to the graduating class, inclusive. The course of instruction continued during the entire year, without interruption.
Instrumental Music and Modern Languages are taught by competent Professors.
REFERENCE FOR TERMS PATRONAGE IN ADVANCE
Boarding (Tuition Board including Bed and Bedding, washing) Tuition in English, German, French, Latin and Greek, per month, $20 00
SEMI-ANNUAL.
Piano, with use of instrument and lessons, half term, $20 00
Harp, " " " " " " " 20 00
Drawing, " " " " " " " 10 00
Painting in Water Colors and on China, " " " " " " " 10 00
Painting in Oil, " " " " " " " 10 00
Use of Philosophical Apparatus, " " " " " " " 5 00
For further information apply to the SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME, Woodland, Cal.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME
MARYSVILLE, CALIFORNIA.
Studies will be Resumed Aug. 29th
THIS INSTITUTION, ESTABLISHED IN 1851, is chartered by the State Legislature, and endowed with all the rights and privileges of similar institutions throughout the State.
Reference required. For terms and particulars address
COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
Marysville, Cal.

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE
SANTA CLARA, - - - - CALIFORNIA
This Institution was founded in 1851, and in 1862 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It occupies six large buildings, with extensive shady play-grounds, covered gymnasiums, swimming pool, etc. It possesses a most complete Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has also, practical schools of Mechanical Drawing, Telegraphy, Photography and Chemistry. Tuition for the latter, a new branch, dating 1884-85 has just been finished, that leaves nothing to be desired.
Diplomas are given in two departments the Classical and Scientific. The Classical course is based on the old Collegiate course.
While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our own language receives special attention. The daily exercises of the students in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly discussed and corrected in the class room.
TERMS:
(Payable, invariably in advance.)
Board, Tuition, Medical Attendance, Bedding, Washing, Washing or Mending, per term of Five Months $150 00
Half Boarders, - - - - - 60 00
Extra Charge for Music, - - - 50 00
Extra Charge for Mandolin and Drawing, - - - - - - - - -

INIQUITY OF ENGLISH LAW.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

it as a scandalous slight and slander put upon those all treated jurors. This outrage upon the Catholic body has been committed in the name of the Crown. It is all the more reprehensible when perpetrated under the high sounding forms of law.

Every one familiar with Irish history knows what meaning for Irish Catholics—for the poor Irish peasants in particular—the words loyalty "government," "law," and "justice" necessarily have. Take the nations directly opposed to what we Americans attach to the words government, justice, and law, and you have exactly the same which centuries of wrongdoing have burnt on the minds, the memories and the hearts of the Irish people. What this ultra-religious, ultra conservative, and exceedingly high-toned Government has done, is still doing, and threatens to do for the next twenty years, is not likely to change the centuries long of sentiments of the priests and people of Ireland.

Law here is a delusion and a mare. Justice means anarchy. Trial by jury, as far as a long experience goes, signifies a cunningly devised scheme for secretly placing the lives and liberties of the Catholic majority at the mercy of the pitiless Orange faction. Listen to Dr. MacCormack:

"I MAKE BOLD TO ARRAIGN THE CROWN before the bar of public opinion. Does the Crown think that there is such a creed and such the people of that creed loyal to the Crown? It is now fashionable to talk of agitators as nothing class against class. But what about the Crown acting class against class? A Woodford Catholic prisoner in Sligo does well his Catholic co-religionist jurors set aside by the Crown, and twelve non-Catholics called to try him. I say try, when the word correct is the one. Now how could that poor Papist prisoner have any confidence in the administration of justice and law? With the prisoner's recollections of the recent history of Belfast, how could he possibly feel that his liberty was safe in the hands of twelve picked Protestant jurors What are the records of jury packing in Omagh? Were twelve Catholic jurors picked out of the jury panel and to try the elder and junior Walkers, who were seen by the multitude taking their doubly sure at the head constable and soldier! No, no! An overwhelmingly Protestant jury—nay, an Orange jury was selected. That jury refused to convict, in the very teeth if the clearest and most contemptuous evidence! Nously to reject Catholic jurors in Sligo for men of the same true blue breed, is as unblushing a feat of audacity as any Crown official could perpetrate.

But, one may ask, how on earth on the rulers of this country be so blind as to look for loyalty among a people so spat upon?

Aye, indeed, and this is one of the mysteries of British misrule in Ireland, which Americans seem but to understand or to think of otherwise than sentimentally. Thus misrule has opened up a gulf between the original Celtic inhabitants and their Anglo Saxon rulers; and, as if the passions and prejudices of race were not powerful enough to separate them, the still more baleful and not less powerful passions and prejudices of creed have been used as auxiliaries.

THE RELIGIOUS WORK OF DIVISION.

We who in America live and work together in every walk of life, and even in the turbulent arena if party politics, without ever invoking the name of religion as a party or a political pretence, cannot understand the intense bitterness, which Orange fanaticism is officially encouraged to use to subjugate, oppress, and degrade the Catholic Celt of Ireland.

Thank God there does not exist in this Celtic Catholic breed, a single Bishop, a single priest, a single true-hearted and enlightened Catholic man or woman, who is not ready at any moment and in all emergencies to extend to the non-Catholic neighbor, even at the most unbounded toleration, the charities dictated by the deepest piety, but a full and unstinted participation in all the blessings of national independence and a common equality and brotherhood.

Dr. MacCormack has spoken what has deeper in the heart of Catholic Ireland. And looking to the long hopeless generations of the Irish heart, like that of the American, loves freedom for all men and for his own sake. It has lived liberty for more than a thousand years. It has suffered for it, struggled for it against all obstacles. Is the reward far off?

BERNARD O'REILLY.

RUMORS OF WAR.

Reports Received From European Capitals.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—It is reported that Lord Salisbury has received pacific advices from Sir E. H. Maier at Berlin and other British Ambassadors.

Three of the largest paper manufacturers in Germany have instructed their agents in England not to enter into fresh contracts for supplies of paper, because they have reason to believe that Bismarck is likely to be dead soon in consequence of war.

The Standard corresponding at St. Petersburg affects to know on good authority that there will be no war in Europe.

The Pall Mall Gazette asserts that England has practically decided to sell the Lee Americus rifle for the use of her army.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—Canada opened at 109 11-16 for both money and account. American and other foreign securities were firm to-day. The price of Canadian Pacific were slightly better. Consols closed at 100 11-16

PARIS, Feb. 7.—The numbers of the Etrenne Left have decided in favor of granting the request to General Boulanger's Military Organization Bill, with the view of drawing from Premier Goblet a statement regarding the political situation.

Le Pays expresses thankfulness because France is under a republican government. A King, says that journal, could never have brooked German insults.

The Spanish republican immigrants residing in France have decided to form a volunteer force of 2,000 men to assist France in the event of war with Germany

PARIS, Feb. 7.—Three per cent rentes fell to 78 francs 5 centimes, but advanced in the afternoon, and the official closing figure were 78 francs 35 centimes.

BERLIN, Feb. 7.—The Pontifical authorities are making extensive enquiries with a view of connecting the whole of Germany by telegraphs.

At a large meeting of electors held yesterday at Bonn, Judge Hass, a Catholic, who favors the septennate, was chosen as a candidate for the Reichstag.

—A few days ago, at Baltimore, Cardinal Gibbons, accompanied by Archbishop Ireland, McQuaids and Have, J. D. Mayr and Eugene A. Hanson of St. John's Church, visited the Little Sisters of the Poor at their institute, corner of Calvert and Biddle streets. The Cardinal made a brief address, in which he referred to the different institutes throughout the city. He feelingly referred to the Little Sisters of the Poor as being a veritable refuge for the aged poor. Monsignor McMaous also made a few remarks. The institute at present has 250 inmates and seventeen sisters.

—Rev. Patrick Corrigan, pastor of the Church of Our Lady of Grace, Hoboken, N. J., lately organized conference societies among the Catholic children in his parish. Over 125 of the school children are members of conference, and 200 young men in another number the name of St. Mary's Catholic Alliance pledged to refrain from the use of intoxicants and tobacco until they are 21 years of age, when a benefit of $100 from the reserve fund of the society will be given to each.

OUR PARCHIAL SCHOOLS.

January Roll of Honor.

ST. LOUIS ACADEMY OF MARY.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT—Maggie Bellis, Mary Bailie, Agnes Ward, Agnes Fitzsimmons, Kittie Wall, Nellie McDonough, Belle Murphy, Clara McWilliams, Sarah Sullivan, Florence Wilson, Mary McCarthy.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT—Sadie Hicks, Katie Dunn, Anna O'Connor, Nellie Hanley, Stella Connolly, Alice Burke, Elizabeth Gamble, Lena Cooney, Maggie Shang, Lillie Wilber, Maude Murphy, Nellie Bulfin.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT—Maggie Schmidt, Annie O'Connor, Maude Donnelly, Maude Wright, Bessie Downey, Lizzie O'Connor, Rose Kelly.

PRIMARY DEPARTMENT—Maude Carter, Maggie Roche, May Greer, Maude Cooney, Loretta Power, Josephine Kearney, Maggie Kearney, Hannah Ahl, Annie Mahlen, Mamie Flood, Lizzie Hasse, Agnes Slattery, Hattie Shea, Lizzie Cooney, Maggie Shang, Lillie Wilber, Maude Gilbreath.

PRIMARY DEPARTMENT—Alice Keegan, Agnes Keegan, Annie Kears, Annie Quinn, Cecelia O'Connor, Katie Mahlen, Mamie Cooney, Lizzie Redmond, Maude Reed.

GRAMMAR GRADES PARCHIAL SCHOOL.—Madden 96, N. Keamy 94, M. Clancy 92, A. Mulrenin 94, L. Hoban 93, M. Kelly 93, K. Ward 93, M. Ward 93, M. Mullin 90, M. Morton 90, J. Obrien 90, H. Collins 90, M. Counihan 90, M. Mullin 90, T. Collins 90, A. Mahoney 90, J. Campbell 90, Burke 78, K. Obrien 93, M. Murphy 78, K. Cunningan 78, J. Hanson 78, A. Ward 78, S. Tessier 78, K. Malone 92, M. Tessier 92, L. Morgan 92, M. Lapsley 92, M. Ward 92, A. Miles 93, C. Madden 93, M. Carroll 93, Bailey 93, M. Lynch 93, M. Ward 93, M. Mullin 93, E. Hagans 93, A. Hickal 93, M. Kelly 93, M. Madden 93, N. Pursner 93, M. Burke 93, M. Crawford 93, E. Maloney 93, N. Pillibos 93, M. Wash 93, L. Fogarty 93.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.

The prize-roster obtained by the pupils of the College of Notre Dame, San Jose, during the month of January, is as follows:

First Class—Misses A. Pollock 98, M. Watts 98, M. Geary 96, J. Foster 95, J. Flynn 94, M. F. O'Neil 93, Jessie Foster 92, F. Geary 92, T. Murphy 92, M. A. Neil 92, A. Wynne 92, Tom Pollock 92, Ida Smith 90, M. A. Kennedy 92, V. Callaghan 89, M. Ryan 89, M. Lynch 89, M. Lynch 89, M. Brennell 89.

SECOND CLASS.—M. Pierce 97, J. Bernhard 95, F. O'Neil 96, F. Sullivan 94, M. A. O'Neil 94, A. McCormick 90, J. Quinn 87, J. Stanley 85, M. Mullen 82.

THIRD GRADE CLASS.—Mary Cronin 97, Mary Flynn 96, Jane Hanley 95, Annie Sullivan 95, Mabel Green 95, Sarah F. Boyle 94, Marion Pritchard 90, Pauline Mahon 85, Mamie Lynch 82, Blanche Loughran, 80.

FOURTH GRADE CLASS.—Nellie Jones 96, Agnes O'Neill 95, Katie Hicks 94, Mary Callaghan 94, Clara O'Brien 93, Katie Bray 92, Lizzie Keyes 85, May Somers 78, Pauline Hellman 75.

FIFTH GRADE CLASS.—C. Spaulding 94, C. Cuneo 91, M. Walsh 90, E. Hoagland 90, Sweeny 86, E. Cronin 85, Mamie Lynch 85, Gardiner 81, Sullivan 80, M. McGlynn 79, A. Brennan 79, M. Brennan 78, A. Eckler 78, Ag. Noon 78, E. Conte 77, A. Barry 76, M. Golden 75, M. McGuire 74, E. Kirk 73, C. Leibert 71, M. Mooney 69, S. McCluskey 66, M. Riley 66, Esther 62, N. Alexander 62.

SECOND GRADE CLASS.—A. Hickok 90, Mg. Dwyer 89, Mel. Kimm 87, F. Gilfoy 87, E. Cooney 86, Mat. Donahue 84, A. Green 83, M. Harrington 83, Ethel Bruns 83, Jessie Foster 83, Harrington 81, E. Robinson 77, T. Culligan 77, M. Hogan 76, H. Donahue 74, E. Sullivan 74, M. Hayward 72, M. Cunningham 72, N. White 72, N. Mullen 72, Annie Hellman 72, Ida Green 5, A. Estabillo 67, L. Bradley 67, M. Tyrrell 66, E. Ryan 66.

THIRD GRADE.—Lizzie Keyes 97, M. Rios 95, J. Donnelly 95, Alice Donnelly 95, Belle Rios 95, Annie Lynch 95, E. Maguire 95, Mollina 74, L. Baker 74, A. Bailey 73, E. Fachenet 67, Bernhard 66, M. Donovan 65, E. Ahern 63, N. Ryan 61, M. Lackey 61, A. Estabillo 60, M. White 52, M. Donovan 52.

FOURTH GRADE.—K. Smith 96, L. McGlynn 95, M. Ryan 95, M. Mahon 78, C. Cubbin 77, Sarah Boyle 94, Marion Pritchard 90, Pauline Mahon 85, Mamie Lynch 82, Blanche Loughran, 80.

FIFTH GRADE.—Nellie Jones 96, Agnes O'Neill 95, Katie Hicks 94, Mary Callaghan 94, Clara O'Brien 93, Katie Bray 92, Lizzie Keyes 85, May Somers 78, Pauline Hellman 75.

FIRST GRAMMAR CLASS.—C. Spaulding 94, C. Cuneo 91, M. Walsh 90, E. Hoagland 90, Sweeny 86, E. Cronin 85, Mamie Lynch 85, Gardiner 81, Sullivan 80, M. McGlynn 79, A. Brennan 79, M. Brennan 78, A. Eckler 78, Ag. Noon 78, E. Conte 77, A. Barry 76, M. Golden 75, M. McGuire 74, E. Kirk 73, C. Leibert 71, M. Mooney 69, S. McCluskey 66, M. Riley 66, Esther 62, N. Alexander 62.

SECOND GRADE CLASS.—A. Hickok 90, Mg. Dwyer 89, Mel. Kimm 87, F. Gilfoy 87, E. Cooney 86, Mat. Donahue 84, A. Green 83, M. Harrington 83, Ethel Bruns 83, Jessie Foster 83, Harrington 81, E. Robinson 77, T. Culligan 77, M. Hogan 76, H. Donahue 74, E. Sullivan 74, M. Hayward 72, M. Cunningham 72, N. White 72, N. Mullen 72, A. Schmitz 71, K. Dwyer 69, A. Estabillo 67, L. Bradley 67, M. Tyrrell 66, E. Dodd 59, M. Jones 52.

THIRD GRADE CLASS.—F. Kears 97, M. Rios 95, J. O'Neill 95, M. McKenna 95, C. Cubbin 95, Belle Rios 95, Annie Lynch 95, E. McGlynn 74, L. Baker 74, A. Bailey 73, E. Fachenet 67, Bernhard 66, M. Donovan 65, E. Ahern 63, N. Ryan 61, M. Lackey 61, A. Estabillo 60, L. Mahoney 56, M. Donovan 52.

FOURTH GRADE.—K. Smith 96, L. McGlynn 95, M. Ryan 95, M. Mahon 78, C. Cubbin 77, Sarah Boyle 94, Marion Pritchard 90, Pauline Mahon 85, Mamie Lynch 82, Blanche Loughran, 80.

FIFTH GRADE.—Nellie Jones 96, Agnes O'Neill 95, Katie Hicks 94, Mary Callaghan 94, Clara O'Brien 93, Katie Bray 92, Lizzie Keyes 85, May Somers 78, Pauline Hellman 75.

FIRST GRAMMAR CLASS.—C. Spaulding 94, C. Cuneo 91, M. Walsh 90, E. Hoagland 90, Sweeny 86, E. Cronin 85, Mamie Lynch 85, Gardiner 81, Sullivan 80, M. McGlynn 79, A. Brennan 79, M. Brennan 78, A. Eckler 78, Ag. Noon 78, E. Conte 77, A. Barry 76, M. Golden 75, M. McGuire 74, E. Kirk 73, C. Leibert 71, M. Mooney 69, S. McCluskey 66, M. Riley 66, Esther 62, N. Alexander 62.

SECOND GRADE CLASS.—A. Hickok 90, Mg. Dwyer 89, Mel. Kimm 87, F. Gilfoy 87, E. Cooney 86, Mat. Donahue 84, A. Green 83, M. Harrington 83, Ethel Bruns 83, Jessie Foster 83, Harrington 81, E. Robinson 77, T. Culligan 77, M. Hogan 76, H. Donahue 74, E. Sullivan 74, M. Hayward 72, M. Cunningham 72, N. White 72, N. Mullen 72, A. Schmitz 71, K. Dwyer 69, A. Estabillo 67, L. Bradley 67, M. Tyrrell 66, E. Dodd 59, M. Jones 52.

ST. ROSES PARCHIAL SCHOOL.

FIRST DEPARTMENT, 2nd class.—Mary Dean, Lizzie Duffy, Rose Mooney, Annie Mooney, Lizzie Dwyer, Annie Cunningham 87, Nellie Smith 85, Katie Kane 85, Mary Ward 85, Ella Fitzgerald 85, Annie Ward 85, Mary Cooney 85.

SECOND CLASS.—M. Pierce 97, J. Bernhard 95, F. O'Neil 96, F. Sullivan 94, M. A. O'Neil 94, A. McCormick 90, J. Quinn 87, J. Stanley 85, M. Mullen 82.

THIRD GRADE CLASS.—Mary Cronin 97, Mary Flynn 96, Jane Hanley 95, Annie Sullivan 95, Mabel Green 95, Sarah F. Boyle 94, Marion Pritchard 90, Pauline Mahon 85, Mamie Lynch 82, Blanche Loughran, 80.

FOURTH GRADE CLASS.—Nellie Jones 96, Agnes O'Neill 95, Katie Hicks 94, Mary Callaghan 94, Clara O'Brien 93, Katie Bray 92, Lizzie Keyes 85, May Somers 78, Pauline Hellman 75.

FIFTH GRADE CLASS.—C. Spaulding 94, C. Cuneo 91, M. Walsh 90, E. Hoagland 90, Sweeny 86, E. Cronin 85, Mamie Lynch 85, Gardiner 81, Sullivan 80, M. McGlynn 79, A. Brennan 79, M. Brennan 78, A. Eckler 78, Ag. Noon 78, E. Conte 77, A. Barry 76, M. Golden 75, M. McGuire 74, E. Kirk 73, C. Leibert 71, M. Mooney 69, S. McCluskey 66, M. Riley 66, Esther 62, N. Alexander 62.

SECOND GRADE CLASS.—A. Hickok 90, Mg. Dwyer 89, Mel. Kimm 87, F. Gilfoy 87, E. Cooney 86, Mat. Donahue 84, A. Green 83, M. Harrington 83, Ethel Bruns 83, Jessie Foster 83, Harrington 81, E. Robinson 77, T. Culligan 77, M. Hogan 76, H. Donahue 74, E. Sullivan 74, M. Hayward 72, M. Cunningham 72, N. White 72, N. Mullen 72, A. Schmitz 71, K. Dwyer 69, A. Estabillo 67, L. Bradley 67, M. Tyrrell 66, E. Dodd 59, M. Jones 52.

THE WEEK'S NEWS FROM IRELAND

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ANTRIM.—Mr. McNaghten, Q.C., M.P., has been appointed one of the Law and Appeal Judges for the Supreme Court for North America.

A number of names have been mentioned for the vacant Bench of North Antrim. Lord Ardilaun's name is spoken of for Director Treasury.

BANGOR.—Mr. Nicholas S. Darcy, of Newcastle West, popularly known as the most notorious land grabber in the County Limerick, has been discovered in the County Cork. Regrettable of West Riding of the County Cork.

MAYO.—On January 12th, Mr. Cuzzo, M. Mr. Mr. Mr

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE UNFORGOTTEN ONE.

("Blessed are they who have passed from the grief and care and pain of this life, into the land of the unseen! In their sorrow too."—St. Augustine.)

Our Father, when Thy Angel touch
Have, stepping from Heaven's golden dome,
Resolve the mourner's latest breath
And bears the faithful spirit home.
Love still with fond and close embrace
Clasps the pale form, the empty shrine,
Whose sound is fair angelic grace
The soul sound with Thy and divine.
And in that hour of woe sensitive,
While bitter tears of anguish fall,
When earthly comfort is a dream,
To Thee the sorrow mourners call;
For near to every wounded heart,
Thy Angel Thy healing stands,
And Faith and Hope their balm impart,
And heavenward point with lifted hands.
To Thee through swift ascending hours
What pleading prayers as incense rise
Pure remains of bright celestial flowers
Gemmed with the dews of Angelic Eve.
The Mourner's palm sublime,
The reaches grand and solemn strain,
And comfort in that dreary time,
The Lord fulfil all sweet prayer;
Then when with grief beyond control,
Their treasure sets earth they yield
Which, giving great joy upon her, observed
Dwells safe beneath Thy mercy's shield.
See by pain, and day by day,
Petitions ante-Thee are poured,
As friends and kindred fondly pray—
Have mercy, have mercy, Lord!

Then when bird tones of sorrow true,
The first and mouth is told and o'er,
With harvest and dark lovely years
To Thee their pleadings more and more,
For let from many an altar fair,
Some up to Thee by Angel hands,
Thy Gift to man, Love's Treasure rare,
Offered by saints and Martyrs dear
As Sacrifice to Thee, O Lord,
Is refuge for the soul so dear,
To which their spirit turn in need
The guardian of her labors here—
The guardian of her years of toil
And counsels sure and thought for youth,
Within whose spirits fertile soil
Has sowed his priceless seeds of Truth.

And they who weep a true friend's loss,
Who prized her friendship, knew her care,
Who have 'neath parting's cruel Cross,
At Holy Mass, in daily prayer,
Will lift their voices unto Thee
For her whose name their memories keep;
O then would she remembered be
In their intention morn and deep,
Thus love anything still shall bend
Their hearts in bonds whose blest materials
Will lead them another reward to find
To the "Communion of the Saints,"
Till in Thy heaven of joy we shall
The parted ones shall meet once in ev.
Where all is joy and peace and love
Oh Heaven's own bright eternal abode.

MARCELLA A. FITZGERALD.
Mossy Woodland, 1887.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE BEREAVED HEIR.

Oh! Emerald Isle, ever green,
Nature's conservatory there is seen—
Everywhere!
Home deep in beauties grand,
Home up over a blight land,
Home are now a blight land,
In the cause of right.
In sadness and gloom
In a glorious fight
Against the night
Of the heartless lord
Who robs their board
Of everything that's there.

Oh! blighted land, your misery astounds,
Where the rich are poor and poverty abound—
Everywhere!
Your sigh is like unto a funeral death,
Your cry is heard in civilized earth,
Your sigh is answered in Spain with
At people ground down
In prelude and tears,
To satisfy the crown
That the spirit is dead
In the Lamp of your deep cloud—
Everywhere!

But be of good cheer and never fear,
The day of deliverance will soon be here;
There!
Were'nigh ahead, if few of us there;
We're united by the whatever's our fare;
We're selfish, perhaps, but fate is hope
For companions in disease,
Hunger's pangs to suppress,
And bring to relief
That for hundreds of years
Have made sorrow and tears—
Everywhere!

Irishmen forward—man to a man!
Powerful the spirit of help to a clan;
Rise forth Irish Americans from your plentiful board,
And help to relieve Erin of this tyrannical horde.

T. F. D.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MOTHER'S PRAYER.

At night when the lamps are lighted,
And the fire burns cheery and bright,
There's a dear little one—no sleepy—
Comes to bid Mamma—"Good Night."

Oh she carries her full fun after
The coverlid, white, and warm,
I pray God to watch over her
And keep her from all harm.

And I sigh, and tremble to think
That in years that are to come
The little feet, and the golden head,
Will no more brighten our home.

It may be, I will be sleeping
My last long quiet sleep,
And she may be giving another
Her dear love, warm and deep.

At night when the lamps are lighted,
Miss may be burning above;
May O of let it shine, a guiding star,
To lead her to His love;

Whatever of throes or throbs
Are fated to the dim cold sod,
Mother up there would be gathering
Flowers for her when she's dead.

Sweet flowers to bind in a chaplet,
Glorious and fair to see,
To crown my darling's golden head,
In Heaven eternally.

So, whenever the lamps are lighted,
And the fire burns cheery and bright,
In the future years, my darling,
Breathe a prayer for mamma's "good night."

TUSSENS.

A Fearful Leap

Into the abyss of poverty, over the precipice of short-sightedness is taken by thousands, who might become wealthy if they availed themselves of their opportunities. Those who write to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, will be informed, free, how they can make from $5 to $20 a day and upwards. Some have made more than $20 in a day. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are located. Both sexes; all ages. All is new. You are started free. Capital not needed. Now is the time. Better not delay. Every worker can secure a snug little fortune.

Literary Miscellany.

The Golden Bond of Grief.

A Beautiful Catholic Story in Two Chapters

CHAPTER II

When Anna left the churchyard, said Mrs. H——, remained behind to arrange the flowers, planted and put this shrubbery, and Michael stepped up to her, and in order to silence the reproaches of his conscience, asked her how long the grave had been completed before which the lady had been kneeling.

The woman told him that the mother of that lady had been buried three months before Christmas last year. The winter had prevented anything being done to the place. The young lady first came here about a week ago, had wept bitterly that the grave should have been neglected, and have so fallen to decay, and had left orders that it should be restored as it now.

Michael sighed a deep sigh of relief when he found that he had nothing to reproach himself with, and again asked who the young lady was.

Upon this the woman told him the young lady's name, and where she lived, and he, seeing great pains upon her, observed what a good daughter she must have been, since she wept so bitterly by her mother's grave, and that through she had a father also living, and who also in consequence of the grave upon herself.

When the woman had left him, Michael remained behind, and kneeling in the same place where Anna had knelt, sighed after the soul of his mother. In spite of his sins, and his fervent prayers, the image of his mother was united with the utmost fondness of the girl who had done for him what he himself had been nothing, and had.

Returning to town, he went at once to Mr. G——'s place, where, to his great satisfaction, he found no one at home; Mr ——— was at his office, his daughter engaged in the garden. He had a long conversation with the old servant, who had been the cause of the mistake, and learned from him at what time he could find Mr. G——at home.

The old man, who loved to talk about his own people, and, what is rare in these days, always spoke in their favor, praised above all the economical nature of his master, and advised Michael, if his business was urgent, to return about five o'clock, his master would leave the office for a short time. And his young lady returned home so earlier; she is so industrious and conscientious as her father. "And if she has a duty to fulfill thunder and lightning will not hinder her," he said.

Well pleased with the jealous of father and daughter, Michael hurried away, he knew not wherefore, towards the office where Mr. G——, according to the words of the old servant, was working himself to death.

He had one acquaintance who had a situation in the same department. He sent to him to come out to speak to him that he might learn a little more about the character, means of living, family circumstances and connections of Mr. G——, and that he learned was quite satisfactory.

Having returned home, he passed a long time up and down his room, considering how it would be best to proceed. He could not drive from his mind the image of Anna as she knelt by her mother's grave, and the tender care and continually before the eyes of his imagination, so that he determined that he would, and return to Mr. G——, but go wait for the father and daughter's arrival, that he might explain to them the mistake which had been made, which, however incredible, was not unpleasant.

On the following day, about half an hour after his arrival, he saw Anna running along the narrow path accompanied by a tall, good-looking man, whose countenance was very pleasing. He then went to the grave and contained himself in such a manner that he could, without being himself seen, observe the father and daughter, and learn if that they should say to each other.

Anna's countenance was a proud deep feeling and happy expectation, and this expression of opposite feelings made her more lovely in Michael's eyes than yesterday.

Anna at once went to her mother's grave, and in spite of her grief, was full of joy, at having prepared so great a surprise for her father, and of expectation of the surprise which would be produced upon him by the sight of this spot in so different a condition from that which he had pictured to himself.

When they stood before the grave Anna pointed out to her father looking at him with a smile and her tears, the neat, green and well-kept grave.

Mr. G——— did not move from the spot where he stood, but looked sorrowfully at another direction. Then Anna, greatly astonished took his hand pressed it to her lips and asked

"Are you angry with me, dear father, that without your knowledge I have ventured the first installment of my salary in this putting this place in proper order?"

"But, my Anna, whose grave is it that you have so richly adorned?"

"How! what!" she asked at astonishment. "Is not this, is not the grave of my dear mother!"

"No, my child!" replied Mr. G——, in much troubled, "your mother lies there." And he pointed to the mound to the left of her grandfather's tomb.

"There!" exclaimed Anna "Then who did Martin show me this?"

"His poor old head had forgotten, or she he made a mistake."

"Oh, heavens!" cried Anna, wringing her hands as she looked about more at the spot where she had spread so many tears, and then she followed her father, who approached the grave of her mother and knelt down.

Anna, she knelt down, and in order fully to convince her, her father drew aside the boxes and weeds which covered it, and showed her the little slate grave stone lying on the ground. Anna exclaimed, this little slate with her tears as soon as the real her mother's name, lent her face down upon the ground, and sobbed so violently that Michael, who had seen and heard all that had passed, felt as if his heart was broken, and could with difficulty suppress his tears.

And this grave was even in a worse condition than the other had been, upon which, that of a stranger, whose son knew not, and had bestowed all her money, and it was impossible at present to obtain from the inventors of her school another advance with which to put the right grave into, at least, as good a order as the other.

These thoughts were heart rending. The father disappointment and the deep sorrow of the child, weeping over her mother's desolated grave, were overwhelming.

Then Mr. G——— rose and, running up his half fainting daughter, spoke to her, kindly moved.

"Calm yourself, my dearest Anna," he said; "this mistake which affects you so painfully will be repaired. Your beloved mother and I both know your good intention and bless you for it; I have upon earth, she there above, where, no doubt, she receives the reward of the virtues of her, alas! short life. Within two or three weeks I shall have the money which is required, and I shall place it in your hands, that you may make your mother's grave like to that other, in the meantime, I will see that grass shall this, for it is a good work which you have done, and one for which the poor faithfully of the one who rests there will bless you for their whole lives."

And the good father laid his hand on his father's breast, who kissed her tenderly. After a short time she left the churchyard leaning on his arm.

Now that he knew all, Michael hesitated no longer. His duty was plain. He could not experience the noble heart of her father as well as of the daughter, and cherished the pleasing hope that both the mothers who slumbered in the same grave would be united soon in the attainment of his wishes.

He immediately sought out Mrs. H——, and had the same people engaged who had been employed upon his mother's grave, and he did not leave the churchyard till he had completed the arrangements for adorning the deceased Mrs. G——— should be restored and ornamented in exactly the same way as the other.

After the workmen had said that within the next night or two they should be completed and Mrs. H——— had solemnly promised that she would look after them, and take care that this grave should be quite as beautifully adorned as the other, Michael proceeded to the stone mason, and on being shown the slate which Anna had chosen ordered another exactly similar, and at some expensive materials. He visited the church yard every two or three days to see that the work was proceeding properly. When he came at the end of the week the grave was already covered with green turf, shrubs were planted, and the tombstone was also set up with grass, the flowers in full bloom were placed in vases. At the head of each and of the grave stood a large cross, the inscription on them ran thus—

"At the top of the mountain the tiresome cross stood in a state blanket covered in the rock and allowed us to go about, and the cross helped us to climb up and to go on climbs at an angle of 45°. The river just on the back ground was a deep ravine, and the cross carrying them into runners. The vehicle despite these precautions and by its own weight and its slender shape, could not hold barely keep on our state. We balanced ourselves as best we could, the cross, on the winds of winter will shake it from its state, and the state, too, will bear the coating of gold, and it will fall down, and on the plain like a withered weed. Tell him I will be there, and I will be waiting for him, and every time I see a tear in her bright eyes, or a sigh, I will say, and will remind him of the promise he made to me."

"Dear Mr. G——, I will be waiting for you, and you will be with me, and I will be with you, and I will be with you, and I will be with you

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED FREE OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1887.

REGULATIONS FOR LENT 1887.

ARCHDIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

1.—All the faithful who have completed their twenty-first year, are obliged to observe the law of fast from Ash Wednesday to Holy Saturday, inclusive, Sundays excepted, on the Ember Days, and on the Vigils of the Feasts of Pentecost, of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, of All Saints, and of the Nativity of Our Lord; unless on account of sickness, age or hard labor, they may be dispensed, or relieved from the obligation fixed by the Church, or unless one of the feast of either these or vowed programs occurs.

2.—Fast consists in taking only one meal during the twenty-four hours of the day.

3.—Flesh meat is allowed at all, one meal in each such obligated fast, except on Ash Wednesday, Fridays, Ember Saturdays, the Vigils of the Feasts of St. Joseph and of the Annunciation, and the last four days of Lent.

4.—The use of Flesh Meat and Fish is forbidden at the same meal, even on Sundays.

5.—A collation is allowed in the morning, at which the permission of the Holy See, the use of Milk, Butter, and Cheese is usual quantities is granted.

6.—Lard is allowed instead of Butter in preparing food for the child meal or collation all days throughout the year except Ash Wednesday, Ember days, the last four days of Holy Week, the Vigils of the Feasts of the Annunciation, Pentecost, Assumption, All Saints and Christmas.

7.—On Good Friday the use of Eggs, Milk, and Animal Food is forbidden.

8.—All under twenty-one years of age, those who are engaged in hard labor, the sick and convalescent, and those who cannot fast without injury to their health, are exempt from the law of fasting.

9.—Those who are not bound to fast may use Flesh Meat but should be careful to do only on all days in which its use is permitted.

10.—Those who may have any reasonable doubt as to their obligation to fast or abstain should ask the advice of their Confessor.

11.—The time for fulfilling the precept of Easter Communion extends to the Archdiocese of Oakland from Sunday in Lent until the end of the Octave of Easter.

12.—The Pastors of the Diocese are requested to have Lenten Sermons in their churches on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday evenings of each week.

+P. W. RIORDAN,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

February 2, 1887.

DIOCESE OF MONTEREY AND LOS ANGELES.

1. All the faithful who have completed their 21st year, are obliged to observe the law of fast from Ash Wednesday to Holy Saturday, inclusive, Sundays excepted, on the Ember Days, and on the Vigils of the Feasts of Pentecost, of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, of All Saints, and of the Nativity of Our Lord; unless on account of sickness, age or hard labor, they may be dispensed, or relieved from the obligation fixed by the Church, or unless one of the feast of either these or vowed programs occurs.

2. Fast consists in taking only one meal during the twenty-four hours of the day.

3. Flesh meat is allowed at all, one meal in each such obligated fast, except on Ash Wednesday, Fridays, Ember Saturdays, the Vigils of the Feasts of St. Joseph and of the Annunciation, and the last four days of Lent.

4. The use of Flesh Meat and Fish is forbidden at the same meal, even on Sundays.

5. A collation is allowed in the morning, at which the permission of the Holy See, the use of Milk, Butter, and Cheese in usual quantities is granted.

6. Lard is allowed instead of Butter in preparing food for the child meal or collation all days throughout the year except Ash Wednesday, Ember days, the last four days of Holy Week, the Vigils of the Feasts of the Annunciation, Pentecost, Assumption, All Saints and Christmas.

7. On Good Friday the use of Eggs, Milk, and Animal Food is forbidden.

8. All under twenty-one years of age, those who are engaged in hard labor, the sick and convalescent, and those who cannot fast without injury to their health, are exempt from the law of fasting.

9. Those who are not bound to fast may use Flesh Meat but should be careful to do only on all days in which its use is permitted.

10. Those who may have any reasonable doubt as to their obligation to fast or abstain should ask the advice of their Confessor.

11. The time for fulfilling the precept of Easter Communion extends in the Archdiocese of Monterey from first Sunday in Lent till the end of the Octave of Easter.

12. The Pastors of the Diocese are requested to have Lenten Sermons in their churches on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday evenings of each week.

+P. W. RIORDAN,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

February 2, 1887.

DIOCESE OF MONTEREY AND LOS ANGELES.

1.—All the faithful who have completed their 21st year, are obliged to observe the law of fast from Ash Wednesday to Holy Saturday, inclusive, Sundays excepted, on the Ember Days, and on the Vigils of the Feasts of Pentecost, of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, of All Saints, and of the Nativity of Our Lord; unless on account of sickness, age or hard labor, they may be dispensed, or relieved from the obligation fixed by the Church, or unless one of the feast of either these or vowed programs occurs.

2.—Fast consists in taking only one meal during the twenty-four hours of the day.

3.—Flesh meat is allowed at all, one meal in each such obligated fast, except on Ash Wednesday, Fridays, Ember Saturdays, the Vigils of the Feasts of St. Joseph and of the Annunciation, and the last four days of Lent.

4.—The use of Flesh Meat and Fish is forbidden at the same meal, even on Sundays.

5.—A collation is allowed in the morning, at which the permission of the Holy See, the use of Milk, Butter, and Cheese in usual quantities is granted.

6.—Lard is allowed instead of Butter in preparing food for the child meal or collation all days throughout the year except Ash Wednesday, Ember days, the last four days of Holy Week, the Vigils of the Feasts of the Annunciation, Pentecost, Assumption, All Saints and Christmas.

7.—On Good Friday the use of Eggs, Milk, and Animal Food is forbidden.

8.—All under twenty-one years of age, those who are engaged in hard labor, the sick and convalescent, and those who cannot fast without injury to their health, are exempt from the law of fasting.

9.—Those who are not bound to fast may use Flesh Meat but should be careful to do only on all days in which its use is permitted.

10.—Those who may have any reasonable doubt as to their obligation to fast or abstain should ask the advice of their Confessor.

11.—The time for fulfilling the precept of Easter Communion extends in the Archdiocese of Monterey from first Sunday in Lent till the end of the Octave of Easter.

12.—The Pastors of the Diocese are requested to have Lenten Sermons in their churches on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday evenings of each week.

+P. W. RIORDAN,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

February 2, 1887.

Return of the Franciscan Fathers to the City of St. Francis.

We feel a thoroughly religious happiness in announcing for the readers of the MONITOR the fact that his Grace Archbishop Riordan has secured the services of several Franciscan Fathers from St. Louis, where is located the Mother House of the Order in this Province, to take charge of the German Catholic element in this city and also to preach in Spanish to the Germans residing in different localities throughout this Archdiocese.

The Franciscan Fathers will commence their labors in St. Boniface Church, Golden Gate Avenue, on next Sunday, and we sincerely hope their German Catholic country-man will give them a reception worthy of their high and holy office as well as for the generous duty they must feel towards these emigrants who have come to carry tidings of great joy to the German Catholic people.

Almighty God works in wonderful ways. Nearly one hundred and eleven years ago two holy sons of St. Francis—Father Francisco Palou and Father Junipero Serra—planted the Cross in this city near the spot upon which still stands the venerable church of the Mission Dolores. These holy pioneers of Christianity and civilization came to the healthy shores where sprung the waters of the beautiful bay dedicated to the Founder of their Order, and where—through the benificent designs of an all-wise Providence—a great Catholic City was to arise and thus perpetuate the name of the great St. Francis of Assisi to untold generations of both pagan and Christian people from many of the most distant portions of the earth!

And now, after more than a century has elapsed, more missionaries of the ancient and holy Order return to renew the work of their predecessors commenced—the salvation of souls. Very Rev. Peter Gerhard, O. S. F., and his assistants in the church of St. Boniface, still preach precisely the same Christian truths, expound the same dogmas, inculcate precisely the same principles of Christian morality which this poor but learned Franciscan Father taught when they first patched their tents in the hamlet of a portion of illiterate by the lakelet called after the Mother Francisca.

It was on the third feast of SS. Peter and Paul that the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass first ascended upon this Almighty God by the holy hands of the Franciscan Fathers, and every Catholic should ardently pray that the long-awaited harvest of holy souls which the Chief of the Apostolic College and the Apostle of the Gentiles brought into the Church of God, may be granted to the German Franciscan Fathers, that the great and good work they have undertaken.

The German Catholics have a grand record in the archives of the Church in this land. The numerous churches and schools they have built and established, the Religious orders which they have introduced, the zeal of their pastors and the practical faith of the people—are all testimonials of a faith which has passed through the crucible of persecution in their Fatherland. Hitherto the German Catholic element of this city has been represented by comparatively few Catholics, but the Catholic Germans of the Archdiocese of San Francisco have entered the Lord's vineyard, we predict that the great mass of the German people will flock around the Franciscan Fathers, that the general small Church alloted to these will be replaced by a splendid structure, that schools and societies will flourish and bring forth good fruit, and that the Church in San Francisco will receive an impetus in growth, solidity and manifestation of practical Catholic faith which will edify the heart of every layman, encourage every pastor to consolation, and delight the heart of our beloved Archbishop—through whose energy and zeal the notable accession to our spiritual strength in Border Business and Holy Days of Obligation, every Wednesday evening, commencing on the first Wednesday in Lent.

+FRANCIS MORA,
Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, Feb. 6, 1887.

Another Church for this Archdiocese.

On Sunday the 27th inst., his Grace Archbishop Riordan will dedicate the new church recently erected in the newly-organized parish of St. Francis de Sales, Oakland, over which Rev. Thos. McSweeney presides as Rector, and through whose instrumentality—aided by the munificent generosity of his friends and parishioners—the new edifice has been erected. St. Francis—called of Sales, where he was born, in order readily to distinguish him from many other great Saints in the Church who bear the Christian name of Francis—was dedicated to Almighty God's service by his holy mother prior to his birth, and, as a consequence of this holy impulse, he grew up in grace and became one of the great lights of the Church in the seventeenth century. He is honored as Bishop and Confessor of the Faith, his feast falling on the 29th of January, the day on which his remains were carried to Annecy, France, where he desired to be buried.

—Rome is preparing the introduction of the cause of beatification of the Servant of God, Mgr. Frances de Montmorency Laval, Bishop of Quebec, from 1648 to 1688. In the latter year he resigned his See, and died in 1708. He was formerly Archbishop of Evreux. By virtue of the decrees of the Holy See, the present Bishop of Evreux must make search for the writings of the servant of God, which must then be submitted for judicial examination.

—The Bishops of Switzerland have issued a joint Pastoral on the subject of the Sacerdotal Jubilee of his Holiness Leo XIII. By direction of these Prelates the Pious Verein is organizing a great Swiss pilgrimage to the tomb of St. Peter and Pauli. A Pastoral, with reference to the Papal Jubilee, has likewise been addressed to the faithful by the Belgian Episcopate.

—Next Sunday will be the ninth anniversary of the election of the present successor of St. Peter, now gloriously reigning. May his reign be as long as his immediate predecessor in the See of St. Peter!

"This decoration, making St. Blasse in honor of Irish Catholics, was the gift of the Pontiff, Pius IX., who, in the year 1854, established the Hierarchy in Ireland, and conferred the Cardinal's hat upon Paul Cullen, the first Irish Cardinal of modern times. The Pope, in the consistory held in the Vatican on the 22nd of June, 1866, conferred the Cardinal's hat upon Archbishop Cullen, who was then in Rome, and in the latter diplomatic circle, the pope, after partaking of a snuff draft of Irish poteen, from the snuff box of his Eminence, Cullen, the Irish Primate, and,

Farm and Home.

A Simple Cure for Croup.

Mothers with young children will do well to remember that one-third of a teaspoonful of powdered alum mixed with double the quantity of sugar will give almost instant relief in case of croup. It is also good for a hard cold, as the smallest children take it without trouble, and it enables them to eject from the little stomach what one has reason to be afraid may, and relief follows as a natural consequence. If, when that dread disease which so often proves fatal, first makes its appearance, when the croup barker announces the approach of danger, or the rattling, gurgling sound in the throat, which is the sure forerunner of croup, if then this simple remedy were promptly administered and repeated as often as there was need, there are few cases, I think, that might not be cured. The great trouble is that young mothers do not know what to do, and if a physician is not within reach they hold the little one is often past all human aid before help can come.

Hints to Employers.

There is one spirit that achieves a great success. The man who seeks only how to make himself most useful, whose aim is to render himself indispensable to his employer, whose whole being is animated with the purpose to fill the largest possible place in the walk assigned to him, has in the ambition of that spirit the genuine success. He commands the attention, and shall walk in the light of prosperity all his days. On the other hand, the man who accepts the unwholesome advice of the demagogue and seeks only how little he may do, and how easy he may render his place and how loose his employment altogether, is unfit for service. As soon as there is a supercargo on the list, he becomes disengaged as least valuable to his employer. The man who is afraid of doing too much is near his end when he seeks to do nothing, and was begot in the same family. They are neither of them in the remotest degree a relation to the man whose willingness to do everything possible to his touch phase him at the head of the active list.

Treatment of Whooping Cough.

The following method of disinfection of sleeping and dwelling apartments and clothes is recommended by M. Mohn in the treatment of whooping cough. It is said so cure the cases immediately. The children are washed and clothed in clean articles of dress, and removed to another part of the town. The bed room and sitting room or nursery are then hermetically sealed; all the bedding, playthings, and other articles that cannot be washed are exposed freely in the room, in the middle of which is burnt in the proportion of twenty-five grammes to the cubic meter of space. The room remains then charged with sulphurous acid for five hours, and is then freely ventilated. The children return into the same bed, may sleep and play in the disinfected rooms. Lancet.

How to Manage a Man.

Nothing on earth fatishes a man like a good dinner and a well dressed wife presiding. The husband who can look forward to such a state of things every day of his life will never tire of home, and the wife who studies his comfort will have little difficulty in managing him according to her will. Men are gregarious animals and will wander in spite of all allurements, but they are selfish enough to remain where they are most comfortable, and to shape a little trouble for a year or two of married life the years that follow will be well repaid by the fact that always glad to go back to the pretty home where smiley await him and the dinner I spoke of. There are so many women who object to being "bossed," as they call it. My dear fellow, you can always be boss if you take the trouble. By giving in you get your own way as you never would by fighting for it. And, after all, it is better to feel you are right than to stand so much that to give in to him is not a difficulty.

Now men out of time are managable if you go to him right way about it, and one great point is to act after marriage just as you did before. Arguments and contradiction are vital enemies to married peace. Should you wish for anything particular, don't insist upon it either refusal. Some women are persistent and say: "Why may I not? Why don't you do as I tell you?" and irritate the man. Rather bide your time, and make an extra good dinner of his favorite dishes, put a bow on of the color he likes, make home and yourself sweeter than ever. You'll get it sure, even if you have to wait. Also, when you want him to do any particular thing which you know will be for his good, for Heaven's sake do not say: "Do it." Rather drop a hint that you think so and so would be a good thing to do. Get him interested and then let the subject drop. I venture to say that in a short time that man will do precisely as you wish; he will never permit you to think that he has traded the least on your common sense.

Cure for Diphtheria.

Dr. A. Bendel writes, in the Bulletin General de Therapeutique of November 15, 1886, concerning the treatment of diphtheria by bensoate of sodium, and asserts that of two hundred consecutive cases he has not lost a single one. He admits the possibility of a mistaken diagnosis in some instances, but, even excluding fifty per cent on this account, he still has one hundred cases without a death. His method is as follows: Every hour the patient takes a tablespoonful of a solution of bensoate of sodium, fifteen grammes to the ounce, and at the same time one-sixth of a grain of sulphate of eserine in sirup and or gruel. In addition to this the throat is thoroughly sprayed every half hour with a ten per cent solution of bensoate of sodium. This is done religiously at the regular intervals, day and night, but no other local treatment is employed. No attempt is made to dislodge the false membrane, and no penalling nor painting of the fauces is resorted to. Tonics are given and antipyretics are used when occasion calls for them. The nourishment consists of beef juice, tender rare meat, milk, rice, beef bread and all other articles which may cause irritation of the throat are forbidden. The sick room is kept filled with steam from a vessel containing carbolic acid, turpentine, and oil of eucalyptus in water.

The employment of bensoate of sodium is not a few method in the treatment of diphtheria, for it has been tried and if recommended highly by Lebentich, Kiss, Farrell, and others. But this, of course, speaks so much the more strongly in favor of the remedy; and as Dr. Bendel's results were better than those obtained by others using the same drug, it is to be presumed that his method of employing it is the best.—Medical Record.

The Age of Twenty.

The truth is, that the majority of women begin to be more thoughtful when they have turned the age of twenty.

The giddiness of the girl gives way to the sobriety of woman.

Frivolity is succeeded by reflection, and reason reigns where passion previously held undisputed sway.

The nerve and anxieties of life press themselves more, probably.

They tend to weaken the effect of the sanguine anticipation of unmingled felicity in the marriage state which the mind had formed in its youthful day dreams.

Family Fun.

Very Accomodating.

After the clerk had pulled down everything in the store without satisfying his customer, a woman, she asked him if there was anything else he had not shown. "Yes ma'am," he said, the collar; but if you wish it I will have that brought up and shown to you.

An Editor's Luck.

"We wish to return our sincere thanks," says the editor of an Idaho paper. "On the complaining but ungrateful burglar who broke into our residence night before last, under the impression that he was robbing the druggist who lives next door. He entered at a window and carefully removed his boots, setting them down on the floor. To this circumstance, and to the fact that we saw him come in, we are indebted for the first good pair of boots we have had in ten years."

A Mother's Responsibilities.

Young matron (with theories on the care of children) to nurse—"Jane."

Nurse—"Yes mum."

Young matron—"When the baby has finished his bottle lay him in the cradle on his right side. After eating a child should always lie on the right side; that relieves the pressure on the heart. Still (reflectively) the liver is on the right side, perhaps, after all, you had better lay him on the left side. No, I am wrong the treatise on infant diges—said the right side. On the whole, Jane, you may lay the baby on any side you like, I have locked the nutter up more thoroughly."

A Fine Distinction.

Lawyer—"Now you know the man isn't truthful, do you not?"

Witness—"I wouldn't like to say so, sir."

Lawyer—"Why not? Is it a milder way of stating it would suit you better, sir?"

Witness—"Just so. I wouldn't like to decide as to the veracity; but I know that he is decidedly nehistorical."

Filial Obedience.

"Don't waste your time in clipping off the branches," said the woodman to his son, "but lay your ax at the root of the tree." And the young man went and laid his ax at the root of the tree, like a good and dutiful boy—and then he went a fishing. Truly there is nothing so beautiful as filial obedience.

His Remarkable Strait.

A diner-out who had had more than his share of the wine was carefully feeling his way home at night, when he unfortunately stumbled against the circular railing which surrounded a statue. After having gone around it about seven times, the hopelessness of his situation flashed upon him, and he sank down upon the pavement outside with a despairing shriek: "The scoundrels. They've shut me in here!"

The Queen's English.

A school master in Columbus has the following juvenile composition among her schoolbooms manuscript: "A codfish is the only Anaymal that aint got no neck. There ain't but one kind of a fish in the world that has their ears in their head like we do, and that is a fish hawk. A codfish has a large mouth, and my aunty school Teacher got a large mouth too. Two kids can't fishing one day one of them pulled quite a lot of fish out of the water. I fled and the Superintending pounded one of his ears with a broken jug and got out. A fish would look funny if they had legs and could run.

Cold Weather.

"Did you order the tons of coal?" she asked of her husband. "We are all out."

"Yes, but the dealer wouldn't trust me. It made me very mean, I can tell you."

"I wish it would make us warm," said the discouraged wife with a shiver.

Eliminating.

The funeral was over, and a few personal friends were taking dinner with the bereaved widow.

"Won't you have some more of the roast beef, Mr. Smith?" she asked.

"Thanks," he replied; "I believe I will. The ride to the grave and back has given me quite an appetite."

Timely Information.

Gus—Have you put the important question to old Moneybags's daughter, Jack?

Jack—No. I hear there is a prior attachment there.

Gus—You don't say so!

Jack—Yes, the Sheriff has attached everything the old man owns.

Must Have Been Them.

"Did you see the Alps while you were abroad, Miss De Pole?" he asked.

"Yes, I think so," she replied briefly. "We went everywhere and saw everything."

Household Treasures.

A treasure of a husband—carries the baby. A treasure of a wife—never asks for money. A treasure of a son—has money in the bank. A treasure of a daughter—looks the same age as her mother; if anything, a little older. A treasure of a servant—runs to the post-office in less than half an hour. A treasure of a cook—is not hysterical whenever there is company at dinner. A treasure of a baby—doesn't disturb its dear papy in the middle of the night.

Hogs on Bolt Trains.

A tall, lank man boarded an outgoing western train near the stockyards. He looked like a farmer, and there was an odor of stable-cars about his clothes. He walked through the car and looked about for a seat, but nobody stirred to make room for him. A drummer was spread over two seats, and a woman and two children over three. Several men occupied a whole seat apiece. The tall, lank man paused and looked down on the drummer, then exclaimed:

"Walk by gosh, I cum up to Chicago with a load o' hogs, but I'll be darned if I thought I'd have to ride home with a load, too."

A Useful Invention.

Parents who lie awake nights worrying about their daughters and their daughters' best beaux will thank the Judge for a kind suggestion. An ingenious contriance connects the parlor clock with a "Good Night Our Home" motto on the wall. The machine is set so that at 11 o'clock the motto unfolds and this legend appears: "Gas out and dog unchained at 11 o'clock." Good night! At the same time a lever connected with the clock pounds vigorously and repeatedly on a gong.

—That feeling of extreme debility is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, "I was tired all over, but Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me new life and strength." says a Pittsburgh, N. Y. lady. Hood's Sarsaparilla is sold by all druggists. 41 a bottle, or six bottles for $5.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

THE GENTLE YET EFFECTUAL ACTION OF this glorious old remedy, Simmons Liver Regulator, is universally manifest, here place it at the head of all family medicines.

No household should be without it. It promptly but ungrudgingly forgiver the Blues, Headache, Nausea, Bile, Colic, Indigestion, Constipation, Fevers, Sleeplessness, Languid Feel, Foul Breath, and every disease brought on or aggravated by a disorder of the stomach.

It has as equal as a Preparatory Medicine: Mothers what the stomach, a dose of it will afford relief and in a short time will effect a speedy cure. Its use for over half a century by thousands of people have endorsed it as

THE BEST FAMILY MEDICINE

D. M. ENCARNI,
911 Mission St.
San Francisco, Cal.
Manufacturer and Importer of
RELIGIOUS STATUARY, ETC
Suitable for Churches, Convent Chapels, Academy Schools, Etc.
THE ONLY COMPLETE COLLECTION ON THE PACIFIC COAST.
Catalogue sent free on application.

WARD & CO.'S
Male and Female
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE,
608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.
WANTS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL & Ship, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Sawmill Hands, Gardeners, Butchers, Bakers, Waiters, Private Families and Ranches. Also, good reliable Female Help, without any charge to employers. Instant written orders for males at 608 Clay street.

CATARRH POSITIVELY CURED
Wilson's Vaporizing Inhaler!
A Household Treasure!

This only successful home treatment for CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Sore Throat and Lungs, Deafness and Neuralgia. Trial Free. Handsome Illustrated Book, with Medical Advice, Testimonials and Reasonable Price, 25 cents. Sold by druggists, or sent by mail. Wilson's Catarrh Snuff, 25 cents. Wilson's Liver Pills, 25 cents. Wilson's Vaporizing Ointment, 25 cents. Wilson's Cough Balsam, 25 cents. Wilson's Pain Balm, 25 cents. Wilson's Sarsaparilla, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Tea, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Pills, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Ointment, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Cream, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Soap, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Shampoo, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Hair Dye, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Hair Tonic, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Hair Restorer, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Hair Brush, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Comb, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth, 25 cents. Wilson's Dandelion Toothpick Holder Stand Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole Cover Cloth Bag Tie Button Hole

THE CROSS IN AFRICA.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

the old country alone bears the weight of these missions, and they can't be certainly that old Europe can go on and bear the expense almost alone, for the number of missions are increasing and each mission grows more and more extended. If America would lend a helping hand and facilitate the example set by France in respect to contributions, now the activity of the Catholic missions could be doubled. If American had such organizations as "The Holy Child," and "The Annals of the Faith," then no Catholic priest ought to come from the distant mission on a special call for charity from America. But as it is now you must understand that from time to time a missionary must come. This is what I have done. The missionary must be detached from the Mission and visit the twenty eight missions, and that in 1879 there was only one district in Africa which had no missionaries, and that was the important Zambesi mission. In the year 1879, the speaker, with five other priests and five lay brothers, was sent to South Africa to establish this mission, which extends several hundred miles along the Zambesi river.

NORTH OF THE ZAMBESI

the people are idolatrous and adore cut image. South of the Zambesi there is no idolatry, but simply paganism or heathenism. They know there is but one God, but that God they do not adore. They don't adore him as a personal God. They have no idea of creation, or hell or of heaven, much less of purgatory. They don't know what is sin and have no idea what is a crime. They know that something is against the law, that something is wrong. They know what public honesty is, what family morality is, what justice is, but they don't know what sin is, sin that makes the liable to punishment by God. They have no idea of a soul and no idea of purpose. No one can say "Our Father, Who art in heaven. They don't know that God is a father. They have a veneration for spirits, good and bad, and good spirits are personified in the king and his ancestors and they build spirits in every called sceneries. All crimes against law are punished under the name of sorcery by death. Manslaughter under the name of sorcery is punished by death. In the year 1877 30 sorcerers, 11, we are now 108. Twenty-one have died. We have made 2500 converts and the number of novitiates and catechumens is from 4,000 to 4,000, and the name of God is known all over, perhaps to over 8,000,000 people. What is needed is the assistance of sisters in our hospitals and schools on the coast. It is intended that the schools shall be as near the colonies as possible, where most promising children can be met. Shall and adhere all best hold in the mission. The speaker has already found two-thirds of the necessary sums needed for bringing the sisters into Africa, and made an earnest though unselfish plea for further assistance.

THE SACRED COLLEGE.

Number of Cardinals and their Different Grades.

The Rome correspondent of a New York paper thus describes the Sacred College as it stands at present:

It is interesting to note some facts concerning the composition and the curiosities of the present Sacred College. It numbers fifty-six members, divided as follows: Six Cardinal Bishops, thirty-eight Cardinal Priests, and twelve Cardinal Deacons; so that there are twelve vacancies among the Cardinal Deacons, Cardinals Bishops and Gibbons are of the priestly rank; so are Cardinal Manning, Archbishop of Westminster, Engonnet, Archbishop of Lyons, Archbishop of Sidney, Australia, Vanade Archbishop of Quebec, both Cardinals Newman and Howard are strikingly priests; but in the Sacred College, Cardinal Howard is of episcopal rank, being the title of Bishop of Frascati, while Cardinal Newman is simply a deacon. Cardinal Howard has lately been appointed "Protector of the Cruelins." from St. Francis. He is also the protector in Rome of English-speaking Catholics. The other episcopal Cardinals are Sacconi, Pitra, Vallera, Sbarbaro, and Martinelli—the only name among them at all known being that of Pitra, and that on from any high executive office he holds, but because of his great learning. Jacobini, the Secretary of State, and Simeoni, the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, this two best and widest known names among the Cardinals, are of the priestly rank. It is the tradition of the Holy See to have about two-thirds of the Cardinals natives of Italy; but Leo XIII. has appointed only broken through the rule. There are now only thirty Italians to twenty-six foreigners in the Sacred College. It is likely that the majority of the fifteen vacancies will be filled by the foreigners. Several red hats are due to France. They would have been conferred long ago had the French Government not suspended the quick. Spain had well doubtless obtain one, and, if the gains her native Portuguese, will be no more one or two more. Perhaps the United States may also obtain two or three Cardinals. Of course, these are only speculations, but intimations from high sources of authority lead me to believe that there is a substantial foundation in them. Italy will always have a disproportionate number of Cardinals, because many of them have to reside in or near Rome, being members of the congregations or heads of government departments. But in the exercise of the highest functions intrusted to it—the election of a Pope—the next conclave assembled for that purpose will not be influenced by Italian influence, and will probably elect the chair of Peter a native of some other country.

Cardinal Gibbons will go to Orleans, Lyons, Avignon, the home of the exiled Popes; Nancy, where the principal institution of the Religious is situated; Rheims, where he will visit Cardinal Meurin, and Paris, where he will call upon Archbishop Richards, whose predecessor, Cardinal Guibert, was a personal friend of Cardinal Gibbons. He may visit other places on the Continent, passing through England and Ireland on his return, and reaching the United States some time in August.

A French Nun Honored.

The Cross of the Legion of Honor has just been conferred on Sister Claudine Guiba, a nun of the Order of La Charité who is the founder of various schools and hospitals in the Lebanon. The number of women who have received this honor is regrettably small, whereas men are often gratified with the much-coveted bit of red ribbon, for a purely commercial order, by which they can derive large pecuniary advantages. With the exception of Rosa Bonheur and a certain number of nuns, the few women who have obtained the Cross have done so by striking acts of bravery, courage, and nerve.

Death of a Patriarch.

From our Irish exchanges we learn of the death of the venerable William Carroll of Clonmel. He was born Nov. 10, 1796, and was consequently in his 91st year, but his senses and faculties were unimpaired to the last. After a life of extraordinary usefulness and holiness, he died a few moments after receiving Holy Communion on Friday, Jan. 7, 1887. A short while ago, His Holiness, Pope Leo XIII., sent the venerable patriarch his Apostolic Benediction. To Mr. Carroll's five surviving daughters, four are Sisters of Mercy.

SACRED HEART COLLEGE.

Entertainment and Monthly Prize Distribution.

A pleasing entertainment of a literary and musical character fills up the regular monthly distribution of rewards and premiums to merit took place in Sacred Heart College on Tuesday afternoon, the 8th inst. The usually excellent programme was given. Mozart's orchestral recitation, Bernard's recitation, song, "My Southern Home, chorus, distribution of premiums, Sons of Innocence recitation, M. Flanigan's Mazurka, Mozart's recitation, Second Instrumental Quartette, H. Ryan, F. Sullivan; song, "Come, Gentle Spring," Mozart's orchestra; recitation, T. Noonan, song, "Thinking Bells," W. Wilson, distribution of testimonials, Fourth Collegiate, song, "Old Home," Sixth recitation, A. Bechtel, J. Gibbons, distribution of testimonials, Fifth Collegiate, song, "Boats by the River," E. J. Cattley; recitation, J. W. Sullivan; recitation, W. Bechtel; distribution of testimonials, Second Collegiate; orchestra.

The following received testimonials of merit for continuous deportment, regular attendance and application to study during the month of January:

Second Collegiate class—Thomas J. Mullen, W. Sullivan, Alex. T. McCarthy, Richard E. McKee, Edward J. Lynch, Edward J. Taylor, Wm. A. Richards, John A. Boyd, Edward J. Collins, Dalzell Lynch, Wm. C. Shakspeare, William J. Tracey.

Third Collegiate class—James Sullivan, W. Sullivan, Augustin Batchelder, Thomas J. O'Connor, Thomas A. Coyle, Thos. Boyd, Matthew Thomas, Thomas Crowley, John C. Flood, J. Wm. Wilkins, Wm. J. McCarthy, Joseph Wilkins, Jas. Mulcahy, Joseph C. Cooney.

Fourth Collegiate class—John Cooney, Thomas Kerrigan, Joseph Fitzpatrick, Frank Lacy, Thomas Connolly, John Barry, Thos. Stokkan, Theodore Bechtel, James Murphy, William Wilson, Frank Rankin, John Perkins.

Fifth Collegiate class—Charles A. Dwyer, John Glennan, William O'Donnell, Charles Wilkins, Thomas Ryan, Daniel Ryan, Joseph Tyrone F. Ryan, Daniel Ryan, Wm. Wilkins, Thomas Bechtel, A. Coyle, Thomas F. Mullen, Michael McCarthy, Joseph Boyle, Joseph Wynne, Joseph Wynne, Joseph Carroll, James Brown, James Mahoney.

Second Intermediate class—John Ryan, Will. Bechtel, Thomas Cooney, Thomas Ryan, Jas. Hannan, John Hilard.

Third Intermediate class—John Ryan, Will. Bechtel, Thomas Cooney, Thomas Ryan, Jas. Hannan, John Hilard.

Fourth Intermediate class—Hermann Hoentzel, Jas. J. McCarthy, John Cicey, Joseph Dredock, Jas. Cooney, Joseph Gallagher, John Bindel, Wm. Farell, Thomas Lawson, John Mulhern, Wm. Wilkins, J. Stock, Thomas Sanders, James Wilkins.

First Preparatory—Alfred A. Tobin, William Glennan, William J. Brown, Joseph Cooney, Nicholas Welch, John T. Kingston, Joseph Rolling, Frank Kingston, John Cicey, Joseph J. Riordan, Eddie Dussy, Joseph J. Dussy, Joseph E. Twist, Thomas Welch, Alexander A. Mellon, John C. Keating, Jeremiah Lynch.

Second Preparatory—William Sullivan, Joy Peoples, John Mulcahy, Joseph Gallagher, Jas. Ryan, Francis Cooney, John H. Wilson, William Bode, George Wilkins, Michael Dussy, Thomas Cooney, Thomas Carpenter, Thomas Lawson, Edward Lynch, Joseph Wolf, Fast Walsh, Adolph Bechtel.

CATHOLIC MUTUAL BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATION.

Monthly Report of Auditing Committee.

To the officers and members of the Catholic Mutual Benefical Association of the Diocese of San Francisco:

Your executive and auditing committees beg leave to report your social condition as shown by the following report of the financial and monetary standing of your Organization for the month ending January 31st, 1887, as per records, vouchers, etc., of secretary and treasurer, viz:

Cash on hand received by Secretary for month of January, $1,000 00; cash received by Secretary for office expenses, $7 60—receipts, $1,007 60; balance on hand last report, $1,000 00; cash received by Treasurer last report, $1,900 00; cash received by Treasurer this month, $2,310 20—disbursements, $2,310 20; balance on hand, $1,900 00—assets as per vouchers, $3,907 60.

Assets—In the Savings Bank of Sonoma County & Co. bank, $1,422 16; on deposit Hibernia Bank, $197 61; on deposit Hibernia Bank, Sacramento Union, $22 45; in hands of Treasurer, $1,900 00; $3,544 45. Members in good standing, 1,051; members admitted at last meeting, 2; 2 deaths, 2; 2 members suspended, 1; 1 member, leaving, 1,046 members on roll. February 1, 1887.

H. BOCKERFEY, Vice-President.
J. MEYER, Secretary.
H. MEYER.
F. MULLANY.
F. SULLIVAN.
Office, 26 Hinckley Block.
WM. F. WATSON, Secretary.

SITUATIONS WANTED FOR CATHOLIC TEACHERS.

We have opened a Register in the Monitor office where we intend to keep the names, residence and other information regarding the qualifications of Catholic teachers, who may desire to procure positions. We shall be happy to receive the necessary information to such men information to the Catholic Teachers of the Diocese, who have may be placed on the Register. We have at present the names of six ladies who desire to teach in Catholic families or in private governesses in private families. The Monitor will be happy to receive the Catholic teachers of any kind free to those who apply at the office.

MARRIED.

RUDPERTH—BEAGLEY—In the city, February 5, Rudperth, a native of Germany, aged 27 years, and Miss Lizzie Beagley, a native of Ireland, aged 19 years.

LYNCH—MCCARTHY—In the city, February 5, Patrick Lynch, a native of Ireland, aged 27 years, and Miss Mary McCarthy, a native of San Francisco.

DIED.

DERMODY—In the city, February 5, Margaret, beloved wife of Thomas Dermody, a native of Ireland, aged 65 years.

CAVANAGH—In the city, February 5, Patrick Cavanagh, a native of Ballymoney, County Wexford, Ireland, aged 70 years.

WILKINSON—Killed in the city, February 10, Joseph Wilkinson, a native of Ireland, aged 30 years and 3 months.

MCCARTHY—In the city, February 5, Patrick J. Quill, a native of New York, aged 1 year and 8 months.

HAYES—In the city, February 11, Patrick H., infant beloved of Margaret Hayes, a native of the City and County of San Francisco, aged 1 year and 10 days.

KEEGAN—In Oakland, February 10, Michael, beloved husband of Ellen Keegan, a native of Ireland, aged 50 years.

LYNCH—In the city, February 10, Michael, beloved husband of Honora Sullivan, a native of Ireland, aged 50 years.

CARNEY—In Oakland, February 10, Mary, beloved wife of Thomas Carney, a native of Ireland, aged 50 years.

WILKINSON—Killed in the city, February 10, Joseph Wilkinson, a native of Ireland, aged 30 years and 3 months.

MCCARTHY—In the city, February 5, Patrick J. Quill, a native of New York, aged 1 year and 8 months.

HAYES—In the city, February 11, Patrick H., infant beloved of Margaret Hayes, a native of the City and County of San Francisco, aged 1 year and 10 days.

KEEGAN—In Oakland, February 10, Michael, beloved husband of Ellen Keegan, a native of Ireland, aged 50 years.

LYNCH—In the city, February 10, Michael, beloved husband of Honora Sullivan, a native of Ireland, aged 50 years.

CARNEY—In Oakland, February 10, Mary, beloved wife of Thomas Carney, a native of Ireland, aged 50 years.

MCGLYNN—In the city, February 5, Catherine, aged 60 years, a native of Ballinrobe, County Mayo, Ireland.

MCGLYNN—In the city, February 5, Catherine, aged 60 years, a native of Ballinrobe, County Mayo, Ireland.

MCGLYNN—In the city, February 5, Catherine, aged 60 years, a native of Ballinrobe, County Mayo, Ireland.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ANTRIM.—The premises of John Douglas, a grain merchant, 22, 24, and 26 Donegal street, Belfast, have been enjoined by the Court of Chancery, on the 5th inst., the damage is estimated at £1,000.

ARMAGH.—On January 19th, the synod of the Archdiocese of Armagh assembled, selecting a committee to draft a pastoral address to the clergy. Dr. Kelly, Archbishop of Armagh, was celebrated a little after 10 o'clock. Rev. H. Mathews, Archbishop of Tuam, Rev. Dr. Kelly, Bishop of Ross, Bishop Gillooly of Elphin, Bishop Conroy, Bishop Lynch, Bishop Donnelly, Bishop Gillooly

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

EVENSONG.

NOVEMBER 19, 1896

At the Altar stood a maiden,
Just before the nuptial hall,
In a robe of lightsome texture,
With a soft and dazzling veil;
Glittering in the rays of wonder
From the mystic book of love
That should bind her to a lover.

Evensong.

Chose beside that blushing maiden
Stood a youth of noble mien,
Anxious waiting to be moulded
To her who should be queen.
Of all his new possessions—
His hopes, his joys, his more
Than all that God ever gave him,
Evensong.

"Will you take this gallant suitor,"
Said the sacred man of God,
"To love, to care, to cherish
'Till the cold and clammy sod
Shall lay upon his bosom
Where his soul shall be at ease?"
And the maiden softly answered,
"Evensong."

Turning they to her companion
With words that seemed true enough,
"Will you take this maiden to your home,
A stranger dared did stare;
"Will you protect this fair one,
Though dark clouds have lower o'er?"
And he answered without murmur,
"Evensong."

Then the good man gave a blessing,
And the mystic band did place
Upon the willing finger—
A sign of heavenly grace;
And the two from out that chancel
Passed into another door
With a vow they'd keep forever,
"Evensong."

JOHN GOSA.

Santa Rosa, February 14, 1897.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MY HEART'S PICTURE.

In my heart I have a picture,
And it calms each troubled hour.
Would you think a silent visage
Could possess such mystic power?
But the hold of golden brightness,
And the tender deep bliss eye,
Have for me a precious comfort
Which I care not to deny.

When with sorrow I'm afflicted,
When all mirth doth fill my heart,
In such hold for such pleasure
This dear picture takes its part;
When I'm weary, sad or lonely,
When my friends seem lost or cold
Then that look of patient courage
Makes me pass through life more bold.

When I write it's here before me,
Imparting thoughts or good advice,
Contains verse or swing stanza,
Giving love a nameless price;
Yet it chides me for my folly,
But with tone and gentle grace,
And those I love look kindly on
Through the blue eyes of that face.

Can you guess who is my maiden,
Who she is my tender eye?
Can you guess who is my woman,
Who she is my soul's ideal?
As God's dear angel from above;
Yes, she is both a mother and
For the fairest Goddess's boast?

The she who stayed my footsteps
In childhood's wild impetuous hour,
That I have a chief pleasure
Which still sways the olden power;
She who called me to my boyhood,
Taught me what I'e'er must do,
And, in her, my darling mother,
And her memory as I trust.

ZASE.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE SECRET OF MY PEACE.

You answered me by call
Across the gray sea wet.
—ELIZABETH TYLER.

I stood on the shore, and gazed in such yearning
Across the deep waters; ah, looking to me
If the ship—always coming—but never arriving,
Would broken in white sails come morning to me.

You were so safe, and I—ah, I was weeping,
Weeping and wailing, as mouse yonder are,
While you, ah, my darling, were quietly sleeping—
Resting the Rest; and I, grieving for thee.

I pass thro' a Sea, as a shadow of sorrow,
And lo! as a mirage, we—of moon and fair,
Also a city, so glorious, so gentle,
Rays beatific, that shine only There.

Alas! I was sorrowing, and you, smiling sweetly;
I was weeping in wasting despair,
When sudden—glory my whole soul illumined,
And the starlight of peace, shone lovely and fair.

THERESE.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

FRIENDSHIP OR LOVE.

Friendship or Love, which shall it be,
Both have I ready to offer to thee!
Love seems raging,
Friendship eternal,
Love, live and earthly,
Friendship supernal;
Friendship all trustful,
Love, jealous and blind,
Love often cruel,
Friendship still kind;
Love, the conqueror,
The palace it rules,
I have both ready,
Which shall it be?

Friendship or Love, which shall it be,
Both have I ready to offer to thee;
Love—burning, raging,
Friendship all calm,
Love a fell wounder,
Friendship—a balm;
Love soon will falter,
Soon grow obscure,
Friendship forever
Will smile and endure;
(Oh! let me be the chosen,
Thou'lt not be the loser,
Love, honest Friendship
I tender to thee.

Pure, honest Friendship—so let it be!
Sacred the vows I plighted to thee,
'Twill never slight thee,
Never distrust,
'Twill never blight thee,
But will comfort and bless!
Never to scorn
Forever and sine,
Pure, holy Friendship,
Bind you and me.

C. ANTHONY DOYLE.

—Howe's Masonic, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, and is the way positively cure catarrh.

Literary Miscellany.

Lawrence Rohan's Destiny.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY J. M. DALTON.

CHAPTER I

When LAWRENCE ROHAN was but twelve years old, he resolved that his future should be into the world and seek his fortune. His father owned a small house and lot, and a blacksmith shop on the corner, in the city of S——. Sebastian Rohan had a large family of children, Lawrence being the eldest, and when the latter signified his wishes to his parents, they had no objections to urge, especially as Lawrence was offered a good situation as errand boy in a large grocery store. His wages at first were small, but he was so industrious and obliging that he was soon given charge of the delivery wagon and paid better wages. There was no more attentive and courteous boy to be found in S——. He remained at the store until he was seventeen years old, and in the five years of steady work he had saved eight hundred dollars.

Lawrence was conscious that his education was insufficient to fit him for a successful business career, so, after consulting with his father, he resolved to devote his savings to procuring a collegiate education. His father made arrangements to send him to one of the best colleges, which was under the control of the Christian Brothers.

During the busy five years of work, he had not neglected his studies altogether, he had studied hard every night, receiving assistance, when he needed it, from his employer. He was sufficiently prepared to enter college; and after a two years course, graduated with the degree of Master of Accounts.

Being very ambitious, Lawrence resolved only to live upon his money in order to save. He was always planning and working out a brilliant career for himself. He would begin on, step by step, overcoming every obstacle, surmounting every difficulty, battling against all opposition to his progress, until he should finally climb to the dizzy height of pre-eminence and greatness. He looked to read of the lives and early struggles of the great men of every age, thinking he shrewdly noted, and that was that most of the great men assumed a considerable fortune before they finally rose to distinction. "Wealth is power," reasoned Lawrence, "and I must first build up a competent fortune a well basis for my future career."

Having now a good education as a foundation, he set to work at once with energy and decision to build up his fortune. His old employer gladly received him as a clerk and book keeper, and for so much pleasure this dear picture takes in part;
When I'm weary, sad or lonely,
When my friends seem lost or cold
Then that look of patient courage
Makes me pass through life more bold.

When I write it's here before me,
Imparting thoughts or good advice,
Contains verse or swing stanza,
Giving love a nameless price;
Yet it chides me for my folly,
But with tone and gentle grace,
And those I love look kindly on
Through the blue eyes of that face.

Can you guess who is my maiden,
Who she is my tender eye?
Can you guess who is my woman,
Who she is my soul's ideal?
As God's dear angel from above;
Yes, she is both a mother and
For the fairest Goddess's boast?

The she who stayed my footsteps
In childhood's wild impetuous hour,
That I have a chief pleasure
Which still sways the olden power;
She who called me to my boyhood,
Taught me what I'e'er must do,
And, in her, my darling mother,
And her memory as I trust.

ZASE.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE SECRET OF MY PEACE.

You answered me by call
Across the gray sea wet.
—ELIZABETH TYLER.

I stood on the shore, and gazed in such yearning
Across the deep waters; ah, looking to me
If the ship—always coming—but never arriving,
Would broken in white sails some

THE MONITOR.

PERIODICAL ISSUE OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Paris Matin states that the Pope offers to act as mediator in the Russian-Bulgarian dispute and in the France-German misunderstanding.

—"The Italian Catholic Church," with which the names of a few apostates were identified, has collapsed for want of funds. The Italians, says a Roman correspondent, will not support anything that is abused.

— We regret to announce the death of Canon d'Amelio, of Naples, a learned theologian and distinguished publicist. Canon d'Amelio was twice offered a Bishopric, but on each occasion he declined the honor.

—In view of the fact that Queen Victoria's government in Ireland has, during her fifty years' reign, chiefly occupied itself in arresting the poor Irish tenant-farmers, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch suggests that the great-grandlady has well earned the name Queen Evictoria.

— The Right Hon. Sir M. Morris, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, Ireland, has been appointed Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, in the place of Lord Chief Justice May, resigned. Sir M. Morris is the first Catholic who has been appointed to this office since the Reformation.

—From a Berlin dispatch we learn that the Emperor William, in the course of an interview with Mgr. Klein, Bishop of Limburg, expressed an ardent desire for the preservation of peace in Europe. Speaking of the Bulgarian question, the Emperor said the mediation of the Holy See would be most acceptable.

— The oldest Cardinal now living is Cardinal Newman, aged 85. The youngest member of the Sacred College will be (after the Consistory to be held in March) Mgr. di Rende, now Nuncio in Paris. He is in his fortieth year, and was Archbishop of Benevento at the early age of 32.

— The lectures on the "Irish in America," by T. P. Gill, M. P., the first part of which we publish this week, will be read with great interest, as it states many facts not hitherto alluded to under this head. Next week's installment contains a great many valuable historical facts worth preserving.

— Mr. William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, published a letter in the Dublin Freeman's Journal, refusing to become a candidate for a seat in the House of Commons. He says that he can be more useful to the Irish cause outside Parliament "detestable premises."

— The amended Regulations for Lent in Rome, which we publish under "Rome" from those published last week in the Rome Times—as well as the Lenten Regulations for the Diocese of Sacramento, will be found on the fifth page, and they should be carefully perused and sedulously observed by all to whom they are applicable.

— A cablegram from Rome says the Herald correspondent was informed at the Vatican that proposals will shortly be laid before the Prussian Landtag, annulling nearly all that remains of the May laws, and giving the Church satisfactory action in all essential points, thus virtually closing the Kulturkampf. We hope this is true, but similar rumors from the same source have been circulated for several months past.

— The past winter in Ireland is described as one of fearful misery. Out of a population of less than 5,000,000 there are 700,000 in receipt of pauper relief in a land only one-fifth part of whose fertile area is tilled; 3,000,000 gone since Black '47! The dwindling population is dwindling still—nearly one hundred thousand a year. Well may the Irish people work and pray for an Irish Parliament in order to save the people from being legislated out of the island of their birth.

— A cablegram from Europe credits the Paris Figaro with announcing a "grand reconciliation" between France and the Vatican, the French representative in Rome having given assurances of the immediate cessation of all religious persecution in France, presenting the Pope with a Seven ram and one of the Monitpapers with a gold pen. We doubt the truth of the whole story, so we await our European exchanges before weighing in any jubilant expressions over the reported entente cordiale.

— A Rome correspondent writes that the American Cardinals arrived in time to take part in two of the most interesting celebrations witnessed annually in that city, and their attendant ceremonies will be the source of special gratification to the Holy Father. Five days before the opening of the Consistory, in which the Cardinals will receive their red hats, they will have the honor of representing the Catholics of America in offering evidence of affection to his Holiness on the seventy-sixth anniversary of his birthday, and on the following 24 of March they will assist at the ceremonies attending the celebration of the tenth anniversary of Pope Leo's coronation.

— We regret to learn from a European contemporary that Mgr. Parisetti, the Magnifico of the Catholic University of Louvain, lies in a critical position. Recently he received the last rites of the Church in presence of the Papal nuncio from his Grace the Archbishop of Mechlin, who was assisted by the Bishop of Tournay, the chief officers of the University being present. The Holy Father has telegraphed his Apostolic Benediction in the most affectionate terms. The loss of Mgr. Parisetti would be a great blow to the University, where he has been a prominent patron of learning, and an encourager of all the higher branches of scientific study and research.

An Infidel View of the Lenten Season.

One of Bob Ingersoll's bad blooded disciples injected an anti-Catholic article into Sunday's Chronicle, which we are really ashamed to find in the columns of such a wide-awake contemporary. The essence of the writer of the insulting and unmerciful article in question might easily have been secured by the editorial chief when he read the opprobrious term Romish as applied to the Catholic Church. It is a word not permissible nowadays, and it is not expressive at once destructive and detestable in the eyes of every Catholic reader of the Chronicle.

But this is not the only flagrant offence committed by this writer, as he tells the Chronicle readers with all the arrant dogmatism of unbounded assurance "the origin of Lent is involved in some doubt," when there is no doubt about it. Lent is an Apostolic institution, has ever been an Apostolic institution, and will continue to be an Apostolic institution to the end of time, even though ignorance, bigotry and Bob Ingersoldism should annually howl itself hoarse in derision or denial of this remarkable Catholic truth. Irenaeus, who flourished in the second century, in a letter to Victor, who was Bishop of Rome from about the year 190 to 202, speaks of the Lenten fast as having existed "long before, in a past generation." Tertullian, who grew prominenced in the first century and who died in the middle of the second century, speaks of days that were set apart for fasting "under the gospel dispensation, in which the Spouse was taken away."

St. Basil, who died in the year of our Lord 329, preached a sermon in one of his Homilies which is just as appropriate and as fresh in this nineteenth century. Lent as it was when first written for the Catholics of the third century. "There is no contest," says St. Basil, "no island, no nation, no city, no corner of the earth, however remote, where the Quadragesimal fast is not proclaimed. Wide-asunder—travellers, sailors, merchants, for this time cease to journey—have heard it promulgated and have congratulated themselves thereon. Let no person think themselves exempt from fasting. The angels take note of those who observe the law. Strive that your angel may write your name on his tablet, and do not desert the standard of Religion. It is now that our Lord meets the devil in a general engagement, with all the forces of His army, formed of the inhabitants of the whole world. Happy are they who, by their courage, show themselves worthy of such a Leader! Kings and princes, clergy and lay people, nobles and plebians, rich and poor, are now but one, when there is question of fasting. Would it not be a shame to consider so too heavy a burden that which the whole Church takes up with joy."

Then, Catholic readers of the MONITOR, is a brief but impressive Lenten discourse delivered nearly 1600 years ago by a Catholic Bishop to your brothers in Christ. Read it, ponder on it, and let the spirit of it be a guide to you in your Lenten duties.

Sectarian Missionaries in the Sandwich Islands.

In a recent issue of the Pacific an attempt was made by a Protestant contributor to eulogize the wonderful Christian works performed by American Protestant missionaries in the Sandwich Islands, the writer adopting the usual style of all sectarian utterances on the topic, by keeping entirely out of sight the enlightened and successful labors of Catholic missionaries in the same field.

Speaking of the first missionaries, here is what the writer in question says:

"The Catholic rites were discovered by Captain Cook in the year 1778. The first company of missionaries landed there in the spring of 1820. So that it was really forty-two years from the time of discovery till they began the labors of missionary operations."

The impression left upon the mind of a person reading this paragraph in a Protestant paper, would naturally lead to the conclusion that these so-called Christian teachers represented the pioneers of Christianity in the Sandwich Islands, whereas the first missionary to those Islands was a Catholic priest—the Abbé de Quelen—who went to the Sandwich Islands in the French corvette Uranie, of which he was chaplain, and to whom belongs the distinguished honor of having baptized the first Christian sovereign of these Islands—King Kaumualii II., as well as the first Christian Prime Minister. This important event occurred in the year 1825, prior to the date given in the Pacific contribution.

This was the Cross of Christ planted in this pagan portion of the vineyard of our Lord, and—what is very remarkable—sanctioned with the baptism of King Kaumualii II., idolatry disappeared—as if by a miracle—of the Most High—from among the native race.

Speaking of the labors of Protestant missionaries in the Sandwich Islands, the non-leading history maker of the Pacific says:

"But the missionary went there with the Bible in his hand and the Word of God in his heart; and what did the next forty years do? Look around! The fruit speaks for itself. It has no parallel in modern history or in the world's history."

The American missionaries allotted to such barbarous—the Bible in their hands—when they went to preach Protestantism to the natives of the Polynesian group, but there was far too much Amateur Instead of Catholicity in their minds for even the shadow of "the love of God" to not for a transitory instant in their hearts. By a miracle of grace it would be unlike to not, but not even a miracle could assimilate the hatred which heretical sectarians feel towards Catholic missionaries with "the love of God" ever lost in the breast of any sectarian.

"The history of Protestant missionaries in the Sandwich Islands is designated by the Pacific as 'simply marvellous,' and 'without a parallel in modern history or in the history of missions.' We agree with the writer. The history of the American missionaries is marvellously bad, and the persecution they waged against Catholic priests is almost 'without a parallel in modern history.' The first Protestant missionaries arrived in the Sandwich Islands in 1820. Twenty years before they had learned that the Church of God had obtained a foothold there, they were at once their Puritanical bigotry, to work to keep Catholic priests from being permitted to reach even among the Kanakas. They made grounds of military and civil goods to a supposedly old native woman named Kaahumanu, who assumed the reins of government when Governor Boki left the Islands on a visit to Europe, and they flattered and cajoled the old woman that they would be a party to the Lutheran anti-Catholic persecution that ever blackened the pages of even Protestant history.

"In 1826 three of these preachers—Ring, Bates, Clark and Chamberlain—became a self-appointed committee—under the authority of a sixty-year-old savage—to inquire into the conduct of the priests of le Jesus settled in this place," meaning thereby the three priests—Fathers Bachelot, Ravard and Short—who had arrived from France in 1826, in response to an invitation made by the Archbishop of Paris by King Kaumualii II., who was a convert to England in 1824-5.

The Portuguese Blue Laws of New Eng land were introduced into Polynesia with greater gratification by the Calvinistic Bishops of colonial days, than did the trio of Protestant preachers set to work to persecute the Catholic priests on the Sandwich Islands. Father Bachelot was lustily dragged from the altar by a band of armed men, in response to the suggestion of these anne missionaries of whom the Pacific writer says that "they had God in their hearts." Catholic converts numbering thousands—men, women and children—were publicly whipped and inhumanly starved and tortured in order to make them give up the religion of them "Jesus," whom the Jesuits of Christianity designed to give their courage to die like their companions. Up to the latest account note of the missionaries had been moderated, though they also were patiently awaiting the crown of martyrdom.

—Now that Lent is here it affords an excellent opportunity for carrying out the following suggestion of the Ave Maria, when it occasionally every Catholic to lang a cheap yet artistic, ornate or plain kitchen, the self-sacrificing, industrious girl who does your work will owe to your forethought many a holy inspiration, many an encouraging reflection at the sight of the Man of Sorrows. Adorn the temporary home of your kitchen with a statue of the Infinite Mother of Jesus, and you will have less reason to find fault with them. Ask for your work in the kitchen, at the art stores. Make Catholic ideas influence the market, and force into their proper place, in the kitchen, the revival of art in the household, God, His Mother and His Saints.

—Two more converts have lately been received into the Church in Oregon. Archbishop Gross had the happiness of baptizing James W. Virtue, Esq., a distinguished citizen of Salem county, and Rev F. X. Blanchet of Jacksonville had the pleasure of adding another to his long list of converts, in the person of Miss Emma Lynn Bell, of Applegate.

Lessons From the Lives of the English Martyrs.

SECOND ARTICLE.

An eminent literary writer has well stated the proposition which Henry VIII. of England waged against the Catholic Church—"Satan conspires against Christianity. Every victim which the chosen of destruction is dragged to the sacrificial altar requisitions in order to annihilate the true faith in the hearts of English Catholics and to stamp out every moral principle from their souls. The pad, the rack and the gibbet were in constant requisition. All whom the head of England devised to perish were sure to become the certain victims of the perjury, violence, death and desecration to which the laws of England devised them. In this way hundreds of innocents people were executed, many of whom pleaded guilty even when innocent, in the hope of gaining even a grain of mercy at the hands of a tyrant who knew not what mercy meant. Was it over the Catholics of England alone that this monarch's fiendish cruelty descended? Did he people with a relentless hand? Were confined himself with unfettered satisfaction? Did he wash their hands and all of whom knew that if the monarch's brutal engagements were not carried out, they would be the victims, continuously would pay the forfeit of their disobedience. The Members of Parliament were not the victims of Henry's cruelty? Know to his sore cost their proud monarch will, while the plebiancy of the land was overjoyed of the real champions servants of him who would not stop at stealing a judge that dared to administer impartial justice? Was a second Henry's hate was brought before him.

One of the most abominable, cruel and unjustified of Henry's crimes committed by Henry VIII. was his wanton and unjustifiable raging against the Protestants. Yet he had enough to do with the Catholics, and he had no time to spare for the Protestants, who were not so numerous as the Catholics, but who were more determined in their opposition to the Papal supremacy. Yet, the Protestants were not the victims of Henry's cruelty? Know to his sore cost their proud monarch will, while the plebiancy of the land was overjoyed of the real champions servants of him who would not stop at stealing a judge that dared to administer impartial justice? Was a second Henry's hate was brought before him.

Many of the most determined opponents of the Papal supremacy were Protestants, and their opinions were so pronounced that they

Farm and Home.

COOKERY FOR LENT.

Hints for Catholic House-keepers

SOUP MASHAL.—Four carrots, two leeks, one turnip, two large potatoes, and a bunch of dried peas. Put together in a cup pot with four quarts of cold water; boil four hours, pass through a sieve; add a piece of butter, pepper and salt, and a little more water. Boil for half an hour, and serve, adding a little boiled rice or sliced potato.

ASPARAGUS.—Hard-boiled eggs—allow the number as needed—into a basin, add a spoonful of cream, and a little piece of butter, pepper and salt. Take two ounces of butter in an omelette pan, and, while it is melting, whip the eggs thoroughly; when the butter begins to splutter, pour the eggs in and stir. As it becomes firm, roll the omelette, let it brown on a dish, and serve.

CONDIMENT.—In boiling codfish it should simmer rather than boil. Ten minutes is allowed to every pound of fish, and it must be taken out immediately when done.

OYSTER SAUCE.—One pint oysters; half a lemon; two tablespoonfuls of butter; one teaspoonful of flour; one teacupful of cream or milk; nutmeg and nutmeg. Stew the oysters in their own liquor five minutes and add milk. When this boils, strain the liquor, and return to the saucepan. Thicken with the flour when you have wet it with cold water, stir well in; put in the butter; add the cayenne (if you like it) boil for a minute; squeeze in the lemon-juice, shake it around well, and pour out.

SPINACH.—Cook spinach in its own juice; it requires little water, it must be washed thoroughly and have the stalks off. Put a half peck into a dry saucepan, sprinkle with a dessert spoonful of salt. This will draw out the juice. Let it boil for ten minutes, after it has begun to cook. Then put it in a colander to drain, and shop it very finely or pass it through a coarse sieve. For the sauce, put a tablespoonful of cream and an ounce of butter into a saucepan; as it boils, stir the spinach into it. After this, keep it hot where it will not boil. When it is about boiling, sprinkle with cayenne pepper, garnish with potato of lemon or hard boiled eggs cut in rings. If you prefer poached eggs on spinach: fill a small pan with boiling water, pour into this a tablespoonful of lemon juice; break four eggs on a plate, one at a time, and slip it into the boiling water. The lemon juice sets the eggs in shape. Wait till one egg is quite set before you put in another. Cook each about three minutes.

CELERY (BOILED).—Wash one bunch of celery thoroughly, and let it lie in cold water for half an hour. Cut in small pieces and boil in salted water for thirty minutes. Drain through a colander. After this, put back into the saucepan, add a tablespoonful of butter and a cup of milk in which a tablespoonful of flour has been dissolved; let it boil five minutes. Before serving, sprinkle with black pepper.

BOILED POTATOES.—Wash thoroughly and put them into boiling water, with a little salt. Boil thirty minutes. Afterwards drain and send to table in their jackets.

APPLE CUSTARD.—Take a pint of grated apple-tart, three eggs, and a half pound of sugar, a quarter of a pound of butter, half a teacupful of milk, the juice and grated rind of a small lemon. Mix the sugar and butter together, beat in the eggs and the milk. Then put in the lemon. This makes five dishes in single crust.

BLACK COFFEE.—Java and Mocha. Pour boiling water on the coffee. Cover the coffee-pot at once and set aside for a few minutes. Do not let the coffee boil. Serve in small cups.

Queer Things to Eat.

Grasshoppers have been eaten from the earliest times. The Scriptures contain abundant proof of this, and the law of Moses is very plain indeed in its permission to the people of Israel to eat "the locust after his kind, the bald locust after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the grasshopper after his kind. Every flying, creeping thing that creeth upon all four, which have legs above their feet, to leap withal upon the earth," was "clean," that is eatable, to the people of Israel (Leviticus ii. 22), and was unquestionably eaten not only by them, but by other Western Asiatic people.

There were two ways of preparing grasshoppers to be eaten. They were either stewed in wine and onion without cooking, or else—and this is the way they are still prepared for food in Syria and Arabia—they were boiled in salted water, their wings plucked off and then the insects dried in the sun, when they were ready to be eaten.

Ants are eaten in Africa. The traveler Junker relates that the chief of a tribe on the Mubarch river, in the Egyptian Soudan, sent him twenty baskfulls of ants for provisions on his journey. They are pounded into a sort of paste, which is said by Junker to "taste like hare."

Moths and butterflies have often been eaten, and the ancient Romans used beetles as food. The Brazilians greatly esteem a bug that feeds on the palm leaf. In Chili and Peru one of the national dishes, the chupe de choche, is a sort of stew made of potatoes and the choche, a beetle like insect which is found in manure and under stones along the water courses.

The old gentleman replied by answer, but the question strongly effected him.

"I beg your pardon," said the minister gently, "if I have thoughtlessly awakened in your mind recollections of a painful nature. The world is full of sorrow, sir, and perhaps my question recalls to your mind (?) a fair, beautiful girl, whose blossoming young life withered in its bloom. Am I right, sir?"

"No, not exactly," replied the old gentleman. "I have five unmarried derivatives, and the youngest of his 21 is 26 years old."

Entirely too Harrowing.

Young husband—Would you like to go to the theatre tonight?

Young wife—Yes, indeed.

"What shall we go and see—'Man and Wife?'"

"O, no! I don't like to see fighting on the stage."

American Appreciation of Worth.

Omaha dame—I am soliciting subscriptions for a monument to Mr. Blank, the poet.

Omaha man—Did he die poor?

"In absolute want.

"Are his children provided for?"

"No, but being a poet is just as long, I guess there some odd victuals this morning."

"Where is his wife?"

"O!, she's comfortable. She's in the poorhouse."

"I didn't know Blank was such a great poet as that. Here is $50. He ought to have a monument worth $50,000.

Cash Every Time.

Call lady (in dry goods shop)—What do you sell those goods for?

Clerk (selling boy)—Cash!

—Every day adds to the great amount of evidence as to the curative powers of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters in Dyspepsia, Asthma, Hiccough, Nervousness, Rheumatism, Fever and Ague, Liver Complaint, and blood purifier, as proved by the "Sun." Use it and be convinced. Sold by all druggists.

Food for Consumptives.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites, is a most wonderful food. It not only gives strength and increases the flesh, but holds in relaxation of the throat and lungs. Palatable as milk and is all wasting diseases, both old people and children, is a marvellous food and medicine.

Family Fun.

Not Acquainted with Shakespeare.

In a will case before a court and a rustic jury Jere Black appeared as counsel for the contest of three sisters, and sought to break the will on the ground that the aged testator had, with the assistance of his learned brother, the counsel on the other side, cajoled and coerced the dead father during his dying hours into signing a will giving them all his property and leaving the youngest daughter out in the cold. Black, who was young then, made a great speech to the jury, in which "King Lear" very naturally appeared.

"Gentlemen, he said, the bedside, gentlemen of the jury, he exclaimed. Begin was there. But where was Cordelia?"

The jury remained out for some time. At last they came in. But the foreman reported that they could not agree. All of them except one man were in favor of the youngest sister, but the one man was not satisfied, and could not be satisfied about what he thought a flaw in the evidence.

"What is it?" asked the court of the obstinate juror.

"Why, your Honor," said the fellow, "if Mr. Gonerel and Mr Regan were present, as that lawyer said, why didn't he put them in the witness box?"

A Couple of Strangers Called.

"You see, the way of it was this," he was explaining to a patrolman yesterday; "I was in a misery spasm to-day, and I was cross in. They warned their hands at the stores, and one of them suddenly began sniffing and sniffing and then called out:

"'Say! Mister, you! Your kerosene is leaking all over the this cellar!'

"That rattled me, and I grabbed a couple of matches and ran down stairs. I was down there a couple of minutes before I remembered—

"Remembered what?"

"Why, that there was upstairs at the back end of the store—

"Yes, I understand. I hurried up to see if anything had happened to it. It was too late.

"They had robbed the till and gone, of course?

"Oh, no. They had gone around the counter, and my bag dog had corralled one of the potato-bins and the other between two molasses barrels, and was biting them at the rate of forty bites a minute."

"Then how was it too late?"

"Why, when I pulled the dog and locked the fellows over I hadn't the heart to kick them across the street. I just led 'em to the door and gave each one one kit spiece and asked him to call again. I wish I wasn't so shaken-hearted about such things—I really do."

Money in His Pockets

In Savaria no unmarried woman is allowed to speak on the street to any of her friends of the opposite sex, no matter how well she may know them. This is money in the Hungarian young man's pocket when he meets three or four of his lady friends in front of an ice cream saloon. It may be etiquette for a young man to speak at such times and places, but it is not policy.

Willing to Work.

Pittsburg tramp—"Madam, if you'll fill me up with a good dinner I'll saw some wood. I'm willing to work."

Woman (shortly)—"You know very well we burn nothing but natural gas."

Pittsburg tramp—"Well, gimme suthin' to eat an' I'll turn on the gas for you."

Poor Man.

"O, yes; they say he's very rich now. Still, I know the time when he used to walk around barefooted in mid-winter."

"In his early boyhood, maybe?"

"O, no. Since he's married."

"Impossible, Mrs. Bascomb! Why, when?"

"At night, when the baby had the colic."

About His Head.

A lady who saw a sailor beaten and pounded by a brutal Captain was made so ill that she remained below deck for several days. When she again made her appearance upon deck the sailor was at the wheel. In great sympathy she went to him, full of memory of the dreadful event, and said:

"How is your head, my poor man?"

He had himself forgotten the little circumstance, and, glancing at the compass, cheerfully replied:

"Wny-nor-west and running free, madam."

A Funny Story.

"Ha! ha! ha!" laughed Dumley as he finished a long chestnut. "Capital story, Featherby!"

"Yes," replied Featherby, "it's good every time, Dumley; good every time."

The Clergyman's Mistake.

"You have daughters, have you not, sir?" said a minister to an old gentleman with whom he had formed a mutual acquaintance as a fellow passenger.

"I have one left."

"Why, where is your other? I hope nothing has happened to her?"

"Nothing, sir, nothing, sir, but—but—I beg your pardon, sir, I thought you asked me about my daughters."

"Why, Mr. Gonerel and Mr Regan were present, as that lawyer said, why didn't he put them in the witness box?"

A Couple of Strangers Called.

"You see, the way of it was this," he was explaining to a patrolman yesterday; "I was in a misery spasm to-day, and I was cross in. They warned their hands at the stores, and one of them suddenly began sniffing and sniffing and then called out:

"'Say! Mister, you! Your kerosene is leaking all over the this cellar!'

"That rattled me, and I grabbed a couple of matches and ran down stairs. I was down there a couple of minutes before I remembered—

"Remembered what?"

"Remembered what?"

"Why, when I pulled the dog and locked the fellows over I hadn't the heart to kick them across the street. I just led 'em to the door and gave one one kit spiece and asked him to call again. I wish I wasn't so shaken-hearted about such things—I really do."

Money in His Pockets

In Savaria no unmarried woman is allowed to speak on the street to any of her friends of the opposite sex, no matter how well she may know them. This is money in the Hungarian young man's pocket when he meets three or four of his lady friends in front of an ice cream saloon. It may be etiquette for a young man to speak at such times and places, but it is not policy.

Willing to Work.

Pittsburg tramp—"Madam, if you'll fill me up with a good dinner I'll saw some wood. I'm willing to work."

Woman (shortly)—"You know very well we burn nothing but natural gas."

Pittsburg tramp—"Well, gimme suthin' to eat an' I'll turn on the gas for you."

Poor Man.

"O, yes; they say he's very rich now. Still, I know the time when he used to walk around barefooted in mid-winter."

"In his early boyhood, maybe?"

"O, no. Since he's married."

"Impossible, Mrs. Bascomb! Why, when?"

"At night, when the baby had the colic."

About His Head.

A lady who saw a sailor beaten and pounded by a brutal Captain was made so ill that she remained below deck for several days. When she again made her appearance upon deck the sailor was at the wheel. In great sympathy she went to him, full of memory of the dreadful event, and said:

"How is your head, my poor man?"

He had himself forgotten the little circumstance, and, glancing at the compass, cheerfully replied:

"Wny-nor-west and running free, madam."

A Funny Story.

"Ha! ha! ha!" laughed Dumley as he finished a long chestnut. "Capital story, Featherby!"

"Yes," replied Featherby, "it's good every time, Dumley; good every time."

The Clergyman's Mistake.

"You have daughters, have you not, sir?" said a minister to an old gentleman with whom he had formed a mutual acquaintance as a fellow passenger.

"I have one left."

"Why, where is your other? I hope nothing has happened to her?"

"Nothing, sir, nothing, sir, but—but—I beg your pardon, sir, I thought you asked me about my daughters."

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

THE GENTLE, YET EFFECTUAL ACTION of this great old remedy, Simmons Liver Regulator, makes it the best family medicine.

No household should be without it. It prevents as well as cures Torpid Liver, Dyspepsia, Nausea, Bile, Colic, Indigestion, Constipation, Fevers, Sleeplessness, Languor, Bad Breath, and short attacks brought on or aggravated by a disordered stomach.

It has no equal as a Preparatory Medicine. No matter what the disease, none of it will afford relief and in a short time will effect a speedy cure. It is the first and last aid to many thousands of people have endorsed it.

THE BEST FAMILY MEDICINE

D. MENCARINI,
911 Mission St,
San Francisco, Cal.
Manufacturer and Importer of
RELIGIOUS STATUARY, GLASS
Suitable for Churches, Convent Chapels, Academy Schools, Etc.
THE ONLY COMPLETE COLLECTION ON THE PACIFIC COAST.
Catalogues sent free on application.

WARD & CO.'S
Male and Female
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.
608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.
Telephone No. 971.
ALWAYS TO HAND—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Cooks, Waiters, Chambermaids, Dishwashers, Barmaids, Hands, Laundresses, Nurses, Gardeners, Coachmen, private families and ranches. Also, good reliable Help, without any charge to employers. Valuable waiting room for ladies and gents.

PATENTS

CUTLERY!
IF YOU WANT the best Razors, Scissors, and Carving Knives GROUND AND PUT IN FIRST-CLASS ORDER,
Cutler, 1436 Market St., bet. Eighth & Ninth
Cutlery of any description made to order and repaired. A school which Blue Cutlery is used.
M. J. HAYES,

QUICK TIME
ANDCHAMPAGNE
To Eastern and European Cities
Via the Great Trans-continental All-rail Route.
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY.
Depot Foot of Townsend Street.
Ticket Office, 613 Market Street, opp. Palace Hotel.

THE DR. ZEILE
Turkish, Electric, Russian, Steam
AND VAPOR BATH OF MRS. DR. ZEILE
BATH
THIS ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE LADIES ONLY ATTEND LADIES. Ladies can depend on the utmost care and attention. Ladies can depend on the utmost care and attention. Ladies can depend on the utmost care and attention.
1009 to 1016 Pacific Street, bet. Montgomery and Kearny.

WESTERN HOTEL,
212-14 Broadway Street.
JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor
(Late Sheehan's Hotel.)
Share this copy at the MONITOR to your Catholic friends and neighbors, and ask them to subscribe. Only 25 a year when paid in advance

Tutt's Pills
FOR TORPID LIVER.
A torpid liver deranges the whole system, and produces
Sick Headache, Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Rheumatism, Sallow Skin and Piles.
There is no better remedy for these complaints than Tutt's Liver Pills, as a trial will prove. Price, 25c.
Sold Everywhere.

Marvellous Memory
DISCOVERY.
Mind Wandering, Want of Memory, Want of Will, Want of Energy, Want of Ambition, Want of Nerve, Want of Vitality, Want of Manhood, Want of Vigor

LATEST NEWS FROM ROME.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

On last Friday, in the Chanalor, he mounted his favorite hobby once again, and evidently denounced the practice of a chaplain at Charenton, the great public madhouse, as a "jest," and demanded that he should be dismissed. To the great surprise of the Doctor and the Chanalor, M. Hublet stood up to the defence of the chaplain, declared that far from being a jest, he was a consolation and a help to the inmates, and should not be taken from them. The Minister seemed so far as to grant this opportunity of paying a tribute of respect to the Sisters, who devote themselves to the care of the patients. Prince de Léon, acting on the principle that you must not take holy water from the devil office it, contemptuously rejected M. Hublet's generous homage to the Sisters, and sneered at him so rudely that he had to be called to order by the President.

Death of the Cardinal-Archbishop of Lyons.

Cardinal Caverot, Archbishop of Lyons and Primate of the Gaulis, the oldest of the French Princes of the Church, breathed his last on Sunday evening, in the archiepiscopal palace at Lyons. His Eminence had long been ailing, and his death was not therefore unexpected. The malady which has had so fatal a result was not a painful one, but it was attended by complete physical exhaustion. Towards the close of last week his condition gave alarm to his friends, and at the request of the Vicars-General special prayers were offered up throughout the diocese for his recovery. On Sunday afternoon it was recognized that his state was hopeless. Fortified with the last Sacraments, and with a prayer upon the lips, the venerable Cardinal passed away at six o'clock.

The Apostolic Nuncio.

His Excellency Mgr. di Rende, Apostolic Nuncio to the French Republic, will be elevated to the Cardinalate at the approaching Consistory. Mgr. di Rende who is scarcely forty years of age will be the youngest member of the Sacred College. The pleasure with which the intelligence of his well merited reward has been received in Paris is considably marred by the prospect of the early departure from the French capital of a Prelate whose affable manner and brilliant accomplishments have earned for him the esteem and affection of all with whom he came in contact. Intimately acquainted with the complex relations of Church and State in France, Mgr. di Rende will be a valuable acquisition to the Sacred College, and a clever counsellor to the Propaganda.

The Papacy and Foreign Governments.

Amongst the preparations for worthily celebrating the jubilee now being made in Spain, France, Germany, Belgium, Austria, etc., there is a project to have a collective movement of Catholics to their respective Governments, requiring that the Sovereign Pontiff be offered the most efficacious and true guarantees of liberty and independence in presence of the fury of anti-clericalism. Bagnor Rebaldi, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, has become aware of this project, and has communicated his opinion to his colleagues, Depretis and Tajani, who in their turn are, it is reported, about to address circulars to the prefects throughout the country. The very surprising concurrence of rogue which have been employed against the anti-clerical press is considered as the first effect of the new ministerial tendency. Thus, the ministry which raised or encouraged the anti-clerical fury now attempt to quiet it down. Already the sum of 173,465 francs has been received from Italy alone for the Pontifical Jubilee, and this has been sent to his Holiness. The contributions to this gift have been halfpence and pennies. On the 19th of January the Superiors and Rectors of the various Ecclesiastical Colleges in Rome assembled, under the presidency of the Cardinal Vicar, to take the steps necessary for the holding of a Polyglot literary Academy, which will be held on occasion of the Pope's Jubilee. No city but Rome could, in all probability, bring together the speakers of so many different languages, all harmonized by love and devotion, to sing the praises of the Sovereign Pontiff.

A Carmelite Nun.

Miss Eulalia Mary Tuckerman, daughter of Mr. Samuel Tuckerman of Lambert's Castle, Westchester Highlands, was admitted into the Order of Carmelites, and received the habit here on Jan. 20th by his Eminence Cardinal Gibbons, at the Convent of Our Lady, John J. Williams, Archbishop of Boston, who was the priest officiating, and who baptized, confirmed, and gave her her first Communion, was present at the ceremony. The very surprising nonsense of rogue which have been employed against the anti-clerical press is considered as the first effect of the new ministerial tendency. Thus, the ministry which raised or encouraged the anti-clerical fury now attempt to quiet it down. Already the sum of 173,465 francs has been received from Italy alone for the Pontifical Jubilee, and this has been sent to his Holiness. The contributions to this gift have been halfpence and pennies. On the 19th of January the Superiors and Rectors of the various Ecclesiastical Colleges in Rome assembled, under the presidency of the Cardinal Vicar, to take the steps necessary for the holding of a Polyglot Literary Academy, which will be held on occasion of the Pope's Jubilee. No city but Rome could, in all of probability, bring together the speakers of so many different languages, all harmonized by love and devotion, to sing the praises of the Sovereign Pontiff.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ANTRIM.—The ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the new Catholic Schools, which it is proposed to build in Donegall street, Old Park road, Belfast, was recently performed by Most Rev. Dr. McAlister. For many years another necessity for school accommodation in Northern Antrim has felt by the Catholics of the Ballycastle district, and we, thanks to the zeal of the Rev. Father Crockard, the want is about to be met.

CAVAN.—The "Flies of Carnaghan" against tenants, has been adopted on the estate of Messrs. Jones and William Johnson, near Blackliss. The tenants, numbering 70, having been refused a reduction of 25 per cent., it was decided to adopt the Plan.

CLARE.—The tenants on the Ballycorus estate of Mrs. Hall and Miss Abbott, of Ennis, have paid their rents into the hand of Charles Gabbett Mahon sub-Sheriff of Clare, and, of the larger attending seizures and evictions in Clare.

CORK.—Mr. T. J. Conty, Sligo, Limerick, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace.

Paul Kingston and Daniel Sullivan, his son, tried tenants on the property of Mr. Wm. O'Connor, Bantry, were evicted from their holdings at Kealvinan, on Jan. 20. The latter, who represents a year and a half, has with a young Kingston was so afflicted by the eviction that she attempted to commit suicide in the river.

A death is announced, on January 23, at Cremore, Malahide, of Catherine, beloved wife of Daniel O'Brien, and mother of Dan Ryan, of Wagga, N.S.W., aged 70 years. She was a pious, good mother, charitable to the poor, and particularly attentive to the wants of the fishermen.

On Jan. 27th, there died in Cork, at an advanced age, an humble, but honest, and an oldest patriot, Daniel Beaslie. He was for ran the outlaw's hold career, and in '48 he took a prominent part in the Fenian movement, for which, the informer, sworn against him he was arrested after Judge Nicholas Keogh, and sentenced. He was transported again in connection with abortive rising in '67, but finding himself unable to stand the climate, he died so far from his native country, and, alas! without the consolation of seeing and praying for his daughter's (Mrs. J. Mahony's) residence, 72 Sullivan's Quay, on Jan. 30.

CARLOW.—At the Convent of Mercy, Rosscommon, Margaret Mulhall, in religious Sister Mary Agnes Joseph, breathed her last on Jan. 21st, details reported by a host of admiring friends. The deceased, the third daughter of the late Thomas Mulhall, Carlow, was but one of a family of twelve, all of whom, with the exception of themselves, who having left the world, devoted themselves to the service of God in the religious state. She entered the Convent of Mercy, Athlone, at the early age of sixteen, made her novitiate and profession at the time, and after having spent thirty-five years in the service of God, she died after having completed her fifty-third year.

DONEGAL.—The worst evictions in Gweedore were asked by some quite as severe as those of Glenbeigh, and the sheriff and the police were obstructed much more seriously than in Kerry. Rude hooting to the sounds of the evictions were rendered impossible and the people enabled to carry the town in the evictions. In one of the houses to be evicted the bailiffs found the tenant—a cripple. Only the outer walls of the evicted house have been completed, and it has the sheriff had to carry the cripple out of the house, put down open and replaced the tenant and his family in the house. Some of the rock jaws between the police and the people, and some powerful words spoken by the people, and some were arrested through the exertions of the Catholic clergymen who were present.

DUBLIN.—His Holiness the Pope has conferred the dignity of the Roman Prelacy on the first Catholic layman in Dublin, Chairman of the Dublin Catholic Chapter, Dean Law and Mr. Macaulay, of 41 Upper street, in the city of Dublin, Solicitor and agent under the Marquis of Ormonde's family Mother, of 11 George's quay, in the same city, and Mr. Edward Dillon, of the Hermitage, Ballybrack, Co. Dublin, Mr. Stephens, the county of the city of Dublin, Solicitor and plaintiffs' dealer, have been a judged bankrupt.

GALWAY.—On Jan. 25th, Dr. Tully, Bishop of Galway, called on his professional adviser, Mr. G. G. Bodkin, Q.C., to inform him of his determination to resign the very active duties of his episcopal office, which confined, he said, he felt it his duty to do, he was sure, that the bishop did not consider it prudent for him to be overtaxed by any person. There was no slight of his time he regretted, and though he was sorry he had to refused to give half.

KILKENNY.—The Rev. Father Lee on Sunday, 13, 2, P.C. of Kilkenny, who since his arrival in Ireland, has been promoted to the curacy of Mrs. Hall and Miss Abbott, of Ennis, has paid their rents into the hand of Charles Gabbett Mahon sub-Sheriff of Clare, and, of the larger attending seizures and evictions in Clare.

KERRY.—Mr. T. J. Conty, Sligo, Limerick, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace.

Paul Kingston and Daniel Sullivan, his son, tried tenants on the property of Mr. Wm. O'Connor, Bantry, were evicted from their holdings at Kealvinan, on Jan. 20. The latter, who represents a year and a half, has with a young Kingston was so afflicted by the eviction that she attempted to commit suicide in the river.

A death is announced, on January 23, at Cremore, Malahide, of Catherine, beloved wife of Daniel O'Brien, and mother of Dan Ryan, of Wagga, N.S.W., aged 70 years. She was a pious, good mother, charitable to the poor, and particularly attentive to the wants of the fishermen.

On Jan. 27th, there died in Cork, at an advanced age, an humble, but honest, and an oldest patriot, Daniel Beaslie. He was for ran the outlaw's hold career, and in '48 he took a prominent part in the Fenian movement, for which, the informer, sworn against him he was arrested after Judge Nicholas Keogh, and sentenced. He was transported again in connection with abortive rising in '67, but finding himself unable to stand the climate, he died so far from his native country, and, alas! without the consolation of seeing and praying for his daughter's (Mrs. J. Mahony's) residence, 72 Sullivan's Quay, on Jan. 30.

CARLOW.—At the Convent of Mercy, Rosscommon, Margaret Mulhall, in religious Sister Mary Agnes Joseph, breathed her last on Jan. 21st, details reported by a host of admiring friends. The deceased, the third daughter of the late Thomas Mulhall, Carlow, was but one of a family of twelve, all of whom, with the exception of themselves, who having left the world, devoted themselves to the service of God in the religious state. She entered the Convent of Mercy, Athlone, at the early age of sixteen, made her novitiate and profession at the time, and after having spent thirty-five years in the service of God, she died after having completed her fifty-third year.

DONEGAL.—The worst evictions in Gweedore were asked by some quite as severe as those of Glenbeigh, and the sheriff and the police were obstructed much more seriously than in Kerry. Rude hooting to the sounds of the evictions were rendered impossible and the people enabled to carry the town in the evictions. In one of the houses to be evicted the bailiffs found the tenant—a cripple. Only the outer walls of the evicted house have been completed, and it has the sheriff had to carry the cripple out of the house, put down open and replaced the tenant and his family in the house. Some of the rock jaws between the police and the people, and some powerful words spoken by the people, and some were arrested through the exertions of the Catholic clergymen who were present.

DUBLIN.—His Holiness the Pope has conferred the dignity of the Roman Prelacy on the first Catholic layman in Dublin, Chairman of the Dublin Catholic Chapter, Dean Law and Mr. Macaulay, of 41 Upper street, in the city of Dublin, Solicitor and agent under the Marquis of Ormonde's family Mother, of 11 George's quay, in the same city, and Mr. Edward Dillon, of the Hermitage, Ballybrack, Co. Dublin, Mr. Stephens, the county of the city of Dublin, Solicitor and plaintiffs' dealer, have been a judged bankrupt.

GALWAY.—On Jan. 25th, Dr. Tully, Bishop of Galway, called on his professional adviser, Mr. G. G. Bodkin, Q.C., to inform him of his determination to resign the very active duties of his episcopal office, which confined, he said, he felt it his duty to do, he was sure, that the bishop did not consider it prudent for him to be overtaxed by any person. There was no slight of his time he regretted, and though he was sorry he had to refused to give half.

KILKENNY.—The Rev. Father Lee on Sunday, 13, 2, P.C. of Kilkenny, who since his arrival in Ireland, has been promoted to the curacy of Mrs. Hall and Miss Abbott, of Ennis

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

NO CROSS, NO CROWN.

Heavier the Cross, the nearer Heaven,
No cross—no crown, as God wishes!
Death, Judgment from this heart are driven,
Amid the world's false glare and ghost;
Oh! happy he, with all his woe,
Whom God hath set beneath His Cross.

Heavier the Cross, the stronger faith;
The loaded tree strikes deeper root;
The vine yields sweetly beneath
When men have pressed the clustered fruit;
And morning grass wears diamond gems
Like pearls beneath Australia's foam.

Heavier the cross the heavier prayer;
The bruised herbs most fragrant are;
If sky and wind were always fair
The sailor would not watch the star;
And David's Lauras would not be sung
If grief his heart had never wrung.

Heavier the Cross, the more aspiring;
From vales we climb to mountain crest;
The saints of old Exile bring,
Long for the Canaan of their rest;
Those Will Come have no rest in sight,
And to the Ark they whelp their flight.

Heavier the Cross the easier dying;
Death is a friendlier face to see;
To life's decay one bids defying,
From life's distress one than is free;
The Cross exhausts life our faith
To Him who triumphed over death.

Thus Crucified: the Cross I carry,
The longer may it dearer be;
And let I faint while lower I tarry,
Implant Thou scath a home in my
Until faith, hope, and love increase,
Till for the Cross the crown I wear.

* * *

Oh, human hearts! how strange it seems,
With so much woe, so much wail and moan,
That ye gather strength in the trial hour,
And cheap Calvary's Cross with such a power
Is there aught worth in Heaven above,
Where all is light and joy and love,
Than earth's tears upon its sod dare
In faith and hope, trusting His care
Who bore His Cross?
Then, Christian hearts, fresh courage take!
Your crosses carried; the Golden Gate
Will be open wide, and God's own hand
Will lead you home to that blest land
To crown for ever.

F. McGINN McHALE.

THE WIDOW'S MITE.

From a far off eastern province in the land of grape and vine,
Where the sun, unclouded loveliness, the golden fruits ripens,
Where flowers of rarest beauty and rich odors meet our glances,
Overhung with cloudless azure sky—the sunny land of Palestine,

Came an humble peasant woman, dressed in poorest peasant garb,
Bearing something, which she guarded as a dear and valued prize,
All the savings of her lifetime, of her life of toil and sorrow,
Late and early had she labored hard upon her positive toil.

Now, she brings her little savings to a pilgrim bound for Jerusalem;
To present the Holy Father, as her loving gift from home;
Hoping humbly, as she gave it, with a child-like faith and hope,
That her gift, if suitable offering be accepted by the Pope.

She may hide the coin for small comforts in her sickness and old age,
But to have that she has hoarded like would her poverty sayings;
She had always worked with strangers, and that work she still would do,
As a bird and lone Providence no cold distrust she knew.

Thus she spoke, as in the pilgrim she consigned her hard-won gains;
Who so sure about her future, she' not s'en a sent remains,
In dam time Her Widow's tribute was presented without fail,
And during was the Pontiff touched while listening to the tale.

Unmoved not, 'mid sorrow, had remained that noble brow,
And pity to large tight tear-drops are glistening as it saw;
The noble, pure devotion of that honest, fervent soul,
Awaked in him feelings which he could not then control.

Pope Pius, with emotion, took the Fisherman's ring off his finger,
And placed it in the alms, as she' it were a hallowed thing;
The Widow's loving offering, she's simple one and small,
Clutch' Vine priest, for well he knew she received her all.

A holy alms—too sacred far—the saintly Pontiff for his use,
Yet, he said, aside, altho's Pope should avoid the sin of pride,
Yet as it is richest treasure which from affluence he has given,
Were thought one half as precious as that humble gift bestowed.

MONREE.

TRUTH AND LOVE.

The works of man shall crumble and decay,
His boast in brass and iron shall pass away,
But, say the inspired pages of Holy Writ and time
The Truth shall flourish in immortal prime.

Temples and towers shall crumble into dust,
Ships shall be wrecked and perish with the rust,
And all things that we see, hear, smell, taste and feel
Vanish from the earth, but Love and Truth are real.

The splendid crowds of pyramids and thrones
Can only remain in spirit when human lives are Still moulder into earth without a name—
Not even one memorial of prominent fame—

But Truth, and Love, and Hope and glorious Song
Will triumph over age and time, and long
And those the dreams spirit in the night
When vice and vengeance battle with the right.

JOHN A. JOYCE.

THE HOMES OF IRELAND.

The blessed homes of Ireland!
In sunshine time they stand
Around the verdant hills and plains,
The valleys of the land.
As hallow'd shrines where treasures dwell
Dear, sacred within their walls,
Hearts let the roll of days tell
Yes! within their home walls.

The peasant homes of Ireland!
They are centuries old in sod
For which their fathers fought and died
When Tyrants would despoil
And round the ruthless hearths by night
Still echo many a toil.

Of daring deed and bloody fight
For home and country's land.

The noble homes of Ireland
! but memories dear are
What glorious feats of chivalry
Green land, for thy dear sake!
Their battled towers and turrets hold,
Spread on the breeze
Tell of the free, fair home of old,
Thy ancient pride, Ire'land.

The abbeys grey of Ireland
Are in solemn contrasting
Their silent and mouldering pleasure,
The aged and slender lady
There faith and freedom found a home,
And a thousand raided shrines
Tell of the sanctuaries love that Home
Hears to our holiest lays.

God bless the homes of Ireland,
Long may their virtues shine,
Vouchsafe bright blessings on them
Of love faith and love divine,
And may the Pontiff touched while listening to the tale.
Send forth the "wind and whistle" cure,
The balm—the tears—love.

—For 35 years Henry F. Hollins, of Hickory Man., suffered from rheumatism. He tried in relief till he took Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Literary Miscellany.

The Broken Crucifix.

A Tale of Prague and Mexico.

BY M. J. COLLIN

The young wife of the Marquis of Rosline, at within the contained alcove of her lonel tifial bedside, at her feet a lonely child, a shout eight summers, was sitting upon a low ottoman, engaged in the hopeless task of teaching her pet Fido to walk on his hind legs, suddenly the startled child caused the check and with tears, a fearful, unbidden, had fallen from the sad, unfamiliar eyes of the unhappy wife and mother.

In vain did the mother strive to conceal her emotion, and to restore the mirth of her only child.

The approach of Silva, Marie's familiar name, announced to them that the lonely had arrived for evening prayers. Kneeling upon the soft carpet, the three repeated, in unison tones, the Pater Noster, Ave Maria and the Credo, and as Marie was about to kiss her mother good night, the latter, gently raising her head, motioned to the child and bade her to remain upon their knees. In obedience to the mandamus, they petitioned her Lady of Sorrows to obtain for them the grace sufficient to enable them to remain true to their faith in spite of persecution.

As soon as Marie had departed, the Marquis of Rosline entered. He was a man whose countenance bore the marks of irascibles, unregulated passions, combined with the severity which of St. Ov. he had not only ceased to practice but which had becomes disciple of Voltaire and D'Alembert, who constantly employed his wealth, liberty, reason and philosophy to destroy the faith, not only of the people of France, but of the laiest portions of the entire continent.

The marquis, like many others, did not realize the fact that true liberty is only to be found in the religion of Christ, and that our reason properly directed, leads to the content of faith, when that faith rests which requires revelation as the corner stone of its system, is really nonsensicpy.

So bitter were his prejudices against the religion of Christ, that he had more than once cruelly forbade the marchioness from attending church, receiving the sacraments, or instructing their child in the simple truths of the little catechism.

As he entered the presence of his wife, she at once detected, with a sensation of terror, that his countenance bore the traces of great anger.

"Madame," he exclaimed, hardly, "have you not once again been teaching our child your Papish prayers! how often have I commanded you to cease your superstitious work, and leave Marie's mind free to be influenced by the light of reason?"

Without raising her eyes, which were placed upon a small silver crucifix, resting on a marble mantel, within the alcove, the wife replied:

"I have before told you that my allegiance to that Heavenly Father is paramount to all other duties, and I can not dispense Him to obey your unreasonable, unnatural and diabolical commands. I shall continue to teach my child her prayers, and shall be the will of God to spare my life, I shall endeavor to raise her a true Catholic."

"Then you intend to continue to disobey me?" he exclaimed, fuming with rage.

"I can not obey man before my God."

"You will live to rue the hour when you trample upon my orders, and assume to control the affairs of my house. Mark, listen, if you do not renounce your superstitious and conse tending work of child contrary to my express wishes, I will drive you out into the world as poor as I found you, when, in a moment, I raised you from the Mendicant's lowly cot."

Saying the crucifix, which the lady vainly endeavored to protect, he crushed it beneath his heel, and left the apartment, with a frown, strode from the apartment.

Crushed, and almost heart-broken, the unhappy wife sank upon her knees, and implored the protection of the Blessed Lady.

Seating the crucifix, which the lady vainly endeavored to protect, he crushed it beneath his heel, and left the apartment, with a frown, strode from the apartment.

Crushed, and almost heart-broken, the unhappy wife sank upon her knees, and implored the protection of the Blessed Lady.

The marquis, summoning a carriage, at once drove to his club, composed of the following of Voltaire and St. Simon, of that class of man which led a Lacordaire to abandon worldly honors, and to become a disciple of St. Dominic, that he might appeal to the infidel mind, not only by the eloquence which captivated a hemisphere, but by the influence of a man, whose early appearance on the role of a legal practitioner, drew from M. Seguier the remark, "This is not Patin, but Bossuet." And yet, with a brilliant career open to him on the paths of the legal profession, he abandon it, and enters a religious order, so that, by word and example, he might appeal to that very class of frenzied agitators, of which the Marquis of Rosline was a type.

Leaving his faith at St. Cyr, where the order has often been overmatched for appealing the sermons, he encountered the ire of the army and of the club-hall succeeded in transforming a man noted for faith and, blind, bigoted, hatred of the Church and her services.

At the club he related what had occurred within his own house, omitting to mention his treatment of his wife.

The cross of Jesus! bravo! followed his recital of the story of his crushing the image of our Saviour hanging in the crown, amidst loud cheers, and the clinking of glasses of a blind reason, the marquis returned home determined to force his wife to immediately abandon her faith. The lie dared not for a moment also would do, rather than be driven from her home a disunited family, suffering all the infamy attached to that name, and without means of support.

Though a woman of rare culture and genius, the marchioness is only like had known the pangs of poverty. She was the only child of a retired officer, who had left a small pension on which to support himself and daughter. At his death she was left penniless, and was employed by the aged mother of the marquis as companion. Her grace and beauty soon won the love of the infidel son, and with her last breath the mother blessed the union of the young couple. With the flight of time, and from association with evil companions, the heart of marquis had grown cold, and his hatred of the Church intensified the dislike with which he now regarded his wife.

He determined to watch her closely and see if his orders were obeyed. The evening succeeding himself fatigued a heavy slumber overpowered his wife's faculties, the marchioness, Marie, and Silva kneel upon the floor and raise the cups of the cross. He waited nothings, hurting rolled the room from the alcove and child to leave the scene and ordered his wife to depart from the mansion. At the same time he threw a purse containing a few hundred francs at her feet. Seizing the faith cord, which for long suddenly, he commanded the valet, who was a man of no more heart than his master.

The marquis at once ordered his willing tool to take the marchioness away. In vain did the poor wife beg for her child, but the heartless lattie had her seized, placed in a carriage and driven from home. He had previously instructed his servant to take her to Genoa, where she remained for two years. The lonely, sad, broken-hearted woman died in a foreign land, and the child, whose name was Marie, was placed in a convent.

Marie, the child, who had been an unwelcome guest, could not give for any infantile affection, and could only trust to our all the consolement, telling her that she would see her mother in a long time, and to remove all feeling of dependence, she was assured that her mother had been paid for some weeks in advance, and that she had a home and a friend for life in the man who brought her to her lodgings.

The latter, a machiavelian refused to touch, and begged to be allowed to go in search of her child.

As soon as she was sitting enough, the two women, in the shadow of evening, drove to the residence of the marquis and asked.

This thought occupies, at some time, other, the minds of those who were in the crowded carriage.

Why was the surprise and agony of the poor child, when she found Marie had been sent to England and placed in a Protestant institution, and that the marquis had contributed with Maximilian for Mexico?

The marchioness could not ascertain to what place her daughter had been sent. All that she could learn was that the child had been sent to England. The poor mother crossed the channel, and made inquiry at many schools in London, Liverpool, Manchester and other large cities, but her efforts were in vain.

With a broken heart she determined on trying to leave United States, with the hope of finding some means of entering Mexico, and by force from her cruel husband the knowledge she craved above all earthly blessings. After a tour through the United States, supporting herself by teaching, manual labor, and by the sale of jewels to enable her to procure an humble lodging, she finally arrived at the capital of Mexico penniless, and with out any means of support. She found the city filled with wounded Mexicans and French soldiers, which was truly distressing and fearing the sentiments of her kind friend of the school, promised to be allowed to attend to them. One day, as she was passing through a public building, she heard a voice proceeding from a distant cell which thrilled her and kept her fascinated. It was the voice of her husband. Though she had not seen him for thousands of miles to rest him, because we are growing lukewarm in those matters. They deplore as among the heathens, as being "the leaders," or "the followers," of this and the other like cause, but they do not understand. The thought is cheaper and stronger in an iron, perhaps, than in a brass vessel.

Thus was the middle at the surface and made more noise.

Sleep a Preventive of Headache.

A sensitive writer says: "Sleep, of taken at the right moment, will prevent an attack of nervous headache. If the subjects of this affliction will watch the symptoms as coming, they can usually tell that it begins with a feeling of weariness or heaviness. Then will come a yawn, or an hour, or even two, or nature guides, will effectually prevent the headache. If not taken just then it will be too late. For after the attack has begun it will be in vain to expect sleep until far into the night, perhaps. It is common, in those days for doctors to forbid having their patients waked to take medicine, if they are asleep when the hours come round, that the people have learned the lesson pretty well, and they generally know that sleep is far better for the sick than medicine. But it is not so well known that sleep is a wonderful preventive of headaches. Let the person who is subject to them, when he feels the first symptoms, go to bed and sleep, if he can, and he will wake in the morning free from the pain. Of course, he must be careful to avoid the causes which have led to or to induce the headache, especially this habit.

Food for Consumptives.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites, is most wonderful food. It not only gives strength and vitamins, but it promotes the utilization of the fats and albumen. Palatable as milk and so well agreeing therewith, both by adults and children, is a marvel in food and medicine.

THE BLESSED SACRAMENT.

The Hour of Benediction a Time for an Act of Reparation.

How often does we think of the happiness of those living at the time our Lord Jesus open Himself human nature, and lived among men. We think of those whom He blessed and of the consoling words addressed to them that received and believed what He said. We would like to be of that crowd which followed our Lord in His public ministry.

But this thought occupies, at some time, other, the minds of those who were crowded around the tabernacle. We can fancy ourselves in the Cenacle, or in the Garden, or in the chamber of Jesus Christ towards pentecost minutes. Magdalen at the feet of Jesus tells us what His Love will do for us! Also we wish the vows to break upon us saying "Thy sins are forgiven thee." St. Luke vii. 48.

Again, we think of the centurion, his faith, his humility, and of how our Lord wanted his appeal for the cure of His sick servant. "I will come and heal him. The centurion answering said: Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst enter under my roof: say only the word, and my servant shall be healed." The word was said, and the servant was healed at that hour.

We think of Jesus coming into the home of Martha and Mary, and of the joy of those two sisters. Their hearts were filled with reverence, respect and gratitude. Martha and Mary were the Lord's special benefactors. Mary takes her place at His feet, and listens to the words of Life. I am sure worthy that then she might enter into joy, but Mary hath chosen the better part.

Our chosen near to that of Mary. Let us be thankful for the privilege of taking our place home at the feet of Jesus, and of being allowed to present, every Hour in the Blessed Sacrament.

Now comes a truth which faith confesses and we must endeavor, greater than many of the loved of Jesus is with us. He comes to us, as any kind of foundation and dwelt, and spoke to them and received them hospitably, for in the Holy Eucharist He comes into our bodies, and is the food of our souls.

When we receive Holy Communion, we are partakers of the Blessed Sacrament, and is with us pure truth that he was with Mary and Martha.

Mary and Martha—life, we said, was at the feet of Jesus. Our Lord, in reference, reputation and attainment, but no loss of mind. "Two things is necessary."

Now the time of our conversion, Mary, natural disposition—from a life of vanity—to a life of prayer. Martha, of our ordinary—Where are the signs of our conversion? Where are the signs of our resolutions? These are the signs of our conversion, and the resolutions of our conversion? Where are the signs of our resolutions? Where are the signs of our conversion? Where are the signs of our resolutions? Where are the signs of our conversion? Where are the signs of our resolutions? Where are the signs

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF ARCHDIOCESE.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 2, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

— Mgr. Mermillod, Bishop of Lausanne and Geneva, has, it is said, decided to dedicate to St. Francis de Sales the University to be founded at Fribourg.

— Herr Windthorst, in the Prussian Lower Chamber, accused Prince Bismarck of being the real author of the Kulturkampf. The Chancellor denies the charge, but admits that he approved of the May Laws.

— Galeote, who so foully assassinated the Archbishop of Madrid, according to a dispatch has been declared insane by all the doctors. He will not, therefore, be executed.

— The Pope has signed the Commission for the introduction of the cause of beatification and canonization of Vincenzo Pallotti, the founder of the Pious Society of Missions.

— On last Thursday His Eminence Cardinal Edward Howard, laid the corner-stone of the newly-founded Canadian College at Rome. Cardinal Tachenaux and a large number of the Prelates and priests of Rome were present at the imposing ceremony.

— His Grace the Archbishop of Tuam presided recently at a meeting of the parish priests of the united dioceses of Galway, Kilmacduagh and Kilfenora, held at Athenry for the purpose of selecting a successor to the Most Rev. Dr. Carr, new Archbishop of Melbourne. The choice fell by a large majority on the Most Rev. Dr. McCormack, Bishop of Achonry.

— The local of another great Catholic family died recently in England in the person of Mr. John Redman, which took place in London. The deceased became a convert to Catholicity some twenty-two years ago, and the whole of his family have since then become priests or nuns. Their names are the Very Rev. J. Redman, D. D., the Rev. John Redmond, S. J., and the Rev. C. I. Redmond, S. J., and Sisters Clare and Monica, of the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul. May he rest in peace.

— The death is announced of Mgr. Francesco Marinelli, O.S.A., titular Bishop of Porfirio, and Sacristan of his Holiness. The deceased Prelate was for a considerable time confessor of Pius IX. The Pope, when he learned of the serious illness of Victor Emmanuel, hoped to employ the good offices of Mgr. Marinelli to secure the administration of the Sacraments to the dying King, but the Papal messenger was refused admission into the chamber of the dying King.

— The papers report that Dr. McGlynn has gone to Fortress Monroe for rest and recuperation after his long struggle with himself. We sincerely hope that with renewed strength and silent reflection may come that spirit of ecclesiastical obedience to the voice of God which is so highly commended in those who preach peace and good will among people of every station in life, and which is the only avenue by which Dr. McGlynn may hope again to occupy the high pedestal of priestly prominence from whence he descended to the plane of that political purveyor —Henry George.

— The "enterprise" manifested by the secular press in "reaming" the reading public with sensational news from Rome is certainly peculiar. The latest attempt to forestall time and truth in the selection of the next Pope, some sagacious scribe in Europe having selected Monsignor di Rende, Papal Nuncio at Paris, as the successor of Leo XIII. "The next Pope," says the prophetic scribe, "is to be a young man—that is well understood—and if Monsignor di Rende is not to say, the favorite. He has been carefully put to proof, and the verdict of authority is that he has been found prudent." What a wonderful interest outlings take in the affairs of the Church, and what vast wisdom they demonstrate in their desire to serve her!

— We are in receipt of the Appeal of the Brownson Memorial Committee of the Catholic Young Men's National Union, who are soliciting subscriptions in order to erect a suitable monument over the remains of the profoundest writer that ever labored with his pen in the cause of Catholic truth and light in this country. The Chairman of the Committee requests the MONITOR to receive subscriptions for this worthy object, and we will be most happy to publish any amounts sent to this office, together with the names of the donors. The importance of the project is apparent to every Catholic and its success should be shared in by all who have learned to love the great Brownson for the genius he displayed in the defence of the dogmas and divine character of the Church of God.

— During late years it has been the regular custom of those infidels and Papacy-hating Italians who take part in the Carnival in Rome, to burlesque—after the most blasphemous manner—the vestments of priests and the religious habit of Sisterhoods in the Catholic Church. Not satisfied with this desecration and public defamation of God's sanctified, the Satan-inspired blasphemers even went so far as to publicly caricature the Pope and even the Mother of God. The late Carnival in Rome, we presume like those that preceded it in recent years, hence Catholics will not wonder that the power of God manifested itself on Ash Wednesday morning by the wreck of whole towns and the destruction of many lives in Italy—the details of which will be found on the third page of the present issue.

— In the Catholic World for the current month Rev. Henry Hunter, D. D. LL. D., has a very interesting and instructive article on "Henry George and his Land Theorem," in which he reviews the lib-sided Logic of the modern Reformer of men's rights, property and religion, showing from Scripture, Christian teaching and common sense how absurd, untenable and even ridiculous are the land speculations of the Georgian pamphlet. Finally, from whom Henry George has filched the false theories on land which he is now publishing for pell and personal aggrandisement. We will print the important article in an issue in the next and subsequent issues, and we ask for it a careful reading on the part of all who desire to be correctly informed on the right of personal property in land.

— Commenting on the French attempt to pick men selected by political authority to death to become Catholics, the Western Watchman says: "It is often asked why so many become Catholics before execution. It is because men before being hanged grow up human respect, worldly ambition and dissimulation, and having lost fortune and name in this world, try hard to secure a better their lot in the next. If the heroics of the world we all hanged, seventy-five per cent. of them would become Catholics, and among the converts would be nearly all the preachers. Protestantism is a good enough religion for a man that does not want any."

— Now that the project of building a Catholic hall in this city has been endorsed by the Archbishop, we earnestly hope the Catholics of this city will evince the proper spirit of union and enterprise in its execution, so that the Catholics of San Francisco shall no longer have to apply to secret societies and others diametrically opposed to the Christian religion whenever they require a place to meet in. There are Catholics enough in this city to build and own one of the finest halls in the Pacific metropolis, if they would only shake off the lethargy which throws a pall over every project which does not pay a monthly percentage of profit. It would be a disgrace if this matter is let die out now through the unwillingness of those to assist who have the wherewith to help in this laudable and durable enterprise which will be a credit to all concerned when completed.

— The month of March, as every Catholic ought to know, is dedicated by the Church to St. Joseph, the Spouse of the Blessed Virgin and Patron of the Universal Church. Hence devotion to St. Joseph should animate every Catholic heart during this month. The great St. Theresa assures us that she never asked a spiritual or temporal favor of St. Joseph that he did not obtain for her, and other saints have borne witness to the same fact. Our Lord as a child was subject to St. Joseph on earth and His loved His foster father with that supernatural love which exists for ever. The Blessed Virgin and the Holy Child were in St. Joseph's care on earth, and has influence in heaven, therefore, is immeasurably great. Go to St. Joseph, therefore, during this month, in the spirit of humility, resignation and confidence, and see if the graces of God does not come to you and yours in response to prayers made with the right intention and in the proper spirit.

Death of Bishop A. M. A. Blanchet.

The serious illness of Bishop Blanchet, the patriarchal proto-Prelate of the Diocese of Nesqually, Washington Territory, culminated in his demise on last Friday afternoon, in the 89th year of his age.

A dispatch from Vancouver, where Bishop Blanchet died, conveys the information that the remains of the deceased Prelate were transferred to the Sisters' Chapel at the convent at 4.30 o'clock on Sunday last. The body remained there until 10 a. m. on Monday, when a Solemn High Mass was celebrated. At 3 p. m. the Office of the Dead was chanted, and at 5 o'clock the remains were transferred to St. James Cathedral where they lay in state all night, watched by a citizens' guard of honor. The funeral took place yesterday and was attended by the Prelates and a large number of the priests of both the Archdiocese of Oregon and also the Diocese of Nesqually, as well as a vast concourse of Religious and citizens.

We ask the prayers of every reader of the MONITOR for the happy repose of the soul of one whom we had the honor of knowing for many years, and who was the love of both priests and people for his humility and holiness of his inner life as well as by the great charity of his words and actions in his relations with the world.

Men in the world often quote the last words of statesmen and patriots long after they have passed away. But far more precious to the Christian mind are the words of those holy Prelates who are selected by Almighty God to be His messenger bearers throughout the world. Listen then, Catholic reader, to the legacy this dying patriarch has left to the children of Christ. Preserve in your hearts the last words that ever passed the consecrated lips of Bishop Rt. A. M. Blanchet, and let them demonstrate to you with what resignation a true Catholic should die. "If I have done any good," said this humble servant of God with his last breath, "Almighty God knows it. If I have done any wrong, I hope Almighty God will forgive it."

What a sublime confession to a life devoted to God's service and spent in increasing His glory on earth! No eulogistic praise could add to the solemn and sublime grandeur of such a separation from the temporary to the eternal! May the venerable Prelate's footsteps long be realized in heaven, and may he shine like a star for all eternity!

Death of Cardinal Jacobini.

A cablegram from Rome conveys the sad intelligence that Cardinal Jacobini, Papal Secretary of State, died in the Eternal City on last Saturday afternoon. The deceased was born in Italy in 1832, and when but thirty years of age he was selected as one of the Domestic Prelates of his Holiness Pope Pius IX. He demonstrated such an aptitude for diplomacy that he was nominated Papal Nuncio to Vienna in 1874. Four years later he was created Cardinal, and after six years sojourn in Vienna, where his accomplished much diplomatic success, he was appointed by Pope Leo XIII. to the important position which he held at the time of his decease. R. I. P.

About the Fraud "Maria Monk."

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Will you please be so kind as to inform a constant reader of your paper who Maria Monk was, and if at the time of writing the book entitled "Awful Disclosures by Maria Monk" (no escape) was the 'Bishop of Montreal' who gave any notice of it. By doing this you will greatly oblige a Catholic and Protestant in dispute over the matter.

A CONSTANT READER.

In answer to the above question we are pleased to inform the querist that the Maria Monk affair of which it was a fraud, happened long years ago, while I stayed with my father in Montreal, I never before told her "Awful Disclosures," of which the falsehood of the whole affair was exposed by the Bishop.

She now dwelt at great length on all that occurred during her stay in Montreal, and repeated what she had told me when a child.

"My father used to say that my mother's book was a lie, a foreign guard over me at the convent that such a woman should be my mother, and I felt humbled to the earth. I had such a feeling of shame that I could not look my mother, I now feel that my mother was not an impostor, and I believe that any one else who knew her would believe the same with stress aimed against that slanderer, from whom she was a refuge, and who was the cause of her being driven from her own mother, to be taken in charge by strangers, and to be disowned.

I have been told that my mother at eighteen was backward and wild, very unremarkable and had no education. She did not write her book; in fact, she could not read, and she did not know the only place certain singed facts which were changed by the man who imposed her name on the alleged disclosures and who alone profited by the sale of the book.

A priest, friend of my mother, with her disposition, unremarkable, and with a desire to do good, to repay persecution by kindness, and the victim of a heartless man, and driven out of her own home, and a prisoner, would naturally try to make friends among the visitors and attendants, by representing herself as a victim of a heartless tyrant of a father. And, in order the better to enlist their sympathies would take care to shape the story so as to excite the prejudices and pastilities of those whose good opinion she sought.

The tyrant and villiness of Ballston Hospital, was Maria Monk, and she was a patient there, and probably said Catholic. Then men of distinction, and of influence, and of wealth, collected facts and published them to gratify their prejudice, and to gain the approbation and support of swelling their own profit.

My mother may have known a few of the natural deformities of the Catholic priests, but she knew nothing of its spirit—and she could not have been conscious of the fall extent of the sin or enormity of her crime, when she made herself an accomplice of the wretch which lasts her name.

We should not forget to take into consideration her youth, and her misery, at the time that she wrote the book, and her hope of rising above her misery, that she would allow them to publish it for some years with no remonstrance against the libelous Maria Monk.

Most Catholics shrink with horror at the very mention of the name of Maria Monk, and I feel it more painful than His children; He judges the intent and the act.

I took out to exonerate my mother. It was indeed a cruel and unfeeling act on her part to try to blacken the character of nonfeeling and helpless, and entirely dedicated to the service of religion and humanity. But had as she was, she was a destiny her offspring; and let those who are without sin, cast the first stone. I will not be surprised if I pay to leave out of the man who were so near from millions of priests and people to the Throne of Grace. Hotel Dieu of their good sense, should have to plead for her unfortunate child, Maria Monk, of the proceeds of her book.

Mrs. Fickel has once become a convert to the Church and has done all she could to repair the injury which her mother perpetrated through the connection of calumny which disappointed favorite purposely published in order to injure the Catholic Church—well knowing at the same time that every statement therein was suggested by Satan, the Father of Lies.

The name of the infamous scoundrels who used the unfortunate mother of Mrs. Fickel, John Eckel as their cliffder circulating stool-pigeon, should go down in degradation to posterity, hence we give them. They were president Bourne, Brewster and Slocum, a trio of through fanatical frenzies who duped the public and robbed the unfortunate creature called Maria Monk out of the portion of profits promised to her for her share in the mystery. Such is a sample of the Satanic views of those vandals who lay their defaceled hands upon the holy characters of the Brides of Christ in the Church of God!

Two years after Maria Monk appeared, Harper & Bro., of New York, published a work entitled Prodestant Jesuitism, in which the "awful disclosure" was made that Maria Monk was one of the most pure and serious that were ever palmed off upon the community." Thus we see that even those who were most anxious to publish calumnies by circulating diabolical lies against the Catholic religion, abandoned the attempt to be confirming more but a tissue of foolishness and falsehood combined!

There were Protestants at this day who believe the absurd impossibilities called Catholic convents, nunneries, seminaries, asylums and institutions managed by differ ent Protestant Religious Orders, yet, even the time of the fraudulent Maria Monk, not even the shadow of any scandal had rested upon one of them! Candid, honest minded and large-hearted Protestants, therefore, have long, truly and naturally come to the conclusion that all Sisterhoods in the Catholic Church are pure as the night of Providence and models of morality to the whole human family. The Inlow company and community are the daughters of benevolence of some of the most respectable families in the land, and is link their names with licentiousness is a crime that cries to heaven for vengeance upon the traducers of those defenceless ladies who give up the world in order to serve God in works of Mercy and Charity.

Dobson, indeed, must that man be who can think evil of the Brides of Christ. His intelligence must not equal even the apprentice boy who delivers his master's eggs. On the contrary, he must be so stultified by prejudice as not to be capable of forming an opinion even when he lives in a community which is perfectly separated from the daily lives of every Sister in the adjoining convent. There are dozens of such institutions in Canada, and we glorify the combined bigotry of the land to point to a single law upon the constitution of their government, purity and good works generously alone for God's glory. The Sisters are the salt of the earth, and the more intimately an Catholic knows them the more will they despise the disreputable slanders forged against them by the malignant peddlers we have remarked on this brief but necessary expose of Maria Monk.

More Coercion for Ireland.

Jury-packing has been one of England's secret systems by which the brand of guilt has been been attached to innocent Irishmen. The juries that declared O'Connell, Mitchell, Meagher, Darrell and other Irish patriots who have been convicted of "high treason" as guilty of the crime charged in the indictments against them were all jury-packed with anti-Irish Protestants, or Oath-lacks who were traitors to their country and Jurisdiction in the sight of God.

It is with great gratulation, therefore, that we read a dispatch from T. P. Gill last week in which he says that the Catholics of Ireland have gained a great victory by means of the disagreement in the cases tremped up by the British Government against Messrs Dillon and other so-called "traversers" of the English law which prevails in Ireland.

Mr Gill publicly declares that the "prosecution has failed in spite of the open efforts of the crown judges. In the jury and in spite of the bold defense of that jury against which the Government ventured to make its last desperate stand. This is proof of the public opinion, avowed by the debate in jury-packing in Parliament, has begun to sink in Ireland, and I think the break-down may be taken as the death knell of jury-packing system. The Government, however will seek return at advantage. They will pretend it is proof that crime has been broken down in Ireland, and consequently it must be strengthened by coercion, for to this the Government is now hopelessly committed. They have enunciated again a policy whose first phase will be to transplant Ireland and Irish Bar into a state of disorder, which they will use as an excuse for coercion. They will then ask the House of Commons for a Coercion Act. Meantime they are pushing new rules of procedure in order that when the time for asking for coercion arrives discussion may be choked off.

Thus far coercion—the popular English panacea for curing the ills of Ireland—has been a magnificent failure. Gladstone, and will be interesting to watch the manœuvres of Her Majesty's ministers in this year of Queen Victoria's Jubilee.

Another Cure by Knock Consecrated.

Archdiocese, Kamaqui, Parish Priest—Knock, requests the publication in the Monitor of the following instances of the curative powers of prayer added by the celebration of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, received from the Chapel at Knock, County Mayo, Ireland. Following is the letter addressed by a farmer in Australia to Archdeacon Kavanagh:

MOUNT VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, November 11, 1886.

Very Rev. Dear Sir—I feel pleasure in being able to inform you of what I believe to be a miraculous cure. Some time ago I forwarded to you left eye. It was troublesome and most painful, and continued to grow and spread so my eye. I was advised by my friends to go to Melbourne and undergo an operation. But, fortunately for myself, I had a piece of the cement from the Chapel of the Apparition at Knock. I made a Novena to our Lady of Knock, put the cement into water and applied it to my eye. In a very short time, thanks be to God and to Holy Mary our Immaculate Mother, there was no trace of the cataract.

I believe it was all Mary. I have to thank our Lady of Knock for this perfect cure of my eyes. She is, as she is truly called, the "Health of the Sick" and "Comfortress of the Afflicted."

I remain, Rev. Dear Sir,

Yours respectfully,

DOMINIC FANNIGAN.

— The Pope has signed the Commission for the introduction of the cause of beatification and canonization of Vincenzo Pallotti, the founder of the Pious Society of Missions.

Uniform Catholic Text Books. Lessons from the Lives of the English Martyrs.

(BLUE MOUNTAIN.)

In previous articles we have demonstrated the diabolical means which the tyrant Henry VIII adopted in order to extermin ate the Catholic Church in England, and now we will take our readers down to the reigns of Queen Elizabeth, so they may have some slight conception of the odious means by which Protestantism prosecuted its war of extermination against the Church. To explain the true faith of that by religious persecution and falsehood combined.

Anti-Catholic writers have tried to furnish up the bad character of Queen Elizabeth, by portraying her as a woman more armed against than sinning. But, fortunately for the cause of truth impartial non-Catholic historians have left sufficient evidence on the records of the past to justify us in saying that she was the most lustful and sensuous woman of her country or any other age. She was the daughter of Henry VIII., and a Catholic during her earlier life, but the sins of the Catholic Church her lord, was disgraceful, and when this fact flashed upon her mind in her mature years, it caused in her all the foul passions she inherited from her sires, persecuting father, and she placed herself upon her throne a fiend incarnate in lust, tyrannical and bloodthirsty. Such was the woman who was commissioned propagating or propagating Christ's religion.

Queen Elizabeth had not been long on the march of England ere an incident occurred which proved her much mightier than the Pope, and which caused the Catholic Church to lose a Bishop, and the world a saint. Christmas Day, when he received an order from a female sovereign to read Mass at Christmas Day, when he received an order from a female sovereign to read Mass at Christmas Day, when he received an order from a female sovereign to read Mass at

Farm and Home.

Penurious Husbands.

Undoubtedly there are so many spendthrift wives as penurious husbands, but when a wife does put conscience into the management of her husband's money, she should not be obliged to account to him for the exact manner in which she lays out every penny in the dollar. A wife who has not the control of a certain sum of money for her own private uses and charities is thrown into embarrassing situations and cannot feel either dignified or happy. She has trifling demands on her purse which her husband need not and cannot be expected to understand, but which she inability to satisfy deprives her of many simple pleasures, and is often the last straw in the burden of her annoyance.

If a wife has an income of her own, (and the majority of wives have none,) let her make the most of her early married life before her husband's affection has had time to cool, as it will be very likely to do after a while, and settle upon a regular annual allowance for her own use, and also for housekeeping purposes. A wife who is obliged to ask her husband for every cent and at the same time give an account of how it is to be spent, is very likely to lose respect and affection. To be obliged to make an appeal for fifteen cents for patching Johnnie's shoes; to have the sum doled out grudgingly with the early remark that Johnnie is too hard on his shoes, will hardly make man a seem a hero in his wife's eyes. A woman will strive doubly hard to see that her husband's income is laid out to the best advantage if she finds his generous and trustful. People are often penurious in the wrong place and spoil the ship for a ponnyworth of tar. A man who disputes his wife's economy in the matter of clothes pins, often spends in a day or two his own selfish desires, a sum that would make his wife happy for a month.

Engaging Manners.

There are a thousand pretty, engaging little ways, which every person may put on, without running the risk of being deemed affected or foppish, the sweet smile, the quiet, cordial bow, the earnest movement in addressing a friend, or more especially a stranger whom one may recommend to our good regards, the unjarring glance, the graceful attention which is so captivating when united with self-possession: these will ensure us the good regards of even a churl. Above all, there is a certain softness of manner which should be cultivated, and which, in either man or woman, adds a charm that almost entirely compensates for lack of beauty. The voice can be modulated so that it will speak directly to the heart, and from that elicit an answer; and politeness may be made essential to our nature. Neither a time throws away in attending to such things, insignificant as they may seem to those who engage in weightier matters.

Advice for Over-Work.

The best receipt for overworked men, says the Herald of Health, is for them to drill themselves to work slowly, and to let them begin by learning to eat slowly. When they come to the table let them throw aside care and trouble, greet their friends with pleasant words and smiles, and make the hour one of true delight. Having once learned to eat slowly, let him—as will soon be easy—do other things with deliberation, calmness and moderation. It will soon become a habit, and when once well established will make life more sweet and lengthen it to near what Nature intended.

Over Supply is Not Hospitality.

Never overload a plate nor over-supply a table. It is a vulgar hospitality. At a small dinner no one should hesitate to ask for more if he desires it. It will only be considered a flattering tribute to the dish. At more ceremonious dinners, there is necessarily a greater variety of dishes, and trial each dish is not practicable. There is more elegance, more refinement in a moderate supply, where there is necessarily a greater variety of dishes, the most precious epicure must be satisfied with a little of each. The French understand better than the people of any other nation how to supply a table.

When a Man Should Know Himself.

As a man advances in years, he ought to know himself so much better from the various experiments he has tried from time to time that he need not try any, or many more. It is all very well for Nahum to buy a violin when he is seventeen and go to singing school the same winter, and in the spring of the following year he tries and see if he is not meant for a sculptor, and so with every six months to test himself on one side or another, till he finds out whether he is meant to be another Solon, or Cicero, or Aurelius, or Michael Angelo, or Mandelssohn, or Tennyson. Nay, the boy ought to try such experiments till he has found out what he can do and what he cannot do. It is his part to keep on trying them forever. He ought to know quite well by the time he is twenty-five what is the range of his abilities; and after that time to examine himself on the things for which he has been sent into the world. Until he is twenty five he is finding out what his degree is. After he is twenty five he is making use of his discovery.

Patient Workers.

There is one class of laborers who never strike and seldom complain. They get up at five o'clock in the morning, and never go back to bed until ten or eleven o'clock at night. They work without ceasing the whole of that time, and receive no other reward than food, and the plainest clothing. Though harassed by a hundred responsibilities, though driven and worried, though reproached and looked down upon, they never revolt; and they cannot organize for their own protection; not even sickness releases them from their posts. No service is deemed too great for them to make, and no incompetency in any branch of their work is excused. They die in the harness, and are supplanted quickly as may be. These are the housekeeping wives of the laboring men.

The Charme of Song.

Cultivate singing in your family. Begin when the child is not yet three years old. The songs and hymns your childhood sang—bring them back to your memory and teach them to your little ones; mix them all together, to meet the varying moods that in after life come over us so mysteriously sometimes. Many a time and oft, in the very whirl of life, some little thing will wake up the memories of early youth, and we almost see again the ruddy cheeks, the smiling faces and the merry eyes of the schoolmates, some grey headed now; some moldering in the grave; and soon, "the song my mother sang," springs unbidden to the lips, and soothes and sweetens all these memories. At other times, amid the crushing mishaps of business, a merry ditty of the olden time popping to little hand, breaks in upon the train of thought, throws the mind into another channel, and light breaks from the cloud in the sky, and a new courage is given to us. The honest man goes singing to his work and when the day's labor is done, his toil-worn wife, and he on his way home, where his wife, tidy table and cheery fireside await him, he cannot help whistling or singing.

Family Fun.

News in a Nutshell.

Strange that women are not more extensively employed as news gatherers for the press! "Why," said Fogg, "Mrs. F. went out visiting Arbor Day, and, notwithstanding she had been gone less than an hour, when she came home she was fairly overflowing with new and recondite information. Our next-door neighbor had gone into bankruptcy and his creditors were meeting a sheriff in the street in our neighbor on the other side had been treating his family in a most shameful manner, and everybody was talking about it; a wedding was on the carpet across the way, notwithstanding nobody could see what he ever could see in her to fall in love with; two persons had been married out of the world just below us, and other more brought into it two or three doors above; Mrs. A. had got a new silk dress, Mrs. H. made over her old one, and Mrs. C. had declared that Parson Jones' wife wasn't a bit sociable. All this and much more beside. And I," continued Fogg, "might travel all over town, from now till mid-summer, and I wouldn't have found out the one-hundredth part of the intelligence that woman picked up in one short hour.

An Heroic Effort.

Wife (head out of a second story window)—Is that you, John Smith!

Husband (in the street)—Yesh, my dear.

Wife—Well, say chrysanthemum, or you don't get into this house to night.

Husband (hesitatingly)—Ch-Chrys-sythemum, m dear.

Wife (keeping down the window)—Good night.

Quite Necessary.

Two ladies had an amusing experience in making a formal call at a house in Lawrenceburg, across the other day. We said asked them to wait until she ascertained whether the persons inquired for were in. Presently she tripped down stairs and announced that "the ladies were not home." One of the callers, finding that she had forgotten her cards, said to her friend: "Let me write my name upon your card." "Oh, it isn't necessary, Miss ——" put in the maid, cheerfully, "I told them who it was."

Shakespeare's Mistake.

"Times have changed greatly, since Shakespeare's day," remarked Spriggins.

"Yes, just so," replied Fitzsmith.

"Now, Shakespeare said 'The apparel oft proclaims the man.'

"Well, what does it proclaim now?

"The dude, generally."

Puff's Egg Feat.

Paris was recently dining, when some one complimented her because of her beautiful mouth. "Pit is a very good mouth," said she, laughing, "and as large as you please—proving her assertion by cracking half a dozen large boiled egg in the shell, removing it a second afterward unbroken.

Not the Right Smell.

"And that is silver ore, is it?" said Mrs. Snaggs, as she examined a piece of curious looking mineral.

"Yes, my dear," replied her husband. "And how do you get the silver out?"

"They smelt it."

"Well, that's queer," she added, after sipping her tea to the core; "I smell it, too, but didn't get any silver."

A Story Spoiled.

Mr. Homespun was reading a thrilling story of an accident, winding up with the usual formula, "Not a dry eye in the house."

"Why, Ma," said Fogg, "Mrs. F. went out visiting Arbor Day, and, notwithstanding she had been gone less than an hour, when she came home she was fairly overflowing with new and recondite information. Our next-door neighbor had gone into bankruptcy and his creditors were meeting a sheriff in the street in our neighbor on the other side had been treating his family in a most shameful manner, and everybody was talking about it; a wedding was on the carpet across the way, notwithstanding nobody could see what he ever could see in her to fall in love with; two persons had been married out of the world just below us, and other more brought into it two or three doors above; Mrs. A. had got a new silk dress, Mrs. H. made over her old one, and Mrs. C. had declared that Parson Jones' wife wasn't a bit sociable. All this and much more beside. And I," continued Fogg, "might travel all over town, from now till mid-summer, and I wouldn't have found out the one-hundredth part of the intelligence that woman picked up in one short hour.

An Heroic Effort.

Wife (head out of a second story window)—Is that you, John Smith!

Husband (in the street)—Yesh, my dear.

Wife—Well, say chrysanthemum, or you don't get into this house to night.

Husband (hesitatingly)—Ch-Chrys-sythemum, m dear.

Wife (keeping down the window)—Good night.

Quite Necessary.

Two ladies had an amusing experience in making a formal call at a house in Lawrenceburg, across the other day. We said asked them to wait until she ascertained whether the persons inquired for were in. Presently she tripped down stairs and announced that "the ladies were not home." One of the callers, finding that she had forgotten her cards, said to her friend: "Let me write my name upon your card." "Oh, it isn't necessary, Miss ——" put in the maid, cheerfully, "I told them who it was."

Shakespeare's Mistake.

"Times have changed greatly, since Shakespeare's day," remarked Spriggins.

"Yes, just so," replied Fitzsmith.

"Now, Shakespeare said 'The apparel oft proclaims the man.'

"Well, what does it proclaim now?

"The dude, generally."

Puff's Egg Feat.

Paris was recently dining, when some one complimented her because of her beautiful mouth. "Pit is a very good mouth," said she, laughing, "and as large as you please—proving her assertion by cracking half a dozen large boiled egg in the shell, removing it a second afterward unbroken.

Not the Right Smell.

"And that is silver ore, is it?" said Mrs. Snaggs, as she examined a piece of curious looking mineral.

"Yes, my dear," replied her husband. "And how do you get the silver out?"

"They smelt it."

"Well, that's queer," she added, after sipping her tea to the core; "I smell it, too, but didn't get any silver."

A Story Spoiled.

Mr. Homespun was reading a thrilling story of an accident, winding up with the usual formula, "Not a dry eye in the house."

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

THE GENTLE, YET EFFECTUAL ACTION of this good old remedy, Simmons Liver Regulator, recommends it to all.

No household should be without it. It is prepared as well as cures Torpid Liver, Headache, Nausea, Bile, Colic, Indigestion, Constipation, Fevers, Impoverished Blood, Fever and Ague, and even disease brought on or aggravated by a disordered stomach.

It has as equal as a Preparatory Medicine. No matter what the attack, a dose or dose of Simmons Liver Regulator will relieve and cure quickly. It is compounded purely of vegetable matter, and can be taken by the most delicate without fear of injury.

THE BEST FAMILY MEDICINE

D. MENCARINI, 911 Mission St, San Francisco, Cal. Manufacturer and Importer of RELIGIOUS ARTICLES, STATUARY, ETC. Suitable for Churches, Convent Chapels, Academy Schools, Etc. THE ONLY COMPLETE COLLECTION IN THE PACIFIC COAST. ☞ Catalogues sent free on application.

WARD & CO.'S Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE. 608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F. Telephone No. 787.

PATENTS

THE NEWEST BOOKS.

St. Alphonsus' Works, Cheapest Edition ever issued. The Passion and the Death of Jesus Christ. Illustrated ..... $1.25 Vol. 1. Preparation for Death. Illustrated ..... $1.25 Vol. 2. The Way of Salvation and 12 Sermons ..... $1.25 Vol. 3. The Great Means of Salvation and of Perfection ..... $1.25 Vol. 4. The Incarnation, Birth and Infancy of Jesus Christ ..... $1.25 St. Joseph, the Advocate of Hopeless Cases. From the French of Rev. Father Huguet. Illustrated. Cloth, gilt ..... $1.25 Meditations on the Sufferings of Jesus Christ. From the Italian of Rev. Father Francis Arias. Illustrated ..... $1.25 Abandonment. Or Absolute Surrender to Divine Providence. By Rev. J. P. Caussade, S.J. Edited and Revised by Rev. H. Ramière, S.J. Cloth ..... $1.25 Hand-book for Altar Societies and Sanctuary Boys. Cloth, gilt edges ..... 50 cents The Glories of Divine Grace. A Complete Exposition of the Original Treatise of St. Prosper, Bishop of Reggio, Author of the Treatise on Ecclesiastical Benefices. Cloth ..... $1.00 Illustrated Catechism of Christian Doctrine. Approved and Recommended by the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore. Published by Ecclesiastical Authority. Cloth, boards, cents ..... 25 cents

50th Thousand of Catholic Belief. 40 cts. 16 copies (25 cts.) for 25 copies, $15.00; 100 copies, $60.00. Sold by all Catholic Booksellers and Agents. IN PRESS. SIXTH EDITION, REVISED Elements of Ecclesiastical Law. Vol. 1. Ecclesiastical Persons. By Rev. Michael Müller, D.D. With the Approbation of His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons. Cloth, net, $5.00; by mail, net, $5.35.

BENZIGER BROS. Printers to the Holy Apostolic See, MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF Vestments and Church Ornaments, New York, Cincinnati, and St. Louis.

Tutt's Pills The dyspeptic, the debilitated, children, women, all who want of mind or body, drink or exposure in Malarial Regions, will find Tutt's Pills the most restorative or are offered the suffering invalid. Try Them Fairly. A vigorous body, pure blood, strong nerves and a cheerful mind will result. SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Now Ready at the MONITOR to your Catholic friends and neighbors, and ask them to subscribe. Only $2 a year when paid in advance.

EVERYTHING THAT IS NEW IN SEEDS AND RARE IN PLANTS. CATALOGUE No. 139, which this year we send out to customers in our 3 copies with our catalogue of the choicest flowers and vegetables, is a marvel of cheapness, as we send thousands of beautiful colored plates, and varieties of vegetables and garden seeds. Adaptation of a the best ever offered to us, and, as patrons in the most complete collection of its kind ever issued. Mailed on receipt of 25 cents, which may be deducted from first order. Please be sure to order Catalogue No. 139. PETER HENDERSON & CO. 35 & 37 Cortlandt St., NEW YORK.

GREGORY'S SEED CATALOGUE 1887. What Mr. Beyer says: ... Sent free to all. J. B. GREGORY, Marblehead, Mass.

DR. PEIRO'S OXYGEN TREATMENT For the relief and cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hay Fever, Catarrh, Nervous Prostration, Etc. Send stamp for 144 page treatise on Compound Oxygen. Free Compound Oxygen for sale. Address DR. PEIRO, Chicago Opera House, CHICAGO, ILL.

RAILROADS.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD. "The Direct Passenger Route." COMMENCING SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1886, AND until further notice, trains will leave Sausalito and arrive at San Francisco: Passenger Depot, Market Street Ferry.

RAILROAD LANDS For Sale on Reasonable Terms. Apply 36, or address, H. MILLS, Land Agent, 1 Market Street, S. F. A. N. TOWNE, General Manager. JEROME MADDEN, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agt. P. E. K. S. T. W. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. & Tick. Agt. San Francisco, Cal.

Marvellous Memory DISCOVERY. Wholly without Memory—Cured Kind Wanting, after book learned in one reading. Prospectus, with testimony, opinions of Proctor, Richter, Pick, Wanamaker, Dr. Minton, Professors Loisette, Wesselhoeft, Cattell and others, sent free by Prof. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Avenue, New York.

THE DR. ZEILE Turkish, Electric, Russian, Steam and Sea Baths. 1004 Market Street, near Stockton, S. F. THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE LADIES ARE TREATED BY LADIES. Open Day and Night. Ladies' Entrance, 1006 Market Street. Gentlemen's Entrance, 1008 Market Street. Ladies' Hair Dressing Parlors attached. Baths and Hygienic Treatment given at Home.

RUPTURE Cured in a short time by a simple method. Entirely different from all others. Not a truss. Cure guaranteed. Pamphlet with testimonials and particulars sent free. Address, M. A. SIMPSON, 1172 Broadway, Cor. 29th St., New York. Office hours, 9 to 5. Sundays, 10 to 12. Patients treated at home by mail.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO., IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF PAINTS, OILS and GLASS 112 and 114 California St., SAN FRANCISCO.

A. F. KNORP, MAIN STREET MILL, 120 122 MAIN ST., Bet. Mission and Howard San Francisco. Planing, Sawing, Turning, Shaping Wood Carving, Moulding, Brackets, Posts and Machine Furnish, etc. Circulars, Sacramento Post, Nos. Windows, Doors, Sashes, Screens, Frames, Refrigerators, Ice Cream and Lemon Freezers, Hammocks, Swings and Hydraulic Jacks. Repairing and Jobbing promptly attended to.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL. THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS. Has no Springs or Pads. Self-adjusting. Retains any position. Cannot be displaced by any movement. Is Cleanly, Durable and Cheap. Sent on trial. Address, MERRIEN & CO., 1 Ellis St., San Francisco, Cal. 1000 WINNING TRUSS. Has Self-Adjusting Ball in Pad. Cannot be displaced by any movement. Is Cleanly, Durable and Cheap. Sent on trial. Address, MERRIEN & CO., 1 Ellis St., San Francisco, Cal.

JOHN F. LYONS, NOTARY PUBLIC AND Commissioner of Deeds For all the States and Territories. OFFICE: 523 Montgomery St. Residence: 1412 Polk St. Telephone No. 1194 & California. ☞ Acknowledgments and Depositions taken, affidavits, and all papers requiring notarial seal, promptly attended to. Deeds and Mortgages and Legal Documents carefully drawn. WE WANT YOU! To distribute Advertisements in your locality. Good Pay. Permanent Employment. Address, with stamp, STANDARD NEWSPAPER CO., BOSTON, MASS.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

BEST PIANOS. $300 Pianos from $50 upwards. New Pianos as low as $150. Autiell Pianos Pianos stand higher than any other make. All Pianos sold by us guaranteed for 5 years. Sheet Music at half a million dollars capital. CALL ON T. M. Antiseil Piano Co. 7th and Market Sts., O. P. Hall.

KNABE PIANOS. Unequalled and Emphatically the first Piano in the World. A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 121 Dupont St., S. F. Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

ESTEY PIANOS. Superior in Tone and Finish. UNEXCELLED IN DURABILITY. BENJ. CURTAZ & SON, Agents, Warerooms, 26, O'Farrell Street, San Francisco.

EDUCATIONAL.

Academy of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, WOODLAND, CAL. THE ACADEMY HERETOFORE OPENED UNDER THE Care of the Sisters of Holy Cross, from the commencement of the Rosary Convent, Sacramento, is now transferred to Woodland, the building to large and well equipped with the improvements required in a school of superior rank. Instruction in the Languages, Music, Drawing, Painting, Embroidery, Fancy Work, Plain Sewing, Cutting and Fitting, Elocution, Chemistry, Astronomy, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Physiology, Rhetoric, Logic, Moral Philosophy, Mathematics, Ancient and Modern History, Geography, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Gymnastics, Calisthenics, Etc. TERMS PER TERM—PAYABLE IN ADVANCE: Board and Tuition, per session ..... $100 00 Piano, with use of instrument, per session ..... 60 00 Vocal Music, Private Lessons ..... 75 00 Drawing, in Class ..... 10 00 Painting in Water Colors, per session ..... 30 00 Painting in Oil, per session ..... 40 00 Use of Chemical and Philosophical apparatus ..... 5 00 Use of Astronomical Telescope ..... 5 00 For further information apply to SISTER OF THE HOLY CROSS, WOODLAND, CAL.

CONVENT OF THE IMMACULATE HEART, GILROY, CALIFORNIA. Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies. For terms, etc., apply to the MOTHER SUPERIOR.

ACADEMY OF OUR LADY OF LOURDES, EAST OAKLAND, CAL. THIS ACADEMY CONDUCTED IN THE SISTERS of Holy Cross, is pleasantly situated in the most healthy and picturesque part of Oakland. Terms: Board and Tuition, per scholastic year ..... $100 00 Piano, per month ..... 1 00 Harp, per month ..... 1 00 Drawing, per month ..... 1 00 Language, per month ..... 1 00 Music, per month ..... 1 00 Bed and bedding, per session ..... 10 00 Washing, per month ..... 1 00 Washing, per dozen ..... 1 00 Washing, per dozen ..... 1 00 Washing, per dozen ceremony "most imposing in all its details." Happy for him, had he but profited by his good impressions to reflect seriously on the salvation of his soul, and to prepare himself for a happy death. It is needless to state that the reputed letter from Mgr. Panico to the Cardinal Prefect of Propagenda relative to the re-conversion to the Catholic faith and reception of the Sacraments of the Church, is a fabrication, merely a manœuvre of the enemies. No such letter was either written or forwarded, nor would there have been material time for such minute to have reached Rome at the epoch of the publication of the false announcement.

CATHOLIC NEWS FROM EUROPE.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

Funeral of the Late Archbishop Vaughn.

Archbishop Vaughn has, at last, found a fitting resting place. His body arrived on Tuesday afternoon at St. Michael's Priory from Ince Blundell, under the escort of the Rev. Jerome Vaughn, O.S.B., of Fort Augustus, the Rev. Basil Hurworth, O.S.B., and the Rev. Ildefonsus Cummins, O.S.B., and was lowered into the grave as the sun went down, amid the plaintive peals of the church bells and the solemn chants of Benedictine Monks. The place where the Archbishop's remains now rest is in the vault which was prepared for the late Bishop Brown, and where that Prelate's body remained until it was translated, a short time ago, to the splendid mortuary chapel specially built to receive it. Archbishop Vaughan, therefore, lies in the cemetery of the monastic church, just under the east window. Here his body will remain in its simple grave, until the friends and admirers of the late Archbishop, both in England and Australia, enable the Fathers of Belmont to raise above it a suitable and worthy monument. The funeral service was performed by the Bishop of the diocese, the Right Rev. Dr. Hedley, O.S.B. After the arrival of the body, a procession of monks came forth from the church, followed by the Cathedral Prior, Canons in attendance on the Bishop, and lastly the Bishop, in cope and mitre. The In Paradisum was sung as they moved onward towards the grave. The grave was blessed and incensed, and the Benedictus sung, as on ordinary occasions.

Important Indulgence for Students.

A Decree to the Sacred Congregation of Indulgences, under date August 16th, 1886, and which has been made public, accords a Plenary Indulgence to all the faithful, but especially to young students, who practice the devotion of the six Sundays preceding the Feast of St. Thomas Aquinas, or on any six consecutive Sundays throughout the year, provided that they confess and receive sacramental Communion on each of the said Sundays. The indulgences are applicable to the souls in Purgatory.

AUSTRALIAN NEWS.

Culled from our Australian and New Zealand Exchanges.

A new convent is to be established at Gerowa, Queensland.

A large grazer broke out lately on the Western side of the Paeroa Range, New Zealand.

Two churches were lately dedicated in Australia—one at Stockton and the other at Campbelltown.

Endeavors are being made to induce the Prince of Wales and inaugurate the Centennial Exhibition at Melbourne.

The death is announced of the Hon. John Maple-Ryan, M. L. C.—a prominent citizen of Sydney, aged 73 years.

Over £100,000 has been expended on the new cathedral in Sydney, Australia, which is yet in an unfinished condition.

The Vincentian Fathers have an establishment in Lyttelton, which has recently bestowed a hearty public welcome by Cardinal Archbishop Moran.

The deaths are announced of Sister Margaret Mary, of St. Joseph's Providence, Sydney; and of Sister Mary Francis de Sales, of Adelaide, S. A.

Archbishop P. Moran lately had an argumentative religious discussion with the Premier, Sir Robert Stout of New Zealand, and by all accounts, worsted him considerably.

The cause of Catholic education is warmly espoused and assisted by the Catholic press and population of Australia and New Zealand, and there is a great number of parochial schools in both countries.

St. Benedict's Church, Auckland, the largest religious edifice in New Zealand, was destroyed by fire sometime since. Steps were at once taken to erect a temporary structure for divine service.

A religious profession took place at St. Bridget's Convent (Sisters of Mercy), Albury, on the 13th inst. The Sisters professed were Miss M. Ward (Sister Mary John the Evangelist) and Miss Kennedy, (Sister Mary Columba).

Rev. Dr. Mathew Gilmoy, who was appointed Coadjutor just before the death of the venerable Bishop Grivon, was solemnly consecrated Bishop of Perth, Western Australia, on the 22nd ult. Cardinal Archbishop Moran officiated.

A religious profession of four Sisters of Charity took place on the 8th ult., in the Chapel of St. Vincent's Convent, Sydney. The Religious who made the solemn profession were Miss Burke (Sister M. Agnelus), Miss Fay (Sister M. Bertrand), Miss Pogenhagen, (Singleton, (Sister M. Dominic), and Miss O'Brien (Sister M. Benedict.

New Zealand Catholics protest thus against exorbitant school taxation: The Catholics of New Zealand provide at their sole expense, an excellent education for their own children. Yet such is the sense of justice and policy in the New Zealand Legislature that it compels these Catholics, after having manfully provided for their own children, to contribute largely towards the free and godless education of other people's children. This is tyranny, oppression and plunder.

St. Mary's Branch, C. K. of A., Portland, Oregon.

The following is the list of officers of St. Mary's Branch of C. K. of A., at Portland: Spiritual Director, Rev. H. Orth; President, F. Campion; Vice-President, M. B. Hislop; Rec. and Fin. Secretary, A. Donnelhey; Treasurer, G. H. Springmyer; Sergeant-at-Arms, Martin Curry; Sentinel, T. O'Connor; Trustees, J. Wagner, W. J. Kennedy, and J. J. Fridels; Organist, Miss B. Orth. Membership, 35.

St. Joseph's Benevolent Society of St. Francis Chapel.

President, J. Lanzer; Vice President, T. McGinley; Financial Secretary, M. McMann; Recording Secretary, F. L. Durham; Treasurer, John Mullen; Sergeant-at-Arms, John Barry; Fanning and Charles Sanders.

—At St. Louis, or the six in lieu, the Catholic Mutual Aid Society was organized, the object being to provide a benefit society for the clergy of the Catholic Church. The seven dioceses numbers 162 priests, and a majority of them were represented. A constitution and by-laws prepared by the Vicars-General Brady and McMahon, and Fathers Hennessy, Coyle and McDonald were adopted, and a board of three directors appointed who were to select officers. A second Mass for the souls of the departed was celebrated.

—At the last session of the Franciscans in the United States, held in St. Louis, twenty-three houses of the order were represented. The following, among other changes, were made by the chapter: Father Dominic Pelletti, Pittsburg, succeeds Father McCarty at St. Peter's Church, Chicago, the latter going to Memphis. Father Symphorosian will be the superior of the house at Forty-fifth street, Chicago, and Father Lawrence will be assistant. Father Simeon, at present guardian of the convent at Frederick, Lynn, Father Paul goes to the true spirit of his Order.

The report of the process of the building of St. Saviour's Priory, Lower Dominick street, brings back such thoughts upon the history of the priory of Irish history to the days when the Priory of Friar Preachers stood on the site that is now occupied by the Four Courts. Dispelled of their possession by Henry VIII., and dispossessed, the Dominicans never abandoned their mission, and the continuity of the order of Friar preachers in Ireland dates from the century to the eleventh. The effort of the Dominicans to erect a Priory in Dublin at this time has met with generous aid, but the assistance of the public is needed, and it is to the time the Catholics of Dublin are called upon to contribute to this speedy accomplishment if so glorious a work.

DERRY.—The bold, undaunted body of Tenants in Derry and Derry are up in arms against the lordly Castlereagh have shirked the fight for 50 per cent abatement which they demanded and accepted the 15 per cent. offered—thereby proving that the tenantry are not yet the cowardly contemptible cowards. Their crown backdown seems to satisfy some people.

DOWN.—Mrs. Eliza Pottrell, widow of Sir Anthony Cassidy, Newry, died on Feb. 25, at the convent in Kilkenny. The deceased lady, who was known in religion as Sister Mary Stanislaus, was the daughter of the late Sir Thomas Pottrell, of Dublin. She entered Clonmel Convent in the year 1850, and was appointed abbess in 1861. She had attained her sixtieth and the thirty-fifth of her religious profession.

DONEGAL.—Mr. Swift McNeill, Protestant Home Rule member, has just delivered an eloquent address, Monster, by a majority of three thousand six hundred votes. In the one thousand electors in South Donegal only since three hundred could be got to muster for the Union. Since the last election, over four hundred Unionists have died or left the district, a temporary structure for divine service.

A religious profession took place at St. Bridget's Convent (Sisters of Mercy), Albury, on the 13th ult. The Sisters professed were Miss M. Ward (Sister Mary John the Evangelist) and Miss Kennedy, (Sister Mary Columba).

Rev. Dr. Mathew Gilmoy, who was appointed Coadjutor just before the death of the venerable Bishop Grivon, was solemnly consecrated Bishop of Perth, Western Australia, on the 22nd ult. Cardinal Archbishop Moran officiated.

A religious profession of four Sisters of Charity took place on the 8th ult., in the Chapel of St. Vincent's Convent, Sydney. The Religious who made the solemn profession were Miss Burke (Sister M. Agnelus), Miss Fay (Sister M. Bertrand), Miss Pogenhagen, (Singleton, (Sister M. Dominic), and Miss O'Brien (Sister M. Benedict.

New Zealand Catholics protest thus against exorbitant school taxation: The Catholics of New Zealand provide at their sole expense, an excellent education for their own children. Yet such is the sense of justice and policy in the New Zealand Legislature that it compels these Catholics, after having manfully provided for their own children, to contribute largely towards the free and godless education of other people's children. This is tyranny, oppression and plunder.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ANTRIM.—Mr. E. D. Gray's paper, the Belfast Morning News, so recently had occasion to the National cause in the house of Commons, has given to the light of day a very extraordinary document. It purports to be a secret manifesto to the members of the police force, pledging against the evidence that forms upon the Irish Constabulary. The manifesto has been addressed to all the police barracks over the country. Landlordism is lashed unsparingly, and Dublin Castle is accused of being the head quarters of the system. The document is signed by the Secretary of the Irish Force. The circular states that there will be a desperate combination of the Irish people in order to stamp out any agitation that may arise up in reference to the question of evictions. The author or authors advised that petitions should be drawn up by the men of every county proceeding against the performance of eviction duty any longer by the men of the force, and winds up by calling on the police to declare against eviction duty. No wonder the Dublin Inspector at the Whitechurch evictions the other day, confessed that such work was repugnant to him and his men.

CORK.—Mr. Edward O'Callagan died on Feb. 1st, at his residence Tower Hill, Dunkettle, Cork. He was brother of the late Michael O'Callaghan who obtained distinction in the Crimean war, and was married to a sister of John Hope Hennessy of Cork.

Mr. Isaac Julian of Cork, after a lengthened illness has died at the age of 72. At one time or another he had been a member of most public boards, and in each he had given proof of considerable ability in dealing with affairs, as well as a lucid, unbending integrity.

—A son of £200 has been subscribed in Cork towards the fund of a monument to the memory of the late Rev. Father Delaney, Bishop of Cork. The meeting was held under the presidency of Bishop O'Callaghan.

On Jan. 30th, a man named Andrew Casey was buried at Dallycrossy, having reached the very advanced age of 107 years. He resided at Kilmeen, near Dallycrossy, for a long time previous to his death, and up to a short time before he died, retained the full use of his faculties and wrote fairly and seriously.

CLARE.—On Jan. 31st, upwards of one hundred tenants, on the estate of the Marquis of Conyngham, from the districts of Kilmaley and Ennis, assembled at the Ennis Court, C. C., matched in procession and under a banner, at the residence of the agent, Mr. Maurice Keane, J. P. Cash, with the object of demanding a abatement of 30 per cent. Father Hogan urged the reasonableness of the demand, and pointed out that a prudent and considerate agent should have no hesitation in adopting the proposal of the tenants, who, he said, were desirous of maintaining the friendly relations which have subsisted between them and the landlord. Mr. Keane, who had no authority to grant any reduction, said he would convey the wishes of the tenants to his principal, and let them know the result in a few days.

DUBLIN.—Father Jackman, provincial of the Irish Franciscans, has received in private audience of his Holiness Leo XIII. on Tuesday 27th, of January.

The Very Rev. Father Paul, Novice-master, has been elected Provincial of the Irish Province of the Capuchins. This important appointment is a further step in the direction of the consolidation and perpetuation of the order, observers of the Rule instituted by the Very Reverend Father Francis, at present a child of the order, and the Very Reverend Father Paul possesses the confidence of his brethren.

The report of the process of the building of St. Saviour's Priory, Lower Dominick street, brings the mind back through years that the centuries of Irish history to the days when the Priory of Friar Preachers stood on the site that is now occupied by the Four Courts. Dispelled of their possession by Henry VIII., and dispossessed, the Dominicans never abandoned their mission, and the continuity of the order of Friar preachers in Ireland dates from the century to the eleventh. The effort of the Dominicans to erect a Priory in Dublin at this time has met with generous aid, but the assistance of the public is needed, and it is to the time the Catholics of Dublin are called upon to contribute to this speedy accomplishment if so glorious a work.

DERRY.—The bold, undaunted body of Tenants in Derry and Derry are up in arms against the lordly Castlereagh have shirked the fight for 50 per cent abatement which they demanded and accepted the 15 per cent. offered—thereby proving that the tenantry are not yet the cowardly contemptible cowards. Their crown backdown seems to satisfy some people.

DOWN.—Mrs. Eliza Pottrell, abbess of St. Louis Convent, Newry, died on Feb. 25 at the convent in Kilkenny. The deceased lady, who was known in religion as Sister Mary Stanislaus, was the daughter of the late Sir Thomas Pottrell, of Dublin. She entered Clonmel Convent in the year 1850, and was appointed abbess in 1861. She had attained her sixtieth and the thirty-fifth of her religious profession.

DONEGAL.—Mr. Swift McNeill, Protestant Home Rule member, has just delivered an eloquent address, Monster, by a majority of three thousand six hundred votes. In the one thousand electors in South Donegal only since hundred could be got to muster for the Union. Since the last election, over four hundred Unionists have died or left the district, a temporary structure for divine service.

A religious profession took place at St. Bridget's Convent (Sisters of Mercy), Albury, on the 13th ult. The Sisters professed were Miss M. Ward (Sister Mary John the Evangelist) and Miss Kennedy, (Sister Mary Columba).

Rev. Dr. Mathew Gilmoy, who was appointed Coadjutor just before the death of the venerable Bishop Grivon, was solemnly consecrated Bishop of Perth, Western Australia, on the 22nd ult. Cardinal Archbishop Moran officiated.

A religious profession of four Sisters of Charity took place on the 8th ult., in the Chapel of St. Vincent's Convent, Sydney. The Religious who made the solemn profession were Miss Burke (Sister M. Agnelus), Miss Fay (Sister M. Bertrand), Miss Pogenhagen, (Singleton, (Sister M. Dominic), and Miss O'Brien (Sister M. Benedict.

New Zealand Catholics protest thus against exorbitant school taxation: The Catholics of New Zealand provide at their sole expense, an excellent education for their own children. Yet such is the sense of justice and policy in the New Zealand Legislature that it compels these Catholics, after having manfully provided for their own children, to contribute largely towards the free and godless education of other people's children. This is tyranny, oppression and plunder.

Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE,
536 Kearny St., Tuesday Evening, March 1, 1887.

WHEAT—No. 1 ..... $1 47@$1 50
Fluces—Superfine ..... 2 25@2 50
Extra, family ..... Nominal
Flour ..... 1 62½@1 87½
Feed, ordinary ..... 1 25@1 30
Feed, fine, wholesale ..... 1 35@1 40
Corn, Cracking ..... 32 50@35 00
Corn, Chicago ..... 32 50@35 00
Oats No. 1 feed ..... 1 30@1 35
Barley ..... 1 15@1 17½
Buckwheat ..... 1 50@1 55
Hay—
Hay, f'r, wholesale ..... 5 50@6 50
Turkeys, ♀ lb wholesale ..... 1 0@17
Ducks, ♀ doz ..... 1 00@9 00
Geese, ♀ pair ..... 1 75@2 00
Broilers ♀ doz ..... 6 50@7 00
Hens, wholesale ..... 5 00@6 00
Old Roosters ..... 5 50@6 00
Eggs—
Choice, ♀ doz ..... 20@22
Butter—
Choice fresh roll ..... 17@19
Fancy ..... 20@22
Choice ..... 18@19
Cheese—
Domestic ..... 11@11½
Eastern ..... 12@13
Wool—
Wheat ..... 11 00@13 00
Potatoes—
New Southern Coast ..... 1 00@1 25
San Joaquin ..... 1 00@1 25
Humboldt ..... 1 25@1 50
Mats—
Wholesale ..... 4@6
Mutton, wholesale ..... 4@7
Veal, wholesale ..... 5@6
Pork, wholesale dressed ..... 4@6
Eastern Sugar-cured Hams ..... 12@13
California Hams ..... 10@11
Bacon ..... 10@12
Lard, ♀ lb wholesale in kegs ..... 7@8
Onions—
Yellow ..... 1 50@1 75
Cabbage, ♀ 100 lb ..... 1 50@1 75
Turnips, ♀ 100 ..... 1 50@2 00
Onions, California ..... 1 25@1 50
Garlic ..... 8@10
Green Peppers ..... 8@10
Beans—
Bayo ..... 1 75@2 00
Garlic, ♀ lb ..... 7@8
Seeds—
Celery, ♀ lb ..... 60@75
Mustard, ♀ lb ..... 6@7
Millet, ♀ lb ..... 6@7
Hops—
Hops ..... 10@17
Hides—
California Dry, ♀ lb 15
Dry Kips 16
Calf Dry ..... 17@18
Salted 10
Salted Kips ..... 9@10
Sheep Skins, each, shearlings ..... 10@25
Dressing Pelts—
Green Apples, ♀ box ..... 75@1 25

MARRIED.

[illegible]

DIED.

[illegible]

TIPPERARY.—Henry Charles White, Esq., Clonbrilla, Goresbridge, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Tipperary.

WATERFORD.—Mr. James Robertson, the manager and co-partner in the extensive iron foundry of Messrs. Robertson, Limited, of Waterford, died on January 29th. Mr. Robertson had taken an active part in public life, he devoted himself with success to business, and amassed a large fortune. He was a Protestant, and was, who lived with his parents at Ballyduff, Co. Waterford, with some other boys, he was knocked down and driven over by a porter van. His injuries were so severe, his head had smashed, the skull was badly fractured. He died very shortly afterwards.

The retirement of Mr. Richard Power from the representation of Waterford has made one more gap in the ranks of the old brigade. Mr. Power entered Parliament so far back as 1852. For several years he acted as one of the whips of the Irish Parliamentary Party, and was, perhaps, the most efficient whip, which it has been the good fortune of the party to have possessed. He was one of the "seven who broke the back of the Famine fight on the Sixth Bill, and in many a fray since then he has shown himself by his party in all its various fortunes.

WEXFORD.—In the Augustinian Church, New Ross, on Sunday morning, the Rev. Father Dunne, formerly resident and blessed, Father Mahony, Crossmolina, assisted by Rev. Father Kavanagh, Ballycanew, married to a local merchant, Mr. James Hutchinson, in presence of the deceased members of his family.

WESTMEATH.—Mary Stormont, of Longbonderry has evicted Mr. Mullen, one of the Mullen family, who have been in possession for a long time. The Mullen has now accepted his death sentence. He has thrown down the position to the entire tenantry, and to the spirit and the manhood of the people of Westmeath. Mr. Stormont has now to face the odium, not between his agent and the tenant could make, and he will undoubtedly find that "Public" is in sympathy with Mr. Mullen, and that the sympathy of every honest man is the county.

PRESENTATION CONVENT FAIR.

Following are the winning numbers of the articles disposed of at Exhibition at the Presentation Convent Fair recently held in Fair's Hall, Taylor St.—Lot 1, Lady Chair, 1; Lot 2, Table, 2; painting of Israel Shepherd 13, Lot 3, Table, 3; Lot 4, Table, 20; pastel drawing, 21; Lot 5, Table, 4; Lot 6, Table, 5; Lot 7, Table, 6; Lot 8, Table, 7; Lot 9, Table, 8; Lot 10, Table, 9; Lot 11, Table, 10; pastel drawing, 22; Lot 12, Table, 11; Lot 13, Table, 12; Lot 14, Table, 13; Lot 15, Table, 14; Lot 16, Table, 15; Lot 17, Table, 16; Lot 18, Table, 17; Lot 19, Table, 18; Lot 20, Table, 19; Lot 21, Table, 20; Lot

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.
THE OLD MISSION.
SPECIFICALLY DEDICATED TO REV. J. J. BURGIN.

Slowly the day king is sinking
Into the western sea,
And they his cousin splendor
Fade through twilight's dusky gloom;
Softly the soul breaks shading,
Sole Nature's solemn repose,
Twaing a weird mystic anthem
Round these ruins so gray shadowy.
A wondrous peace breeds about thee,
Oh! sage of the western main,
And a feeling of sad melancholy
Fills my soul as I gaze on thy face;
Tis a strange sea, this to the reverence
That we feel in the presence of age,
When we wantly turn from the present,
Pleading Memory to turn back a page.

Oh! fair is the scene primeval
Most thy sunny fields have spoused,
As it teemed ere Nature's first beauty,
And shyness in glamour rosewy
Wen the bells calling clear from the belfry
Called the child of the forest to prey,
And the dusky faced throng from the wigwam
Filled the aisles on a calm Sabbath day.
On a quiet, yet a soul-soothing picture,
Did the glorious morning sun beam,
As it flowed through the oriel window
Down the nave in one dazzling stream;
And the heart of the lad was an echoed,
